FUNGIBLE THINGS. Movable goods which may be estimated and replaced according to weight, measure, and number. Things belonging to a class, which do not have to be dealt with in specie. Standard Bank of Canada v. Lowman, D.C.Wash., 1 F.2d 935, 940; Edwards v. Cleveland Mill & Power Co., 193 N.C. 780, 138 S.E. 131, 134, 53 A.L.R. 1404.

Those things one specimen of which is as good as another, as is the case with half-crowns, or pounds of rice of the same quality. Horses, slaves, and so forth, are non fungible things, because they differ individually in value, and cannot be exchanged indifferently one for another. Holl.Jur. 88.

Where a thing which is the subject of an obligation (which one man is bound to deliver to another) must be delivered in specie, the thing is not fungible; that very individual thing, and not another thing of the same or another class, in lieu of it, must be delivered. Where the subject of the obligation is a thing of a given class, the thing is said to be fungible; i.e., the delivery of any object which answers to the generic description will satisfy the terms of the obligation. Aust.Jur. 483, 484.

FUNGIBLES RES. Lat. In the civil law, fungible things. See that title.

FUR. Lat. A thief. One who stole secretly or without force or weapons, as opposed to robber.

FURTA. A right derived from the king as supreme lord of a state to try, condemn, and execute thieves and felons within counties, boroughs, or districts of an honour, manor, etc. Cowell seems to be doubtful whether this word should not read furca, which means directly a gallows. Cowell; Holthouse, L.Dict.

FURTHER. Not word of strict legal or technical import, and may be used to introduce negation.
or qualification of some precedent matter, but generally when used as an adverb it is word of comparison, and means "additional," and is equivalent to "moreover, or furthermore, something beyond what has been said or likewise, or also." Hollman v. Hollman, 88 Cal.App. 748, 264 P. 289, 290. Wider, or fuller, or something new. In re Andrus' Will, 156 Misc. 268, 281 N.Y.S. 831. Occasionally it may mean any, future, or other. Lon- dons & S. F. Bank v. Parrott, 125 Cal. 472, 58 P. 164, 73 Am.St.Rep. 64; Galpin v. City of Chicago, 269 Ill. 27, 109 N.E. 713, 717, L.R.A.1917B, 176; Smith v. Craig, 211 N.Y. 456, 105 N.E. 798, 800, Ann.Cas.1915B, 937.

FURTHER ADVANCE. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagor by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on a mortgage security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. Wharton.

FURTHER ASSURANCE, COVENANT FOR. See Covenant.

FURTHER CONSIDERATION. In English practice, upon a motion for judgment or application for a new trial, the court may, if it shall be of opinion that it has not sufficient materials before it to enable it to give judgment, direct the motion to stand over for further consideration, and direct such issues or questions to be tried or determined, and such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made, as it may think fit. Rules Sup. Ct. xl, 10.

FURTHER DIRECTIONS. Where a master made a separate report, or one not in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, a petition for consequential directions had to be presented, since the cause could not be set down for further directions under such circumstances. See 2 Daniell, Ch.Pr. (5th Ed.) 1233, note.

FURTHER INSTRUCTIONS. Additional instructions given to jury after they have been instructed and have retired. White v. Sharpe, 219 Mass. 393, 107 N.E. 56.

FUTURE ACQUIRED PROPERTY. Mortgages, especially of railroad companies are frequently made in terms to cover after-acquired property; such as rolling stock, etc. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am.Rep. 596; Shaw v. Bill, 95 U.S. 10, 24 L.Ed. 333; L.R. 16 Eq. 383. This may include future net earnings; Dunham v. Isett, 15 Iowa 284; the proceeds to be received from the sale of surplus lands; L.R. 2 Ch. 201; a ditch or flume in process of construction, which was held to cover all improvements and fixtures thereafter to be put on the line thereof; De Arguello v. Greer, 26 Cal. 620; rolling stock etc.; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am.Rep. 596; Benjamin v. R. Co., 49 Barb., N.Y., 441. Future calls of assessments on stock cannot be mortgaged; L.R. 10 Eq. 681; but calls already made can be; id.

A will speaks as of the death of the testator and ordinarily passes property acquired after its date.

FUTURE DEBT. In Scotch law, a debt which is created, but which will not become due till a future day. 1 Bell, Comm. 315.

FUTURE EARNINGS. A convenient way of designating earnings which, if it had not been for injury, could have been made in future, but which were lost as result of injury. Nowlin v. Kansas City Public Service Co., Mo.App., 58 S.W.2d 324.

FUTURE ESTATE. See Estate.

FUTURE INTERESTS. Interests in land or other things in which the privilege of possession or of enjoyment is future and not present. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Wells, C.C.A.6, 132 F.2d 405, 407.

FUTURES. This term has grown out of those purely speculative transactions, in which there is a nominal contract of sale for future delivery, but where in fact none is ever intended or executed.

The nominal seller does not have or expect to have the stock or merchandise he purports to sell, nor does the nominal buyer expect to receive it or to pay the price. Instead of that, a percentage or margin is paid, which is increased or diminished as the market rates go up or down, and accounted for to the buyer. King v. Quidnick Co., 14 R.I. 138; Lemonius v. Mayer, 71 Miss. 514, 14 So. 33; Plank v. Jackson, 128 Ind. 424, 26 N.E. 568; S. M. Weld & Co. v. Austin, 107 Miss. 279, 65 So. 247, 248.

FUTURI. Lat. Those who are to be. Part of the commencement of old deeds. "Sciant presentes et futuri, quod ego talis, dedi et concessi," etc., (Let all men now living and to come know that I, A. B., have, etc.) Bract. fol. 34b.

FUZ, or FUST. A Celtic word, meaning a wood or forest.

F. W. C. Free Woman of Color, up to the time of Civil War, applied to all persons not of the white race, including Indians. Sunseri v. Cassagne, 191 La. 209, 185 So. 1, 4.

FYHTWITE. One of the fines incurred for homicide.

FYLE. In old Scotch law, to defile; to declare foul or defiled. Hence, to find a prisoner guilty.

FYLTIT. In old Scotch practice, fyled; found guilty. See Fyle.

FYNDERINGA. (Sax.) An offense or trespass for which the fine or compensation was reserved to the king's pleasure. Leges Hen. L c. 10. Its nature is not known. Spelman reads fynderinga, and interprets it treasure trove; but Cowell reads fyrderinga, and interprets it a joining of the king's fird or host, a neglect to do which was punished by a fine called firdwite. See Spelman, Gloss. Du Cange agrees with Cowell.

FYRD. Sax. In Anglo-Saxon law, the military array or land force of the whole country. Contributions to the fyrd was one of the imposts forming the trinoda necessitas. (Also spelled "ferd" and "fird.") FYRDFARE. A summoning forth to join a military expedition; a summons to join the fyrd or army.

FYRDSOCNE, (or fryrsoken.) Exemption from military duty; exemption from service in the fyrd.

FYRDFWITE. A fine imposed for neglecting to join the fyrd when summoned. Also a fine imposed for murder committed in the army; also an acquittance of such fine.
G

G. In the Law French orthography, this letter is often substituted for the English W, particularly as an initial. Thus, "gage" for "wage," "garranty" for "warranty," "gast" for "waste."

G. A. O. General Accounting Office.

G. S. A. General Services Administration.

GABEL. An excise; a tax on movables; a rent, custom, or service. Co.Litt. 142a, 213.

A tax, impost, or excise duty, especially in continental Europe; formerly, in France, specifically the tax on salt, but also applied to taxes on other industrial products. "The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, tobacco..."

—Land Gabel. See Land Gabel.

GABELLA. The Law Latin form of "gabel," (q. v.).

Also, in Teutonic and early English history, the peasantry constituting a village or hamlet; the holdings of such a group of freemen and serfs, or of either. The original significance of the word seems to be in its indication of a small rent-paying community, the rents being rendered in kind or in labor. Cent. Dict. "So that GabeIta meant all the member of a family having an interest in a certain holding, and sometimes meant the holding itself." W. K. Sullivan.

GABLATIONES. Persons who paid gabel, rent, or tribute. Domesday; Cowell.

GABLUM. A rent; a tax. Domesday; Du Cange. The gable-end of a house. Cowell.

GAGE, v. In old English law, to pawn or pledge; to give as security for a payment or performance; to wage or wager.

GAGE, n.

In old English law, a pawn or pledge; something deposited as security for the performance of some act or the payment of money, and to be forfeited on failure or non-performance. Glanv. lib. 10, c. 6; Britt. c. 27.

A mortgage is a dead-gage or pledge; for, whatever profit it yields, it redeems not itself, unless the whole amount secured is paid at the appointed time. Cowell.

In French law, the contract of pledge or pawn; also the article pawned.

GAGE, estates in. Those held in vadio, or pledge. They are of two kinds: (1) Vivum vadium, or living pledge, or vilgage; (2) mortuum vadium, or dead pledge, better known as "mortgage."

GAGER DE DELIVERANCE. In old English law, when he who has distrained, being sued, has not delivered the cattle distrained, then he shall not only avow the distress, but gager deliverance, i. e., put in surety or pledge that he will deliver them. Fitzh.Nat.Brev.

GAGER DEL LEY. Wager of law (q. v.).

"Gain derived from capital," is a gain, profit, or something of exchangeable value proceeding from the property, severed from the capital however invested, and received or drawn by claimant for his separate use, benefit, and disposal. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Simmons Gin Co., C.C.A.10, 43 F.2d 327, 328.

GAINAGE. The gain or profit of tilled or planted land, raised by cultivating it; and the draught, plow, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage by the baser kind of sokemen or villeins. Bract. 1. c. 9.

GAINERY. Tillage, or the profit arising from it, or from the beasts employed therein.

GAINFUL OCCUPATION. Within disability clause of policy, term means ordinary employment of particular insured, or such other employment, if any, as insured may fairly be expected to follow. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Barron, 198 Ga. 1, 30 S.E.2d 879, 882.

GAINOR. In old English law, a sokeman; one who occupied or cultivated arable land. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 12.

GAIUS, INSTITUTES OF. See Institutes.

GAJUM. A thick wood. Spelman.

GALE. The payment of a rent, tax, duty, or annuity.

A gale is the right to open and work a mine, within the Hundred of St. Briavel’s, or a stone quarry within the open lands of the Forest of Dean.

The right is a license or interest in the nature of real estate, conditional on the due payment of rent and observanc of the obligations imposed on the galee. It follows the ordinary rules as to the devolution and conveyance of real estate. "The gale" pays the crown a rent known as a "galeage rent," "royalty," or some similar name, proportionate to the quantity of minerals got from the mine or quarry. Sweet.

GALEA. In old records, a piratical vessel; a galley.

GALENES. In old Scotch law, amends or compensation for slaughter. Bell.

GALL-HALFPENCE. A kind of coin which, with suskins and doitkins, was forbidden by St. 3 Hen. V. c. 1.

GALLIVOLATIUM. A cock-shoot, or cock-glade.

GALLOWS. A scaffold; a beam laid over either one or two posts, from which malefactors are hanged.

GAMACTA. In old European law, a stroke or contrivance which has for its object to furnish sport, recreation, or amusement. Ex parte Wilhart v. People, 54 Colo. 272, 130 P. 1076, 1077. A contrivance which has for its object to furnish sport, recreation, or amusement. Ex parte Williams, 127 Cal.App. 244, 16 P.2d 172, 173. See Gaming.

GAME-KEEPER. One who has the care of keeping and preserving the game on an estate, being appointed thereto by a lord of a manor.

GAME LAWS. Laws passed for the preservation of game, usually forbidding the killing of specified game during certain seasons, Poulos v. State, 49 Ga.App. 20, 174 S.E. 253, or by certain described means. As to English game-laws, see 2 Steph. Comm. 82; & 2 Wm. IV. c. 32.

GAME OF CHANCE. One in which result as to success or failure depends less on skill and experience of player than on purely fortuitous or accidental circumstances incidental to game or manner of playing it or device or apparatus with which it is played, but not under control of player. People v. Cohen, 160 Misc. 10, 289 N.Y.S. 397, 400.

GAMING. An agreement between two or more persons to play together at a game of chance for a stake or wager which is to become the property of the winner, and to which all contribute. In re Stewart, D.C.N.J., 21 F. 398; People v. Todd, 51 Hun, 446, 4 N.Y.S. 25; Carpenter v. Beal-McDonnell & Co., D.C.Ark., 222 F. 453, 460.

"Gaming" and "gambling," in statutes, are similar in meaning, and either one comprehends the idea that, by a bet, by chance, by some exercise of skill, or by the trial, spiring of some event unknown until it occurs, something of value is, as the conclusion of the premises agreed to, to be transferred from a loser to a winner. Bish.St.Crimes, § 888. Town of Eros v. Powell, 137 La. 342, 68 So. 632, 634; Reimiller v. State, 93 Fla. 462, 111 So. 633, 635.
“Gaming” is properly the act or engagement of the players. If by-standers or other third persons put up a stake or wager among themselves, to go to one or the other according to the result of the game, this is more correctly termed “betting.”

GAMING CONTRACTS. See Wager.

GAMING HOUSE. A building, place, or room kept for use as a place to gamble, or to keep or exhibit for the purpose of gaming, any bank, table, alley, machine, wheel, or device, Davis v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 165 S.W.2d 757, 758; as the business of the occupants. 1 Russ.Crimes, 299; Rosc.Crim.Ev. 663; People v. Jackson, 3 Denio, N.Y., 101, 45 Am. Dec. 449.

In regard to admissibility of hearsay evidence, a distinction has been taken between "public" and "general" interest, the term "public" being strictly applied to that which concerns every member of the state, and the term "general" being confined to a lesser, though still a considerable, portion of the community. Tayl. Ev. § 609.

GENERAL JURISDICTION. Such as extends to all controversies that may be brought before a court within the legal bounds of rights and remedies; as opposed to special or limited jurisdiction, which covers only a particular class of cases, or cases where the amount in controversy is below a prescribed sum, or which is subject to specific exceptions. The terms "general" and "special," applied to jurisdiction, indicate the difference between a legal authority extending to the whole of a particular subject and one limited to a part; and, when applied to the terms of court, the occasion upon which these powers can be respectively exercised. Gracie v. Freeland, 1 N.Y. 232.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE. Formerly an office of the United States government, being a division of the Department of the Interior, having charge of all executive action relating to the public lands, including their survey, sale or other disposition, and patenting; originally constituted by Act of Congress in 1812. The General Land Office and the U.S. Grazing Service were consolidated into the Bureau of Land Management under the Department of the Interior by 1946 Reorganization Plan No. 3, § 403. See notes to 43 U.S.C.A. § 1.

GENERAL LAW. A law that affects the community at large. A general law as contradicting from one that is special or local, is a law that embraces a class of subjects or places, and does not omit any subject or place naturally belonging to such class. Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N.J.L. 1; Mathis v. Jones, 84 Ga. 804, 11 S.E. 1018; Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 376; Arms v. Ayer, 192 Ill. 601, 61 N.E. 851, 58 L.R.A. 277, 85 Am.St. Rep. 357.

A law, framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects, which, having regard to the purposes of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves, is not a special or local law, but a general law. Jones v. Power County, 27 Idaho, 656, 150 P. 35, 37; Scarbrough v. Wooten, 23 N.M. 616, 170 P. 743; Toombs v. Sharkey, 140 Miss. 676, 106 So. 273, 275; Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N.J.L. 123, 29 Am. Rep. 210.

GENERAL LIEN. A general lien is a right to detain a chattel, etc., until payment be made, not only of any debt due in respect of the particular chattel, but of any balance that may be due on general account in the same line of business. A general lien, being against the ordinary rule of law, depends entirely upon contract, express or implied, from the special usage of dealing between the parties. Wharton. Crommelin v. Railroad Co., 10 Bosw., N.Y., 80; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 150, 38 Am.Dec. 291; Brooks v. Bryce, 21 Wend., N.Y., 16; 3 B. & P. 494.

Under the denomination of "gentlemen" are comprised all above yeoman; whereby noblemen are truly called "gentlemen." Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 1, cc. 20, 21.

A "gentleman" is defined to be one who, without any title, bears a coat of arms, or whose ancestors have been freemen; and, by the coat that a gentleman giveth, he is known to be, or not to be, descended from those of his name that lived many hundred years since. Jacob. See Cresson v. Cresson, 6 Fed.Cas. 809.

GENTLEMAN Usher. One who holds a post at court to usher others to the presence, etc.

GENTLEWOMAN. The word is a relative one without any legal significance. It refers to a woman of the same rank or status as that of a "gentleman." Bramblett v. Trust Co. of Georgia, 182 Ga. 87, 185 S.E. 72, 76. A woman of birth above the common, or equal to that of a gentleman; an addition of a woman's state or degree.

GENTOO LAW. See Hindu Law.
GENUINE

GENUINE. As applied to notes, bonds, and other written instruments, this term means that they are truly what they purport to be, and that they are not false, forged, fictitious, simulated, spurious, or counterfeit. Baldwin v. Van Deusen, 37 N.Y. 492; Smeltzer v. White, 92 U.S. 392, 23 L.Ed. 508; Krug v. Sinclair, 57 Cal.App. 563, 207 P. 696, 697. A will that has been revoked by later instrument and not revived by republication is not "genuine," within Surrogate's Court Act, § 144. In re Kiltz's Will, 125 Misc. 475, 211 N.Y.S. 450, 461.

GENUS. In the civil law, a general class or division, comprising several species. In toto jure generi per speciem derogatur, et illud potissimum habetur quod ad speciem directum est; through the law, the species takes from the genus, and that is most particularly regarded which refers to the species. Dig. 50, 17, 80.

A man's lineage, or direct descendants. In logic, it is the first of the universal ideas, and is when the idea is so common that it extends to other ideas which are also universal; e.g., incorporeal hereditament is genus with respect to a rent, which is species. Woolley, Introd. Log. 45; 1 Mill, Log. 133.

GEORGE-NOBLE. An English gold coin, value £5. 8d.

GERECHTSBODE. In old New York law, a court messenger or constable. O'Callaghan, New Neth. 322.

GEREFA. In Saxon law, greve, reve, or reeve; a ministerial officer of high antiquity in England; answering to the grave or graf (graffio) of the early continental nations. The term was applied to various grades of officers, from the scyre-gerefa, shire-greffe, or shire-reeve, who had charge of the county, (and, whose title and office have been perpetuated in the modern "sheriff," ) down to the tungerefa, or town-reeve, and lower. Burriill.

GERENS. Bearing. Gerens datum, bearing date. 1 Ld. Raym. 336; Hob. 19.

GEST. In Saxon law, a guest. A name given to a stranger on the second night of his entertainment in another's house. Twanight gest.

GESTATION. The time during which a woman carries a fetus in her womb, from conception to birth. But, as used in all medical authorities, this phrase does not mean the actual number of days from conception to birth. Dazey v. Dazey, 50 Cal. App.2d 15, 122 P.2d 308, 309.

GESTIO. In the civil law, behavior or conduct.

Management or transaction. Negotiorum gestio, the doing of another's business; an interference in the affairs of another in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority. Dig. 3, 5, 45; Id. 46, 3, 12, 4; 2 Kent, Comm. 616, note.

GESTIO PRO 111EREDE. Behavior as heir.

This expression was used in the Roman law, and adopted in the civil law and Scotch law, to denote conduct on the part of a person appointed heir to a deceased person, or otherwise entitled to succeed as heir, which indicates an intention to enter upon the inheritance, and to hold himself out as heir to creditors of the deceased; as by receiving the rents due to the deceased, or by taking possession of his title-deeds, etc. Such acts will render the heir liable to the debts of his ancestor. Mozley & Whitley.

GESTOR. In the civil law, one who acts for another, or transacts another's business. Calvin.

GESTU ET FAMA. An ancient and obsolete writ resorted to when a person's good behavior was impeached. Lamb.Eir. 1. 4, c. 14.

GESTUM. Lat. In Roman law, a deed or act; a thing done. Some writers affected to make a distinction between "gestum" and "factum." But the best authorities pronounced this subtle and indefensible. Dig. 50, 16, 58.

Jews which is drawn in the Aramaic language, uniformly worded and carefully written by a proper scribe, and after proper ceremonies and questionings by the rabbi, especially as to whether both parties agree to the divorce, the husband hands to the wife in the presence of ten witnesses. Shilman v. Shilman, 105 Misc. 461, 174 N.Y.S. 385, 386.

GEWRITE. In Saxon law, deeds or charters; writings. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law 10.

GIBBET. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their bodies are exposed. It differs from a common gallows, in that it consists of one perpendicular post, from the top of which proceeds one arm, except it be a double gibbet, which is formed in the shape of the Roman capital T. Enc. Lond.

GIBBET LAW. Lynch law; in particular a custom anciently prevailing in the parish of Halifax, England, by which the free burghers held a summary trial of any one accused of petty larceny, and, if they found him guilty, ordered him to be decapitated.

Essential requisites of "gift" are capacity of donor, intention of donor to make gift, completed delivery to or for donee, and acceptance of gift by donee. In re Greenberg's Will, 286 N.Y.S. 56, 158 Misc. 446.

In popular language, a voluntary conveyance or assignment is called a "deed of gift".

An "advancement" is a gift made with the intention that it shall be charged to the donee in the distribution of the donor's estate. Code 1933, § 26-6501. An absolute gift, or gift inter vivos, is distinguished from a testamentary gift, or one made in contemplation of death, is one by which the donee becomes in the lifetime of the donor the absolute owner of the thing given, whereas a donatio mortis causa leaves the whole title in the donor, unless the event occurs (the death of the donor) which is to divest him. Buecker v. Carr, 60 N.J. Eq. 300, 47 A. 34; Goodan v. Goodan, 184 Ky. 79, 211 S.W. 423, 424; Baker v. Barker, 123 Md. 32, 90 A. 776, 779; McCoy v. Shawnee Building & Loan Ass'n, 122 Kan. 38, 251 P. 194, 195, 49 A.L.R. 1441; First Nat. Bank v. Liberty Trust Co., 151 Md. 241, 134 A. 210, 213, 47 A.L.R. 730; Starks v. Lincoln, 316 Mo. 483, 291 S. W. 132, 134.

As distinguished from a gift in trust, it is one where not only the legal title but the beneficial ownership as well is vested in the donee. Watkins v. Bigelow, 93 Minn. 210, 100 N.W. 1104; Allen v. Hendrick, 104 Or. 202, 206 P. 733, 740.

The only important difference between a "gift" and a "voluntary trust" is that in the case of a gift the thing itself passes to the donee, while in the case of a trust the actual, beneficial, or equitable title passes to the cestui que trust, while the legal title is transferred to a third person, or retained by the person creating it. In re Alberts' Estate, 38 Cal. App. 2d 42, 100 P. 2d 538, 540.

In English law, a conveyance of lands in tail; a conveyance of an estate tail in which the operative words are "I give," or "I have given." 2 Bl. Comm. 316; 1 Steph. Comm. 473.

-Gift in Default of Appointment. One implied on failure of donee to exercise a power of appointment where it was his duty to do so or where donor expresses an intention to make a legal gift to members of class in default of appointment. Restatement, Real Property, vol. 3, Topic 9, § 367.

GIFT CAUSA MORTIS. A gift of personalty made in expectation of death, then imminent, on an essential condition that property shall belong fully to donee in case donor dies as anticipated, leaving donee surviving him, and gift is not in meantime revoked. Flint v. Varney, 220 Iowa 1241, 264 N.W. 277, 278, 279.

GIFT ENTERPRISE. A scheme for the division or distribution of articles to be determined by chance amongst those who have taken shares in the scheme. City of Oxford v. Ritz Theatre, Miss., 180 So. 88, 89; State v. Shugart, 138 Ala. 86, 35 So. 28, 100 Am. St. Rep. 17; Winston v. Beeson, 135 N.C. 271, 47 S.E. 457, 65 L.R.A. 167.

A sporting artifice by which, for example, a merchant or tradesman sells his wares for their market value, but, by way of inducement, gives to such purchaser a ticket which entitles him to a chance to win certain prizes to be determined after the manner of a lottery. Code 1933, § 26-6501. Barker v. State, 56 Ga. App. 705, 193 S.E. 605, 607, 609.

GIFTS INTER VIVOS. Gifts between the living, which are perfected and become absolute during lifetime of donor and donee. Neal v. Neal, 194 Ark. 226, 106 S.W. 2d 595, 600.

Space between face of coal and where props had been set by machine operators on previous trip. New Union Coal Co. v. Suit, 172 Ark. 753, 290 S.W. 580, 581.

GOD AND MY COUNTRY. The answer made by a prisoner, when arraigned, in answer to the question, "How will you be tried?"

In the ancient practice he had the choice (as appears by the question) whether to submit to the trial by ordeal (by God) or to be tried by a jury, (by the country;) and it is probable that the original form of the answer was, "By God or my country," whereby the prisoner averred his innocence by declining neither of the modes of trial.

GOD-BOTE. An ecclesiastical or church fine paid for crimes and offenses committed against God. Cowell.

GOD-GILD. That which is offered to God or his service. Jacob.

GOD’S PENNY. In old English law, earnest-money; money given as evidence of the completion of a bargain. This name is probably derived from the fact that such money was given to the church or distributed in alms.

GOGING-STOLE. An old form of the word "cucking-stool" (q. v.). Cowell.

GOING. In various compound phrases (as those which follow) this term implies either motion, progress, active operation, or present and continuous validity and efficacy.

GOING AND COMING RULE. Declares that employees while going to or returning from their places of employment are not within the scope of their employment. Robinson v. George, 16 Cal. 2d 238, 105 P.2d 914, 917, 918.

GOING BEFORE THE WIND. In the language of mariners and in the rules of navigation, a vessel is said to be going "before the wind" when the wind is free as respects her course, that is, comes from behind the vessel or over the stern, so that her yards may be braced square across. She is said to be 'going off large' when she has the wind free on either tack, that is, when it blows from...
GOING CONCERN. An enterprise which is being solvent business, which is being conducted in a plant where its business is established, as distinguished from one which has yet to establish its business. East Bay Water Co. v. McNamara, 53 S.D. 153, 220 N.W. 468, 470.

GOING CONCERN VALUE. The value which inheres in a plant where its business is established, as distinguished from one which has yet to establish its business. East Bay Water Co. v. McNamara, D.C.Cal., 24 F.Supp. 222, 226.

GOING THROUGH THE BAR. The act of the chief of an English common-law court in demanding of every member of the bar, in order of seniority, if he has anything to move.

This was done at the sitting of the court each day in term, except special paper days, crown paper days in the queen's bench, and revenue paper days in the exchequer. On the last day of term this order is reversed, the first and second time round. In the exchequer the postman and tubman are first called on. Wharton.

GOING TO THE COUNTRY. When a party, under the common-law system of pleading, finished his pleading by the words "and of this he puts himself upon the country," this was called "going to the country." It was the essential termination of a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading. Wharton.

GOING WITNESS. One who is about to take his departure from the Jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the general sovereignty; as from one to another of the United States, or from England to Scotland.

GOLD BOND. One payable in gold coin or its equivalent, which means any money acceptable to United States government in payment of debts due it. Huron Lodge No. 444, B. P. O. E. v. McNamara, 53 S.D. 153, 220 N.W. 468, 470.

GOLDSMITHS' NOTES. Bankers’ cash notes (i.e., promissory notes given by a banker to his customers as acknowledgments of the receipt of money) were originally called in London “goldsmith’s notes,” from the circumstance that all the banking business in England was originally transacted by goldsmiths. Wharton.

GOLDWIT. A mulct or fine in gold.

GOLIARDUS. L. Lat. A jester, buffoon, or juggler. Spelman, voc. “Goliardensis.”

GOMASHTAH. In Hindu law, an agent; a steward; a confidential factor; a representative.

Responsible; solvent; able to pay an amount specified.

Of a value corresponding with its terms; collectible. A note is said to be “good” when the payment of it at maturity may be relied on. Curtis v. Smallman, 14 Wend., N.Y., 232; Cooke v. Nathan, 16 Barb., N.Y., 344; In re Parker Bros. & Johnson, D.C.N.C., 279 F. 425, 428.

Writing the word “Good” across the face, of a check is the customary mode in which bankers at the present day certify that the drawer has funds to meet it, and that it will be paid on presentation for that purpose. Merchants’ Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 645, 19 L.Ed. 1008; Irving Bank v. Wetherall, 236 N.Y. 335.

Public good. Under a statute providing that the Public Service Commission shall make an order permitting a transfer of the property of a public utility, when it is for the public good, such transfer is for the public good whenever it is not contrary to law and is reasonable, since it is not for the public good that such utilities be unreasonably restrained of their liberties. Grafton County Electric Light & Power Co. v. State, 77 N.H. 539, 94 A. 193, 194.

GOOD ABEARING. See Abearance.

GOOD AND CLEAR RECORD TITLE, FREE FROM ALL INCUMBRANCES. A title which on the record itself can be again sold as free from obvious defects and substantial doubts, and differs from any which are injurious thereto. from a "good, marketable title," which is an actual title, but which may be established by evidence independently of the record. O'Meara v. Gleason, 246 Mass. 136, 140 N.E. 426, 427.

GOOD AND SUBSTANTIAL DEPOT. A depot suitable to take care of both passenger and freight business. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Letcher County Coal & Improvement Co., 195 Ky. 29, 243 S.W. 45, 48.

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT BRAKES. Brakes adequate to promptly check and slacken speed of motor vehicle and bring it to complete stop (Comp. St.1922, § 8395). Ziskovsky v. Miller, 120 Neb. 255, 231 N.W. 809, 811.

GOOD AND VALID. Reliable, sufficient, and unimpeachable in law; adequate; responsible.

GOOD BEHAVIOR. Orderly and lawful conduct; behavior such as is proper for a peaceable and law-abiding citizen. Huyser v. Com., 25 Ky.L. Rep. 608, 76 S.W. 175; In re Spenser, 22 Fed.Cas. 921. "Good behavior," as used in an order suspending sentence upon a defendant during good behavior, means merely conduct conformable to law, or to the particular law theretofore breached. Ex parte Hamm, 24 N.M. 33, 172 P. 190, 191, L.R.A. 1918D, 694; Baker v. Commonwealth, 181 Ky. 437, 205 S.W. 399, 401.

As respects discharging employees in classified service, "good cause" includes any ground which is put forward by authorities in good faith and which is not arbitrary, irrational, unreasonable or irrelevant to the duties with which such authorities are charged, and is not limited to some form of inefficiency or of misconduct on the part of the person dismissed. Nephew v. Wills, 298 Mich. 187, 298 N.W. 376, 377, 135 A.L.R. 1340.

As respects Industrial Accident Commission’s rescinding its decision, "good cause" included a mistake of law, unless the award had been sustained on appeal. Stearns Coal & Lumber Co. v. Vanover, 262 Ky. 808, 91 S.W.2d 518.

Good cause" for extension of time in which to serve bill of exceptions exists if delay was for good reason, or that there was justification or excuse for the delay. Kisten v. Kisten, 229 Wis. 479, 282 N.W. 629, 632.

GOOD CONSIDERATION. "Good consideration" and "valuable consideration" are synonymous terms, although technically "good consideration" was defined as consideration of blood, or natural love and affection; that founded on motives of generosity, prudence, and natural duty. Belknap v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Vt. 421, 188 A. 897, 899.

GOOD COUNTRY. In Scotch law, good men of the country. A name given to a jury.

GOOD FAITH. Honesty of intention, and freedom from knowledge of circumstances which ought to put the holder upon inquiry. Siano v. Helvering, D.C.N.J., 13 F.Supp. 776, 780. An honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscionable advantage of another, even through technicalities of law, together with absence of all information, notice, or benefit or belief of facts which render transaction unconscionable. Wafordfield Natural Gas Co. v. Allen, 248 Ky. 646, 59 S.W.2d 534, 91 A.L.R. 890; Crouch v. First Nat. Bank, 156 Ill. 342, 40 N.E. 974; Waugh v. Prince, 121 Me. 67, 115 A. 612, 614.

GOOD JURY. A jury of which the members are selected from the list of special jurors. See L.R. 5.C.P. 155.

GOOD, MERCHANTABLE ABSTRACT OF TITLE. An abstract showing a good title, clear from incumbrances, and not merely an abstract of matters of record affecting the title, by one engaged in the business of making abstracts in such form as is customary, as passing current among persons buying and selling real estate and examining titles. Geithman v. Eichler, 265 Ill. 579, 107 N.E. 180, 182.

GOOD OF SERVICE. Discharge of a civil service employee for "good of the service" or "for cause" implies some personal misconduct, or fact, rendering incumbent’s further tenure harmful to the public interest. State ex rel. Eckles v. Kansas City, Mo.App., 257 S.W. 197, 200.

GOOD RECORD TITLE. A "good record title," without words of limitation, means that the proper records shall show an unencumbered, fee-simple title, the legal estate in fee, free and clear of all valid claims, liens, and incumbrances. Riggins v. Post, Tex.Civ.App., 172 S.W. 210, 211.

GOOD REPUTE. An expression, synonymous with and meaning only "of good reputation." State v. Wheeler, 108 Mo. 658, 665, 18 S.W. 924.
GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE. One who sees a person in imminent and serious peril through negligence of another cannot be charged with contributory negligence, as a matter of law, in risk- ing his own life or serious injury in attempting to effect a rescue, provided the attempt is not recklessly or rashly made. Jobst v. Butler Well Servicing, Inc., 372 P.2d 55, 59, 190 Kan. 86. Under doctrine, negligence of a volunteer rescuer must worsen position of person in distress before liability will be imposed. U. S. v. DeVane, C.A. Fla., 306 F.2d 182, 186.

GOOD TITLE. One free from reasonable doubt, that is, not only a valid title in fact, but one that may again be sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence. Langford v. Berry, 68 Ga.App. 193, 22 S.E.2d 349, 351, a title free from litigation, palpable defects and grave doubts. Collins v. Martin, Tex.Civ. App., 6 S.W.2d 126, 128; Williams v. Hefner, 89 Mont. 361, 297 P. 492, 496.

GOOD WILL. The favor which the management of a business wins from the public. Seneca Hotel Co. v. U. S., Ct.C1., 42 F.2d 343, 344. The fixed and favorable consideration of customers arising from established and well-conducted business. Colton v. Duvall, 254 Mich. 346, 237 S.W.2d 48, 49. The favorable consideration shown by the purchasing public to goods known to emanate from a particular source. White Tower System v. White Castle System of Eating Houses Corporation, C.C.A.Mich., 90 F.2d 67, 69. Something in business which gives reasonable expectancy of preference in race of competition. In re Witkind's Estate, 167 Misc. 885, 4 N.Y.S.2d 933, 947. The custom or patronage of any established trade or business; the benefit or advantage of having established a business and secured its patronage by the public. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices. Story, Partn. § 99; Haverly v. Elliott, 39 Neb. 201, 57 N.W. 1010. And as property incident to business sold, favor vendor has won from public, and probability that all customers will continue their patronage. Nye Odorless Incinerator Corporation v. Felton, 5 W.W.Harr. 236, 162 A. 504, 511. It means every advantage, every positive advantage, that has been acquired by a proprietor in carrying on his business, whether connected with the premises in which the business is conducted, or with the name under which it is managed, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the business. Glen & Hall Mfg. Co. v. Hall, 61 N.Y. 226, 19 Am.Rep. 278; In re Ball's Estate, 161 App.Div. 79, 146 N.Y.S. 499, 501; Whittle v. Davie, 116 Va. 575, 82 S.E. 724, 726; Acme, Palmers & De Mooy Foundry Co. v. Weiss, D.C.Ohio, 21 F.2d 492, 493.

GOODRIGHT, GOODTITLE. The fictitious plaintiff in the old action of ejectment, most frequently called "John Doe," was sometimes called "Goodright" or "Goodtitle."

GOODS. A term of variable content. It may include every species of personal property or it may be given a very restricted meaning. Cate v. Merrill, 116 Me. 235, 102 A. 235, 236, 237; Can- nales v. Earl, Mun.Ct.N.Y., 168 N.Y.S. 726, 727.

In contracts, the term "goods" is not so wide as "chattels," for it applies to inanimate objects, and does not include animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which "chattels" does include. Co. Litt. 118; St. Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Wilson, 133 Ind. 465, 33 N.E. 113; Putnam v. Westcott, 19 Johns, N.Y., 76.

In wills, "goods" is nomen generalissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, money, plate, furniture, etc. Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 370; Chamberlain v. West- ern Transp. Co., 44 N.Y. 310, 4 Am.Rep. 681; Key- ser v. School Dist., 35 N.H. 483.

GOODS AND CHATTELS. This phrase is a general denomination of personal property, as distinguished from real property; the term "chattels" having the effect of extending its scope to any objects of that nature which would not properly be included by the term "goods" alone, e. g., living animals, emblements, and fruits, and terms under leases for years. Larson v. Judd, 200 Ill. App. 420. The general phrase also embraces choses in action, as well as personality in possession. In wills. The term "goods and chattels" will, unless restrained by the context, pass all the personal estate, including leases for years, cattle, corn, debts, and the like. Ward, Leg. 208, 211.

GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED. A phrase frequently used in the action of assumpsit, when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE. A general and comprehensive designation of such chattels as are ordinarily the subject of traffic and sale. The phrase is used in the statute of frauds, and is frequently found in pleadings and other instruments. As to its scope, see State v. Brooks, 4 Conn. 449; French v. Schoonmaker, 69 N.J.L. 6, 54 A. 225; Sewall v. Allen, 6 Wend., N.Y., 355; Smith v. Wilcox, 24 N.Y. 358, 82 Am.Dec. 302; Banta v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 204, 50 N.E. 233, 40 L. R.A. 611; Basset v. City of Boston, 226 Mass. 64, 114 N.E. 1035; Culp v. Holbrook, 76 Ind.App. 272, 129 N.E. 278, 280.

GOOLE. In old English law, a breach in a bank or sea wall, or a passage worn by the flux and reflux of the sea. St. 16 & 17 Car. II. c. 11.

GOPHER HOLING. The "gopher hole" method of blasting consists in boring holes, horizontally into the bank of earth and inserting therein charges of powder, the explosion of which dislodges the bank. Bartnes v. Pittsburg Iron Ore Co., 123 Minn. 131, 143 N.W. 117.

GORCE, or GOES. A wear, pool, or pit of water. Termes de la Ley.

GORE. In old English law, a small, narrow slip of ground. Cowell. In modern land law, a small triangular piece of land, such as may be left between surveys which do not close. In some of the New England states (as Maine and Vermont) the term is applied to a subdivision of a county, having a scanty population and for that reason not organized as a town.

GORGE. A defile between hills or mountains, that is a narrow throat or outlet from a region of country. Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am.Rep. 241.

GOSSIPRED. In canon law, compaternity; spiritual affinity.

GOUT. In medical jurisprudence, an inflammation of the fibrous and ligamentous parts of the joints, characterized or caused by an excess of uric acid in the blood; usually, but not invariably, occurring in the joints of the feet, and then specifically called "podagra."

GOVERN. To direct and control the actions or conduct of, either by established laws or by arbitrary will; to direct and control, rule, or regulate, by authority. Tucker v. State, 218 Ind. 614, 35 N.E.2d 270, 291. To be a rule, precedent, law or deciding principle for. Asnon v. Foley, 105 Cal.App. 624, 288 P. 792, 795.

GOVERNMENT. From the Latin gubernaculum. Signifies the instrument, the helm, whereby the ship to which the state was compared, was guided on its course by the "gubernator" or helmsman, and in that view, the government is but an agency of the state, distinguished as it must be in accurate thought from its scheme and machinery of government. State v. Chase, 175 Minn. 259, 220 N.W. 951, 953.

The system of polity in a state; that form of fundamental rules and principles by which a nation or state is governed, or by which individual members of a body politic are to regulate their social actions; a constitution, either written or unwritten, by which the rights and duties of citizens and public officers are prescribed and defined, as a monarchical government, a republican government, etc. Webster.

An empire, kingdom, state or independent political community; as in the phrase, "Compacts between independent governments."
The sovereign or supreme power in a state or nation.
The machinery by which the sovereign power in a state expresses its will and exercises its functions; or the framework of political institutions, departments, and offices, by means of which the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state is carried on.

The whole class or body of office-holders or functionaries considered in the aggregate, upon whom devolves the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state. Stokes v. United States, C.C.A.Mo., 264 F. 18, 22.

In a colloquial sense, the United States or its representatives, considered as the prosecutor in a criminal action; as in the phrase, "the government objects to the witness."

The regulation, restraint, supervision, or control which is exercised upon the individual members of an organized jural society by those invested with authority; or the act of exercising supreme political power or control. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. School Dist. No. 1 in Yuma County, 63 Colo. 159, 165 P. 260, 263.

Federal government. The government of the United States of America, as distinguished from the governments of the several states.

Local government. The government or administration of a particular locality; especially, the governmental authority of a municipal corporation, as a city or county, over its local and individual affairs, exercised in virtue of power delegated to it for that purpose by the general government of the state or nation.

Mixed government. A form of government combining some of the features of two or all of the three primary forms, viz., monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy.

Republican government. One in which the powers of sovereignty are vested in the people and are exercised by the people, either directly, or through representatives chosen by the people, to whom those powers are specially delegated. Black, Const. Law (3d Ed.) 309; In re Duncan, 139 U.S. 449, 11 S.Ct. 573, 35 L.Ed. 219; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 175, 22 L.Ed. 627.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES SOCIETIES. Societies formed in England under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 14, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 83, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 45, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 43, to enable the industrious classes to make provisions for themselves by purchasing, on advantageous terms, a government annuity for life or term of years. Wharton.

GOVERNMENT DE FACTO. A government of fact. A government actually exercising power and control in the state, as opposed to the true and lawful government; a government not established according to the constitution of the state, or not lawfully entitled to recognition or supremacy, but which has nevertheless supplanted or displaced the government de jure. A government deemed unlawful, or deemed wrongful or unjust, which, nevertheless, receives presently habitual obedience from the bulk of the community. Aust. Jur. 324.

There are several degrees of what is called "de facto government." Such a government, in its highest degree, assumes a character very closely resembling that of a lawful government. This is when the usurping government expels the regular authorities from their customary seats and functions, and establishes itself in their place, and so becomes the actual government of a country. The distinguishing characteristic of such a government is that adherents to it in war against the government de jure do not incur the penalties of treason; and, under certain limitations, persons sworn by it in behalf of the country or otherwise will, in general, be respected by the government de jure when restored.

Such a government might be more aptly denominated a “government of paramount force,” being maintained by active military power against the rightful authority of an established and lawful government; and obeyed in civil matters by private citizens. They are usually administered directly by military authority, but they may be administered, also, by civil authority, supported more or less by military force. Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. 8, 9, 19 L.Ed. 361.

GOVERNMENT OF RIGHT. A government of right; the true and lawful government; a government established according to the constitution of the state, and lawfully entitled to recognition and supremacy and the administration of the state, but which is actually cut off from power or control. A government deemed lawful, or deemed rightful or just, which, nevertheless, has been supplanted or displaced; that is to say, which receives not presently (although it received formerly) habitual obedience from the bulk of the community. Aust. Jur. 324.

GOVERNMENTAL ACT. An act in exercise of police power or in exercise of legislative, discretionary, or judicial powers conferred on municipality for benefit of public. Broome v. City of Charlotte, 208 N.C. 729, 182 S.E. 325. Any act a state may lawfully perform or authorize and, as applied to the federal government, it is every action within its constitutional power. Orme v. Atlas Gas & Oil Co., 217 Minn. 27, 13 N.W.2d 757, 762. A step physically taken by persons capable of exercising the sovereign authority of the foreign nation. Banco de Espana v. Federal Reserve Bank of New York, C.C.A.10, 123 F.2d 787, 789. One owning and operating trucks under contract with federal government for transportation of mail held not entitled to have trucks exempted from state motor vehicle registration tax, on ground that trucks were immune from estate taxation and collection of taxes, Goble v. Zobor, 144 Neb. 70, 12 N.W.2d 311, 312; maintenance of firehouse property, Haynes v. City of New York, 259 App.Div. 837, 19 N.Y.S.2d 164, 165.

Generally when a municipality’s activity is for advantage of state as a whole, or is in performance of a duty imposed by sovereign power, activity is “public” and “governmental.” Department of Treasury v. City of Evansville, Ind., 223 Ind. 435, 60 N.E.2d 952, 955.

GOVERNMENTAL AGENTS. Those performing duties of a public character for benefit of all citizens of community. The term includes firemen and policemen. Miller v. City of Albany, 158 Misc. 720, 287 N.Y.S. 889, 891.

GOVERNMENTAL BODY. See Governmental Agency.

GOVERNMENTAL CAPACITY. In its “governmental capacity,” a municipality acts mainly as an arm of the state for convenient administration of government in incorporated territory, for public good on behalf of the state rather than for itself. Public Service Co. of Oklahoma v. City of Tulsa, 174 Okl. 58, 50 P.2d 166, 168; Oklahoma Natural Gas Corporation v. City of Enid, 179 Okl. 283, 65 P.2d 440, 442.

GOVERNMENTAL CHARACTER. See Governmental Capacity.

GOVERNMENTAL DUTIES. Those duties of a municipality have reference to some part or elenent of the state’s sovereignty granted it to be exercised for the benefit of the public, and all other duties are “proprietary”. City of Miami v. Oates, 152 Fla. 21, 10 So.2d 721, 723.

Those duties that the framers of the Constitution intended each member of the union of states would assume in order adequately to function under the form of government guaranteed by the Constitution. First State Bank of Gainesville v. Thomas, D.C.Tex., 38 F.Supp. 849, 851.

GOVERNMENTAL INSTRUMENTALITY. Any phia, 342 Pa. 369, 21 A.2d 228, 229, 230. See, also, implied limitation of the power of the federal government or any of its instrumentalities, and is applicable only to taxing relations of federal and state governments, and does not apply to state and municipalities therein. Marson v. City of Philadelphia, 342 Pa. 369, 21 A.2d 228, 229, 230. See, also, Sovereign Immunity of State from Liability.

GOVERNMENTAL IMMUNITY. A doctrine of implied limitation of the power of the federal government to tax a state or any of its instrumentalities, and of power of state to tax federal government or any of its instrumentalities, and is applicable only to taxing relations of federal and state governments, and does not apply to state and municipalities therein. Marson v. City of Philadelphia, 342 Pa. 369, 21 A.2d 228, 229, 230. See, also, Sovereign Immunity of State from Liability.

GOVERNMENTAL POWERS. Those pertaining to making and enforcing by a city of police regulations to prevent crime, preserve public health, prevent fires, care for the poor, and educate the young. Huffman v. City of Columbus, Ohio App., 51 N.E.2d 410, 412.

Powers exercised by city as agency of state. State ex rel. Gebhardt v. City Council of Helena, 102 Mont. 27, 55 P.2d 671, 673.

GOVERNMENTAL PURPOSE. One which has for its objective the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, general welfare, security, prosperity and contentment of the inhabitants of a given political division. Green v. Frazier, 44 N.D. 395, 176 N.W. 11, 17.

It has been held that, if an electric plant is used by a city for furnishing light and power for its own use and the use of its inhabitants, it is a “governmental purpose”. Chadwick v. City of Crawfordsville, 216 Ind. 399, 24 N.E.2d 937, 941, 129 A.L.R. 459; State v. Lincoln County Power Dist. No. 1, 60 Nev. 401, 111 P.2d 528, 531.

A lot purchased for jail but actually used to store cordwood used in county buildings and to store county road machinery, was prima facie used for “governmental purposes”. Security State Bank v. Dent County, 345 Mo. 1050, 137 S.W.2d 960, 964.

GOVERNMENTAL SUBDIVISION. An agency created to carry out a governmental purpose or function. It has been held to include a public corporation authorized to use waters of natural stream for irrigation and for development of electric power, Platte Valley Public Power and Irrigation Dist. v. Lincoln County, 144 Neb. 584, 14 N.W.2d 202, 206, 155 A.L.R. 412; and a housing authority, Lennox v. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Blount. They are days set apart for peculiar festivity; the members of the respective inns being on such occasions regaled at their dinner in the hall, with more than usual sumptuousness. Holthouse.

GRAND REMONSTRANCE. A constitutional document passed by the British House of Com- mons in November, 1641.

It was in the nature of an appeal to the country, setting forth political grievances. It consisted of a preamble of 20 clauses and the body of the remonstrance with 206 clauses, each of which was voted separately. Its first remedial measure was against papists; its second demanded that all illegal grievances and exactions should be presented and punished at the sessions and assizes and that judges and justices should be sworn to the due execution of the Peti- tion of Rights and other laws. The third was a series of precautions to prevent the employment of evil councillors. See Taswell-Langmead, Engl.Const.Hist. 464; Forsher, Grand Remonstrance. The text will be found in History for Ready Reference, II, 835.

GRANGER CASES. A name applied to six cases decided by the supreme court of the United States in 1876, which are reported in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L.Ed. 77; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U.S. 155, 24 L.Ed. 94; Peik v. Ry. Co., 94 U.S. 165, 24 L.Ed. 97; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ackley, 94 U.S. 179, 24 L.Ed. 99; Winona & St. Peter R. Co. v. Blake, 94 U.S. 180, 24 L.Ed. 99; those most frequently cited being Munn v. Illinois, and C., B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa. They are so called because they arose out of an agitation commenced by the grangers which resulted in the enactment of statutes for the regulation of the tolls and charges of common carriers, warehousemen, and the proprietors of elevators.

The enforcement of these acts was resisted and their con- stitutionality questioned. The supreme court affirmed the common-law doctrine that private property appropriated by the owner to a public use is thereby subjected to public regulation. They also held that the right of regulation was not restrained by the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution against the taking by the states of private property without due process of law. A text writer, who was at that time a member of the court, says of these cases: "But these decisions left undecided the question how far this legislative power of regulation belonged to the States, and how far it was in the congress of the United States"; Miller, Const.U.S. 397.

GRANT. A grange. Co. Litt. 5a.

GRANT. To bestow; to confer, Traylor v. State, 117 Tex.Cr.R. 323, 36 S.W.2d 506, 507; upon some one other than the person or entity which makes the grant. Porto Rico Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Colom, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 106 F.2d 345, 354.

GROUND WRIT. Prior to the English common-law procedure act, 1852, c. 121 a ca. sa. or fi. fa. could not be issued into a county different from that in which the venue in the action was laid, without first issuing a writ, called a "ground writ," into the latter county, and then another writ, which was called a "testatum writ," into the former. Wharton.

GROUNDAGE. A custom or tribute paid for the standing of shipping in port. Jacob.

GROUP INSURANCE. A contract of "group insurance" is one between insurer and employer for benefit of employees. Crawford v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., Mo.App., 167 S.W.2d 915, 924. In its nature group insurance is similar, if not identical. with that form of insurance known as term insurance. Watkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins., Co., La.App., 174 So. 885, 888.

GROWING CROP. A crop must be considered and treated as a growing crop from the time the seed is deposited in the ground, as at that time the seed loses the qualities of a chattel, and becomes a part of the freehold, and passes with a sale of it. Wilkinson v. Ketler, 69 Ala. 435.

GROWTH HALF-PENNY. A rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle. Clayt. 92.

GRUARII. The principal officers of a forest.

GRUB STAKE. In mining law, a contract between two parties by which one undertakes to furnish the necessary provisions, tools, and other supplies, and the other to prospect for and locate mineral lands and stake out mining claims thereon, the interest in the property thus acquired inuring to the benefit of both parties, either equally or in such proportion as their agreement may fix. Berry v. Woodburn, 107 Cal. 512, 40 P. 804; Hartney v. Gosling, 10 Wyo. 346, 68 P. 1118, 98 Am.St. Rep. 1005; Mattocks v. Gibbons, 94 Wash. 44, 162 P. 19, 22.

GUADALUPE HIDALGO, TREATY OF. A treaty between the United States and Mexico, terminating the Mexican War, dated February 2, 1848. See Gadsden Purchase.

GUADIA. In old European law, a pledge. Spelman; Calvin. A custom. Spelman. Spelled also "wadia."

GUARANTOR. He who makes a guaranty. In re Ford, D.C.Wash., 14 F.2d 848, 849.

GUARANTY, v. To undertake collaterally to answer for the payment of another's debt or the performance of another's duty, liability, or obligation; to assume the responsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

Guaranty is a contract that some particular thing shall be done exactly as it is agreed to be done, whether it is to be done by one person or another, and whether there be a personal or principal contractor or not. Redfield v. Haight, 27 Conn. 31.

The definition of a "guaranty," by text-writers, is an undertaking by one person that another shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation, or that, if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him. A guarantor of a bill or note is said to be one who engages that the note shall be paid, but is not an indorser or surety. Gridley v. Cape, 72 Ill. 13.

Synonyms

The terms guaranty and sureship are sometimes used interchangeably; but they should not be confounded. The contract of a guarantor is his own separate contract. It is in the nature of a warranty by him that the thing guaranteed to be done by the principal shall be done, not merely an engagement jointly with the principal to do the thing. The original contract of the principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. Durham v. Manrow, 2 N.Y. 548; Nading v. McGregor, 121 Ind. 465, 23 N.E. 283; 6 L.R.A. 686; Hoosier Brick Co. v. Floyd County Bank, 64 Ind.App. 445, 116 N.E. 87, 90; W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Salter, 31 Ga.App. 329, 120 S.E. 679, 681.

Guaranty and warranty are derived from the same root, and are in fact etymologically the same word, the "g" of the Norman French being interchangeable with the English "w." They are often used colloquially and in commercial transactions as having the same signification, as where a piece of machinery or the produce of an estate is "guaranteed" for a term of years, "warranted" being the more appropriate term in such a case. Accumulator Co. v. Dubuque St. R. Co., Iowa, 67 N.W. 70, 12 C.C. & P. 614; Ash v. Grinnell, 65 N.W. 128; Martinez v. Earnshaw, 36 Wdly. Notes Cas., Pa., 502. A distinction is also sometimes made in commercial usage, by which the term "guaranty" is understood as a collateral warranty (often conditional) against some default or event in the future, while the term "warranty" is taken as meaning an absolute undertaking in præsentì, against the defect, or for the quantity or quality contemplated by the parties in the subject-matter of the contract. Sturges v. Banker of Circleville, 11 Ohio St. 169, 78 Am.Dec. 296. But in strict legal usage the two terms are widely distinguished in this, that a warranty is an absolute undertaking or liability on the part of the warrantor, and the contract is void unless it is strictly and literally performed, while a guaranty is a promise, entirely collateral to the original contract, and not imposing any primary liability on the guarantor, but binding him to be answerable for the failure or default of another. Masons' Union L. Ins. Ass'n v. Brockman, 20 Ind. App. 206, 50 N.E. 493.

Absolute guaranty. An unconditional undertaking by a guarantor that debtor will pay debt or perform the obligation. An unconditional promise of payment or performance of principal contract on default of principal debtor or obligor. Robey v. Walton Lumber Co., 17 Wash.2d 242, 135 P.2d 95, 102, 145 A.L.R. 924.

Collateral guaranty. A contract by which the guarantor undertakes, in case the principal fails to do what he has promised or undertaken to do, to pay damages for such failure; distinguished from an engagement of sureship in this respect, that a surety undertakes to do the very thing which the principal has promised to do, in case the latter defaults. Wood v. Walton, 24 Ind. 325, 6 N.E. 272; Nading v. McGregor, 121 Ind. 470, 23 N.E. 283, 6 L.R.A. 686.
GUARANTY

Conditional guaranty. One which depends upon some extraneous event, beyond the mere default of the principal, and generally upon notice of the guaranty, notice of the principal’s default, and reasonable diligence in exhausting proper remedies against the principal. Yager v. Title Co., 112 Ky. 932, 66 S. W. 1027; Tobacco Co. v. Heid, D. C. Alaska, 62 F. 962; Wall v. Eccles, 61 Utah, 247, 211 P. 702, 703.

Special guaranty. A guaranty which is available only to the particular person to whom it is offered or addressed; as distinguished from a general guaranty, which will operate in favor of any person who may accept it. Everson v. Gere, 40 Hun, N. Y., 250; Tidioute Sav. Bank v. Libby, 101 Wis. 193, 77 N. W. 182, 70 Am. St. Rep. 907; Jobes v. Miller, 201 Mo. App. 45, 209 S. W. 549, 550.

Guaranty, company. A corporation authorized to transact the business of engaging into contracts of guaranty and suretyship; as, one which, for fixed premiums, becomes surety on judicial bonds, fidelity bonds, and the like. See ‘Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 193, 74 S. W. 1050.

GUARANTY INSURANCE. See Insurance.

GUARDAGE. A state of wardship.

GUARDIAN. A guardian is a person lawfully invested with the power, and charged with the duty, of taking care of the person and managing the property and rights of another person, who, for some peculiarity of status, or defect of age, understanding, or self-control, is considered incapable of administering his own affairs. Bass v. Cook, 4 Port., Ala., 392; Sparhawk v. Allen, 21 N. H. 27; Burger v. Frakes, 67 Iowa, 460, 23 N. W. 746; Fleming v. Leibe, 95 N. J. Eq. 129, 122 A. 616.

One who legally has the care and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.

This term might be appropriately used to designate the person charged with the care and control of idiots, lunatics, habitual drunkards, spendthrifts, and the like; but such person is, under many of the statutory systems authorizing the appointment, styled “committee,” and in common usage the name “guardian” is applied only to one having the care and management of a minor.

Classification

A testamentary guardian is one appointed by the deed or last will of the ward’s father; while a guardian by election is one chosen by the infant himself in a case where he would otherwise be without one.

A general guardian is one who has the general care and control of the person and estate of his ward; while a special guardian is one who has special or limited powers and duties with respect to his ward, e. g., a guardian who has the custody of the estate but not of the person, or vice versa, or a guardian ad litem.

A domestic guardian is one appointed at the place where the ward is legally domiciled; while a foreign guardian derives his authority from appointment by the courts of another state, and generally has charge only of such property as may be located within the jurisdiction of the power appointing him.

A guardian ad litem is a guardian appointed by a court of justice to prosecute or defend for an infant in any suit to which he may be a party. 2 Steph. Comm. 342; Crawford v. Reception Syndicate Co., Mo., 37 S. W. 2d 581, 584. Most commonly appointed for infant defendants, infant plaintiffs generally suing by next friend. This kind of guardian has no right to interfere with the infant’s person or property. 2 Steph. Comm. 343; Ritter v. National City Co. v. Wis. 404, 83 N. W. 694; Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 192 Cal. 343, 219 P. 998, 1000, 30 A. L. R. 1103.

A guardian by appointment of court has custody of the infant until the attainment of full age. 2 Steph. Comm. 341; 2 Kent, Comm. 226.

A guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother, of a child. 1 Bl. Comm. 461; 2 Kent, Comm. 219; Daniels v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 135 Pa. Super. 450, 5 A. 2d 606, 611. This guardianship extends only to the custody of the person of the child to the age of twenty-one years. Sometimes called “natural guardian,” but this is rather a popular than a technical mode of expression. 2 Steph. Comm. 337; Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 500; Mauro v. Ritchie, 16 Fed. Cas. 1171.

A guardian by statute is a guardian appointed for a child by the deed or last will of the father, and who has the custody both of his person and estate until the attainment of full age. This kind of guardianship is founded on the statute of 12 Car. II. c. 24, and “has been pretty extensively adopted in this country. 1 Bl. Comm. 462; 2 Step. Comm. 339, 340; 2 Kent, Comm. 224-226; Huson v. Green, 88 Ga. 722, 16 S. E. 255.

A guardian for nurture is the father, or, at his decease, the mother, of a child. This kind of guardianship extends only to the person, and determines when the infant arrives at the age of fourteen. 2 Kent, Comm. 221; 1 Bl. Comm. 461; 2 Step. Comm. 338; Mauro v. Ritchie, 16 Fed. Cas. 1171; Arthurs Appeal, 1 Grant Cas., Pa., 56.

Guardian in chivalry. In the tenure by knight’s service, in the feudal law, if the heir of the feud was under the age of twenty-one, being a male, or fourteen, being a female, the lord was entitled to the wardship (and marriage) of the heir, and was called the “guardian in chivalry.” This wardship consisted in having the custody of the body and lands of such heir, without any account of the profits. 2 Bl. Comm. 67.

Guardian in socage. At the common law, this was a species of guardian who had the custody of lands coming to the infant by descent also of the infant’s person, until the latter reached the age of fourteen. Such guardian was always “the next of kin to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend.” 1 Bl. Comm. 461; 2 Step. Comm. 338; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 5 Johns., N. Y., 67; Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend., N. Y., 157, 19 Am. Dec. 568.

Natural guardian. The father of a child, or the mother if the father be dead.

“Guardian de son tort,” sometimes described as “quasi guardian” or “guardian by estoppel,” is one who assumes to be a guardian without valid authority. Rear v. Olson, 219 Wis. 322, 263 N. W. 357.

GUARDIAN DE L’EGLISE. A church-warden.

GUARDIAN DE L’ESTEMERY. The warden of the stannaries or mines in Cornwall, etc.

GUARDIAN OF THE POOR. In English Law, a person elected by the ratepayers of a parish to act as guardian without valid authority. Rear v. Olson, 219 Wis. 322, 263 N. W. 357.

GUARDIAN OF THE PEACE. A warden or conservator of the peace.

GUARDIAN OF THE POOR. In English Law, a person elected by the ratepayers of a parish to have the charge and management of the parish work-house or union. See 3 Step. Comm. 203, 215.
GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALITIES. The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see.

GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALITIES. The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the crown.

GUARDIAN OR WARDEN, OF THE CINQUE PORTS. A magistrate who has the jurisdiction over the ports or havens which are called the “Cinque Ports,” (q. v.). This office was first created in England, in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea-coasts against enemies, etc.

GUARDIANSHIP. The office, duty, or authority of a guardian. Also the relation subsisting between guardian and ward.

GUARDIANUS. A guardian, warden, or keeper.

GUARENTIGIO. In Spanish law, a written authorization to a court to enforce the performance of an agreement in the same manner as if it had been decreed upon regular legal proceedings.

GUARDAGE. In old English law, that which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another’s territory. Cowell.

GUIDANCE. In old English law, that which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another’s territory. Cowell.

The office of guiding of travelers through dangerous and unknown ways. 2 Inst. 526.

GUIDE-PLATE. An iron or steel plate to be attached to a rail for the purpose of guiding to their place on the rail wheels thrown off the track. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 1291.

GUIDON DE LA MER. The name of a treatise on maritime law, by an unknown author, supposed to have been written about 1671 at Rouen, and considered, in continental Europe, as a work of high authority.

GUIDON. A voluntary association of persons pursuing the same trade, art, profession, or business, such as printers, goldsmiths, wool merchants, etc., united under a distinct organization of their own, analogous to that of a corporation, regulating the affairs of their trade or business by their own laws and rules, and aiming, by co-operation and organization, to protect and promote the interests of their common vocation.

In medieval history these fraternities or guilds played an important part in the government of some states; as at Florence, in the thirteenth and following centuries, where they chose the council of government of the city. The word is said to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon “gild” or “geld,” a tax or tribute, because each member of the society was required to pay a tax towards its support.

GUILD RENTS. Rents payable to the crown by any guild, or such as formerly belonged to religious guilds, and came to the crown at the general dissolution of the monasteries. Tomlins.

GUILDHALL. The hall or place of meeting of a guild, or gild.

The place of meeting of a municipal corporation. 3 Steph. Comm. 173, note. The mercantile or commercial gilds of the Saxons are supposed to have given rise to the present municipal corporations of England, whose place of meeting is still called the “Guildhall.”

GUILDHALL SITTINGS. The sittings held in the Guildhall of the city of London for city of London causes.

GUILLOTINE. An instrument for decapitation, used in France for the infliction of the death penalty on convicted criminals, consisting, essentially, of a heavy and weighted knife-blade moving perpendicularly between grooved posts, which is made to fall from a considerable height upon the neck of the sufferer, immovably fixed in position to receive the impact.
GUILT. In criminal law, that quality which imparts criminality to a motive or act, and renders the person amenable to punishment by the law.

That disposition to violate the law which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence. See Ruth. Inst. b. 1, c. 18, §10.

GUILTY. Having committed a crime or tort; the word used by a prisoner in pleading to an indictment when he confesses the crime of which he is charged, and by the jury in convicting. Corn. v. Walter, 83 Pa. 108, 24 Am.Rep. 154; Jessie v. State, 28 Miss. 103; State v. White, 25 Wis. 359. Responsible for a delinquency, crime, or sin, and the connotation of such word is "evil", "wrong. doing", or "culpability". Hilkert v. Canning, 58 Ariz. 290, 119 P.2d 233, 236.

GUINEA. A coin formerly issued by the English mint, but all these coins were called in the time of Wm. IV. The word now means only the sum of £1 18., in which denomination the fees of counsel are always given.

GULA-THING. A collection of Scandinavian customs in force in the southern part of Norway. The Frosta-thing was in force in the more northerly division of Dronheim. They are said to help to an understanding of the law prevailing in the northern part of England, where the Danish influence was strongest. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 23.

GULE OF AUGUST. The first of August, being the day of St. Peter ad Vincula.

GULES. The heraldic name of the color usually called "red." The word is derived from the Arabic word "gule," a rose, and was probably introduced by the Crusaders. Gules is denoted in engravings by numerous perpendicular lines. Heralds who blazoned by planets and jewels called it "Mars," and "ruby." Wharton.

GUN. A firearm for throwing a projectile with gunpowder. Highsaw v. Creech, 17 Tenn.App. 573, 69 S.W.2d 249. A portable firearm such as a rifle, shotgun, carbine, etc. Henderson v. State, 75 Fla. 464, 78 So. 427, 428. A pistol or revolver. State v. Christ, 189 Iowa, 474, 177 N.W. 54, 57.

GURGES. Lat. Properly a whirlpool, but in old English law and conveyancing, a deep pit filled with water, distinguished from "stagnum," which was a shallow pool or pond. Co. Litt. 5; Johnson v. Rayner, 6 Gray, Mass., 107.

GURGITES. Wears. Jacob.
HABEAS

H. This letter, as an abbreviation, stands for Henry (a king of that name) in the citation of English statutes. In the Year Books, it is used as an abbreviation for Hilary term. In tax assessments and other such official records, “H” may be used as an abbreviation for “house,” and the courts will so understand it. Alden v. Newark, 36 N.J.L. 288; Parker v. Elizabeth, 39 N.J.L. 693.

H. A. An abbreviation for hoc anno, this year, in this year.

H. B. An abbreviation for house bill, i.e., a bill in the house of representatives, as distinguished from a senate bill.

H. B. M. An abbreviation for His (or Her) Britannic Majesty.

H. C. An abbreviation for house of commons, or for habeas corpus.

H. I. H. His (or Her) Imperial Highness.

H. L. An abbreviation for house of lords.

H. R. An abbreviation for house of representatives.

H. T. An abbreviation for hoc titulo, this title, under this title; used in references to books.

H. V. An abbreviation for hoc verbo or how voce, this word, under this word; used in references to dictionaries and other works alphabetically arranged.

HABE, or HAVE. Lat. A form of the salutatory expression “Ave” (hail) in the titles of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes. Calvin; Spelman.

HABEAS CORPORA JURATORUM. A writ commanding the sheriff to bring up the persons of jurors, and, if need were, to restrain them of their lands and goods, in order to insure or compel their attendance in court on the day of trial of a cause. It issued from the Common Pleas, and served the same purpose as a distancing juratores in the King’s Bench. It was abolished by the C. L. P. Act, 1852, § 104. Brown.

HABEAS CORPUS. Lat. (You have the body.) The name given to a variety of writs, (of which these were anciently the emphatic words,) having for their object to bring a party before a court or judge. In common usage, and whenever these words are used alone, they are understood to mean the habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, (see infra.) Dancy v. Owens, 126 Okt. 37, 258 P. 879, 884; In re McDevitt, 101 Misc. 588, 168 N.Y.S. 433; U. S. v. Tod, 263 U.S. 149, 44 S.Ct. 54, 57, 68 L.Ed. 221; Payne v. Graham, 20 Ala.App. 439, 102 So. 729, 731.

The sole function of the writ is to release from unlawful imprisonment. People ex rel. Luciano v. Murphy, 160 Misc. 573, 290 N.Y.S. 1011. The office of the writ is not to determine prisoner’s guilt or innocence, and only issue which it presents is whether prisoner is restrained of his liberty by due process. Ex parte Presnell, 58 Okl.Cr. 50, 49 P.2d 232.

HABEAS CORPUS ACT. The English statute of 31 Car. II. c. 2, is the original and prominent habeas corpus act. It was amended and supplemented by St. 56 Geo. III. c. 100. And similar statutes have been enacted in all the United States. This act is justly regarded as the great constitutional guaranty of personal liberty.

HABEAS CORPUS AD DELIBERANDUM ET RECIPIENDUM. A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offense of which he is accused was committed. Bac. Abr. “Habeas Corpus,” A; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 132. Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 97, 2 L.Ed. 554. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county. 1 Tyrw. 185.

HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET RECIPIENDUM. A writ issuing in civil cases to remove the cause, as also the body of the defendant, from an inferior court to a superior court having jurisdiction, there to be disposed of. It is also called “habeas corpus cum causa.” Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 97, 2 L.Ed. 554.

HABEAS CORPUS AD PROSECUENDUM. A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. 3 Bl. Comm. 130; State ex rel. Deeb v. Fabisinski, 111 Fla. 454, 152 So. 207, 210.

HABEAS CORPUS AD RESPONDENDUM. A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter. 2 Sell. Pr. 259; 2 Mod. 198; 3 Bl. Comm. 129; 1 Tidd, Pr. 300.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SATISFACIENDUM. In English practice. A writ which issues when a prisoner has had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court, to charge him with process of execution. 3 Bl. Comm. 129, 130; 3 Steph. Comm. 693; 1 Tidd, Pr. 350.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM. A writ directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, (or person detained,) with the day and cause of his caption and detention, ad faciendum, sub jiciendum et recipiendum, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the judge or court awarding the writ shall consider in that behalf. 3 Bl. Comm. 131; 3 Steph. Comm. 695.

This is the well-known remedy for deliverance from illegal confinement, called by Sir William Blackstone the HABEAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM. At common law, the writ, meaning "you have the body to testify", used to bring up a prisoner detained in a jail or prison to give evidence before the court. Hottle v. District Court in and for Clinton County, 233 Iowa 904, 11 N.W.2d 30, 34; 3 Bl. Comm. 130; 2 Tidd, Pr. 809. Ex parte Marland, 91 Mo. 250, 4 S.W. 91, 60 Am.Rep. 250.

HABEAS CORPUS CUM CAUSA. (You have the body, with the cause.) Another name for the writ of habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum, (q. V.) 1 Tidd, Pr. 348, 349.

HABEMUS OPTIMUM TESTEM, CONFIDENTEM REUM. 1 Phil. Ev. 397. We have the best witness,—a confessing defendant. "What is taken pro confess" is taken as indubitable truth. The plea of guilty by the party accused shuts out all further inquiry. Habemus con fütetem reum is demonstration, unless indirect motives can be assigned to it? 2 Hagg. Eccl. 315.

The office of the "habendum" is properly to determine what estate or interest is granted by the deed, though office may be performed by the premises, in which case the habendum may lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not totally contradict or be repugnant to, estate granted in the premises. Claridge v. Phelps, Ind.App., 105 Ind. App. 344, 11 N.E.2d 503, 504.

HABENDUM ET TENENDUM. In old conveyancing, to have and to hold. Formal words in deeds of land from a very early period. Bract. fol. 17b.

HABENTES HOMINES. In old English law, rich men; literally, having men. The same with HABENTIA. Riches. Mon. Angl. t. 1, 100.

HABERE. Lat. In the civil law, to have. Sometimes distinguished from tenere, (to hold,) and possidere, (to possess;) habere referring to the right, tenere to the fact, and possidere to both. Calvin.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM. Lat. That you cause to have possession. The name of the process commonly resorted to by the successful party in an action of ejectment, for the purpose of being placed by the sheriff in the actual possession of the land recovered. It is commonly termed simply "habere facias," or "hab. fa."

HABERE FACIAS SEISINAM. L. Lat. That you cause to have seizin. The writ of execution in real actions, directing the sheriff to cause the demandant to have seizin of the lands recovered. It was the proper process for giving seizin of a freehold, as distinguished from a chattel interest in lands.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM. Lat. That you cause to have a view. A writ to cause the sheriff to take a view of lands or tenements.

HABERE LICERE. Lat. In Roman law, to allow [one] to have [possession.] This phrase denoted the duty of the seller of property to allow the purchaser to have the possession and enjoyment. For a breach of this duty, an actio ex emp-to might be maintained.

HABERGEON. A diminutive of hauberk (q. v.), denoting a short coat of mail without sleeves. Blount.

HABERJECTS. A cloth of a mixed color. Magna Charta, c. 26.

HABETO TIBI RES TUAS. Lat. Have or take your effects to yourself. One of the old Roman forms of divorcing a wife. Calvin.

HABILIS. Lat. Fit; suitable; active; useful, (of a servant.) Proved; authentic, (of Book of Saints.) Fixed; stable, (of authority of the king.) Du Cange.

HABIT. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a usual repetition of the same act or function. Conner v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 146 Ind. 430, 45 N.E. 662; State v. Skillcorn, 104 Iowa, 97, 73 N.W. 503; Corn. v. Whitney, 5 Gray, Mass., 85. The customary conduct, to pursue which one has acquired a tendency, from frequent repetition of the same acts. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, -105 U.S. 350, 26 L.Ed. 1055; National Council of Knights and Ladies of Security v. Fowler, 66 Okl. 294, 168 P. 914, 915, 6 A.L.R. 591; Woodmen of the World Life Ins. Soc. v. Reese, 206 Ark. 530, 176 S.W.2d 708, 714.

HABIT AND REPUTE. Applied in Scotch law to a general understanding and belief of something's having happened: thus, by the law of Scotland, marriage may be established by "habit and repute" where the parties cohabit and are at the same time held and reputed as man and wife. See Bell. The same rule obtains in some of the United States.

HABITABLE REPAIR. A covenant by a lessee to "put the premises into habitable repair" binds him to put them into such a state that they may be occupied, not only with safety, but with reasonable comfort, for the purposes for which they are taken. Miller v. McCordell, 19 R.I. 304, 33 A. 445, 30 L.R.A. 682; 2 Moad. & R. 186.

HABITANCY. That fixed place of abode to which a person intends to return habitually when absent.
HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT. The statute 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99. By this act power was given to apprehend on suspicion convicted persons holding license under the penal servitude acts, 1853, 1857, and 1864. The act was repealed and replaced by the prevention of crimes act, 1871, (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112.)

HABITUAL DRUNKARD. One who has a fixed habit of frequently getting drunk, though not oftener drunk than sober, and though sober for weeks at a time. Patton v. Commonwealth, 273 Ky. 307, 116 S.W.2d 652, 653.

One who frequently and repeatedly becomes intoxicated by excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquor so as to acquire a fixed habit and an involuntary tendency to become intoxicated as often as the temptation is presented, even though he remains sober for days or even weeks at a time. Leonard v. Leonard, 221 Iowa 722, 266 N.W. 537, 538.

A person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. Ludwick v. Com., 18 Pa. 174; Gourlay v. Gourlay, 16 R.7. 705, 19 A. 142; McBee v. McBee, 22 Or. 329, 29 P. 887, 29 Am. St. Rep. 613.

It is not necessary that the person shall have lost his will power so that he cannot resist stimulants, Lester v. Sampson, Mo.App., 180 S.W. 419, 421; or that he be intoxicated so often as to incapacitate him from attending to his business for a considerable portion of time. Runkle v. Southern Pac. Milling Co., 184 Cal. 714, 195 P. 398, 400, 16 A.L.R. 275.

In England, defined by the habitual drunkards act, 1879, (42 & 43 Vict. c. 19,) which authorizes confinement in a retreat, upon the party's own application, as 'a person who, not being amenable to any jurisdiction in lunacy, is, notwithstanding, by reason of habitual intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, at times dangerous to himself, or others, or incapable of managing himself or herself, or his or her affairs.'

HABITUM ET TONSURAM CLERICALEM. Clerical attire and tonsure. 4 Bl.Comm. 367.

HABLE, L. Fr. In old English law, a port or harbor; a station for ships. St. 27 Hen. VI. c. 3.

HACIENDA. In Spanish law, the public domain; the royal estate; the aggregate wealth of the state. The science of administering the national wealth; public economy.

Also an estate or farm belonging to a private person.

HACK STAND. A private hack stand is a station where taxicabs or other vehicles are kept standing to solicit trade from the public indiscriminately at all hours. Borland v. Curto, 121 Misc. 336, 201 N.Y.S. 236, 237.

HACKNEY. Let out for hire, or devoted to common use; as, "hackney coaches," "hackney carriages." State v. Jarvis, 89 Vt. 239, 95 A. 541, 543.

HACKNEY CARRIAGES. Carriages plying for hire in the street. 2 C. 13, 877; Masterson v. Short, 33 How.Pr., N.Y., 481; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86; Corn. v. Matthews, 122 Mass. 60.

HAD. As used in a statute providing that no suit, action or proceeding to foreclose a mortgage or trust deed shall be had or maintained, "had" means commenced or begun. Friel v. Alewel, 318 Mo. 1, 298 S.W. 762, 764.

HADBOTE. In Saxon law, a recompense or satisfaction for the violation of holy orders, or violence offered to persons in holy orders. Cowell; Blount.

HADD. In Hindu law, a boundary or limit. A statutory punishment defined by law, and not arbitrary. Mozley & Whitley.

HADERUNGA. In old English law, hatred; ill will; prejudice, or partiality. Spelman; Cowell.

Respect or distinction of persons, Jacob.

HADGONEL. In old English law, a tax or mulct. Jacob.

HIEC EST CONVENTIO. Lat. This is an agreement. Words with which agreements actually commenced. Yearb. H. 6 Edw. II. 191.

HIEC EST FINALIS CONCORDIA. L. Lat. This is the final agreement. The words with which the foot of a fine commenced. 2 Bl.Comm. 351.

HJEREDA. In Gothic law, a tribunal answering to the English court-leet or hundred court.

HIEREDE ABDUCTO. An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain his person, the same being carried away by another person. Old Nat. Brev. 93.

HIEREDE DELIBERANDO ALTERI QUI HABET CUSTODIUM TERRIE. An ancient writ, directed to the sheriff, to require one that had the body of an heir, being in ward, to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land. Reg. Orig. 161.

HIEREDE RAPTO. An ancient writ that lay for the ravishment of the lord's ward. Reg. Orig. 163.

HLEREDEM DEUS FACIT, NON HOMO. God makes the heir, not man. Co. Litt. 7b; Bract. 62b.

HIEREDES. Lat. In the civil law, heirs. The plural of hceres (q. v.).

H1EREDES PROXIMI. Nearest or next heirs. The children or descendants of the deceased.

HIEREDES REMOTIORES. More remote heirs. The kinsmen other than children or descendants.

HIEREDES SUI ET NECESSARII. In Roman law, own and necessary heirs; e., the lineal descendants of the estate-leaver. They were called "necessary" heirs, because it was the law that made them heirs, and not the choice of either the decedent or themselves. But since this was also true of slaves (when named "heirs" in the will) the former class were designated "sui et necessarii," by way of distinction, the word "sui" denoting that the necessity arose from their relationship to the decedent. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 733.

HIEREDIPETZA. Lat. In old English law, a seeker of an inheritance; hence, the next heir to lands. Du Cange.

H1EREDIPETZE SUO PROPINQUO VEL EXTRANEO PERICULOSO SANE CUSTODI NUL LUS COMMITTATUR. To the next heir, whether a relation or a stranger certainly a dangerous guardian, let no one be committed. Co. Litt. 88b.

HZEREDITAS.

In Roman law. The hcereditas was a universal succession by law to any deceased person, whether such person had died testate or intestate, and whether in trust (ex fideicommisso) for another or not. The like succession according to torian law was bonorum possessio.

The hcereditas was called "jacens," until the hceres took it up, i. e., made his aditio hcereditatis; and such hceres, if a suis hceres, had the right to abstain, (potestas abstinendi,) and, if an extraneus hceres, had the right to consider whether he would accept or decline, (potestas deliberandi,) the reason for this precaution being that (prior to Justinian's enactment to the contrary) a hceres after his aditio was liable to the full extent of the debts of the deceased person, and could have no relief therefrom, except in the case of a damnum emergens or damnosa hcereditatis, i. e., an hcereditus which disclosed (after the aditio) some enormous unsuspected liability. Brown. The theory was that, though the physical person of the deceased had perished, his legal personality survived and descended unimpaired on his heirs in whom his legal identity was continued.

In Old English Law. An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. Co. Litt. 9.
HIEREDITAS, ALIA CORPORALIS, ALIA INCORPORALIS; CORPORALIS EST, QUIE TANGI POTEST ET VIDERI; INCORPORALIS QUIZE TANGI NON POTEST NEC VIDERI. Co. Litt. 9. An inheritance is either corporeal or incorporeal. Corporeal is that which can be touched and seen; incorporeal, that which can neither be touched nor seen.

HIEREDITAS DAMNOSA. A burdensome inheritance; one which would be a burden instead of a benefit, that is, the debts to be paid by the heir would exceed the assets.

HIEREDITAS JACENS. In civil law, a prostrate or vacant inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called so long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance. So long as no one had acquired the inheritance, it was termed "hcereditas jacens;" and this, by a legal fiction, represented the person of the decedent. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 737. The estate of a person deceased, where the owner left no heirs or legatee to take it, called also "caduca;" an escheated estate. Cod. 10, 10, 1; 4 Kent, Comm. 425. The term has also been used in English law to signify an estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor's death, and before assumption of heir. Co. Litt. 342b. An inheritance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant. 2 Bl.Comm. 259.

HIEREDITAS LEGITIMA. A succession or inheritance devolving by operation of law (intestate succession) rather than by the will of the deceased. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 654.

HIEREDITAS LUCTUOSA. A sad or mournful inheritance or succession; as that of a parent to the estate of a child, which was regarded as disturbing the natural order of mortality (turbato ordine mortalitatis.) Cod. 6, 25, 9; 4 Kent, Comm. 397. It was sometimes termed tristis successio.

HIEREDITAS NIHIIL ALIUD EST, QUAM SUCESSIO IN UNIVERSUM JUS QUOD DEFUNCTUS HABUERIT. The right of inheritance is nothing else than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased. Dig. 50, 17, 62.

HIEREDITAS NUNQUAM ASCENDIT. An inheritance never ascends. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1; 2 Bl. Comm. 211. A maxim of feudal origin, and which invariably prevailed in the law of England down to the passage of the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 6, by which it was abrogated. 1 Steph.Comm. 378. See Broom. Max. 527, 528.

HIEREDITAS TESTAMENTARIA. Testamentary inheritance, that is, succession to an estate under and according to the last will and testament of the decedent. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 654.

HIEREDITUM APPELLATIONE VENIUNT WEREDES HAEREDUM IN INFINITUM. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity. Co. Litt. 9.

ILERES.

In Roman Law. The heir, or universal successor in the event of death. The heir is he who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property of the estate-leaver. He is not only the successor to the rights and claims, but also to the estate-leaver's debts, and in relation to his estate is to be regarded as the identical person of the estate-leaver, inasmuch as he represents him in all his active and passive relations to his estate. MacKeld. Rom. Law, § 651.

The institution of the heces was the essential characteristic of a testament: if this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. Mack.C.L. §§ 632, 650.

It should be remarked that the office, powers, and duties of the heces, in Roman law, were much more closely assimilated to those of a modern executor than to those of an heir at law. Hence "heir" is not at all an accurate translation of "heces," unless it be understood in a special, technical sense.

In Common Law. An heir; he to whom lands, tenements, or hereditaments by the act of God and right of blood to descend, of some estate of inheritance. Co. Litt. 7b.

HIERES ASTRARIUS. In old English law, an heir in actual possession of the house of his ancestor. Bract. 85, 267b.

HIERES DE FACTO. In old English law, heir from fact; that is, from the disseisin or other act of his ancestor, without or against right. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an heir de jure, or by law.

HIERES ALTER IPSE, ET FILIUS EST PARS PATRIS. An heir is another self, and a son is part of the father. 3 Coke, 12b.

HIERES EST AUT JURE PROPRIETATIS AUT JURE REPRESENTATIONIS. An heir is either by right of property, or right of representation. 3 Coke, 40b.

HIERES EST EADEM PERSONA CUM ANTECESSORE. An heir is the same person with his ancestor. Co. Litt. 22; Branch, Princ. See Nov. 48, c. 1, § 1.

HIERES EST NOMEN COLLECTUM. "Heir" is a collective name or noun. 1 Vent. 215.

HIERES EST NOMEN JURIS; FILIUS EST NOMEN NATURIE. "Heir" is a name or term of law; "son" is a name of nature. Bac. Max. 52, in reg. 11.

HIERES EST PARS ANTECESSORIS. An heir is a part of the ancestor. So said because the ancestor, during his life, bears in his body (in judgment of law) all his heirs. Co. Litt. 22b; Schoonmaker v. Sheely, 3 Hill, N.Y., 165, 167.

HIERES EX ASSE. In the civil law, an heir to the whole estate; a sole heir. Inst. 2, 23, 9.
HARES EXTRANEUS. In the civil law, a strange or foreign heir; one who was not subject to the power of the testator, or person who made him heir. Qui testatoris juris subjecti non sunt, extranei heredes appellantur. Inst. 2, 19, 3.

HARES FACTUS. In the civil law, an heir made by will; a testamentary heir; the person created universal successor by will. Story, Conf. Laws, § 507; 3 Bl.Comm. 224. Otherwise called "heres ex testamento," and "heres institutus." Inst. 2, 9, 7; Id. 2, 14.

HARES FIDEICOMMISSARIUS. In the civil law, the person for whose benefit an estate was given to another (termed "heres fiduciarius," q. v.) by will. Inst. 2, 23, 6, 7, 9. Answering nearly to the cestui que trust of the English law.

HARES FIDUCIARIUS. A fiduciary heir, or heir in trust; a person constituted heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another, called the "fideicommissarius."

HARES H1EREDIS NEI EST MEUS HARES. The heir of my heir is my heir. Wharton, Law Dict.

HARES INSTITUTUS. A testamentary heir; one appointed by the will of the decedent.

HARES LEGITIMUS. A lawful heir; one point-ed out as such by the marriage of his parents.

HARES LEGITIMUS EST QUEM NUPT1IE RE-MONSTRANT. He is a lawful heir whom marriage points out as such; who is born in wedlock. Co. Litt. 7b; Bract. fol. 88; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; Broom, Max. 515; Mirror of Just. 70; Dig. 2, 4, 5. (As to the application of the principle when the marriage is subsequent to the birth of the child, see 2 Cl. & F. 571; 6 Bingh. N. C. 385; 5 Wheat. 226, 262, n., 5 L.Ed. 70.)

HARES MINOR UNO ET VIGINTI ANNIS NON RESPONDEBIT, NISI IN CASU DOTIS. Moore, 348. An heir under twenty-one years of age is not answerable, except in the matter of dower.

HARES NATUS. In the civil law, an heir born; one born heir, as distinguished from one made heir, (heres factus, q. v.;) an heir at law, or by intestacy, (ab intestato;) the next of kin by blood, in cases of intestacy. Story, Conf. Laws, § 507; 3 Bl.Comm. 224. This is the only form of heirship recognized in the English law. Wms. R. P., 6th Am. ed. 96.

HARES NECESSARIUS. In the civil law, a necessary or compulsory heir. This name is given to the heir when, being a slave, he was named "heir" in the testament, because on the death of the testator, whether he would or not, he at once became free, and was compelled to assume the heirship. Inst. 2, 19, 1.

HARES NON TENETUR IN ANGLIA AD DEBI-TA ANTECESSORIS REDDENDA, NISI PER AN-TECESSOREM AD HOC FUERIT OBLIGATUS, PR1ETERQUAM DEBITA REGIS TANTUM. Co. Litt 386. In England, the heir is not bound to pay his ancestor’s debts, unless he be bound to it by the ancestor, except debts due to the king. But now, by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 104, he is liable.

HARES RECTUS. In old English law, a right heir. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11.

HARES SUUS. In the civil law, a man’s own heir; a decedent’s proper or natural heir. This name was given to the lineal descendants of the deceased. Persons who were in the power of the testator but became sui juris at his death. Inst. 2, 13; 3, 1, 4, 5. Those descendants who were under the power of the deceased at the time of his death, and who are most nearly related to him. Calvin.

HIERETARE. In old English law, to give a right of inheritance, or make the donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs. Cowell.

H1ERETICO COMBURENDO. The statute 2 Hen. IV. c. 15, de hereticorum comburendo, was the first penal law enacted against heresy, and imposed the penalty of death by burning against all heretics who relapsed or who refused to abjure their opinions. It was repealed by the statute 29 Car. II. c. 9. Brown. This was also the name of a writ for the purpose indicated. See, also, De H1ereticorum Comburendo.

HAFNE. A haven or port. Cowell.

HAFNE COURTS. Haven courts; courts ancient-ly held in certain ports in England. Spelman.

HAG. A division of a coppice or wood on which timber was cut annually by the proprietor. Ersk. Pr. 222.

HAGA. A house in a city or borough. Scott.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun of a larger description than the hagne. St. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

HAGNE. A house in a city or borough. Scott.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun of a larger description than the hagne. St. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun of a larger description than the hagne. St. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun of a larger description than the hagne. St. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun of a larger description than the hagne. St. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun of a larger description than the hagne. St. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.
In old English law, a permission or liberty to take thorns, etc., to make or repair hedges. Blount.

In Scotch law, whole; the whole. "All and haill" are common words in conveyances. Bell, App.Cas. 499.

Those who formerly held lands by the service of defending or repairing a church or monument. See, also, Halywercfolk.

In old Scotch law, to seek restitution of one's own goods and gear, and bring the same home again. Skene de Verb. Sign.

The holder of a right. Moz. & W. See Hakh.

One of two equal parts into which anything may be divided. Hoyne v. Schneider, 138 Kan. 545, 27 P.2d 558.

See Blood.

Persons who have the same father, but different mothers; or the same mother, but different fathers. Wood v. Mitcham, 92 N.Y. 379; In re Weiss' Estate, 1 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, Pa., 210.

A copper coin of the United States, of the value of five mills, and of the weight of ninety-four grains. The coinage of these was discontinued in 1857.

In connection with tea, a "half chest" is a chest containing 75 to 80 pounds, but the weight varies according to the kind of tea. Japan Tea Co. v. Franklin MacVeagh & Co., 142 Minn. 152, 171 N.W. 305, 307.

A man employed in ploughing. Wilson, Gloss. Ind.; Moz. & W.

A synonym for lynch law, or the summary (and unauthorized) trial of a person accused of crime and the infliction of death upon him; from the name of the parish of Halifax, in England, where anciently this form of private justice was practised by the free burgheurs in the case of persons accused of stealing; also called "gibbet law."
HALIGEMOT, or HALIMOTE. In Saxon law, the meeting of a hall, (conventus aulcis), that is, a lord’s court; a court of a manor, or court-baron. Spelled so called from the hall, where the tenants or freemen met, and justice was administered. Crabb, Eng. Law, 26.

It was sometimes used to designate a convention of citizens in their public hall and was also called folkmote and halimote. The word halimote rather signifies the lord’s court or a court baron held in a manor in which the differences between the tenants were determined. Cunn. L.Dict.; Cowell.

"Furthermore, it seems to have been a common practice for a wealthy abbey to keep a court, known as a halimote, on each of its manors, while in addition to these manorial courts it kept a central court, a libera curia for all its greater freehold tenants. And we may now and again meet with courts which are distinctly called courts of honors. The rule then was not merely this, that the lord of a manor may hold a court for the manor; but rather this, that a lord may hold a court for his tenants."

HALIMAS. In English law, the feast of All Saints, on the 1st of November; one of the cross-quarters of the year, was computed from Halimas to Candlemas. Wharton.

HALIWORKFOLK. See Halywerfcolf.

HALL. A building or room of considerable size, used as a place for the meeting of public assemblies, conventions, courts, etc.; as, the city hall, the town hall.

In English law, a name given to many manor-houses because the magistrate’s court was held in the hall of his mansion; a chief mansion-house. Cowell.

Hence, hall day, a court day.

HALL-MARK. An official stamp affixed by the goldsmiths upon articles made of gold or silver as an evidence of genuineness, and hence used to signify any mark of genuineness. "The power of free alienation is the ‘hall-mark’ of a fee-simple absolute." Rand. Em. Dom. § 206.

HALLAGE. In old English law, a fee or toll due for goods or merchandise vended in a hall. Jacob; 6 Co. 62.

A toll due to the lord of a fair or market, for such commodities as were vended in the common hall of the place. Cowell; Blount.

HALLAZCO. In Spanish law, the finding and takings possession of something which previously had no owner, and which thus becomes the property of the first occupant. Las Partidas, 3, 5, 28; 5, 48, 49; 5, 20, 50.

HALLE-GEMOTE. In Saxon law, haligemot (q.v).

HALLMOOT. See Haligemot.

HALLUCINATION. In medical jurisprudence, a trick or deceit of the senses; a morbid error either of the sense of sight or that of hearing, or possibly of the other senses; a psychological state, such as would be produced naturally by an act of sense-perception, attributed confidently, but mistakenly, to something which has no objective existence; as, when the patient imagines that he sees an object when there is none, or hears a voice or other sound when nothing strikes his ear. See Staples v. Wellington, 58 Me. 459; McNett v. Cooper, C.C.Mich., 13 F. 590; People v. Krist, 168 N.Y. 19, 60 N.E. 1057.

An error, a blunder, a mistake, a fallacy; and when used in describing the condition of a person, does not necessarily carry an imputation of insanity. Foster's Ex'r's v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233, 24 A. 253.

The perception by any of the senses of an object which has no existence. The conscious recognition of a sensation of sight, hearing, feeling, taste, or smell which is not due to any impulse received by the perceptive apparatus from without, but arises within the perceptive apparatus itself. A false perception in contradistinction to a delusion or false belief. Wood, Am. Text-Book of Med.

Hallucinations are tricks of the senses, differing from delusions in that hallucinations pass away while delusions remain. Bensberg v. Washington University, 251 Mo. 641, 158 S.W. 330, 333.

HALLMOT. See Haligemot.

HALYMOTE. A holy or ecclesiastical court.

A court held in London before the lord mayor and sheriffs, for regulating the bakers.

It was anciently held on Sunday next before St. Thomas’ day, and therefore called the holymote, or holy court. Cowell.

HALYWERCFOLK. Sax. In old English law, tenants who held land by the service of repairing or defending a church or monument, whereby they were exempted from feudal and military services. Especially in the county of Durham, those who held by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert. Jacob, Law Dict.

HAM. A place of dwelling; a homeclose; a little narrow meadow. Blount. A house or little village. Cowell.

HAMA. In old English law, a hook; an engine with which a house on fire is pulled down. Yel. 60.

A piece of land.

HAMBLING, or HAMELING. In forest law, the boxing or hock-sinewing of dogs; an old mode of laming or disabling dogs. Termes de la Ley. Expedition (q.v.).

HAMEL, HAMELETA, or HAMLETA. A hamlet.

HAMESECKEN. In Scotch law, the violent entering into a man’s house without license or against the peace, and the seeking and assaulting him there. Skene de Verb. Sign.; 2 Forb. Inst. 139.

The crime of housebreaking or burglary. 4 Bl. Comm. 223. Spelled also, "hamesucken."

The common genus of offences that comes under the name of hamesuckien is that which is usually called house-breaking; which sometimes comes under the common appellation of burglary, whether committed in the day or night to the intent to commit felony; so that house-breaking of this kind is of two natures. 1 Hale, P1.Cr. 547; Com. v. Hope, 22 Pick., Mass., 4.

See also, Hamsocne.
HAMFARE. (Sax. From ham, a house.) In Saxon law, an assault made in a house; a breach of the peace in a private house. Cowell. This word by some is said to signify the freedom of a man’s house. Holthouse. See, also, Hamsocne.

HAMLET. A small village; a part or member of a vill. It is the diminutive of “ham,” a village. Cowell. See Rex v. Morris, 4 Term, 552.

A “village” or “hamlet” in a rural community may be no more than a store, a school, a church, and two or three residences. Rantoul Rural High School Dist. No. 2, Franklin County, v. Davis, 99 Kan. 185, 160 P. 1008, 1009.

HAMMA. A close joining to a house; a croft; a little meadow. Cowell.

HAMMER. Metaphorically, a forced sale or sale at public auction. “To bring to the hammer,” to put up for sale at auction. “Sold under the hammer,” sold by an officer of the law or by an auctioneer.

HAMFARE. (Sax. From ham, a house.) In Saxon law, disposed more generally with reference to any decision by a court upon a case or point reserved for consideration.

HAMSOCNE. In Saxon law, the word is variously spelled hamsoca, hamsocna, haimsoaken, hamesaken, hamsocen. The right of security and privacy in a man’s house. Du Cange. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Gloss.; Du Cange; Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 2, § 3. The right to entertain jurisdiction of the offence. Spelman; Du Cange. Immunity from punishment for such offence. Du Cange; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 18. An insult offered in one’s own house (insultus factus in domo). Brompton, p. 957; Du Cange.

Among the Anglo-Saxons it was breaking into a house; perhaps the time of the day was not an element. See 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 293; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 492. See, also, Hamesecken.

HANAPER. A hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a subject, and their returns; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 113; 10 Ric. II. c. 1; 3 Bl.Cmm. 49; equivalent to the Roman fiscus. According to others, the fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept. Spelman; Du Cange.

HANAPER-OFFICE. An Office belonging to the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, so called because all the writs relating to the business of a subject, and their returns, were formerly kept in a hamper, in hanaperio. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103. See Yates v. People, 6 Johns., N.Y., 363.

HAND. A measure of length equal to four inches, used in measuring the height of horses.

A person’s signature. Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 33 P. 369; 10 Mod. 103.

In anatomical usage the hand, or manus, includes the phalanges, or fingers and thumb; the metacarpus, or hand proper; and the carpus, or wrist; but in popular usage the wrist is often excluded. HARING. In old English law, a race of horses and mares kept for breed; a stud. Spelman.

HARBINGER. In England, an officer of the royal household.

"Port" is a word of larger import than "harbor," since it implies the presence of whales, or at any rate the means and opportunity of receiving and discharging cargo. See 7 M. & G. 870; Martin v. Hilton, 9 Metc., Mass., 371; 2 B. & Ald. 460. Thus, we have the "said harbor, basin, and docks of the port of Hull." 2 B. & Ald. 60. But they are generally used as synonymous. Webster, Diet.

HARBOR, v. To afford lodging to, to shelter, or to give a refuge to. Hancock v. Finch, 126 Conn. 121, 9 A.2d 811. To clandestinely shelter, succor, and protect improperly admitted aliens. Susnjar v. U. S., C.C.A.Ohio, 27 F.2d 223, 224. To receive clandestinely and without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same. Jones v. Van Zandt, 5 How. 215, 227, 12 L.Ed. 122. Or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly. Poll.Torts 275; Wood v. Gale, 10 N.H. 247, 34 Am.Dec. 150; Eells v. People, 4 Scam., Ill., 498. It may be aptly used to describe the furnishing of shelter, lodging, or food clandestinely or with concealment, and under certain circumstances, may be equally applicable to those acts divested of any accompanying secrecy. HE WHO COMES INTO A COURT OF EQUITY MUST COME WITH CLEAN HANDS.

HE WHO HAS COMMITTED INIQUITY SHALL NOT HAVE EQUITY. Francis, Max.

HE WHO IS SILENT WHEN CONSCIENCE REQUIRES HIM TO SPEAK SHALL BE DEBARRED FROM SPEAKING WHEN CONSCIENCE REQUIRES HIM TO BE SILENT.

HE WHO SEEKS EQUITY MUST DO EQUITY. This expression means that the party asking the aid of an equity court must stand in a conscientious relation toward his adversary and the transaction from which his claim arises must be fair and just and the relief must not be harsh and oppressive upon defendant. Jacklich v. Baer, 57 Cal. App.2d 684, 135 P.2d 179, 184. And that court will not confer equitable relief on party seeking its aid, unless he has acknowledged and conceded or will admit and provide for all equitable rights, claims, and demands justly belonging to adverse party and growing out of or necessarily involved in subject matter of controversy. Bates v. Dana, 345 Mo. 311, 133 S.W.2d 326, 329. It is in pursuance of this maxim that equity enforces the right of the wife's equity to a settlement. Snell, Eq. (5th Ed.) 374. Drake v. Sherman, 67 Ill.App. 440.

HE WHO WILL HAVE EQUITY DONE TO HIM MUST DO EQUITY TO THE SAME PERSON. 4 Bouv.Inst. 3723.

HEAD. Chief; leading; principal; the upper part or principal source of a stream.

The principal person or chief of any organization, corporation, or firm.

HEAD MONEY. A sum of money reckoned at a fixed amount for each head (person) in a designated class.

Particularly (1) a capitation or poll tax. (2) A bounty offered by the laws of the United States for each person on board an enemy's ship or vessel, at the commencement of a naval engagement, which shall be sunk or destroyed by a ship or vessel of the United States of equal or inferior force, the same to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money. In re Farragut, 7 D.C. 97. A similar reward is offered by the British statutes. (3) The tax or duty imposed by act of congress of Aug. 3, 1882, on owners of steamships and sailing vessels for every immigrant brought into the United States. Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580, 5 Sup.Ct. 247, 28 L.Ed. 798. (4) A bounty or reward paid to one who pursues and kills a bandit or outlaw and produces his head as evidence; the offer of such a reward being popularly called "putting a price on his head."

HEAD OF A FAMILY. An individual who actually supports and maintains in one household one or more individuals who are closely connected with him by blood relationship, relationship by marriage, or by adoption, and whose right to exercise family control and provide for the dependent individuals is based upon some moral or legal obligation. Miller v. Glenn, D.C.Ky., 47 F.Supp. 794, 796, 797.
A term used in homestead and exemption laws to designate a person who maintains a family; a householder. Not necessarily a husband or father, but any person who has charge of, supervises, and manages the affairs of the household or the collective body of persons residing together and constituting the family. Armstrong-McClenanahan Co. v. Rhoads, 180 Iowa, 710, 163 N.W. 356, 357; The term may thus include an abandoned wife maintaining minor children, Mennell v. To be the head of a family, one must either have a responsibility (i.e., at least a natural or moral obligation) to support, or have parental authority over, another member of the family. Whyte v. Grant, 142 La. 822, 77 So. 643. "Head of family," within exemption laws, must be under some obligation to support other members, and the other members must be dependent on the head. Lena v. Clinkerbeard, 172 Okl. 6, 44 P.2d 2, 4, (but see In re Taylor, D.C., 282 F. 315, 316).

HEAD OF CREEK. This term means the source of the longest branch, unless general reputation has given the appellation to another. Davis v. Bryant, 2 Bibb. (Ky.) 110.

HEAD OF DEPARTMENT. One of the members of the president's cabinet, and not a mere bureau head. Brooks v. United States, D.C.N.Y., 33 F. Supp. 68, 69.

The expression "head of any department of the state government" is one of varied and therefore of equivocal meaning. construed in one statute as having been employed in a narrow, restricted sense, and in another to have been used in its general popular sense, depending on effectuation of the legislative objective as the controlling element. Rainey v. Malone, Tex.Civ.App., 141 S.W.2d 713, 715.

HEAD OF STREAM. The highest point on the stream which furnishes a continuous stream of water, not necessarily the longest fork or prong. Uhl v. Reynolds, 64 S.W. 498, 23 Ky.Law Rep. 759; State v. Coleman, 13 N.J.Law, 104.

HEAD OF WATER. In hydraulic engineering, mining, etc., the effective force of a body or volume of water, expressed in terms of the vertical distance from the level of the water in the pond, reservoir, dam, or other source of supply, to the point where it is to be mechanically applied, or expressed in terms of the pressure of the water per square inch at the latter point. Shearer v. Middleton, 88 Mich. 621, 50 N.W. 737.

HEADBOROUGH. In Saxon law, the head or chief officer of a borough; chief of the frankpledge tithing or decennary. This office was afterwards, when the petty constableship was created, united with that office.

HEAD-COURTS. Certain tribunals in Scotland, abolished by 20 Geo. II. c. 50. Ersk. 1, 4, 5.

HEADERS. In mining, a "cap" is a square piece of plank or block wedged between the top of posts and the roof to better hold the roof, and "headers" are longer pieces of plank supported by a prop at each end and supporting a larger area of the roof with fewer posts. Big Branch Coal Co. v. Wrenchie, 160 Ky. 668, 170 S.W. 14, 16.

HEALTH. State of being hale, sound, or whole in body, mind or soul, well being. Venable v. Gulf Taxi Line, 105 W.Va. 156, 141 S.E. 622, 624. Freedom from pain or sickness; the most perfect state of animal life. Not synonymous with "sanitation." Black v. Lambert, Tex.Civ.App., 235 S.W. 704, 706. The right to the enjoyment of health is a subdivision of the right of personal security, one of the absolute rights of persons. 1 Bl.Comm. 129, 134. As to injuries affecting health, see 3 Bl. Comm. 122.

Bill of health. See Bill.

Board of health. See Board.

Health laws. Laws prescribing sanitary measures, and designed to promote or preserve the health of the community.

Health officer. The officer charged with the execution and enforcement of health laws. The powers and duties of health officers are regulated by local laws.

Public health. As one of the objects of the police power of the state, the "public health" means the prevailing healthful or sanitary condition of the general body of people or the community in mass, and the absence of any general or widespread disease or cause of mortality. The wholesome sanitary condition of the community at large. State ex rel. Pollock v. Becker, 289 Mo. 660, 233 S.W. 641, 649.

Sound Health. See "Sound."

HEALTHY. Free from disease or bodily ailment, or any state of the system peculiarly susceptible or liable to disease or bodily ailment. Bell v. Jeffreys, 35 N.C. 356.

HEARING. Proceeding of relative formality, generally public, with definite issues of fact or of law to be tried, in which parties proceeded against have right to be heard, and is much the same as a trial and may terminate in final order. In re Securities and Exchange Commission, D.C.N.Y., 14 F.Supp. 417, 419. Synonymous with trial, and includes reception of evidence and arguments thereon. Grant v. Michaels, 94 Mont. 452, 23 P.2d 266. It is frequently used in a broader and more popular significance to describe whatever takes place before magistrates clothed with judicial functions and sitting without jury at any stage of the proceedings subsequent to its inception, and may include proceedings before an auditor. Menard v. Bowman Dairy Co., 296 Ill.App. 323, 15 N.E.2d 1014, 1015.

The words "final hearing" have long been used to designate the trial of an equity case upon the merits, as distinguished from the hearing of any preliminary questions arising in the cause, which are termed "interlocutory." Akerly v. Villas, 24 Wis. 171, 1 Am.Rep. 166.

The term is broad enough to include judicial examination of issue between the parties whether of law or of fact. Keown v. Keown, 231 Mass. 404, 121 N.E. 153, 154.

In criminal law. The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for the accused.

Fair hearing. See Fair Hearing.

Final hearing. See Final.

The hearing given to a person accused of crime, by a magistrate or judge, exercising the functions of a committing magistrate, to ascertain whether there is evidence to warrant and require the commitment and holding to bail of the person accused. See Bish. New Cr.L. §§ 32, 225.

It is in no sense a trial for the determination of accused's guilt or innocence, but simply a course of procedure whereby a possible abuse of power may be prevented, and accused discharged or held to answer, as the facts warrant. State v. Langford, 293 Mo. 436, 240 S.W. 167, 168.

Unfair hearing. See that title.

HEARING DE NOVO. Generally, a new hearing or a hearing for the second time, contemplating an entire trial in same manner in which matter was originally heard and a review of previous hearing. On hearing "de novo" court hears matter as court of original and not appellate jurisdiction. Collier & Wallis v. Astor, 9 Cal.2d 202, 70 P.2d 171, 173.

HEARSAY. Evidence not proceeding from the personal knowledge of the witness, but from the mere repetition of what he has heard others say. That which does not derive its value solely from the credit of the witness, but rests mainly on the veracity and competency of other persons. The very nature of the evidence shows its weakness, and it is admitted only in specified cases from necessity. State v. Ah Lee, 18 Or. 540, 23 P. 424, 425. Young v. Stewart, 191 N.C. 297, 131 S.E. 735, 737.

It is second-hand evidence, as distinguished from original evidence; it is the repetition at second-hand of what would be original evidence if given by the person who originally made the statement. Literally, it is what the witness says he heard another person say. Stockton v. Williams, 1 Doug., Mich., 546, 570 (citing 1 Starkie, Ev. 229). Evidence, oral or written, is hearsay when its probative force depends in whole or in part on the competency and credibility of a person other than the witness. State v. Klutz, 206 N.C. 726, 804, 175 S.E. 81. Hearsay is a statement made by a person not called as a witness, received in evidence on the trial. People v. Kraft, 36 N.Y.S. 1034, 1035, 91 Hun. 474. The term is sometimes used synonymously with "report", State v. Vettere, 76 Mont. 574, 248 P. 179, 183; and with "rumor".

HEARTH MONEY. A tax levied in England by St. 14 Car. II. c. 10, consisting of two shillings on every hearth or stove in the kingdom. It was extremely unpopular, and was abolished by 1 W. & HEBBERTHEF. In Saxon law, the privilege of cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood. 2 Burn, Eccl.Law 304.

HEBBERMAN. An unlawful fisher in the river Thames below London bridge; so called because she takes the heaviest seas upon her quarter. Smith v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., 211 Ky. 454, 277 S.W. 806, 807.

HEAVY TO. In maritime parlance and admiralty law, to stop a sailing vessel's headway by bringing her head "into the wind," that is, in the direction from which the wind blows. A steamer is said to be "hove to" when held in such a position that her head "into the wind," that is, in the direction from which the wind blows. A steamer is said to be "hove to" when held in such a position that she takes the heaviest seas upon her quarter. The Hugo, D.C.N.Y., 57 Fed. 411.

HEBECCAGIUM. In feudal law, rent paid to a lord for a liberty to use the engines called "becks."

HECK. An engine to take fish in the river Ouse. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 18.

HECK DAY. See Hoke Day.

HEDA. A small haven, wharf, or landing place.

HEDAGIUM. Toll or customary dues at the hithe or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which exemption was granted by the crown to some particular persons and societies. Wharton; Cowell.

To safeguard one's self from loss on a bet or speculation by making compensatory arrangements on the other side. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 5 P.2d 210, 214.

HEDGE—BOTE. An allowance of wood for repairing hedges or fences, which a tenant or lessee has a right to take off the land let or demised to him. 2 Bl.Comm. 35; Livingston v. Ten Broeck, 16 Johns. (N.Y.) 15, 8 Am.Dec. 287.

HEDGE—PRIEST. A vagabond priest in olden time.

A hedge-parson; specifically, in Ireland, formerly, a priest who has been admitted to orders directly from a hedge-school, without preparation in theological studies at a regular college. Cent. Dict.

HEDGING. A means by which collectors and exporters of grain or other products, and manufacturers, who make contracts in advance for the sale of their goods, secure themselves against the fluctuations of the market by counter contracts for the purchase or sale of an equal quantity of the product or of the material of manufacture. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 5 P.2d 210, 214. The action of one who buys commodities in selling an equal amount of such commodities on exchange for the purpose of insurance against fluctuations in price. Fraser v. Farmers' Co-op. Co., 167 Minn. 369, 209 N.W. 33, 36.

The term "hedge," as used in the milling business, means when the miller enters into a contract for the delivery of flour at a future date, he buys wheat on the stock exchange for future delivery, and when he purchases wheat for actual delivery from the grain elevator to fulfill the contract which he had previously made to furnish flour, he sells the wheat which he has bought on the stock exchange. Bluefield Milling Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 104 W.Va. 150, 139 S.E. 638, 55 A.L.R. 636.

HEEL BLANK. Several heel lifts cemented together, forming the height of the heel minus the

M. St. 1, c. 10. This tax was otherwise called "chimney money."

HEARTH SILVER. In English law, a species of modus or composition for tithes; Anstr. 323, 326; viz.: a prescription for cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood. 2 Burn, Eccl.Law 304.

HEAT OF PASSION. In criminal law, a state of violent and uncontrollable rage engendered by a blow or certain other provocation given, which will reduce a homicide from the grade of murder to that of manslaughter. Disney v. State, 72 Fla. 492, 73 So. 598, 601.

Passion or anger suddenly aroused at the time by some immediate and reasonable provocation, by words or acts of one at the time. State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S.W. 169.

HEAT PROSTRATION. Sunstroke. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Hoflinger, Ark., 45 S.W.2d 866, 867.

HEAT STROKE. Sunstroke. A sudden prostration resulting from exposure to excessive heat regardless of the source from which the heat emanates. Herbert v. State, 124 Neb. 312, 246 N.W. 454. A depression of the vital powers; due to exposure to excessive heat, and manifesting itself as prostration with syncope, etc. (heat exhaustion), as prostration with insensibility, fever, etc. (true sunstroke), or rarely as acute meningitis; sunstroke or insolation (in the wider sense). Smith v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., 211 Ky. 454, 277 S. W. 806, 807.

HEAVE TO. In maritime parlance and admirálty law, to stop a sailing vessel's headway by bringing her head "into the wind," that is, in the direction from which the wind blows. A steamer is said to be "hove to" when held in such a position that she takes the heaviest seas upon her quarter. The Hugo, D.C.N.Y., 57 Fed. 411.

HEEL BLANK. Several heel lifts cemented together, forming the height of the heel minus the rand and a bottom or finishing lift. Brockton Heel Co. v. International Shoe Co., D.C.N.H., 19 F.2d 145.

HEEL LOG. Succession of heel lifts coated with an adhesive, piled one upon the other, to which pressure has been applied, making a log of some indeterminate length. Brockton Heel Co. v. International Shoe Co., D.C.N.H., 19 F.2d 145.

HEELER. An opprobrious term, meaning in common acceptance a person who is the lackey or hangeron of another, and in a political sense an unscrupulous and disreputable person. Winsboro Cotton Oil Co. v. Carson, Tex.Civ.App., 185 S.W. 1002, 1008.

HEGEMONY. The leadership of one among several independent confederate states.

HEGIRA. The epoch or account of time used by the Arabians and the Turks, who begin the Mohammedan era and computation from the day that Mohammed was compelled to escape from Mecca to Medina which happened on the night of Thursday, July 15, A.D. 622, under the reign of the Emperor Heraclius. Townsend, Dict. Dates; Wilson, Gloss. The era begins July 16. The word is sometimes spelled hejira but the former is the ordinary usage. It is derived from hijrah, in one form or another, an oriental term denoting flight, departure.

The flight of Mohammed from Mecca. Webster, Dict.

HEGUMENOS. The leader of the monks in the Greek Church.

HEIFER. A young cow; a cow that has not had a calf. Fletcher v. State, 198 Ark. 376, 128 S.W. 2d 997, 999.

A person who succeeds, by the rules of law, to an estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, upon the death of his ancestor, by descent and right of relationship. Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393, 54 A. 102. Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 268. He who is born or begotten in lawful wedlock, and upon whom the law casts the inheritance immediately upon the death of his ancestor. Moffett v. Conley, 63 Okl. 3, 163 P. 118, 120.

One who would receive his estate under statute of descent and distribution. Faulkner's Guardian v. Faulkner, 237 Ky. 147, 35 S.W.2d 6, 7.

Moreover, the term is frequently used in a popular sense to designate a successor to property either by will or by law. Wallace v. Privett, 198 Cal. 746, 247 P. 906, 907.

According to many authorities, heir may be nomen collectivum, as well in a deed as in a will, and operate in both in the same manner as the word heirs. 1 Rolle, Abr. 253; Ambl. 453; Cro. Eliz. 313; 1 Burr. 38. But see 2 Prest.Est. 9, 10.

The term must be construed according to testator's intention as gathered from whole will. Fadler v. Gabbert, 333 Mo. 851, 63 S.W.2d 121.

See, also, Heirs.

In the civil law. A universal successor in the event of death. He who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property or estate, rights and obligations, of a decedent, and occupies his place.

The term is indiscriminately applied to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the “testamentary heir;” and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestacy, called the “heir at law,” or “heir by intestacy.” The executor of the common law in many respects corresponds to the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 57, 508; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 344.

The term “heir” has several significations. Sometimes it refers to one who has formally accepted a succession and taken possession thereof; sometimes to one who is called to succeed, but still retains the faculty of accepting or renouncing, and it is frequently used as applied to one who has formally renounced. Mumford v. Bowman, 26 La.Ann. 417.

In Scotch law. The person who succeeds to the heritage or heritable rights of one deceased. 1 Forb.Inst. pt. 3, p. 75. The word has a more extended signification than in English law, comprehending not only those who succeed to lands, but successors to personal property also. Wharton.

Right heir. This term was formerly used, in the case of estates tail, to distinguish the preferred heir, to whom the estate was limited, from the heirs in general, to whom, on the failure of the preferred heir and his line, the remainder over was usually finally limited. With the abolition of estates tail, the term has fallen into desuetude, but when still used, in modern law, it has no other meaning than “heir at law.” Brown v. Wadsworth, 168 N.Y. 225, 61 N.E. 250.

HEIR APPARENT. An heir whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlive the ancestor; as in England the eldest son, or his issue, who must, by the course of the common law, be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. 2 Bl.Comm. 208; 1 Steph.Comm. 358; Jones v. Fleming, 37 Hun. (N.Y.) 230. One who, before the death of the ancestor, is next in the line of succession, provided he be heir to the ancestor whenever he happens to die. Reese v. Stires, 87 N.J. Eq. 32, 103 A. 679. See, also, Apparent Heir.

HEIR AT LAW. He who, after his ancestor dies intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as “heir general.” Forrest v. Porch, 100 Tenn. 391, 45 S.W. 676.
The heir at common law is that person who succeeds to the real estate in case of intestacy. Walker v. Walker, 283 N.J.Eq. 271, 118 N.E. at 1014, 1019. In its strict sense and technical import, the person or persons appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. Albright v. Albright, 116 Ohio St. 668, 157 N.E. 760, 762. In a comprehensive and popular sense, one who inherits either real or personal property. Co. B. & L. Hartford—Connecticut Trust Co., 100 Conn. 352, 123 A. 907, 908. Next of Kin, Meeker v. Forbes, 84 N.J.Eq. 271, 93 A. 887, 888.

In the term "heir at law," as used in will, suffix "at law" adds merely expectant feature of one's statutory position in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession left to him. In re Towdrow's Will, 47 N.M. 173, 138 P.2d 1001, 1003.

A deceased person's "heirs at law" are those who succeed to his estate of inheritance under statutes of descent and distribution, in absence of testamentary disposition, and not necessarily his heirs at common law, who are persons succeeding to deceased's realty in case of his intestacy. In re Ward's Estate, 297 N.Y.S. 16, 119, 162 Misc. 855.

HEIRS AT LAW SHALL NOT BE DISINHERITED, ED BY CONJECTURE, BUT ONLY BY EXPRESS WORDS OR NECESSARY IMPLICATION. Scholl. Wills § 479.

HEIR BENEFICIARY. In the civil law, one who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made.

Heirs are divided into two classes, according to the manner in which they accept the successions left to them, to-wit, unconditional and beneficiary heirs. Unconditional heirs are those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. Beneficiary heirs are those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ.Code La. art. 883. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession.

HEIR BY ADOPTION. An adopted child, "who is in a limited sense made an heir, not by the law, but by the contract evidenced by the deed of adoption." In re Sessions' Estate, 70 Mich. 297, 38 N.W. 249, 14 Am.St.Rep. 500.

HEIR BY CUSTOM. In English law, one whose right of inheritance depends upon a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind, or borough English. Co.Litt. 140.

HEIR BY DEVISE. One to whom lands are devised by will; a devisee of lands. Answering to the hceres factus (q. v.) of the civil law.

HEIR COLLATERAL. One who is not lineally related to the decedent, but is of collateral kin; e. g., his uncle, cousin, brother, nephew.

HEIR CONVENTIONAL. In the civil law, one who takes a succession by virtue of a contract or settlement entitling him thereto.

HEIR EXPECTANT. One whose parents were living, as respects lots to which parents had title. Adams v. Adams, 348 Mo. 1041, 156 S.W.2d 610, 616.

HEIR, FORCED. One who cannot be disinherited. See Forced Heirs.

HEIR GENERAL. An heir at law. The ordinary heir by blood, succeeding to all the lands. Forrest v. Porch, 100 Tenn. 391, 45 S.W. 676.

HEIR INSTITUTE. In Scotch law, one to whom the right of succession is ascertained by disposition or express deed of the deceased. 1 Forb.Inst. pt. 3, p. 75.

HEIR, IRREGULAR. In Louisiana, irregular heirs are those who are neither testamentary nor legal, and who have been established by law to take the succession. See Civ.Code La. art. 878. When there are no direct or collateral relatives surviving the decedent, and the succession consequently devolves upon the surviving husband or wife, or illegitimate children, or the state, it is called an "irregular succession."

HEIR, LEGAL. In the civil law, a legal heir is one who takes the succession by relationship to the decedent and by force of law.

This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See Civ.Code La. arts. 877, 879. The term is also used in Anglo-American law in substantially the same sense, that is, the person to whom the law would give the decedent's property, real and personal, if he should die intestate. Waller v. Martin, 106 Tenn. 341, 61 S.W. 73, 62 Am.St.Rep. 882. In legal strictness, the term signifies one who would inherit real estate, but it is also used to indicate one who would take under the statute of distribution. Morse v. Ward, 92 Conn. 408, 120 A. 119, 120.

HEIR, MALE. In Scotch law, an heir institute, who, though not next in blood to the deceased, is his nearest male relation that can succeed to him. 1 Forb.Inst. pt. 3, p. 76. In English law, the nearest male blood-relation of the decedent, unless further limited by the words "of his body," which restrict the inheritance to sons, grandparents, and other male descendants in the right line. Jordan v. Adams, 6 C.B.,N.S., 764; Goodtitle v. Herring, 1 East, 275; Ewan v. Cox, 9 N.J.Law, 14.

HEIR OF CONQUEST. In Scotch law, one who succeeds to the deceased in conquest, i. e., lands or other heritable rights to which the deceased neither did nor could succeed as heir to his predecessor.

HEIR OF LINE. In Scotch law, one who succeeds lineally by right of blood; one who succeeds to the deceased in his heritage; e. l., lands and other heritable rights derived to him by succession as heir to his predecessor. 1 Forb.Inst. pt. 3, p. 77.

HEIR OF PROVISION. In Scotch law, one who succeeds as heir by virtue of a particular provision in a deed or instrument.

HEIR OF TAILZIE. In Scotch law, he on whom an estate is settled that would not have fallen to him by legal succession. 1 Forb.Inst. pt. 3, p. 75.

HEIR OF THE BODY. An heir begotten or born by the person referred to, or a child of such heir; any lineal descendant of the decedent, excluding
HEIR OF TILE BODY

May be used in either of two senses: In their unrestricted sense, as meaning the persons from whom generation to generation becomes entitled by descent under the entail; and in the sense of heirs at law, or those persons who are descendants of him whom the statute of descent appoints to take intestate estate. Bunn v. Butler, 300 Ill. 269, 133 N.E. 246, 247. Unless the will discloses an intention to the contrary, the term "heirs of the body" is not synonymous with children. Clark v. Cummack, 216 Ala. 346, 113 So. 270, 271. And ordinarily, such words are words of limitation and not of purchase. Kirby v. Hulette, 174 Ky. 257, 192 S.W. 63, 65; contra: Owen v. Trail, 302 Mo. 292, 258 S.W. 699, 701. The words are sometimes deemed equivalent to "issue" or "descendants"; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Bridgham, 42 R.I. 161, 106 A. 149, 152, 5 A.L.R. 185; and sometimes not; In re English's Estate, 270 Pa. 1, 112 A. 913, 914.

HEIR PRESUMPTIVE. The person who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as a brother or nephew, whose presumptive success by the contingency of the same right of inheritance may be destroyed by the birth of a child. 2 Steph.Comm. 358; 1 Steph.Comm. 358; Jones v. Fleming, 37 Hun., N.Y., 230.

In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relation of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the decease of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, until he has accepted or renounced it. La. Civ.Code, art. 880.

HEIR SPECIAL. In English law, the issue in tail, who claims per formam Boni; by the form of the gift.

HEIR SUBSTITUTE, IN A BOND. In Scotch law, he to whom a bond is payable expressly in case of the creditor's decease, or after his death. 1 Forb.Inst. pt. 3, p. 76.

HEIR TESTAMENTARY. In the civil law, one who is named and appointed heir in the testament of the decedent. This name distinguishes him from a legal heir, (one upon whom the law casts the succession,) and from a conventional heir, (one who takes it by virtue of a previous contract or settlement.)

HEIR UNCONDITIONAL. In the civil law and in Louisiana, one who inherits without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether his acceptance be express or tacit. Distinguished from heir beneficiary. La.Civ.Code, art. 882.

HEIRDOM. Succession by inheritance.

HEIRESS. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called "co-heiresses," or "co-heirs."

HEIRLOOMS. Such goods and chattels as, contrary to the nature of chattels, shall go by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the executor. The termination "loom" (Sax.) signifies a limb or member; so that an heirloom is nothing else but a limb or member of the inheritance. They are generally such things as cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering the freehold; such as deer in a park, doves in a cote, deeds and charters, etc. 2 Bl.Comm. 427.

This word seems to be compounded of heir, and loom, that is, a frame, viz, to weave in. Some derive the word loom from the Saxon Loma, or geloma, which signifies utensils or vessels generally. However, this may be, the word loom, by time, is drawn to a more general signification than it bore at the first, comprehending all implements of household, as tables, presses, cupboards, beds, stools, wainscots, and which, by the custom of some countries, having belonged to a house are never inventoried after the decease of the owner as chattels, but accrue to the heir with the house itself. Minshaw: 2 Poll. & Maitl. 361.

HEIRS. Technically, those persons designated by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. Potter v. Potter, 306 Ill. 37, 137 N.E. 425, 426. See, also, Heir.

A word used in deeds of conveyance, (either solely, or in connection with others,) where it is intended to pass a fee.

It is generally a word of limitation, and is not to be construed as a word of purchase unless there are other controlling words showing such intention by the person using it. McKnight v. Black, 240 Ky. 818, 43 S.W.2d 53, 54.

In the word is comprehended heirs of heir to infinitum. Co. Litt. 7b, 9a; Larew v. Larew, 146 Va. 134, 135 S.E. 819, 820.

It may have different meanings, just as under the English law the singular form, "heir," might have different meanings, but, if there is no context, the word "heirs" must be held to indicate the indefinite succession by inheritance. Etna Life Ins. Co. v. Hoppin, C.C.A., 214 F. 928, 932. Under the terms of particular wills, however, or under statutes abolishing the rule in Shelley's Case, Mendard v. Campbell, 180 Mich. 583, 147 N.W. 556, 558, Ann.Cas. 1916A, 802; it may be a word of purchase, and is frequently deemed synonymous with "children," Culitce v. Mills, 97 Ohio St. 112, 119 N.E. 200, 201; Williams v. J. C. Armiger & Bro., 129 Md. 222, 98 A. 542, 544.

A devise or bequest to "heirs" primarily means those who are heirs at the testator's death, and it is only when a contrary intention appears that this presumption fails. In re Bump's Will, 234 N.Y. 60, 136 N.E. 295, 296.

Bodily heirs. In a technical sense, the same as "heirs of the body." Hartman v. Flynn, 189 N.C. 452, 127 S.E. 517, 519.

Joint heirs. Co-heirs. The term is also applied to those who are or will be heirs to both of two designated persons at the death of the survivor of them, the word "joint" being here applied to the ancestors rather than the heirs. See Gardiner v. Fay, 182 Mass. 492, 65 N.E. 825.

Legitimate heirs. Children born in lawful wedlock and their descendants, not including collateral heirs or issue in indefinite succession. Lytle v.

Lineal heir. See Lineal Heir.

Under a will giving the testator's wife an estate for life, at her death all the property to be equally divided between "our living children or to their living heirs," the words "living heirs" should be given their technical meaning as including all the legal heirs of the deceased children of testator that died after the death of testator. Potter v. Potter, 306 Ill. 37, 137 N.E. 425, 427.

HEIRS AND ASSIGNS. Ordinarily words of limitation and not of purchase. In re Knapp's Will, 6 N.Y.S.2d 100, 168 Misc. 487. At common law, the words were essential to conveyance granting title in fee simple, and though they are unnecessary for that or any purpose under statute when used in wills or deeds, words still have that meaning. In re Denari's Will, 300 N.Y.S. 1279, 165 Misc. 450.

HEIRSHIP. The quality or condition of being heir, or the relation between the heir and his ancestor. It is a legal right, regulated by law, to be enjoyed subject to the provisions of the statute. Winke v. Olson, 164 Wis. 427, 160 N.W. 164, 166.

HEIRSHIP MOVABLES. In Scotch law. The movables which go to the heir, and not to the executor, that the land may not go to the heir completely dismantled, such as the best of furniture, horses, cows, etc., but not fungibles. Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 13-17.

HELD. In reference to the decision of a court, decided. See, also, Hold.

HELL. The name formerly given to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king's debtors were confined. Rich.Dict.

HELM. Thatch or straw; a covering for the head in war; a coat of arms bearing a crest; the tiller or handle of the rudder of a ship.

HELOWE-WALL. The end-wall covering and defending the rest of the building. Paroch. Antiq. 573.

HELSING. A Saxon brass coin, of the value of a half-penny.

HE3IPLEGIA. In medical jurisprudence. Unilateral paralysis; paralysis of one side of the body, commonly due to a lesion in the brain, but sometimes originating from the spinal cord, as in "Brown-Sequard's paralysis," unilateral paralysis with crossed anesthesia. In the cerebral form, the hemiplegia is sometimes "alternate" or crossed, that is, occurring on the opposite side of the body from the initial lesion.

Paralysis of half of the body, as of both legs or of both arns, or an arm and leg. Gray v. United States, C.C.A. Ark., 109 F.2d 728, 729. If the disease comes on rapidly or suddenly, it is called "quick" hemiplegia; if slowly or gradually, "chronic." The former variety is more apt to affect the mental faculties than the latter; but, where hemiplegia is complete, the operations of the mind are generally much impaired. Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538, 4 P. 1003.

HEMBORH, or HELMELBORCH. A title to possession. The admission of this old Norse term into the laws of the Conqueror is difficult to be accounted for; it is not found in any Anglo-Saxon law extant. Wharton.

HENEFOR. A word of futurity, which, as employed in legal documents, statutes, and the like, always imports a continuity of action or condition from the present time forward, but excludes all the past. Thomson v. American Surety Co., 170 N.Y. 109, 62 N.E. 1073.

HENEDPENNY. A customary payment of money instead of hens at Christmas; a composition for eggs. Cowell.

HENFARE. A fine for flight on account of murder. Domesday Book.

HENHEN. In Saxon law. A prison, a goal, or house of correction.

HENGWYTE. Sax. In old English law. An acquaintance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 17.

HENRICUS VETUS. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry L is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name. Spelman.

HEORDFAETE, or HUDEFIEST. In Saxon law. The service of quittance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 17.

HENRICUS VETUS. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry L is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name. Spelman.

HEORDFAETE, or HUDEFIEST. In Saxon law. The service of quittance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 17.

HENRICUS VETUS. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry L is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name. Spelman.

HEORDFAETE, or HUDEFIEST. In Saxon law. The service of quittance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 17.
had been formed in England by the German tribes, namely, that of Kent by the Jutes; those of Sussex, Wessex, and Essex by the Saxons; and those of East Anglia, Bernicia, and Deira by the Angles. To these were added, about the year 586, an eighth, called the “Kingdom of Mercia,” also founded by the Angles, and comprehending nearly the whole of the heart of the kingdom. These states formed what has been designated the “Anglo-Saxon Octarchy,” or more commonly, though not so correctly, the “Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy,” from the custom of speaking of Deira and Bernicia under the single appellation of the “Kingdom of Northumberland.” Wharton.

HERALD. In ancient law, a herald was a diplomatic messenger who carried messages between kings or states, and especially proclamations of war, peace, or truce. In English law, a herald is an officer whose duty is to keep genealogical lists and tables, adjust armorial bearings, and regulate the ceremonies at royal coronations and funerals.

HERALDRY. The art, office, or science of heralds. Also an old and obsolete abuse of buying and selling precedence in the paper of causes for hearing.

HERALDS’ COLLEGE. In England. An ancient royal corporation, first instituted by Richard III. in 1483. It comprises three kings of arms, six heralds, and four marshals or pursuivants of arms, together with the earl marshal and a secretary. The heralds’ books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. The heralds’ office is still allowed to make grants of arms and to permit change of names. 3 Starkie, Ev. 843; Wharton.

HERBERGAE. In English law. An easement or liberty, which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another’s ground.

Feed for cattle in fields and pastures. Bract. fol. 222; Co.Litt. 46; Steph.Touch. 97. A right to herbage does not include a right to cut grass, or dig potatoes, or pick apples. Simpson v. Coe, 4 N.H. 303.

HERBAGIUM ANTERIUS. The first crop of grass or hay, in opposition to aftermath or second cutting. Paroch.Antiq. 459.

HERBENGRE, or HARBINGER. An officer in the royal house, who goes before and allots the noblemen and those of the household their lodgings; also an innkeeper.

HERBERGAGIUM. Lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality. Cowell.

HERBERT. To harbor; to entertain.

HERBERGATUS. Harbored or entertained in an inn. Cowell.

HERBERY, or HERBURY. An inn. Cowell.

HERCIA. A harrow. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 77.

HERCIARE. To harrow. 4 Inst. 270.

HERCIATURA. In old English law. Harrowing; work with a harrow. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 2.

HERCISCUNDA. In the civil law. To be divided. Familia herciscunda, an inheritance to be divided. Actio familice herciscundce, an action for dividing an inheritance. Herciscunda is more commonly used in the civil law. Dig. 10, 2; Inst. 3, 28, 4; Id. 4, 6, 20.

HERD, n. An indefinite number, more than a few, of cattle, sheep, horses, or other animals of the larger sorts, assembled and kept together as one drove and under one care and management. Boland v. Cecil, 65 Cal.App.2d Supp. 832, 150 P.2d 819, 822.

HERD, v. To tend, take care of, manage, and control a herd of cattle or other animals, implying something more than merely driving them from place to place. Phipps v. Grover, 9 Idaho 415, 75 P. 65.

HERDER. One who herds or has charge of a herd of cattle, in the senses above defined. Hooker v. McAllister, 12 Wash. 46, 40 P. 617.

HERDWERCH, HEORDWERCH. Herdsmen’s work, or customary labor, done by shepherds and inferior tenants, at the will of the lord. Cowell.

HEREAFTER. A word of futurity, always used in statutes and legal documents as indicative of future time, excluding both the present and the past. Tremont & S. Mills v. Lowell, 165 Mass. 265, 42 N.E. 1134.

HEREBANNUM. In old English law. A proclamation summoning the army into the field. A mulct or fine for not joining the army when summoned. Spelman. A tax or tribute for the support of the army. Du Cange.

HEREBOTE. The royal edict summoning the people to the field. Cowell.

HEREBANNUM. In old English law. A proclamation summoning the army into the field. A mulct or fine for not joining the army when summoned. Spelman. A tax or tribute for the support of the army. Du Cange.

HEREBOTE. The royal edict summoning the people to the field. Cowell.

HEREDAD. In Spanish law. A piece of land under cultivation; a cultivated farm, real estate; an inheritance or heirship.

HEREDERO. In Spanish law. Heir; he who, by legal or testamentary disposition, succeeds to the property of a deceased person. “Hceres censeatur cum defunct° una eademque persona.” Las Partidas, 7, 9, 13. Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 P. 433.
HEREDITAGIUM. In Sicilian and Neapolitan law. That which is held by hereditary right; the same with hereditamentum (hereditament) in English law. Spelman.

HEREDITAMENTS. Things capable of being inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed, and including not only lands and everything thereon, but also heirlooms, and certain furniture which, by custom, may descend to the heir together with the land. Co.Litt. 5b; 2 Bl. Comm. 17; Nellis v. Munson, 108 N.Y. 453, 15 N.E. 739. Sox v. Miracle, 35 N.D. 458, 160 N.W. 716, 719.

Things which may be directly inherited, as contrasted with things which go to the personal representative of a deceased. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 846, 140 A.L.R. 1270.

At common law corporeal hereditaments were physical objects, comprehended under the term land, and were said to lie in livery, while incorporeal hereditaments existed only in contemplation of law, were said to lie in grant and were affiliated with chattel interests. National Supply Co. v. McLeod, 116 Kan. 477, 227 P. 350.

The term includes a few rights unconnected with land, but it is generally used as the widest expression for real property of all kinds, and is therefore employed in conveyances after the words "lands" and "tenements," to include everything of the nature of reality which they do not cover. Sweet.

Corporeal Hereditaments. Substantial permanent objects which may be inherited. The term "land" will include all such. 2 Bl.Comm. 17; Sox v. Miracle, 35 N.D. 458, 160 N.W. 716, 719.

Incorporeal Hereditaments. Anything, the subject of property, which is inheritable and not tangible or visible. 2 Woodd.Lect. 4.

A right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal) or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. 2 Bl.Comm. a0; 1 Washb.Real Prop. 10. A right growing out of, or concerning, or annexed to, a corporeal thing, but not the substance of the thing itself. Huston v. Cox, 103 Kan. 73, 172 P. 992.

HEREDITARY. That which is the subject of inheritance.

HEREDITARY DISEASE. Physical ailment transmitted or transmissible from parent to child in consequence of the infection of the former or the presence of the disease in his system, and without exposure of the latter to any fresh source of infection or contagion. South Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Hurt’s Adm’x, 115 Va. 398, 79 S.E. 401, 404.

HEREDITARY RIGHT TO THE CROWN. The crown of England, by the positive constitution of the kingdom, has ever been descendible, and so continues, in a course peculiar to itself, yet subject to limitation by parliament; but, notwithstanding such limitation, the crown retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the prince to whom it is limited. 1 Bl.Comm. 191.

HEREDITARY SUCCESSION. Inheritance by law; title by descent; the title whereby a person, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law. In re Yahola’s Heirship, 142 Okl. 79, 285 P. 946.

HEREDITARY DISEASE. Physical ailment transmitted or transmissible from parent to child in consequence of the infection of the former or the presence of the disease in his system, and without exposure of the latter to any fresh source of infection or contagion. South Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Hurt’s Adm’x, 115 Va. 398, 79 S.E. 401, 404.

HEREDITARY SUCCESSION. Inheritance by law; title by descent; the title whereby a person, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law. In re Yahola’s Heirship, 142 Okl. 79, 285 P. 946.

HEREDITARY SUCCESSION. Inheritance by law; title by descent; the title whereby a person, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law. In re Yahola’s Heirship, 142 Okl. 79, 285 P. 946.
fore amount to little more than a mere rent; the latter arise upon no special reservation whatever, but depend solely upon immemorial usage and custom. 2 Bl.Comm. 422. See Adams v. Morse, 51 Me. 501.

HERISCHILD. In old English law. A species of military service, or knight’s fee. Cowell.

HERISCHULDA. In old Scotch law. A fine or penalty for not obeying the proclamation made for warfare. Skene.

HERISCINDIUM. A division of household goods. Blount.

HERISTAL. The station of an army; the place where a camp is pitched. Spelman.

HERITABLE. Capable of being taken by descent. A term chiefly used in Scotch law, where it enters into several phrases.

HERITABLE BOND. A bond for a sum of money to which is added, for further security of the creditor, a conveyance of land or heritage to be held by the creditor as pledge. 1 Ross, Cony. 76; 2 Ross, Cony. 324.

HERITABLE JURISDICTIONS. Grants of criminal jurisdiction formerly bestowed on great families in Scotland, to facilitate the administration of justice. Whishaw. Abolished in effect by St. 20 Geo. II. c. 50. Tomlins.

HERITABLE OBLIGATION. In Louisiana. An obligation is heritable when the heirs and assigns of one party may enforce the performance against the heirs of the other. Civ.Code La. art. 1997.

HERITABLE RIGHTS. In Scotch law. Rights of the heir; all rights to land or whatever is connected with land, as mills, fisheries, tithes, etc.

HERITAGE. In the civil law. Every species of immovable which can be the subject of property; such as lands, houses, orchards, woods, marshes, ponds, etc., in whatever mode they may have been acquired, either by descent or purchase. 3 Toullier, No. 472.

In Scotch law. Land, and all property connected with land; real estate, as distinguished from movables, or personal estate. Bell.

HERITOR. In Scotch law. A proprietor of land. 1 Kames, Eq.Pref.

HERMANNAD. In Spanish law. A fraternity formed among different towns and villages to prevent the commission of crimes, and to prevent the abuses and vexations to which they were subjected by men in power. Bouvier.

HERMAPHRODITE. In medical jurisprudence. A person of doubtful or double sex; one possessing, really or apparently, and in more or less developed form, some or all of the genital organs of both sexes.

HERMAPHRODITUS TAM MASCULO QU AM FCEMINIE COMPARATUR, SECUNDUM PRIEV-ALENTIAM SEXUS INCALESCENTIS. An hermaphrodite is to be considered male or female according to the predominance of the exciting sex. Co.Litt. 8; Bract. fol. 5.

HERMENEUTICS. The science or art of construction and interpretation. By the phrase "legal hermeneutics" is understood the systematic body of rules which are recognized as applicable to the construction and interpretation of legal writings.

HERMER. A great lord. Jacob.

HERMOGENIAN CODE. See Codex Hermogenianus.

HERNESCUS. A heron. Cowell.

HERNESIUM, or HERNESIUM. Household goods; implements of trade or husbandry; the rigging or tackle of a ship. Cowell.

HERSHIP. The crime, in Scotland, of carrying off cattle by force; it is described as “the masterful driving off of cattle from a proprietor’s grounds.” Bell.

HERUS. Lat. A master. Servus tacit ut herus det, the servant does [the work] in order that the master may give [him the wages agreed on.] Herus dat ut servus facit, the master gives [or agrees to give, the wages,] in consideration of, or with a view to, the servant’s doing [the work.] 2 Bl.Comm. 445.

HESIA. An easement. Du Cange.

HEST CORN. In old records. Corn or grain given or devoted to religious persons or purposes. 2 Mon.Angl. 367/3., Cowell.

HESTA, or HESTHA. A little loaf of bread. A capon or young cockerel.

HETIERARCHA. The head of a religious house; the head of a college; the warden of a corporation.

HETIERIA. In Roman law. A company, society, or college.

HEUVELBORH. Sax. In old English law. A surety, (warrantus.)
HEYOLODE. In old records. A customary burden upon inferior tenants, for mending or repairing hays or hedges.

HEYMECTUS. A hay-net; a net for catching conies. Cowell.

HIBERNAGIUM. The season for sowing winter corn. Cowell.

MDAGE. An extraordinary tax formerly payable to the crown for every hide of land. This taxation was levied, not in money, but provision of armor, etc. Cowell.

HIDALGO. In Spanish law. A noble; a person entitled to the rights of nobility. By hidalgos are understood men chosen from good situations in life, (de buenos lugares,) and possessed of property, (algo.) White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 1.

HIDE. In old English law. A measure of land, being as much as could be worked with one plow. It is variously estimated at from 60 to 100 acres, but was probably determined by local usage. Another meaning was as much land as would support one family or the dwellers in a mansion-house. Also a house; a dwelling-house. A hide was anciently employed as a unit of taxation. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 347, such tax being called hidegild.

HIDE LANDS. In Saxon law. Lands belonging to a hide; that is, a house or mansion. Spelman.

HIDEL. In old English law. A place of protection; a sanctuary. St. 1 Hen. VII. cc. 5, 6; Cowell.

HIDGILD. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from a whipping. Fleta, l. 1, c. 47, § 20.

HIERARCHY. Originally, government by a body of priests. Now, the body of officers in any church or ecclesiastical institution, considered as forming an ascending series of ranks or degrees of power and authority, with the correlative subjection, each to the one next above. Derivatively, any body of men, taken in their public capacity, and considered as forming a chain of power, as above described.

HIGH. This term, as used in various compound legal phrases, is sometimes merely an addition of dignity, not importing a comparison; but more generally it means exalted, either in rank or location, or occupying a position of superiority, and in a few instances it implies superiority in respect to importance, size, or frequency or publicity of use, e. g., “high seas,” “highway.”

HIGH COMMISSION COURT. See Court of High Commission.

HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See Court of Admiralty.

HIGH COURT OF DELEGATES. See Court of Delegates.

HIGH COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS. See Court of Errors and Appeals.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE. See Supreme Court of Judicature.

HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT. See Parliament.

HIGH DEGREE OF CARE AND DILIGENCE. See Care.

HIGHER AND LOWER SCALE. In the practice of the English supreme court of judicature there are two scales regulating the fees of the court and the fees which solicitors are entitled to charge. The lower scale applies (unless the court otherwise orders) to the following cases: All causes and matters assigned by the judicature acts to the king's bench, or the probate, divorce, and admiralty divisions; all actions of debt, contract, or tort; and in almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the chancery division in which the amount in litigation is under £1,000. The higher scale applies in all other causes and matters, and also in actions falling under one of the above classes, but in which the principal relief sought to be obtained is an injunction. Sweet.

HIGHEST DEGREE OF CARE. A standard of care exacted in some jurisdictions of common carriers of passengers. The standard is relative, not absolute, and is sometimes regarded as no more than reasonable care measured by the circumstances. See Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., § 2151.

HIGHEST PROVED VALUE. In an action of trover the amount which the jury from a consideration of all the evidence, may find to be the highest value of the property during the period between the conversion and the trial. Durden v. Durden, 58 Ga.App. 46, 197 S.E. 493, 494.

HIGHNESS. A title of honor given to princes. The kings of England, before the time of James I, were not usually saluted with the title of "Majesty," but with that of "Highness." The children of crowned heads generally receive the style of "Highness." Wharton.

A free and public roadway, or street; one which every person has the right to use. Abbott v. Duluth, C.C.Minn., 104 F. 837. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bennett, C.C.A.Miss., 296 F. 436, 437. Its prime essentials are the right of common enjoyment on the one hand and the duty of public maintenance on the other. Hildebrand v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 219 N.C. 402, 14 S.E.2d 252, 254, 255.

The generic name for all kinds of public ways, whether carriage-ways, bridle-ways, foot-ways, bridges, turnpike roads, railroads, canals, ferries or navigable rivers; 6 Mod. 255; Ang.Highw. c. 1; 3 Kent 432; City of St. Louis v. Bell Place Realty Co., 259 Mo. 126, 168 S.W. 721, 722. As to streets and alleys, Iowa Telephone Co. v. City of Keokuk, D.C., 226 F. 82, 87; Burns v. Kendall, 96 S.C. 385, 80 S.E. 621, 622. Every public thoroughfare. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Post, 53 Idaho 559, 27 P.2d 877. It refers to roadway or street which can be used for travel, as distinguished from way upon which road can be or is being constructed. Allen v. Jones, 47 S.D. 603, 201 N.W. 353.

There is a difference in the shade of meaning conveyed by two uses of the word. Sometimes it signifies right of free passage, in the abstract, not importing anything about the character or construction of the way. Thus, a river is called a "highway"; and it has been not unusual for congress, in granting a privilege of building a bridge, to declare that it shall be a public highway. Again, it has reference to some system of law authorizing the taking a property to be used for travel, as distinguished from way upon which road can be or is being constructed. Allen v. Jones, 47 S.D. 603, 201 N.W. 353.

Commissioners of Highways. Public officers appointed in the several counties and municipalities, in many states, to take charge of the opening, altering, repair, and vacating of highways within their respective jurisdictions.

Common highway. A road to be used by the community at large for any purpose of transit or traffic. Ham. N. P. 239; Railway Co. v. State, 23 Fla. 546, 3 So. 158, 11 Am.St.Rep. 395.

Highway Acts, or Laws. The body or system of laws governing the laying out, repair, and use of highways.

Highway Crossing. A place where the track of a railroad crosses the line of a highway.

Highway-rate. In English law. A tax for the maintenance and repair of highways, chargeable upon the same property that is liable to the poor-rate.

Highway Robbery. See Robbery.

Public Highway. One under the control of and kept by the public, established by regular proceedings for the purpose, or generally used by the public for twenty years, or dedicated by the owner of the soil and accepted by the proper authorities and for the maintenance of which they are responsible. State v. Gross, 119 N.C. 868, 26 S.E. 91.

It includes roads, streets, alleys, lanes, courts, places, trails, and bridges, laid out or erected as such by the public, or, if laid out and erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public, or made such in actions for the partition of real property. Patterson v. Munyan, 93 Cal. 128, 29 P. 250.

It has been said that if the word "highway" is given its customary meaning, the phrase "public highway" is an example of tautology—the needless or useless repetition of the same idea, of which the law seems to furnish so many illustrations. See Galloway v. Wyatt Metal & Boiler Works, 181 So. 187, 189 La. 837; Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac.,Perm. Ed., § 3.

Royal Highways. There were four royal highways in Yorkshire, three by land and one by water, where the king claimed all forfeitures. Male. Domest. Book and Beyond 87.

HIGLER. In English law. A hawker or peddler. A person who carries from door to door, and sells by retail, small articles of provisions, and the like.

HIGUELA. In Spanish law. A receipt given by an heir of a decedent, setting forth what property he has received from the estate.

HIIS TESTIBUS. Words formerly used in deeds, signifying these being witness. They have been disused since Henry VIII. Co.Litt.; Cowell.

HI-JACKER. High-Jacker. See that title.

HIKENILD STREET. One of the four great Roman roads of Britain. More commonly called "Ikenild Street."

HILARY RULES. A collection of orders and forms extensively modifying the pleading and practice in the English superior courts of common law, established in Hilary term, 1834. Stimson.

HILARY TERM. In English law. A term of court, beginning on the 11th and ending on the 31st of January in each year. Superseded (1875) by Hilary sittings, which begin January 11th, and end on the Wednesday before Easter.

HINDENI HOMINES. A society of men. The Saxons ranked men into three classes, and valued them, as to satisfaction for injuries, etc., according to their class. The highest class were valued at 1,200s., and were called "twelf hindmen;" the middle class at 600s., and called "sexhindmen;" the lowest at 200s., called "twyhindmen." Their wives were termed "hindas." Brompt. Leg. Alfred. c. 12.

HINDER AND DELAY. A phrase used to signify an act amounting to an attempt to defraud, rather than a successful fraud; to put some obstacle in the path of, or interpose some time, unjustifiably, before a creditor can realize what is ow-ed out of his debtor's property. Walker v. Sayers, 5 Bush., Ky., 582.

HINDU LAW. The system of native law prevailing among the Gentoos, and administered by the government of British India. It is not the law of India or of any defined region. It is the law of castes, class, orders and even families which the Hindus carry. about with them. 17 L.Q.R. 209.
Bryce, Extension of Law in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 597.

HINE, or HIND. In old English law. A husbandry servant.

HINEFARE. In old English law. The loss or departure of a servant from his master. Domesday.

HINEGELD. A ransom for an offense committed by a servant. Cowell.

HIPOTECA. In Spanish law. A mortgage of real property.

HIRCISCUNDA. See Herciscunda.

HIRE, v. To purchase the temporary use of a thing, or to stipulate for the labor or services of another. See Hiring.

For definitions of the various species of this class of contracts, under their Latin names, see Locatio and following titles.

To engage in service for a stipulated reward, as to hire a servant for a year, or laborers by the day or month; to engage a man to temporary service for wages. To "employ" is a word of more enlarged signification. A man hired to labor is employed, but a man may be employed in a work who is not hired. Ozark Minerals Co. v. Murphy, 384 Ill. 94, 51 N.E.2d 197, 201.

HIRE, n. Compensation for the use of a thing, or for labor or services. State v. Kenyon, Inc.,

A bailment in which compensation is to be given for the use of a thing, or for labor and services about it. 2 Kent 456; Story, Bailm. § 359. The divisions of this species of contract are denoted by Latin names.

HIREMAN. A subject. Du Cange.

HIRER. One who hires a thing, or the labor or services of another person. Turner v. Cross, 83
Tex. 218, 18 S.W. 578, 15 L.R.A. 262.

HIRING. A contract by which one person grants to another either the enjoyment of a thing or the use of the labor and industry, either of himself or his servant, during a certain time, for a stipulatated compensation, or by which one contracts for the labor or services of another about a thing bailed to him for a specified purpose.

A contract by which one gives to another the temporary possession and use of property, other than money, for reward, and the latter agrees to return the same to the former at a future time.

Synonyms

"Hiring" and "borrowing" are both contracts by which a qualified property may be transferred to the hirer or borrower, and they differ only in this, that hiring is always for a price, stipend, or recompense, while borrowing is Cr.R. 408, 26 S.W. 726.

HIRING AT WILL. A general or indefinite hiring. Long v. Forbes, 58 Wyo. 533, 136 P.2d 242, 246.

HIRST, HURST. In old English laws a wood.
Co.Litt. 4b.

HIS. This pronoun, generically used, may refer to a person of either sex. Danforth v. Emmons, 124 Me. 156, 126 A. 821, 823; Wilmette v. Brachle, 110 Ill.App. 356.

Its use in a written instrument, in referring to a person whose Christian name is designated therein by a mere initial, is not conclusive that the person referred to is a male; it may be shown by parol that the person intended is a

HIS EXCELSITY. In English law. The title of a viceroy, governor general, ambassador, or commander in chief.

In American law. This title is given to the governor of Massachusetts by the constitution of that state; and it is commonly given, as a title of honor and courtesy, to the governors of the other states and to the president of the United States.
It is also customarily used by foreign ministers in addressing the secretary of state in written communications.

HIS HONOR. A title given by the constitution of Massachusetts to the lieutenant governor of that commonwealth. Mass. Const. part 2, c. 2, § 2, art. 1. It is also customarily given to some inferior magistrates, as the mayor of a city.

HIS TESTIBUS. Lat. These being witnesses.
The attestation clause in old deeds and charters.

The Roman canonists had the orders of bishop, (in which the pope and archbishops were included,) priest, deacon, subdeacon, psalmist, acolyte, exorcist, reader, ostiarius. 3 Steph.Comm. 55, and note a.

HOMAGE. In feudal law. A service (or the ceremony of rendering it) which a tenant was bound to perform to his lord on receiving investiture of a fee, or succeeding to it as heir, in acknowledgment of the tenure. It is described by Littleton as the most honorable service of reverence that a free tenant might do to his lord. The ceremony was as follows: The tenant, being ungirt and with bare head, knelt before the lord, the latter sitting, and held his hands extended and joined between the hands of the lord, and said: “I become your man [home] from this day forward, of life and limb and earthly honor, and to you will be faithful and loyal, and bear you faith, for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the king, so help me God.” The tenant then received a kiss from the lord. Homage could be done only to the lord himself. Litt. § 85; Glanv. lib. 9, c. 1; Bract. fols. 77b, 78-80; Wharton.

“Homage” is to be distinguished from “fealty,” another incident of feudalism, and which consisted in the solemn oath of fidelity made by the vassal to the lord, whereas homage was merely an acknowledgment of tenure. If the homage was intended to include fealty, it was called “liege homage;” but otherwise it was called “simple homage.” Brown.

HOMAGE ANCESTRAL. In feudal law. Homage was called by this name where a man and his ancestors had immemorially held of another and his ancestors by the service of homage, which bound the lord to warrant the title, and also to hold the tenant clear of all services to superior HOLIDAY. A religious festival; a day set apart for commemorating some important event in history; a day of exemption from labor. Webster; Lamberti v. City of Stamford, 131 Conn. 396, 40 A.2d 190, 192. A day upon which the usual operations of business are suspended and the courts closed, and, generally, no legal process is served. United Cigar Stores Co. v. Worth-Gyles Grain Co., 212 Ill.App. 26.

Legal holiday. See Legal Holiday.

Public holiday. A legal holiday.

HOLD pleas. To hear or try causes. 3 B1.Comm. 35, 298.
HOMAGE

lords. If the tenant aliened in fee, his alienee was a tenant by homage, but not by homage ancestral. Litt. § 143; 2 Bl.Comm. 300.

HOMAGE JURY. A jury in a court-baron, consisting of tenants that do homage, who are to inquire and make presentments of the death of tenants, surrenders, admittances, and the like.

HOMAGE LIEGE. That kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. Spelman.

HOMAGER. One who does or is bound to do homage. Cowell.

HOMAGIO RESPECTUANDO. A writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the king's tenant, notwithstanding his homage not done. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 269.

HOMAGIUM. L. Lat. Homage (q. v.).

HOMAGIUM LIGIUM. Liege homage; that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. Spelman. So called from ligando, (binding,) because it could not be renounced like other kinds of homage.

HOMAGIUM, NON PER PROCURATORES NEC PER LITERAS FIERI POTUIT, SED IN PROPRIA PERSONA TAMB DOMINI QUAM TEMENTIS CAPI DEBET ET FIERI. Co. Litt. 68. Homage cannot be done by proxy, nor by letters, but must be paid and received in the proper person, as well of the lord as the tenant.

HOMAGIUM PLANUM. In feudal law. Plain homage; a species of homage which bound him who did it to nothing more than fidelity, without any obligation either of military service or attendance in the courts of his superior. 1 Robertson's Car. V., Appendix, note 8.

HOMAGIUM REDDERERE. To renounce homage. This was when a vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning and defying his lord; for which there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal laws. Bract. 1. 2, c. 35, § 35.

HOMAGIUM SIMPLEX. In feudal law. Simple homage; that kind of homage which was merely an acknowledgment of tenure, with a saving of the rights of other lords. Foster. Co. Litt. note 18, lib. 2.

HOMBRE BUENO. In Spanish law. The judge of a district. Also an arbitrator chosen by the parties to a suit. Also a man in good standing; one who is competent to testify in a suit.

HOME. One's own dwelling place; the house in which one lives; especially the house in which one lives with his family; the habitual abode of one's family; a dwelling house. Mann v. Haines, 146 Kan. 988, 73 P.2d 1066, 1072. That place in which one in fact resides with the intention of residence, or in which he has so resided, and with regard to which he retains residence or to which he intends to return. Dicey, Confl. L. 81; Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 31 A. 300, 27 L.R. A. 330.

Home is not synonymous with domicil, as used in international law, but has a more restricted meaning. Inhabitants of Jefferson v. Washington, 19 Me. 293.

Home includes place where one eats, bathes, reads, visits and rests, as well as sleeping place, Jakeway v. John V. Bauer Co., 218 N.Y.S. 193, 195, 218 App. Div. 302; and as used in deed or will may include care or right of maintenance, Gwinn v. Hobbs, 83 Ind.App. 263, 141 N.E. 812, 818; In re Burr's Estate, 144 N.Y.S. 926, 927, 83 Misc. 240.

HOME OFFICE. The department of state through which the English sovereign administers most of the internal affairs of the kingdom, especially the police, and communicates with the judicial functionaries. As applied to a corporation, its principal office within the state or country where it was incorporated or formed.

HOME PORT. In maritime law, the home port of a vessel is either the port where she is registered or enrolled, or the port at or nearest to which her owner usually resides, or, if there be more than one owner, the port at or nearest to which the husband, or acting and managing owner resides. Corn. v. Ayer & Lord Tie Co., 77 S.W. 688, 25 Ky.Law Rep. 1068. But for some purposes any port where the owner happens at the time to be with his vessel is its home port. Lever Transp. Co. v. 011inger, 205 Ala. 22, 87 So. 597, 598.

HOME RULE. In constitutional and statutory law, local self-government, or the right thereof. Attorney General v. Lowrey, 131 Mich. 639, 92 N. W. 289. In British politics, a programme or plan (or a more or less definitely formulated demand) for the right of local self-government for Ireland under the lead of an Irish national parliament. Lemaire v. Crockett, 116 Me. 263, 101 A. 302, 303.

HOME, or HOMME. L. Fr. Man; a man.

HOME NE SERA PUNY PUR SUER DES BRIEFS EN COURT LE ROY, SOIT IL A DROIT OU A TORT. A man shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king's court, whether he be right or wrong. 2 Inst. 228.

HOMESOKEN, HOMSOKEN. See Hamesecken.

HOMESTEAD. The home, the house and the adjoining land where the head of the family dwells; the home farm. The fixed residence of the head of a family, with the land and buildings surrounding the main house. Oliver v. Snowden, 18 Fla. 825, 43 Am.Rep. 338.

Technically, and under the modern homestead laws, an artificial estate in land, devised to protect the possession and enjoyment of the owner against the claims of his creditors, by withdrawing the property from execution and forced sale, so long as the land is occupied as a home. Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89, 45 N.W. 504. For "Family," see that title.

Business Homestead. In Texas, a place or property (distinct from the home of a family) used and occupied by the head of a family as a place to exercise his calling or business, which is exempt by law. Spence v. State Nat. Bank of El Paso, Tex.Civ.App., 294 S.W. 618, 623. A curious misnomer, the word "homestead" in this phrase having lost entirely its original meaning, and being retained apparently only for the sake of its remote and derivative association with the idea of an exemption.

Homestead Corporations. Corporations organized for the purpose of acquiring lands in large tracts, paying off incumbrances thereon, improving and subdividing them into homestead lots or parcels, and distributing them among the shareholders, and for the accumulation of a fund for such purposes. Civ. Code Cal. § 557.

Homestead Entry. See Entry.

Homestead Exemption Laws. Laws passed in most of the states allowing a householder or head of a family to designate a house and land as his homestead, and exempting the same homestead from execution for his general debts.

Homestead Right. The personal right to the home property free from claims of creditors. Hill v. First Nat. Bank, 79 Fla. 391, 84 So. 190, 192, 20 A.L.R. 270.

Probate Homestead. A homestead set apart by the court for the use of a surviving husband or wife and the minor children out of the common property, or out of the real estate belonging to the deceased. In re Noah's Estate, 73 Cal. 590, 15 P. 290, 2 Am.St.Rep. 834.

Rural Homestead. See Urban Homestead, infra.

Urban Homestead. The residence or dwelling place of a family in a city, claimed or set apart as a homestead, including the principal house and lot, and such lots as are used in connection therewith, contributing to its enjoyment, comfort, and convenience. Harris v. Matthews, 36 Tex. 424, 81 S.W. 1204. Nevertheless, property may be located within the corporate limits of a town or city, and still constitute a "rural homestead," or it may be without the corporate limits, and constitute an "urban homestead." Boerner v. Cicero Smith Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 293 S.W. 632, 636.

HOMICIDAL. Pertaining to homicide; relating to homicide, impelling to homicide; as a homicidal mania. (See Insanity.)

Homicide is not necessarily a crime. It is a necessary ingredient of the crimes of murder and manslaughter, but there are other cases in which homicide may be committed without criminal intent and without criminal consequences, as, where it is done in the lawful execution of a judicial sentence, in self-defense, or as the only possible means of arresting an escaping felon. The term "homicide" is neutral; while it describes the act, it proclaims no judgment on its moral or legal quality. People v. Connors, 35 N.Y.S. 475, 13 Misc. 582.

Classification

Homicide is ordinarily classified as "justifiable," "excusable," and "felonious." For the definitions of these terms, and of some other compound terms, see infra.

Culpable homicide

The killing of a human being, either by misadventure or in self-defense. U. S. v. King, C.C.N.Y., 34 F. 306. The name itself imports some fault, error, or omission, so trivial, however, that the law excuses it from guilt of felony, though in strictness it judges it deserving of some little degree of punishment. 4 Bl.Comm. 182. It is of two sorts,—either per infortunium, by misadventure, or se defendendo, upon a sudden affray. Homicide per infortunium is where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurting another; but, if death ensue from any unlawful act, the offense is manslaughter, and not misadventure. Homicide se defendendo is where a man kills another upon a sudden affray, merely in his own defense, or in defense of his wife, child, parent, or servant, and not from any vindictive feeling. 4 Bl.Comm. 182.

Felony

The wrongful killing of a human being, of any age or either sex, without justification or excuse in law; of which offense there are two degrees, manslaughter and murder. 4 Bl.Comm. 190; 4 Steph.Comm. 111.

Homicide by misadventure

The accidental killing of another, where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminal carelessness or reckless conduct. Commonwealth v. Flax, 331 Pa. 145, 200 A. 632, 637. The same as "homicide per infortunium." State v. Disalvo, Del., 2 W.W.Harr. 232, 121 A. 661, 663.

Homicide by necessity

A species of justifiable homicide, because it arises from some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any fault or negligence on the part of the party killing, and therefore without any shadow of blame. As, for instance, by virtue of such an office as obliges one, in the execution of public justice, to put a malefactor to death who has forfeited his life to the laws of his country. But the law must require it, otherwise it is not justifiable. 4 Bl.Comm. 178.

Homicide per infortunium

Homicide by misfortune, or accidental homicide; as where a man doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another; a species of excusable homicide. 4 Bl.Comm. 182; 4 Steph.Comm. 101.

Homicide se defendendo

Homicide in self-defense; the killing of a person in self-defense upon a sudden affray, where the slayer had no other possible (or, at least, probable) means of escaping from his assailant. 4 Bl.Comm. 183-186; 4 Steph.Comm. 103-105. A species of excusable homicide. Id.; 1 Russ. Crimes, 660.

Justifiable homicide

Such as is committed intentionally, but without any evil design, and under such circumstances of necessity or duty as render the act proper, and relieve the party from any shadow of blame; as where a sheriff lawfully executes a sentence of death upon a malefactor, or where the killing takes place in the endeavor to prevent the commission of felony which could not be otherwise avoided. Moran v. People, 163 Ill. 382, 45 N.E. 230. "Justifiable homicide" is the taking of a human life under circumstances of justification, as a matter of right, such as self-defense or other causes set out in the statute. Gaunce v. State, 22 Okl.Cr.
HOMICIDE

361, 211 P. 517, 518. "Justifiable homicide" is the killing of a human being by commandment of the law in execution of public justice; by permission of the law in advance of public justice; in self-defense; or in defense of habitation, property or person, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a felony on either. Paramore v. State, 161 Ga. 166, 129 S.E. 772, 778.

Negligent homicide

HOMICIDUM, Lat. Homicide (q. v.).

Homicidium ex casu, homicide by accident.

Homicidium ex justitia, homicide in the administration of justice, or in the execution of the sentence of the law.

HOMO ECCLESIASTICUS. A church vassal; one who was bound to serve a church, especially to do service of an agricultural character. Spelman.

HOMO EXERCITALIS. A man of the army, (exercitus;) a soldier.

HOMO FEODALIS. A vassal or tenant; one who held a fee, (feodum,) or part of a fee. Spelman.

HOMO FISCALIS, or FISCALINUS. A servant or vassal belonging to the treasury or fiscus.

HOMO FRANCUS. In old English law. A freeman. A Frenchman.

HOMO LIBER. A free man; a freeman lawfully competent to act as juror. Ld. Raym. 417; Kebl. 563. An alodial proprietor, as distinguished from a vassal or feudatory. This was the sense of the term in the laws of the barbarous nations of Europe. Calvinus, Lex. Alode.

HOMO LIGIUS. A liege man; a subject; a king’s vassal. The vassal of a subject.

HOMO NOVUS. In feudal law. A new tenant or vassal; one who was invested with a new fee. Spelman. Also one who, after conviction of a crime, had been pardoned, thus "making a new man of him."

HOMO PERTINENS. In feudal law. A feudal bondman or vassal; one who belonged to the soil, (qui glebce adscribitur.)

HOMO POTEST ESSE HABILIS ET INHABILIS DIVERSIS TEMPORIBUS. A man may be capable and incapable at different times.

HOMO REGLUS. A king’s vassal.

HOMO ROMANUS. A Roman. An appellation given to the old inhabitants of Gaul and other Roman provinces, and retained in the laws of the barbarous nations. Spelman.

HOMO TRIMUM LITTERARUM. A man of the three letters; that is, the three letters, “f,” “u,” “r;” the Latin word fur meaning "thief."
HOMOLOGACION. In Spanish law. The tacit consent and approval inferred by law from the omission of the parties, for the space of ten days, to complain of the sentences of arbitrators, appointment of syndics, or assignees of insolvents, settlements of successions, etc. Also the approval given by the judge of certain acts and agreements for the purpose of rendering them more binding and executory. Escriche.

HOMOLOGATE. In modern civil law. To approve; to consent or assent; to confess. As a court homologates a proceeding. See Homologation. Literally, to use the same words with another; to say the like. Viales v. Gardenier, 9 Mart. 0. S. (La.) 324. To assent to what another says or writes.

HOMOLOGATION. In the Civil law. Approval; confirmation by a court of justice; a judgment which orders the execution of some act. Merl. Repert. The term is also used in Louisiana. Hecker v. Brown, 104 La. 524, 29 So. 232.

In English law. An estoppel in pais. L.R. 3 App.Cas. 1026.

In Scotch law. An act by which a person approves of a deed. The effect of which is to render that deed, though in itself defective, binding upon the person by whom it is homologated. Bell. Confirmation of a voidable deed.

HOMONYMIZE. A term applied in the civil law to cases where a law was repeated, or laid down in the same terms or to the same effect, more than once. Cases of iteration and repetition. 2 Kent, Comm. 489, note.

HONDHABEND. Sax. Having in hand. See Handhabend.

HONESTE VIVERE. Lat. To live honorably, creditably, or virtuously. One of the three general precepts to which Justinian reduced the whole doctrine of the law, (Inst. 1, 1, 3; Bract. fols. 3, 3b,) the others being alterum non lcedere, (not to injure others,) and suum cuique tribuere, (to render to every man his due.)

HONESTUS. Lat. Of good character or standing. Coram duobus vel pluribus viris legallibus et honestis, before two or more lawful and good men. Bract. fol. 61.

HONI. See Hony.

HONOR, n. In English law, a seigniory of several manors held under one baron or lord paramount. Also those dignities or privileges, degrees of nobility, knighthood, and other titles, which flow from the crown as the fountain of honor. Wharton.

In American law. The customary title of courtesy given to judges of the higher courts, and occasionally to some other officers; as "his honor," "your honor."

Act of honor. When a bill has been protested, and a third person wishes to take it up, or accept it, for the "honor" (credit) of one or more of the parties, the notary draws up an instrument, evidencing the transaction, which is called by this name.

Honor courts. Tribunals held within honors or seigniories.

Office of honor. As used in constitutional and statutory provisions, this term denotes a public office of considerable dignity and importance, to which important public trusts or interests are confided, but which is not compensated by any salary or fees, being thus contrasted with an "office of profit." See Dickson v. People, 17 Ill. 193.

HONORABLE. A title of courtesy given in England to the younger children of earls, and the children of viscounts and barons; and, collectively, to the house of commons. In America, the word is used as a title of courtesy for various classes of officials, but without any clear lines of distinction.

A voluntary donation, in consideration of services which admit of no compensation in money; in particular, to advocates at law, deemed to practice for honor or influence, and not for fees. McDonald v. Napier, 14 Ga. 89.

HONORARIUM JUS. Lat. In Roman law. The law of the praetors and the edicts of the cediles.

HONORARY. As applied to public offices and other positions of responsibility or trust, this term means either that the office or title is bestowed upon the incumbent as a mark of honor or compliment, without intending to charge him with the active discharge of the duties of the place, or else that he is to receive no salary or other compensation in money, the honor conferred by the incumbency of the office being his only reward. Haswell v. New York, 81 N.Y. 258. In other connections, it means attached to or growing out of some honor or dignity or honorable office, or else it imports an obligation or duty growing out of honor or trust only, as distinguished from legal accountability.

HONORARY CANONS. Those without emolument. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, § 23.

HONORARY FEUDS. Titles of nobility, descendible to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest. 2 BL Comm. 56.

HONORARY SERVICES. In feudal law. Special services to be rendered to the king in person, characteristic of the tenure by grand serjeanty; such as to carry his banner, his sword, or the like or to be his butler, champion, or other officer, at his coronation. Litt. § 153; 2 BL Comm. 73.

HONORARY TRUSTEES. Trustees to preserve contingent remainders, so called because they are bound, in honor only, to decide on the most proper and prudential course. Lewin, Trusts, 408.

HONORLS RESPECTUM. By reason of honor or privilege. See Challenge.

HONTFONGENETHEF. In Saxon law. A thief taken with hondhabend; e., having the thing stolen in his hand. Cowell.

HONY. L. Fr. Shame; evil; disgrace. Hony soit qui mal y pense, evil be to him who evil thinks. Preferably written honi. See Garter.

HOO. In old English law. A hill. Co. Litt. 5b.

HOOKLAND. Land plowed and sown every year.

HOOTCH. Intoxicating liquor illicitly distilled for beverage purposes. State v. Cook, 318 Mo. 1233, 3 S.W.2d 365, 369.

HOPCON. In old English law. A valley. Cowell.

HOPE, v. As used in a will, this term is a precarious word, rather than mandatory or dispositive, but it is sufficient, in proper cases, to create a trust in or in respect to the property spoken of. Curd v. Field, 103 Ky. 293, 45 S.W. 92.

HOPPO. A Chinese term for a collector; an overseer of commerce.

HORA. Lat. An hour; the hour.

HORA AURORIE. In old English law. The morning bell, as ignitegium or coverfeu (curfew) was the evening bell.

HORA NON EST MULTUM DE SUBSTANTIA NEGOTII, LICET IN APPELLO DE EA ALIQUANDO FIAT MENTIO. The hour is not of much consequence as to the substance of business, although in appeal it is sometimes mentioned. 1 Bulst. 82.

RORIE JURIDICE or JUDICLE. Hours during which the judges sat in court to attend to judicial business.

HORDERA. In old English law. A treasurer. Du Cange.

HORDERIUM. In old English law. A hoard; a treasure, or repository. Cowell.

HORDEUM. In old records. Barley. Hordeum palmale, beer barley, as distinguished from common barley, which was called "hordeum quadragesimale." Blount.

HORIZONTAL PRICE-FIXING CONTRACTS. Contracts between producers or between wholesalers or between retailers as to sale or resale prices. Seagram-Distillers Corporation v. Old Dearborn Distributing Co., 363 Ill. 610, 2 N.E.2d 940, 942.

HORN. In old Scotch practice. A kind of trumpet used in denouncing contumacious persons rebels and outlaws, which was done with three blasts of the horn by the king’s sergeant. This was called "putting to the horn;" and the party so denounced was said to be "at the horn." Bell. See Hornung.

HORN-BOOK. A primer; a book explaining the rudiments of any science or branch of knowledge. The phrase “horn-book law” is a colloquial designation of the rudiments or most familiar principles of law.

HORN TENURE. In old English law. Tenure by cornage; that is, by the service of winding a horn when the Scots or other enemies entered the land, in order to warn the king’s subjects. This was a species of grand serjeanty. Litt. § 156; 2 Bl. Comm. 74.

HORN WITH HORN, or HORN UNDER HORN. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows or all horned beasts that are allowed to run together upon the same common. Spelman.

HORNGELD. Sax. In old English law. A tax within a forest, paid for horned beasts. Cowell; Blount.

HORNING. In Scotch law. "Letters of hornng" is the name given to a judicial process issuing on the decree of a court, by which the debtor is summoned to perform his obligation in terms of the decree, the consequence of his failure to do so being liability to arrest and imprisonment. It was anciently the custom to proclaim a debtor who had failed to obey such process a rebel or outlaw, which was done by three blasts of the horn by the king’s sergeant in a public place. This was called "putting to the horn," whence the name.

HOSTILARIA, HOSPITALARIA. A place or room in religious houses used for the reception of guests and strangers.

HOSTILE. Having the character of an enemy; standing in the relation of an enemy. 1 Kent, Comm. c. 4.

HOSTILE EMBARGO. One laid upon the vessels of an actual or prospective enemy.

HOSTILE FIRE. One which becomes uncontrollable or breaks out from where it was intended to be and becomes hostile element. Swerling v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 55 R.I. 252, 180 A. 343. Relation Ins. Co. v. Naman, 6 S.W.2d 743, 744, 118 Tex. 21.

HOSTILE POSSESSION. See Possession.

HOSTILE WITNESS. A witness who manifests so much hostility or prejudice under examination in chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him, i.e., to treat him as though he had been called by the opposite party. Wharton.

HOSTILITY. In the law of nations. A state of open war. "At the breaking out of hostility." An act of open war. "When hostilities have commenced." 1 Kent, Comm. 56, 60.

A hostile character. "Hostility may attach only to the person." 1 Kent, Comm. 56.

HOSTLER. In Norman and old English law, this was the title of the officer in a monastery charged with the entertainment of guests. It was also applied (until about the time of Queen Elizabeth) to an innkeeper, and afterwards, when the keeping of horses at livery became a distinct occupation, to the keeper of a livery stable, and then (under the modern form "ostler") to the groom in charge of the stables of an inn. Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N.Y.) 20.

In the language of railroading, an "ostler" or "hostler" at a roundhouse is one whose duty it is to receive locomotives as they come in from the road, care for them in the roundhouse, and have them cleaned and ready for departure when wanted. Louisville and N. R. Co. v. McCoy, 270 Ky. 603, 110 S.W.2d 433, 435.

HOTCHPOT. The blending and mixing property belonging to different persons, in order to divide it equally. 2 Bl. Comm. 190.

Anciently applied to the mixing and blending of lands given to one daughter in frank marriage, with those descending to her and her sisters in fee-simple, for the purpose of dividing the whole equally among them; without which the daughter who held in frank marriage could have no share in the lands in fee-simple. Litt. §§ 267, 268; Co. Litt. 177a; 2 Bl. Comm. 190.

Hotchpot, or the putting in hotchpot, is applied in modern law to the throwing the amount of an advancement made to a particular child, in real or personal estate, into the common stock, for the purpose of a more equal division, or of equalizing the shares of all the children. 2 Kent, Comm. 421, 422; In re Howlett's Estate, 275 Mich. 596, 267 N.W. 743, 744. This answers to or resembles the collatio bonorum, or collation of the civil law. Law v. Smith, 2 R.I. 249; In re Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 168 N.Y.S. 952, 959, 181 App. Div. 642.

HOTEL. An inn; a public house or tavern; a house which is held out to well-behaved members of the traveling public, who are willing to pay reasonable rates for accommodations, as a place where they will be received and entertained as guests for compensation, and will be furnished with food, drink, and lodging, and everything which they have occasion for while on their way. City of St. Louis v. Siegrist, 46 Mo. 593; People v. Gold, Sp.Sess., 6 N.Y.S.2d 264, 267. For "Family Hotel", see that title.

Synonyms

In law, there is no difference whatever between the terms "hotel," "inn," and "tavern," except that in some states a statutory definition has been given to the word "hotel," especially with reference to the grant of licenses to sell liquor, as, that it shall contain a certain number of separate rooms for the entertainment of guests, or the like. But none of the three terms mentioned will include a boarding house (because that is a place kept for the entertainment of permanent boarders, while a hotel or inn is for travelers and transient guests), nor a lodging house (because the keeper thereof does not furnish food for guests, which is one of the requisites of a hotel or inn), nor a restaurant or eating-house, which furnishes food only and not lodging. Martin v. State Ins. Co., 44 N.J.Law, 485, 43 Am.Rep. 397; Debenham v. Short, Tex.Civ.App., 199 S.W. 1147.

HOT-WATER ORDEAL. In old English law. This was a test, in cases of accusation, by hot water; the party accused and suspected being appointed by the judge to put his arms up to the elbows in seething hot water, which, after sundry prayers and invocations, he did, and was, by the effect which followed, judged guilty or innocent. Wharton.

HOUGH. A valley. Co. Litt. 5b. See Haugh.

HOUR. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; sixty minutes of time.

Hour of cause. In Scotch practice. The hour when a court is met. 3 How. State Tr. 603.

Office hours. See Office.

"House" means, presumptively, a dwelling house; a building divided into floors and apartments, with four walls, a roof, and doors and chimneys; but it does not necessarily mean precisely this. Surman v. Darley, 14 Mees. & W. 183. It may mean any sort of structure or part thereof, whether used for human habitation or not. Dennis v. State, 71 Tex.Cr.R. 162, 158 S.W. 1008; Walker v. Terrell, Tex.Civ.App., 189 S.W. 75, 78.

"House" is not synonymous with "dwelling house." While the former is used in a broader and more comprehensive sense than the latter, it has a narrower and more restricted meaning than the word "building." State v. Garity, 46 N.H. 61.

A legislative assembly, or (where the bicameral system obtains) one of the two branches of the legislature; as the "house of lords," "house of representatives." Also a quorum of a legislative body. State of Ohio v. Cox, D.C. Ohio, 257 F. 334, 346.
The name "house" is also given to some collections of men other than legislative bodies, to some public institutions, and (colloquially) to mercantile firms or joint-stock companies.

Ancient House. One which has stood long enough to acquire an easement of support against the adjoining land or building. 3 Kent Comm. 437.

Bawdy House. A brothel; a house maintained for purposes of prostitution.

Beer House. See Beer.

Boarding House. See that title.

Dwelling House. See that title.

House-bote. A species of estovers, belonging to a tenant for life or years, consisting in the right to take from the woods of the lessor or owner such timber as may be necessary for making repairs upon the house. Co.Litt. 41b.

House-burning. See Arson.

House-duty. A tax on inhabited houses imposed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36, in lieu of window-duty, which was abolished.

House of Commons. One of the constituent houses of the British parliament, composed of representatives of the counties, cities, and boroughs. The lower house, so called because the commons of the realm, that is, the knights, citizens, and burgesses returned to parliament, representing the whole body of the commons, sit there.

House of Correction. A reformatory. A place for the imprisonment of juvenile offenders, or those who have committed crimes of lesser magnitude. Ex parte Moon Fook, 72 Cal. 10, 12 P. 804.

House of Delegates. The official title of the lower branch of the legislative assembly of several of the American states, e. g., Maryland and Virginia.

House of Ill Fame. A bawdy house; a brothel; a dwelling allowed by its chief occupant to be used as a resort of persons desiring unlawful sexual intercourse. People v. Lee, 307 Mich. 743, 12 N.W.2d 418, 421.

The authorities are conflicting as to whether and in what circumstances a house used solely by one woman for illicit intercourse is a house of ill fame. Fisher v. City of Paramour, 127 Ariz. 268, 192 S.W. 219, 220.

House of Keys. The name of the lower branch of the legislative assembly or parliament of the Isle of Man, consisting of twenty-four representatives chosen by popular election.

House of Lords. The upper chamber of the British parliament. It comprises the archbishops and bishops, (called "Lords Spiritual," the English peers sitting by virtue of hereditary right, sixteen Scotch peers elected to represent the Scotch peerage under the act of union, and twenty-eight Irish peers elected under similar provisions. The house of lords, as a judicial body, has ultimate appellate jurisdiction, and may sit as a court for the trial of impeachments.

House of Refuge. A prison for juvenile delinquents. A house of correction or reformatory.

House of Representatives. The name of the body forming the more popular and numerous branch of the congress of the United States; also of the similar branch in many of the state legislatures.

House of Worship. A building or place set apart for and devoted to the holding of religious services or exercises or public worship; a church or chapel or place similarly used. Old South Soc. v. Boston, 127 Mass. 379.

Inner House, Outer House. See those titles.

Mansion House. See Mansion.

Public House. An inn or tavern; a house for the entertainment of the public, or for the entertainment of all who come lawfully and pay regularly. Whatley v. State, 68 So. 491, 492, 12 Ala.App. 201. A place of public resort, particularly for purposes of drinking or gaming. In a more general sense, any house made public by the occupation carried on in it and the implied invitation to the public to enter, such as inns, taverns, drinking saloons, gambling houses, and perhaps also shops and stores. Cole v. State, 28 Tex.App. 536, 13 S.W. 859, 19 Am.St.Rep. 856.

Tippling House. A place where intoxicating liquors are sold in drams or small quantities to be drunk on the premises, and where men resort for drinking purposes.

HOUSEAGE. A fee paid for housing goods by a carrier, or at a wharf, etc.

HOUSEBREAKING. In criminal law. Breaking and entering a dwelling-house with intent to commit any felony therein. If done by night, it comes under the definition of "burglary."

Under statute housebreaking may consist in "breaking out" of a house after access had been gained without breaking. Lawson v. Commonwealth, 160 Ky. 180, 169 S.W. 587, 588, L.R.A. 1915 D, 972.

HOUSEHOLD, adj. Belonging to the house and family; domestic. Webster.

HOUSEHOLD, n. A family living together. Schulte v. Industrial Commission, 86 Utah, 284, 43 P.2d 696, 699, 100 A.L.R. 1085. Those who dwell under the same roof and compose a family. Webster. A man's family living together constitutes his household, though he may have gone to another state.

For "Family," see that title.

Synonymous with "family," but broader, in that it includes servants or attendants; all who are under one domestic head. Engebretsen v. Austvold, 199 Minn. 399, 271 N.W. 809, 810.
HOUSEHOLD

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE. See Furniture.

HOUSEHOLD SERVANTS AND HOUSEHOLD EMPLOYEES. Those employed in the mansion house, and not embrace those who work out of doors upon the home place, and not regularly employed to do work within the curtilage. Raines v. Osborne, 184 N.C. 599, 114 S.E. 849.

HOUSEHOLD STUFF. This phrase, in a will, includes everything which may be used for the convenience of the house, as tables, chairs, bedding, and the like. But apparel, books, weapons, tools for artificers, cattle, victuals, and choses in action will not pass by those words, unless the context of the will clearly show a contrary intention. 1 Rop. Leg. 206. See Appeal of Hoopes, 60 Pa. 227, 100 Am.Dec. 562.

HOUSEKEEPER. One who is in actual possession of and who occupies a house, as distinguished from a “boarder,” “lodger,” or “guest.” See Bell v. Keach, 80 Ky. 45. Head of a family. January v. Marler, 274 Mo. 543, 203 S.W. 817.

HOUSE LAW. A peculiar type of regulatory code, now largely obsolete, promulgated by the head of a royal or noble family, or of a prominent private family, governing intra-family relationships and acts with respect to policies of marriage, disposition of property, inheritance and the like. Usually these codes had no legal authority but were enforced within the family by sufficient personal and economic sanctions.

HOVEL. A place used by husbandmen to set their plows, carts, and other farming utensils out of the rain and sun. A shed; a cottage; a mean house.

HOWE. In old English law. A hill. Co. Litt. 5b.

HOWGH. See Haugh.

HOY. A small coasting vessel, usually sloop-rigged, used in conveying passengers and goods from place to place, or as a tender to larger vessels in port. Webster.

HOYMAN. The master or captain of a hoy.

HUCKSTER. A petty dealer and retailer of small articles of provisions, particularly farm and garden produce; a hawker; peddler. Hughes v. City of Detroit, 217 Mich. 567, 187 N.W. 530, 531.

HUCUSQUE. In old pleading. Hitherto. 2 Mod. 24.

RUDE-GELD. In old English law. An acquaintance for an assault upon a trespassing servant. Supposed to be a mistake or misprint in Fleta for “hinegeld.” Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 20. Also the price of one’s skin, or the money paid by a servant to save himself from a whipping. Du Cange.

HUE AND CRY. In old English law. A loud outcry with which felons (such as robbers, burglars, and murderers) were anciently pursued, and which all who heard it were bound to take up, and join in the pursuit, until the malefactor was taken. Bract. fols. 115b, 124; 4 Bl. Comm. 293. A written proclamation issued on the escape of a felon from prison, requiring all officers and people to assist in retaking him. 3 How. State Tr. 386.

HUEBRAS. In Spanish law. A measure of land equal to as much as a yoke of oxen can plow in one day. 2 White, Recop. (38), 49; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 443, 9 L.Ed. 1137.

HUISSERIUM. A ship used to transport horses. Also termed “uffer.”

HUISSIERS. In French law. Marshals; ushers; process-servers; sheriff’s officers. Ministerial officers attached to the courts, to effect legal service of process required by law in actions, to issue executions, etc., and to maintain order during the sitting of the courts.

HULKA. In old records. A hulk or small vessel. Cowell.

HULKS. A place of punishment for convicts in England, abandoned with the reform in the punishment of convicts which began in England about 1840.

HULL. In a statute, 33 U.S.C.A. § 319, requiring ships of a certain size to carry lights, etc., it includes the forecastle deck. The Europe, 190 Fed. 475, 111 C.C.A. 307.

HULLUS. In old records. A hulk or small vessel. Cowell.

HUMAGIUM. A moist place. Mon. Angl.

HUMANITARIAN DOCTRINE. Another name for the doctrine of the last clear chance. See Last.

HUNDRED. Under the Saxon organization of England, each county or shire comprised an indefinite number of hundreds, each hundred containing ten tithings, or groups of ten families of freeholders or frankpledges. The hundred was governed by a high constable, and had its own court; but its most remarkable feature was the corporate responsibility of the whole for the crimes or defaults of the individual members. The introduction of this plan of organization into England is commonly ascribed to Alfred, but the idea, as well of the collective liability as of the division, was probably known to the ancient German peoples, as we find the same thing established in the Frankish kingdom under Clothaire, and in Denmark. See 1 Bl. Comm. 115; 4 Bl. Comm. 411.

HUNDRED COURT. In English law. A larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred, instead of a manor. The free suitors are the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It is not a court of record, and resembles a court-baron in all respects except that in point of territory it is of greater jurisdiction. These courts have long since fallen into desuetude. 3 Bl. Comm. 34, 35; 3 Steph. Comm. 394, 395.

HUNDRED GEMOTE. Among the Saxons, a meeting or court of the freeholders of a hundred, which assembled, originally, twelve times a year, and possessed civil and criminal jurisdiction and ecclesiastical powers. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 7.

HUNDRED LAGH. The law of the hundred, or hundred court; liability to attend the hundred court. Spelman.

HUNDRED PENNY. In old English law. A tax collected from the hundred, by the sheriff or lord of the hundred.

HUNDRED ROLLS. Rolls embodying the result of investigations made by the commissioners in 1274 as to usurpations of the royal rights. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 48.

HUNDRED SECTA. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

HUNDRED SETENA. In Saxon law. The dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred. Cowell; Blount. Spelman suggests the reading of sceatena from Sax. "sceat," a tax.

HUNDRED—FECTA. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court. Wharton.

HUNDREDARIUS. In old English law. A hundredary or hundredor. A name given to the chief officer of a hundred, as well as to the freeholders who composed it. Spel. voc. "Hundredus."

HUNDREDARY. The chief or presiding officer of a hundred.

HUNDREDES EARLPOR, or HUNDREDES MAN. The presiding officer in the hundred court. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HUNDREDORS. In English law. The inhabitants or freeholders of a hundred, ancietly the suitors or judges of the hundred court. Persons impaneled or fit to be impaneled upon juries, dwelling within the hundred where the cause of action arose. Comp. Jur. 217. It was formerly necessary to have some of these upon every panel of jurors. 3 Bl. Comm. 359, 360; 4 Steph. Comm. 370. The term "hundredor" was also used to signify the officer who had the jurisdiction of a hundred, and held the hundred court, and sometimes the bailiff of a hundred. Termes de la Ley; Cow. 21.

HUNDREDWEIGHT. A denomination of weight containing, according to the English system, 112 pounds; but in this country, generally, it consists of 100 pounds avoidupois.

HUNG JURY. A jury so irreconcilably divided in opinion that they cannot agree upon any verdict.

HUNGER. The desire to eat. Hunger is no excuse for larceny; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 54; 4 Bla. Comm. 31. As to death from hunger, see Death.

HURDEREFERST. A domestic; one of a family.

HURDLE. In English criminal law. A kind of sledge, on which convicted felons were drawn to the place of execution. See Draw, v.

HURRICANE. A storm of great violence or intensity, of which the particular characteristic is the high velocity of the wind. There is naturally no exact measure to distinguish between an ordinary storm and a hurricane, but the wind should reach a velocity of at least 50 or 60 miles an hour to be called by the latter name, or, as expressed in some of the cases, it should be sufficient to "throw down buildings." A hurricane is properly a circular storm in the nature of a cyclone. Pelican Ins. Co. v. Troy Co-op. Ass'n, 13 S.W. 980, 77 Tex. 225; Queen Ins. Co. v. Hudnut Co., 8 Ind.App. 22, 35 N.E. 397; George A. Hoagland and Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 131 Neb. 105, 267 N.W. 239, 241.

HURST, HIRST, HYRST, or HIRST. A wood or grove of trees. Co. Litt. 4b.

HURT. In such phrases as "to the hurt or annoyance of another," or "hurt, molested, or restrained in his person or estate," this word is not restricted to physical injuries, but includes also mental pain, as well as discomfort or annoyance. Thurston v. Whitney, 2 Cush., Mass., 110.

HURTARDUS, or HURTUS. A ram or wether.

HUSBAND. A married man; one who has a lawful wife living. The correlative of "wife." People v. Snyder, 353 Ill. 184, 187 N.E. 158, 160, 88 A.L.R. 1012.

Etymologically, the word signified the "house bond," the man who, according to Saxon ideas and institutions, held around him the family, for whom he was in law responsible.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. One of the great domestic relationships; being that of a man and woman lawfully joined in marriage, by which, at common law, the legal existence of a wife is incorporated with that of her husband.
• HUSBAND LAND. In old Scotch law. A quantity of land containing commonly six acres. Skene.

HUSBAND OF A SHIP. See, Ship's Husband.

HUSBANDMAN. A farmer; a cultivator or tiller of the ground. The word "farmer" is colloquially used as synonymous with "husbandman," but originally meant a tenant who cultivates leased ground.

HUSBANDRIA. In old English law. Husbandry.

HUSBANDRY. Agriculture; cultivation of the soil for food; farming, in the sense of operating land to raise provisions. Cowell.

HUSBAND'S LAND. In old French law. A quantity of land in which the husband has a right to cultivate without the consent of his wife.
or; whereas in the pignus the mortgagee or creditor was in the possession. Such an hypotheca might be either express or implied; express, where the parties upon the occasion of a loan entered into express agreement to that effect; or implied, as, e.g., in the case of the stock and utensils of a farmer, which were subject to the landlord's right as a creditor for rent; whence the Scotch law of hypothec.

The word has suggested the term "hypothecate," as used in the mercantile and maritime law of England. Thus, under the factor's act, goods are frequently said to be "hypothecated," and a captain is said to have a right to hypothecate his vessel for necessary repairs. Brown. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, §§ 334-359.

HYPOTHECARIA ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. An hypothecary action; an action for the enforcement of an hypotheca, or right of mortgage; or to obtain the surrender of the thing mortgaged. Inst. 4, 6, 7; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 356. Adopted in the Civil Code of Louisiana, under the name of "l'action hypothkarie," (translated, "action of mortgage.") Civ. Code La. arts. 1433-1443; Code Prac. La. art. 61.

HYPOTHECARII CREDITORES. Lat. In the civil law. Hypothecary creditors; those who loaned money on the security of an hypotheca, (q.v.) Calvin.

HYPOTHECARY ACTION. The name of an action allowed under the civil law for the enforcement of the claims of a creditor by the contract of hypotheca. Lovell v. Cragin, 136 U.S. 130, 10 Sup.Ct. 1024, 34 L.Ed. 372.

An hypothecary action is a real action, which the creditor brings against the property which has been hypothecated to him by his debtor, in order to have it seized and sold for the payment of his debt. Code Prac. La. art. 61. In the hypothecary action proper, there is no pursuit of the person; the thing mortgaged is the debtor, and the action is directed against it. In this sense, the action is real. Wis- dom v. Parker, 31 La. Ann. 52.

HYPOTHECATE. To pledge a thing without delivering the possession of it to the pledgee. "The master, when abroad, and in the absence of the owner, may hypothecate the ship, freight, and cargo, to raise money requisite for the completion of the voyage." 3 Kent, Comm. 171. Ogden v. Lathrop, 31 N.Y. Super.Ct. 651.

HYPOTHECATION. The term borrowed from the civil law. In so far as it is naturalized in English and American law, it means a contract of mortgage or pledge in which the subject-matter is not delivered into the possession of the pledgee or pawnee; or, conversely, a conventional right existing in one person over specific property of another, which consists in the power to cause a sale of the same, though it be not in his possession, in order that a specific claim of the creditor may be satisfied out of the proceeds. Whitney v. Peay, 24 Ark. 27.

The term is frequently used in our textbooks and reports, particularly upon the law of bottomry and maritime liens; thus a vessel is said to be hypothecated for the demand of one who has advanced money for supplies.

In the common law, there are but few, if any, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the civil law; that is, a pledge without possession by the pledgee. The nearest approaches, perhaps, are cases of bottomry bonds and claims of materialmen, and of seamen for wages; but these are liens and privileges, rather than hypothecations: Story, Bailm. § 288.

HYPOTHECATION BOND. A bond given in the contract of bottomry or respondentia.

HYPOTHEQUE. In French law. Hypothecation; a mortgage on real property; the right vested in a creditor by the assignment to him of real estate as security for the payment of his debt, whether or not it be accompanied by possession. See Civ. Code La. art. 3397.

It corresponds to the mortgage of real property in English law, and is a real charge, following the property into whosoever hands it comes. It may be Wale, as in the case of the charge which the state has over the lands of its accountants, or which a married woman has over those of her husband; judicicare, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of justice; and conventionelle, when it is the result of an agreement of the parties. Brown.

HYPOTHESIS. A supposition, assumption, or theory; a theory set up by the prosecution, on a criminal trial, or by the defense, as an explanation of the facts in evidence, and a ground for inferring guilt or innocence, as the case may be, or as indicating a probable or possible motive for the crime.

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION. A combination of assumed or proved facts and circumstances, stated in such form as to constitute a coherent and specific situation or state of facts, upon which the opinion of an expert is asked, by way of evidence on a trial. Howard v. People, 185 Ill. 552, 57 N.E. 441; State v. Smoak, 213 N.C. 79, 195 S.E. 72, 81.

It should be so framed as to recite all the facts in evidence which are relevant to the formation of an opinion and then, assuming the facts recited to be true, the witness should be asked whether he is able to form an opinion therefrom and if so to state his opinion. McMurrey v. State, 145 Tex.Cr.R. 439, 168 S.W.2d 858, 860.

HYPOTHETICAL YEARLY TENANCY. The basis, in England, of rating lands and hereditaments to the poor-rate, and to other rates and taxes that are expressed to be leviable or assessable in like manner as the poor-rate.

HYRNES. In old English law. A parish.

HYSTERIA. A paroxysmal disease or disorder of the nervous system, more common in females than males, not originating in any anatomical lesion, due to psychic rather than physical causes, and attended, in the acute or convulsive form, by extraordinary manifestations of secondary effects of extreme nervousness.

Hysteria is a state in which ideas control the body and produce paroxysms in its functions. Mcebius. A special psychic state, characterized by symptoms which can also be produced or reproduced by suggestion, and which can be treated by psychotherapy or persuasion, hysterical and hypnotic states being practically equivalent to each other. Babinski. A purely psychic or mental disorder due to hereditary predisposition. Charcot. A state resulting from a psychic lesion or nervous shock, leading to repression or aberration of the sexual instinct. Freud. Hysteria is much more common in women than in men, and was formerly thought to be due to some disorder of the uterus or sexual system; but it is now known that it may occur in men, in children, and in very aged persons of either sex.

In the convulsive form of hysteria, commonly called "hysteric" or "a fit of hysteric," there is nervecustom characterized by loss or abandonment of self-control in the expression of the emotions, particularly grief, by paroxysms of tears or laughter or both together, sensations of constriction of a ball rising in the throat (gloves hystericus), convulsive movements in the chest, pelvis, and abdomen, sometimes leading to a fall with apparent unconsciousness, followed by a relapse into semi-unconsciousness or catalepsy. In the non-convulsive forms, all kinds of organic paralyses may be simulated, as well as muscular contractions and spasms, tremor, loss of sensation (anesthesia) or exaggerated sensation (hyperesthesia), disturbances of respiration, disordered appetite, accelerated pulse, hemorrhages in the skin (stigmata), pain, swelling, or even dislocation of the joints, and great amenability to suggestion.

HYSTERO–EPILEPSY. See Epilepsy.

HYSTEROPOTMOL Those who, having been thought dead, had, after a long absence in foreign countries, returned safely home; or those who, having been thought dead in battle, had afterwards unexpectedly escaped from their enemies and returned home. These, among the Romans, were not permitted to enter their own houses at the door, but were received at a passage opened in the roof. Enc. Lond.

HYSTEROTOMY. The Caesarean operation. See Caesarean Section.

HYTHE, In English law. A port, wharf, or small haven to embark or land merchandise at. Cowell; Blount.
I. The initial letter of the word "Instituta," used by some civilians in citing the Institutes of Justinian. Tayl. Civil Law, 24.

I. C. C. Interstate Commerce Commission; Indian Claims Commission.

I.—CTUS. An abbreviation for "jurisconsultus," one learned in the law; a jurisconsult.

I. E. An abbreviation for "id est," that is; that is to say.

I 0 U. A memorandum of debt, consisting of these letters, ("I owe you," a sum of money, and the debtor's signature, is termed an "I 0 U."

I. R. S. Internal Revenue Service.

IBERNAGIUM. In old English law. The season for sowing winter corn. Also spelled "hibernaglum" and "hybernagium" (q. v.).

IBI SEMPER DEBET FIERI TRIATIO UBI JURATORES MELIOREM POSSUNT HABERE NOTITIAM. 7 Coke, lb. A trial should always be had where the jurors can be the best informed.

IBIDEM. Lat. In the same place; in the same book; on the same page, etc. Abbreviated to "ibid." or "ib."

ICENI. The ancient name for the people of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Huntingdonshire, in England.

ICONA. An image, figure, or representation of a thing. Du Cange.

ICTUS. In old English law. A stroke or blow from a club or stone; a bruise, contusion, or swelling produced by a blow from a club or stone, as distinguished from "plaga," (a wound.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 3.

ICTUS ORBIS. In medical jurisprudence. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin. When the skin is cut, the injury is called a "wound." Bract. lib. 2, tr. 2, cc. 5, 24.

ID CERTUM EST QUOD CERTUM REDDI P OTEST. That is certain which can be made certain. 2 B1.Comm. 143; 1 B1.Comm. 78; 4 Kent, Comm. 462; Broom, Max. 624.

ID CERTUM EST QUOD CERTUM REDDI P OTEST, SED ID MAGIS CERTUM EST QUOD DE SEMETIPSO EST CERTUM. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself. 9 Coke, 47a.

ID EST. Lat. That is. Commonly abbreviated "i. e."

ID PERFECTUM EST QUOD EX OMNIBUS SUIS PARTIBUS CONSTAT. That is perfect which consists of all its parts. 9 Coke 9.

ID POSSUMUS QUOD DE JURE POSSUMUS. Lane, 116. We may do only that which by law we are allowed to do.

ID QUOD EST MAGIS REMOTUM, NON TRAHIT AD SE QUOD EST MAGIS JUNCTUM, SED E CONTRARIO IN OMNI CASU. That which is more remote does not draw to itself that which is nearer, but the contrary in every case. Co. Litt. 164.

ID QUOD NOSTRUM EST SINE FACTO NOSTRO AD ALIUM TRANSFERRI NON POTEST. That which is ours cannot be transferred to another without our act. Dig. 50, 17, 11.

ID SOLUM NOSTRUM QUOD DEBITIS DEDUCTIS NOSTRUM EST. That only is ours which remains to us after deduction of debts. Tray. Lat. Max. 227.

IDEM. Lat. The same. According to Lord Coke, "idem" has two significations, sc., idem syllabus seu verbis, (the same in syllabus or words,) and idem re et sense, (the same in substance and in sense.) 10 Coke, 124a.

In Old Practice. The said, or aforesaid; said, aforesaid. Distinguished from "prcedictus" in old entries, though having the same general significance. Townsh. P1.15, 16.

IDEM AGENS ET PATIENS ESSE NON POTEST. Jenk. Cent. 40. The same person cannot be both agent and patient; e., the doer and person to whom the thing is done.

IDEM EST FACERE, ET NON PROHIBERE CUM POSSIB; ET QUI NON PROHIBIT, CUM PROHIBERE POSSIT, IN CULPA EST, (AUT JUBET.) 3 Inst. 158. To commit, and not to prohibit when in your power, is the same thing; and he who does not prohibit when he can prohibit is in fault, or does the same as ordering it to be done.

IDEM EST NIHI DICERE, ET INSUFFICIEN DICERE. It is the same thing to say nothing, and to say a thing insufficiently. To say a thing in an insufficient manner is the same as not to say it at all. Applied to the plea of a prisoner. 2 Inst. 178.

IDEM EST NON ESSE, ET NON APPARE. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. Jenk. Cent. 207. Not to appear is the same thing as not to be. Broom, Max. 165.

IDEM EST NON PROBARI ET NON ESSE; NON DEFICIT JUS, SED PROBATI. What is not proved and what does not exist are the same; it is not a defect of the law, but of proof.

IDEM EST SCIRE AUT SCIRE DEBERE AUT POTUISSE. To be bound to know or to be able to know is the same as to know.

IDEM PER IDEM. The same for the same. An illustration of a kind that really adds no additional element to the consideration of the question.
IDEM SEMPER ANTECEDENTI PROXIMO RE-FERTUR. Co. Litt. 685. "The same" is always referred to its next antecedent.

IDEM SONANS. Sounding the same or alike; having the same sound. A term applied to names which are substantially the same, though slightly varied in the spelling, as "Lawrence" and "Lawn ance," and the like. 1 Cromp. & M. 806; 3 Chit. Gen. Pr. 171; Golson v. State, 15 Ala.App. 420, 73 So. 753.

Two names are said to be 'idem sonantes' if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced, or if common and long-continued usage has by corruption or abbreviation made them identical in pronunciation. State v. Griffle, 119 Mo. 188, 23 S.W. 878. The rule of "idem sonantes" is that absolute accuracy in spelling names is not required in a legal document or proceedings either civil or criminal; that if the name, as spelled in the document, though different from the correct spelling thereof, conveys to the ear, when pronounced according to the commonly accepted methods, a sound practically identical with the correct name as commonly pronounced, the name thus given is a sufficient identification of the individual referred to, and no advantage can be taken of the clerical error. State v. Hattaway, 180 La. 12, 156 So. 159. But the doctrine of "idem sonantes" has been much enlarged by modern decisions, to conform to the growing rule that a variance, to be material, must be such as has misled the opposite party to its prejudice.

IDENTICAL. Exactly the same for all practical purposes. Cam v. Moore, 74 Fla. 77, 76 So. 337, 340.

IDENTIFICATION. Proof of identity; the proving that a person, subject, or article before the court is the very same that he or it is alleged, charged, or reputed to be; as where a witness recognizes the prisoner at the bar as the same person whom he saw committing the crime; or where handwriting, stolen goods, counterfeit coin, etc., are recognized as the same which once passed under the observation of the person identifying them. Hall v. Cotton, 167 Ky. 464, 180 S.W. 779, 781, L.R.A.1916C, 1124.

IDENTITAS VERA COLLIGITUR EX MULTITU-DINE SIGNORUM. True identity is collected from a multitude of signs. Bac. Max.

IDENTITATE NOMINIS. In English law. An ancient writ (now obsolete) which lay for one taken and arrested in any personal action, and committed to prison, by mistake for another man of the same name. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 267.

IDENTITY. In the Law of Evidence. Sameness; the fact that a subject, person, or thing before a court is the same as it is represented, claimed, or charged to be. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 382, 453, 631, 644.

In Patent Law. Such sameness between two designs, inventions, combinations, etc., as will constitute the one an infringement of the patent granted for the other.

To constitute "identity of invention," and therefore infringement, not only must the result obtained be the same, but, in case the means used for its attainment is a combination of known elements, the elements combined in both cases must be the same, and combined in the same way, so that each element shall perform the same function; provided that the differences alleged are not merely colorable according to the rule forbidding the use of known equivalents. Electric Railroad Signal Co. v. Hall Railroad Signal Co., 114 U.S. 87, 5 Sup.Ct. 1069, 29 L. Ed. 96; Latta v. Shawk, 14 Fed.Cas. 1188. "Identity of design" means sameness of appearance, or, in other words, sameness of effect upon the eye,—not the eye of an expert, but of an ordinary intelligent observer. Smith v. Whitman Saddle Co., 148 U.S. 674, 13 Sup.Ct. 768, 37 L.Ed. 606.

IDEO. Lat. Therefore. Calvin.

IDEO CONSIDERATUM EST. Lat. Therefore it is considered. These were the words used at the beginning of the entry of judgment in an action, when the forms were in Latin. They are also used as a name for that portion of the record.

IDEO. An old form for idiot (q. v.).

IDES. A division of time among the Romans. In March, May, July, and October, the Ides were on the 15th of the month; in the remaining months, on the 13th. This method of reckoning is still retained in the chancery of Rome, and in the calendar of the breviary. Wharton.

Under the word "Ides" in Bouvier's Law Diet., Rawle's 3d Rev., p. 1486, will be found a complete table of the calends, nones, and ides.

IDIOCHIRA. Graeco-Lat. In the civil law. An instrument privately executed, as distinguished from such as were executed before a public officer. Cod. 8, 18, 11; Calvin.

IDIODY, IDIOPATHIC INSANITY. See Insanity.

IDIOT. A person who has been without understanding from his nativity, and whom the law, therefore, presumes never likely to attain any. Shelf. Lun. 2. See Insanity. State v. Haner, 186 Iowa, 1259, 173 N.W. 225; Jones v. Commonwealth, 154 Ky. 752, 159 S.W. 568, 569.

IDIOTA. In the Civil Law. An unlearned, illiterate, or simple person. Calvin. A private man; one not in office.

In Common Law. An idiot or fool,

IDIOTA INQUIRENDO, WRIT DE. This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to inquire whether a man be an idiot or not. The inquisition is to be made by a jury of twelve men. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 232. And, if the man were found an idiot, the profits of his lands and the custody of his person might be granted by the king to any subject who had interest enough to obtain them. 1 Bl.Comm. 303.

IDONEUM SE FACERE; IDONEARE SE. To purge one's self by oath of a crime of which one is accused.

IDONEUS. Lat. In the civil and common law. Sufficient; competent; fit or proper; responsible; unimpeachable. Idoneus homo, a responsible or solvent person; a good and lawful man. Sufficient; adequate; satisfactory. Idonea cautio, sufficient security.

IGNORAMUS. Lat. "We are ignorant;" "We ignore it." Formerly the grand jury used to write this word on bills of indictment when, after having heard the evidence, they thought the accusation against the prisoner was groundless, intimating that, though the facts might possibly be true, the truth did not appear to them; but now they usually write in English the words "Not a true bill," or "Not found," if that is their verdict; but they are still said to ignore the bill. Brown.

IGNORANCE. The want or absence of knowledge.

Ignorance of law is want of knowledge or acquaintance with the laws of the land so far as they apply to the act, relation, duty, or matter under consideration. Ignorance of fact is want of knowledge of some fact or facts constituting or relating to the subject-matter in hand. Marshall v. Coleman, 187 Ill. 556, 58 N.E. 628.

Ignorance is not a state of the mind in the sense in which sanity and insanity are. When the mind is ignorant of a fact, its condition still remains sound; the power of thinking, of judging, of willing, is just as complete before communication of the fact as after; the essence or texture, so to speak, of the mind, is not, as in the case of insanity, affected or impaired. Ignorance of a particular fact consists in this: that the mind, although sound and capable of healthy action, has never acted upon the fact in question, because the subject has never been brought to the notice of the perceptive faculties. Meeker v. Boylan, 28 N.J.Law, 274.

Synonyms

"Ignorance" and "error" or "mistake" are not convertible terms. The former is a lack of information or absence of knowledge; the latter, a misapprehension or confusion of information, or a mistaken supposition of the possession of knowledge. Error as to a fact may imply ignorance of the truth; but ignorance does not necessarily imply error. Cuibreath v. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 70, 50 Am.Dec. 375.

General

Culpable ignorance is that which results from a failure to exercise ordinary care to acquire knowledge, and knowledge which could be acquired by the exercise of ordinary care is by law imputed to the person and he is held to have constructive knowledge. Luck v. Buffalo Lakes, Tex. Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 672, 676.

Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties, that it induces them to act in the business. Poth. Vente, nn. 3, 4; 2 Kent, Comm. 367.

Nonessential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract.

Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be overcome by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power; as the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated.

Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated. Doct. & Stud. 1, 46; Plowd. 343.

IGNORANTIA. Lat. Ignorance; want of knowledge. Distinguished from mistake, (error,) or wrong conception. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 178; Dig. 22, 6. Divided by Lord Coke into ignorantia facti (ignorance of fact) and ignorantia juris (ignorance of law). And the former, he adds, is twofold—lectionis et linquce (ignorance of reading and ignorance of language). 2 Coke, 3b.

IGNORANTIA EORUM QUIE QUIS SCIRE TENE-TUR NON EXCUSAT. Ignorance of those things which one is bound to know excuses not. Hale, P. C. 42; Broom, Max. 267.

IGNORANTIA FACTI EXCUSAT. Ignorance of fact excuses or is a ground of relief. 2 Coke, 3b. Acts done and contracts made under mistake or ignorance of a material fact are voidable and relievable in law and equity. 2 Kent, Comm. 491, and notes.

IGNORANTIA FACTI EXCUSAT, IGNORANTIA JURIS NON EXCUSAT. Ignorance of the fact excuses; ignorance of the law excuses not. Every man must be taken to be cognizant of the law; otherwise there is no saying to what extent the excuse of ignorance may not be carried. 1 Coke, 177; Broom, Max. 253.

IGNORANTIA JURIS QUOD QUISQUE TENE-TUR SCIARE, NEMINEIYI EXCUSAT. Ignorance of the [or a] law, which every one is bound to know, excuses no man. A mistake in point of law is, in criminal cases, no sort of defense. 4 Bl. Comm. 27; 4 Steph.Comm. 81; Broom, Max. 253; 7 Car. & P. 456. And, in civil cases, ignorance of the law, with a full knowledge of the facts, furnishes no ground, either in law or equity, to rescind agreements, or reclaim money paid, or set aside solemn acts of the parties. 2 Kent, Comm. 491, and note.
IGNORANTIA

IGNORANTIA LEGIS NEMINEM EXCUSAT. Ignorance of law excuses no one. 4 Bouv. Inst. no. 3828; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 111; 7 Watts, 374.

IGNORANTIA PRIESUMITUR UBI SCIENTIA NON PROBATUR. Ignorance is presumed where knowledge is not proved. Bouvier.

IGNORARE LEGIS EST LATA CULPA. To be ignorant of the law is gross neglect. Bouvier.

IGNORATIO ELENCHI. Lat. A term of logic, sometimes applied to pleadings and to arguments on appeal, which signifies a mistake of the question, that is, the mistake of one who, failing to discern the real question which he is to meet and answer, addresses his allegations or arguments to a collateral matter or something beside the point. Case upon the Statute for Distribution, Wythe Va. 309.

IGNORATIS TERMINIS ARTIS, IGNORATUR ET ARS. Where the terms of an art are unknown, the art itself is unknown also. Co. Litt. 2a.

IGNORE. To be ignorant of, or unacquainted with. To disregard willfully; to refuse to recognize; to decline to take notice of. Cleburne v. Arlington County, 169 Va. 1, 192 S.E. 758, 761.

To reject as groundless, false or unsupported by evidence; as when a grand jury ignores a bill of indictment.

IGNOSCITUR EI QUI SANGUINEM SUUM REDEMPTEM VOLUIT. The law holds him excused from obligation who chose to redeem his blood (or life) upon any terms. Whatever a man may do under the fear of losing his life or limbs will not be held binding upon him in law. 1 Bl.Comm. 131.

IKBAL. Acceptance (of a bond, etc.). Wilson’s Gloss. Ind.

IKENILD STREET. One of the four great Roman roads in Britain; supposed to be so called from the Iceni.

IKRAH. Compulsion; especially constraint exercised by one person over another to do an illegal act, or to act contrary to his inclination. Wilson’s Gloss. Ind.

IKRAR. Agreement, assent, or ratification. Wilson’s Gloss. Ind.

IKRAR NAMA. A deed of assent and acknowledgment. Wilson’s Gloss. Ind.

ILL. In old pleading. Bad; defective in law; null; naught; the opposite of good or valid.

ILL FAME. Evil repute; notorious bad character. Houses of prostitution, gaming houses, and other such disorderly places are called "houses of ill fame," and a person who frequents them is a person of ill fame. See Boles v. State, 46 Ala. 206.

ILLATA ET INVECTA. Lat. Things brought into the house for use by the tenant were so called, and were liable to the jus hypothecce of Roman law, just as they are to the landlord’s right of distress at common law.

ILLEGAL. Not authorized by law; illicit; unlawful; contrary to law; Prosecution of Downing, 164 Okl. 181, 23 P.2d 173.

Sometimes this term means merely that which lacks authority of or support from law; but more frequently it imports a violation. Etymologically, the word seems to convey the negative meaning only. But in ordinary use it has a severer, stronger signification; the idea of censure or condemnation for breaking law is usually presented. But the law implied in illegal is not necessarily an express statute. Things are called "illegal" for a violation of common-law principles. And the term does not imply that the act spoken of is immoral or wicked; it implies only a breach of the law. Tiedt v. Carstensen, 61 Iowa, 334, 16 N.W. 214.

ILLEGAL CONDITIONS. All those that are impossible, or contrary to law, immoral, or repugnant to the nature of the transaction.

ILLEGAL INTEREST. Usury; interest at a higher rate than the law allows. Parsons v. Babcock, 40 Neb. 119, 58 N.W. 726.

ILLEGAL TRADE. Such traffic or commerce as is carried on in violation of the municipal law, or contrary to the law of nations. See Illicit.

ILLEGALITY. That which is contrary to the principles of law, as contradistinguished from mere rules of procedure. It denotes a complete defect in the proceedings. Ex parte Davis, 118 Or. 693, 247 P. 809, 811.

ILLEGITIMACY. The condition before the law, or the social status, of a bastard; the state or condition of one whose parents were not intermarried at the time of his birth.

ILLEGITIMATE. That which is contrary to raw; it is usually applied to bastards, or children born out of lawful wedlock.

The Louisiana Code divided illegitimate children into two classes: (1) Those born from two persons who, at the moment when such children were conceived, could have lawfully intermarried; and (2) those who are born from persons to whose marriage there existed at the time some legal impediment. Both classes, however, could be acknowledged and take by devise. Compton v. Prescott, 12 Rob., La., 56.

ILLEVIABLE. Not leivable; that cannot or ought not to be levied. Cowell.

ILLICENCIATUS. In old English law. Without license. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 5, § 12.

ILLICIT. Not permitted or allowed; prohibited; unlawful; as an illicit trade; illicit intercourse. State v. Miller, 60 Vt. 90, 12 A. 526.

ILLICIT. Not permitted or allowed; prohibited; unlawful; as an illicit trade; illicit intercourse. State v. Miller, 60 Vt. 90, 12 A. 526.

ILLEGITIMATE COHABITATION. The living together as man and wife of two persons who are not lawfully married, with the implication that they habitually practice fornication. Thomas v. United States, D.C.Mass., 14 F.2d 228, 229.

ILLEGAL TRADE. Policies of marine insurance usually contain a covenant of warranty against "illicit trade," meaning thereby trade which is forbidden, or declared unlawful, by the laws of the country where the cargo is to be delivered. I Pars. Mar. Ins. 614.

"it is not the same with 'contraband trade,' although the words are sometimes used as synonymous. Illicit or prohibited trade is one which cannot be carried on without a distinct violation of some positive law of the country where the transaction is to take place."

ILLEGITIMATE. Lat. Unlawfully. This word has a technical meaning, and is requisite in an indictment where the act charged is unlawful; as in the case of a riot. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 96.

ILLEGITIMATE COLLEGIUM. Lat. An illegal corporation.

ILLITERATE. Unlettered; ignorant; unlearned. Generally used of one who cannot read and write. In re Succession of Carroll, 28 La.Ann. 388.

ILLNESS. In insurance law. A disease or ailment of such a character as to affect the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously, and not a mere temporary indisposition which does not tend to undermine or weaken the constitution of the insured. Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Sellers, 54 Ind.App. 326, 102 N.E. 894, 897. Zogg v. Bankers' Life Co. of Des Moines, Iowa, C.C.A.W.Va., 62 F.2d 575, 578.

ILLOCABLE. Incapable of being placed out or hired.

ILLUD. Lat. That.

ILLUD, QUOD ALIAS LICITUM NON EST, NECESSITAS FACIT LICITUM; ET NECESSITAS INDUCIT PRIVILEGIUM QUOAD JURIS PRIVATA. Bac. Max. That which is otherwise not permitted, necessity permits; and necessity makes a privilege as to private rights.

ILLUD, QUOD ALTERI UNITUR, EXTINGUITUR, NEQUE AMPLIUS PER SE VACARE LICET. Godol. Ecc. Law, 169. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

ILLUSION. In medical jurisprudence. An image or impression in the mind, excited by some external object addressing itself to one or more of the senses, but which, instead of corresponding with the reality, is perverted, distorted, or wholly mistaken, the error being attributable to the imagination of the observer, not to any defect in the organs of sense. See Hallucination, and see "Delusion," under Insanity.

ILLUSORY. Deceiving by false appearances; nominal, as distinguished from substantial; fallacious; illusive. Bolles v. Toledo Trust Co., 144 Ohio St. 195, 58 N.E.2d 381, 390.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT. Formerly the appointment of a merely nominal share of the property to one of the objects of a power, in order to escape the rule that an exclusive appointment could not be made unless it was authorized by the instrument creating the power, was considered illicit and void in equity. But this rule has been abolished in England. (1 Wm. IV. c. 46; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 37.) Sweet. Brown v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 126 N.J.Eq. 406, 9 A.2d 322.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT ACT. The statute 1 Wm. IV. c. 46. This statute enacts that no appointment made after its passing, (July 16, 1830,) in exercise of a power to appoint property, real or personal, among several objects, shall be invalid, or impeached in equity, on the ground that an unsubstantial, illicitus, or nominal share only was thereby appointed, or left unappointed, to devolve upon any one or more of the objects of such power; but that the appointment shall be valid in equity, as at law. See, too, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 37. Wharton.

ILLUSTRIUS. The prefix to the title of a prince of the blood in England.

IMAGINE. In English law. In cases of treason the law makes it a crime to imagine the death of the king. But, in order to complete the crime, this act of the mind must be demonstrated by some overt act. The terms "imagining" and "compassing" are in this connection synonymous. 4 Bl. Comm. 78.

IMAN, IMAM, or IMAUM. A Mohammedan prince having supreme spiritual as well as temporal power; a regular priest of the mosque.

IMBARGO. An old form of "embargo." (q. v.) St. 18 Car. II. c. 5.

IMBASING OF MONEY. The act of mixing the specie with an alloy below the standard of sterling, 1 Hale, P. C. 102.

IMBECILITY. See Insanity.

IMBEZZLE. An occasional or obsolete form of "embezzle" (q. v.).

IMBLADARE. In old English law. To plant or sow grain. Bract. fol. 176b.

IMBRACERY. See Embracery.

IMBROCUS. A brook, gutter, or water-passage. Cowell.
IMITATION. The making of one thing in the similitude or likeness of another; as, counterfeit coin is said to be made "in imitation" of the genuine. Wagner v. Daly, 67 Hun. 477, 22 N.Y.S. 493.

An imitation of a trade-mark is that which so far resembles the genuine trade-mark as to be likely to induce the belief that it is genuine, whether by the use of words or letters similar in appearance or in sound, or by any sign, device, or other means.

The test of "colorable imitation" is, not whether a difference may be recognized between the names of two competing articles when placed side by side, but whether the difference will be recognized by the purchaser with no opportunity for comparison. The Best Foods v. Hemphill Packing Co., D.C.Del., 5 F.2d 355, 357.

IMITATION. Not material, essential, or necessary; not important or pertinent; not decisive; of no substantial consequence; without weight; of no significance. State v. Cordaro, 211 Iowa 224, 233 N.W. 51, 53.

IMITATION AVERMENT. An averment alleging with needless particularity or unnecessary circumstances what is material and necessary, and which might properly have been stated more generally, and without such circumstances and particulars; or, in other words, a statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with and as descriptive of what is material. Dunlap v. Kelly, 105 Mo.App. 1, 78 S.W. 664; Bulova v. E. L. Barnett, Inc., 111 Misc. 150, 181 N.Y.S. 247, 250.

IMITATION FACTS. Those which are not essential to the right of action or defense.

IMITATION ISSUE. In pleading. An issue taken on an immaterial point; that is, a point not proper to decide the action. Stephe. Pl. 99, 130; 2 Tidd, Pr. 921.

IMITATION VARIANCE. Discrepancy between the pleading and proof of a character so slight that the adverse party cannot say that he was misled thereby. E. B. Ryan Co. v. Russell, 52 Mont. 596, 161 P. 307, 308.

IMMEDIATE. Present; at once; without delay; not deferred by any interval of time. In this sense, the word, without any very precise significance, denotes that action is or must be taken either instantly or without any considerable loss of time. A reasonable time in view of particular facts and circumstances of case under consideration. Mullins v. Masonic Protective Ass’n, 181 Mo. App. 394, 168 S.W. 843, 844. George v. Aetna Casualty and Surety Co., 121 Neb. 647, 238 N.W. 36, 38. Next in line or relation; directly connected; not secondary or remote. Bunner v. Patti, 343 Mo. 274, 121 S.W.2d 153, 155. Not separated in respect to place; not separated by the intervention of any intermediate object, cause, relation, or right. Thus we speak of an action as prosecuted for the "immediate benefit" of A., of a devise as made to the "immediate issue" of B., etc.

IMMEDIATE CAUSE. The last of a series or chain of causes tending to a given result, and which, of itself, and without the intervention of any further cause, directly produces the result or event. Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co., 72 N.W. 735, 97 Wis. 279; Longabaugh v. Railroad Co., 9 Nev. 271. See, also, Proximate.

A cause may be immediate in this sense, and yet not "proximate;" and conversely, the proximate cause (that which directly and efficiently brings about the result) may not be immediate. The familiar illustration is that of a drunken man falling into the water and drowning. His intoxication is the proximate cause of his death, if it can be said that he would not have fallen into the water when sober; but the immediate cause of death is suffocation by drowning.

IMMEDIATE CONTROL (of motor vehicle upon approaching or traversing railroad crossing). Such constant control as would enable driver to instantly govern vehicle’s movements, including the power to stop within a distance in which such a vehicle, in good mechanical condition, driven by a reasonably skillful driver, and traveling at a "lawful rate of speed, could be stopped. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Burton, 125 S.E. 868, 33 Ga. App. 199.

IMMEDIATE DESCENT. See Descent.

The words, "immediately" and "forthwith" have the same meaning. They are stronger than the expression "within a reasonable time" and imply prompt, vigorous action without any delay. Alsam Holding Co. v. Consolidated Taxpayers’ Mut. Ins. Co., 4 N.Y.S.2d 498, 505, 167 Mac. 732.

IMMEMORIAL. Beyond human memory; time out of mind.

IMMEMORIAL POSSESSION. In Louisiana. Possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. Civ.Code La. art. 766.

IMMEUBLES. Fr. These are, in French law, the immovables of English law. Things are immu- bles from any one of three causes: (1) From their own nature, e. g., lands and houses; (2) from their destination, e. g., animals and instruments of agriculture when supplied by the landlord; or (3) by the object to which they are annexed, e. g., easements. Brown.

IMMIGRATION. The coming into a country of foreigners for purposes of permanent residence. The correlative term “emigration” denotes the act of such persons in leaving their former country.

IMMINENT DANGER. In relation to homicide in self-defense, this term means immediate danger, such as must be instantly met, such as cannot be guarded against by calling for the assistance of others or the protection of the law. State v. Smith, 43 Or. 109, 71 P. 973. Or, as otherwise defined, such an appearance of threatened and impending injury as would put a reasonable and prudent man to his instant defense. State v. Fontenot, 50 La.Ann. 537, 23 So. 634, 69 Am.St.Rep. 455.

IMMINENTLY DANGEROUS ARTICLE. One that is reasonably certain to place life or limb in peril. Employers’ Liability Assur. Corporation v. Columbus McKinnon Chain Co., D.C.N.Y., 13 F.2d 128.

IMMISCERE. Lat. In the civil law. To mix or mingle with; to meddle with; to join with. Calvin.

IMMITTERE. Lat. In the Civil Law. To put or let into, as a beam into a wall. Calvin.; Dig. 50, 17, 242, 1.

In old English law, to put cattle on a common. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 20, § 7.

IMMORALITY. That which is immorale. Contracts founded up on considerations contra bonos mores are void.

IMMORAL CONDUCT. Within rules authorizing disbarment of attorney is that conduct which is willful, flagrant, or shameless, and which shows a moral indifference to the opinions of the good and respectable members of the community. Warkentin v. Kleinwachter, 166 Okl. 218, 27 P.2d 160.

IMMORAL CONSIDERATION. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. Contracts based upon an immoral consideration are generally void.

IMMORAL CONTRACTS. Contracts founded up on considerations contra bonos mores are void.

IMMORALITY. That which is contra bonos mores. See Immoral.

IMMOVABLES. In the civil law. Property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself, or be removed. Breaux v. Ganucheau, 3 La.App. 481, 482; Scott v. Brennan, 3 La.App. 452, 453.

Immovable things are, in general, such as cannot either move themselves or be removed from one place to another. But this definition, strictly speaking, is applicable only, to such things as are immovable by their own nature, and not to such as are so only by the disposition of the law.

IMPAIR. To weaken, to make worse, to lessen in power, diminish, or relax, or otherwise affect in an injurious manner. Davey v. Ietna L. Ins. Co., C.C.N.J., 20 F. 482; State ex rel. Woman’s Ben. Ass’n v. Port of Palm Beach Dist., 121 Fla. 746, 164 So. 851, 856.

IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS. A law which impairs the obligation of a contract is one which renders the contract in itself less valuable or less enforceable, whether by changing its terms and stipulations, its legal qualities and conditions, or by regulating the remedy for its enforcement. City of Indianapolis v. Robinson, 186 Ind. 660, 117 N.E. 861.

To "impair the obligation of a contract" within Const. U.S. art. 1, § 10, is to weaken it, lessen its value, or make it worse in any respect or in any degree, and any law which changes the intention and legal effect of the parties, giving to one a greater and to the other a less interest or benefit, or which imposes conditions not included in the contract or dispenses with the performance of those included, impairs the obligation of the contract. O’Connor v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 97 Conn. 8, 115 A. 484, 486.

A statute "impairs the obligation of a contract" when by its terms it nullifies or materially changes existing contract obligations. Oil Fork Development Co. v. Huddleston, 202 Ky. 261, 259 S.W. 334, 335; McNee v. Wall, D.C.Fla., 4 F.Supp. 496, 498.

The word "impair" means, according to the standard writers in our language, simply "to diminish; to injure; to make worse," etc. It is remarkable that in framing the provision of the federal Constitution providing that no law should be passed, "impairing the obligation of any contract," the convention did not use the term "lessen" or "decrease" or "destroy," but one more comprehensive, which prohibited making worse in any respect a contract legitimate in its creation. The object, then, of its provision, may have been to establish an important principle, and that was the entire inviolability of contracts. Blair v. Williams, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 34, 35; Lapsley v. Brashear, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 47, 69.

See 2 Story, Const. §§ 1374-1399; 1 Kent, Comm. 413-422; Pom. Const. Law; Black, Const. Law (3d Ed.) p. 720 et seq.

IMPALARE. To impound. Du Cange.
IMPANEL

IMPANEL. In English practice. To impanel a jury signifies the entering by the sheriff upon a piece of parchment, termed a "panel," the names of the jurors who have been summoned to appear in court on a certain day to form a jury of the country to hear such matters as may be brought before them. Brown.

In American practice. Besides the meaning above given, "impanel" signifies the act of the clerk of the court in making up a list of the jurors who have been selected for the trial of a particular case up to the final formation. People v. Poole, 284 Ill. 39, 119 N.E. 916.

Impaneling has nothing to do with drawing, selecting, or swearing jurors, but means simply making the list of those who have been selected. Porter v. People, 7 How.Fr. (N.Y.) 441; State ex rel. Green v. Pearson, 153 Fla. 314, 14 So.2d 565, 567.

IMPARCARE. In old English law. To impound. Reg. Orig. 92b. To shut up, or confine in prison. Inducti sunt in carcerem et imparcati, they were carried to prison and shut up. Bract. fol. 124.

IMPARGAMENTUM. The right of impounding cattle.

IMPARL. To have license to settle a litigation amicably; to obtain delay for adjustment.

IMPARLANCE. In early practice,_imparlance meant time given to either of the parties to an action to answer the pleading of the other. It thus amounted to a continuance of the action to a further day. Literally the term signified leave given to the parties to _talk together_; _i.e._, with a view to settling their differences amicably. But in modern practice it denotes a time given to the defendant to plead.

A _general imparlance_ is the entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception; so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another. Colby v. Knapp, 13 N.H. 175; Mack v. Lewis, 67 Va. 383, 31 Atl. 888.

A _general special imparlance_ contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time, he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea.

A _special imparlance_ reserves to the defendant all exceptions to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court. 1 Tidd, Pr. 462, 463.

IMPARSONEE. L. Fr. In ecclesiastical law. One who is inducted and in possession of a benefice. Parson imparsonee (_persona impersonata_). Cowell; Dyer, 40.

IMPARTIAL. Favoring neither; disinterested; treating all alike; unbiased; equitable, fair, and just. Evans v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 107 Cal.App. 372, 290 P. 662, 666.

The provision of the Bill of Rights requiring that the accused shall have a fair trial by an impartial jury, means that the jury must be not partial, not favoring one party more than another, unprejudiced, distinterested, equitable, and just, and that the merits of the case shall not be prejudged. Duncan v. State, 79 Tex.Cr.R. 206, 184 S.W. 195, 196.

IMPARTIAL JURY. Within constitutional provision is one which is of impartial frame of mind at beginning of trial, is influenced only by legal and competent evidence produced during trial, and bases its verdict upon evidence connecting defendant with the commission of the crime charged. Const.U.S. Amend. 6. Durham v. State, 182 Tenn. 577, 188 S.W.2d 555, 558, 160 A.L.R. 746.

For "Fair and Impartial Jury," and "Fair and Impartial Trial," see those titles.

IMPARTIBLE FEUD. See Feudum Individuum.

IMPATRONIZATION. In ecclesiastical law. The act of putting into full possession of a benefice.

IMPEACH. To accuse; to charge a liability upon; to sue. To dispute, disarage, deny, or contradict; as, to impeach a judgment or decree; or as used in the rule that a jury cannot "impeach their verdict." Wolfgam v. Schoepke, 123 Wis. 19, 100 N. W. 1056. To proceed against a public officer for crime or misfeasance, before a proper court, by the presentation of a written accusation called "articles of impeachment."

In the Law of Evidence. To call in question the veracity of a witness, by means of evidence adduced for that purpose, or the adducing of proof that a witness is unworthy of belief. Johnston v. Belk-McKnight Co. of Newberry, 188 S.C. 149, 198 S.E. 395, 399.

IMPEACHMENT. A criminal proceeding against a public officer, before a _quasi_ political court, instituted by a written accusation called "articles of impeachment;" for example, a written accusation by the house of representatives of the United States to the senate of the United States against an officer.

"Impeachment" of the Governor, within the meaning of section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, is the adoption of articles of impeachment by the House of Representatives, and the presentation thereof to the Senate, and the indication by that body that the same are accepted for the purpose of permitting prosecution thereof, and the impeachment of the Governor operates to suspend him; the duties and emoluments of the office automatically devolving upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed by the acquittal of the Governor of the charges preferred against him. State v. Chambers, 96 Okl. 78, 220 P. 890, 891, 30 A.L.R. 1144; People ex rel. Robin v. Hayes, 143 N.Y.S. 325, 329, 82 Misc. 165.

In England, a prosecution by the house of commons before the house of lords of a commoner for treason, or other high crimes and misdemeanors, or of a peer for any crime.

Evidence

The adducing of proof that a witness _is_ unworthy of belief. State v. Roybal, 33 N.M. 540, 273 P. 919, 922.

General

Articles of impeachment. The formal written allegation of the causes for an impeachment, answering the same purpose as an indictment in an ordinary criminal proceeding.
Collateral impeachment. See Collateral attack.

Impeachment of annuity. A term sometimes used in English law to denote anything that operates as a hindrance, impediment or obstruction of the making of the profits out of which the annuity is to arise. Pitt v. Williams, 4 Adol. & El. 885.

Impeachment of waste. Liability for waste committed; or a demand or suit for compensation for waste committed upon lands or tenements by a tenant thereof who, having only a leasehold or particular estate, had no right to commit waste. 2 Bl. Comm. 283; Sanderson v. Jones, 6 Fla. 480, 63 Am.Dec. 217.

Impeachment of witness. Adducing proof that a witness who has testified in a cause is unworthy of credit. White v. Railroad Co., 142 Ind. 648, 42 N.E. 456.

IMPECHIARE. To impeach, to accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason.

IMPEDE. To obstruct; hinder; check; delay. Erie R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com’rs, 98 A. 13, 19, 89 N.J.L. 57.

IMPEDIATUS. Disabled from mischief by expeditation (q. v.). Cowell.

IMPEDIENS. In old practice. One who hinders; an impediment. The defendant or deforciant in a fine was sometimes so called. Cowell; Blount.

IMPEDIAMENTO. In Spanish law. A prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

IMPEDEMENTS. Disabilities, or hindrances to the making of contracts, such as coverture, infancy, want of reason, etc.

In the Civil Law. Bars to marriage.

Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable. Diriment impediments are those which render a marriage void; as where one of the contracting parties is unable to marry by reason of a prior undissolved marriage. Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment. Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with respect to each other; as between two particular persons who are related within the prohibited degrees. Bowyer, Mod. Civil Law, 44, 45.

IMPENSIE. Lat. In the civil law. Expenses; outlays. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 168; Calvin. Divided into necessary, necessaries, useful, utilites, and tasteful or ornamental, voluptuarice. Dig. 50, 16, 79. See Id. 25, 1.

IMPERATIVE. Mandatory. See Directory.

IMPERATOR. Emperor. The title of the Roman emperors, and also of the Kings of England before the Norman conquest. Cod. 1, 14, 12; 1 BL Comm. 242. See Emperor.

IMPERFECT. As used in various legal compound terms, this word means defective or incomplete; wanting in some legal or formal requisite; wanting in legal sanction or effectiveness; as in speaking of imperfect "obligations," "ownership," "rights," "title," "usufruct," or "war." See those nouns.

IMPERII MAJESTAS EST TUTELIE SALUS. Co. Litt. 64. The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection.

IMPERITIA. Lat. Unskillfulness; want of skill.

IMPERITIA CULPIE ADNUMERATUR. Want of skill is reckoned as culpa; that is, as blamable conduct or neglect. Dig. 50, 17, 132.

IMPERITIA EST MAXIMA MECHANICORUM PCENA. Unskillfulness is the greatest punishment of mechanics; that is, from its effect in making them liable to those by whom they are employed. 11 Coke, 54a. The word "pena" in some translations is erroneously rendered "fault."

IMPERIUM. The right to command, which includes the right to employ the force of the state to enforce the laws. This is one of the principal attributes of the power of the executive. 1 Toullier, no. 58.

IMPERSONALITAS. Lat. Impersonality. A mode of expression where no reference is made to any person, such as the expression "ut dicitur," (as is said.) Co. Litt. 352b.

IMPERSONALITAS NON CONCLUDIT NEC LIGIT. Co. Litt. 352 b. Impersonality neither concludes nor binds.

IMPERTINENCE. Irrelevancy; the fault of not properly pertaining to the issue or proceeding. The introduction of any matters into a bill, answer, or other pleading or proceeding in a suit, which are not properly before the court for decision, at any particular stage of the suit. Story, Eq. Pl. § 266; Harrison v. Perea, 18 S.Ct. 129, 168 U.S. 311, 42 L.Ed. 478.

In Practice. A question propounded to a witness, or evidence offered or sought to be elicited, is called "impertinent" when it has no logical bearing upon the issue, is not necessarily connected with it, or does not belong to the matter in hand. 1 Whart. Ev. § 20.

On the distinction between pertinency and relevancy, we may quote the following remark of Dr. Wharton: "Relevancy is that which conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis; a pertinent hypothesis being one which, if sustained, would logically influence the issue."

IMPERTINENT. In Equity Pleading. That which does not belong to a pleading, interrogatory, or other proceeding; out of place; superfluous; irrelevant. Chew v. Eagan, 87 N.J.Eq. 80, 99 A. 611; Bean v. Central Maine Power Co., 133 Me. 9, 173 A. 498, 501.
IMPETITION. Impeachment of waste, (q. v.)

IMPETRARE. In old English practice. To obtain by request, as a writ or privilege. Bract. fols. 57, 172b. This application of the word seems to be derived by request, as a writ or privilege. Bract. fol. 20.

IMPIGNORATION. The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

IMPIGNORATION. The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

IMPIUS ET CRUDELIS JUDICANDUS EST QUI LIBERTATI NON FAVET. He is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty. Co. Litt. 124.

IMPLICATE. Lat. To implead; to sue.

EVIPLEAD. In practice. To sue or prosecute by due course of law. People v. Clarke, 9 N.Y. 368.

IMPLEADED. Sued or prosecuted; used particularly in the titles of causes where there are several defendants; as "A. B., impleaded with C. D."

IMPLEMENTS. Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. Whatever may supply wants; particularly applied to tools, utensils, vessels, instruments of labor; as, the implements of trade or of husbandry. Goddard v. Chaffee, 2 Allen (Mass.) 395, 79 Am.Dec. 796. Mississippi Road Supply Ca. v. Hester, 185 Miss. 839, 188 So. 281, 287, 124 A.L.R. 574.

IMPLICATA. A term used in mercantile law, derived from the Italian. In order to avoid the risk of making fruitless voyages, merchants have been in the habit of receiving small adventures, on freight, at so much per cent, to which they are entitled at all events, even if the adventure be lost; and this is called "implicata." Wharton.

IMPLICATION. Intendment or inference, as distinguished from the actual expression of a thing in words. In a will, an estate may pass by mere implication, without any express words to direct its course. 2 Bl. Comm. 381.

An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed.

In construing a will conjecture must not be taken for implication; but necessary implication means not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of intention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be supposed. Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. 466; Gilbert v. Craddock, 67 Kan. 346, 72 P. 869.

IMPLIED. This word is used in law as contrasted with "express," e., where the intention in regard to the subject-matter is not manifested by explicit and direct words, but is gathered by implication or necessary deduction from the circumstances, the general language, or the conduct of the parties.

IMPORTED. This word, in general, has the same meaning in the tariff laws that its etymology shows, in porto, to carry in. To "import" is to bear or carry into. An "imported" article is one brought or carried into a country from abroad. The Conqueror, 49 Fed. 99. See Imports.

IMPORTS. Importations; goods or other property imported or brought into the country from a foreign country.

IMPORTUNITY. Pressing solicitation; urgent request; application for a claim or favor which is urged with troublesome frequency or pertinacity. Webster.

IMPOSE. To levy or exact as by authority; to lay as a burden, tax, duty or charge. State v. Nickerson, 97 Neb. 837, 151 N.W. 911, 982.

IMPOSSIBILITY. That which, in the constitution and course of nature or the law, no man can do or perform. Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car Co., 95 Cal. 353, 30 P. 555.

Impossibility of performance of contract, absolving party from liability for nonperformance, means not only strict impossibility, but impracticability because of extreme and unreasonable difficulty, expense, injury or loss involved.

impossible contract. One which the law will not hold binding upon the parties, because of the natural or legal impossibility of the performance by one party of that which is the consideration for the promise of the other. 7 Wait. Act. & Def. 124.

Impossible contracts, which will be deemed void in the eye of the law, or of which the performance will be excused, are such contracts as cannot be performed, either because of the nature of the obligation undertaken, or because of some supervening event which renders the performance of the obligation either physically or legally impossible. 10 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 176.

Impossibility is of the following several sorts:

An act is physically impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an impossibility may be either absolute, i.e., impossible in any case, (e.g., to stop earth rotation) or relative, (sometimes called "impossibility in fact") i.e., arising from the circumstances of the case, (e.g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a deceased person.) To the latter class belongs what is sometimes called "practical impossibility," which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreasonable cost. An act is legally or juridically impossible when a rule of law makes it impossible to do it; e.g., for A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confused with those which are physically impossible, although forbidden by law, as to commit a theft. An act is logically impossible when it is contrary to the nature of the transaction, as where A. gives property to B. expressly for his own benefit, on condition that he transfers it to C. Sweet.

IMPOSSIBILUM NULLA OBLIGATIO EST. There is no obligation to do impossible things. Dig. 50, 17, 185; Broom, Max. 249.

Impost is a tax received by the prince for such merchandises as are brought into any haven within his dominions from foreign nations. It may in some sort be distinguished from customs, because customs are rather that profit the state or nation, than the villain himself. It is usually levied on the king in excess. This tax often occasions great confusion. Cowell.

IMPOTENCE. In medical jurisprudence. Inability to copulate. Properly used of the male; but it has also been used synonymously with "sterility." Smith v. Smith, 206 Mo.App. 646, 229 S.W. 398; Heinemann v. Heinemann, 118 Or. 178, 245 P. 1082, 1083.

Impotency as a ground for divorce means want of potential copulandi or incapacity to consummate the marriage, and not merely incapacity for procreation. Reed v. Reed, 26 Tenn.App. 690, 177 S.W.2d 26, 27.

IMPOTENTIA EXCUSAT LEGEM. Co.Litt. 29. The impossibility of doing what is required by the law excuses from the performance.

IMPOTENTIAM, PROPERTY PROPTER. A qualified property, which may subsist in animals person's trees, or conies, etc., make their nests or burrows in a person's land, and have young there, such person has a qualified property in them till they can fly or run away, and then such property expires. 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 8.

IMPOUND. To shut up stray animals or distrained goods in a pound. Chenango County Humane Soc. v. Polmatier, 177 N.Y.S. 101, 103, 188 App.Div. 419. To take into the custody of the law or of a court. Thus, a court will sometimes impound a suspicious document produced at a trial.

IMPRESCRIPTIBILITY. The state or quality of being incapable of prescription; not of such a character that a right to it can be gained by prescription.

IMPRESCRIPTIBLE RIGHTS. Such rights as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

IMPRESSION, CASE OF FIRST. One without a precedent; one presenting a wholly new state of facts; one involving a question never before determined.

IMPRESSMENT. A power possessed by the English crown of taking persons or property to aid in the defense of the country, with or without the consent of the persons concerned. It is usually exercised to obtain hands for the royal ships in time of war, by taking seamen engaged in merchant vessels, (1 Bl.Comm. 420; Maud & P. Shipp. 123;) but in former times impressment of merchant ships was also practiced. The admiralty issues protections against impressment in certain cases, either under statutes passed in favor of certain callings (e.g., persons employed in the Greenland fisheries) or voluntarily. Sweet.

IMPREST MONEY. Money paid on enlisting or impressing soldiers or sailors.

IMPRETIABILIS. Lat. Beyond price; invaluable.

IMPRIMATUR. Lat. Let it be printed. A license or allowance, granted by the constituted authorities, giving permission to print and publish a book. This allowance was formerly necessary, in England, before any book could lawfully be printed, and in some other countries is still required.

IMPRIMERE. To press upon; to impress or print.

IMPRIMERY. In some of the ancient English statutes this word is used to signify a printing-office, the art of printing, a print or impression.

IMPRIMIS. Lat. In the first place; first of all.

IMPRISON. To put in a prison; to put in a place of confinement. To confine a person, or restrain his liberty, in any way.

IMPRISONMENT. The act of putting or confining a man in prison; the restraint of a man's personal liberty; coercion exercised upon a person.
to prevent the free exercise of his powers of locomotion. State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 A. 863.

It is not a necessary part of the definition that the confinement should be in a place usually appropriated to that purpose; it may be in a locality used only for the specific occasion; or it may take place without the actual application of any physical agencies of restraint, (such as locks or bars,) but by verbal compulsion, and the display of available force. Pike v. Hanson, 9 N.H. 491. Every confinement of the person is an "imprisonment," whether it be in a common prison, or in a private house, or in the stocks, or even by forcible detaining one in the public streets. Norton v. Mathers, 222 Iowa 1170, 271 N.W. 321, 324.

False imprisonment

The unlawful arrest or detention of a person without warrant, or by an illegal warrant, or a warrant illegally executed, and either in a prison or a place used temporarily for that purpose, or by force and constraint without confinement. Eberling v. State, 136 Ind. 117, 35 N.E. 1023. False imprisonment consists in the unlawful detention of the person of another, for any length of time, whereby he is deprived of his personal liberty. Mahan v. Adam, 144 Md. 355, 124 A. 901, 904. The unlawful detention of the occupant of an automobile may be accomplished by driving so rapidly that he cannot alight. Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm.Ed., § 5528-26.

The term is also used as the name of the action which lies for this species of injury. 3 Bl.Comm. 138; Buttre v. Wihite, 208 Ala 573. 94 So. 585; Christ v. McDonald, 152 Or. 494, 52 P.2d 655, 658.

IMPRISTI. Adherents; followers. Those who side with or take the part of another, either in his defense or otherwise.

IMPROBABLE. Unlikely to be true, or to occur, not to be readily believed. Johnson v. Tregle, La. App., 8 So.2d 755, 758.

IMPROBATION. In Scotch law. An action brought for the purpose of having some instrument declared false and forged. 1 Forb.Inst. pt. 4, p. 161. The verb "improve" (q. v.) was used in the same sense.

IMPROPER. Not suitable; unfit; not suited to the character, time, and place. Godbey v. Godbey, 70 Ohio App. 455, 44 N.E.2d 810, 813.

IMPROPER CUMULATION OF ACTIONS. An attempt to join in one proceeding inconsistent causes of action. Toms v. Nugent, La.App., 12 So.2d 713, 715.

IMPROPER FEUDS. These were derivative feuds; as, for instance, those which were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price, or were held upon base or less honorable services, or were held in lieu of military service; or by erecting a cabin, planting a corn-field, deadening trees in a forest; or by merely marking trees, or by repairing a brush-heap. Burrill. In re Leet Tp. Road, 159 Pa. 72, 28 A. 238.

An "improvement," under our land system, does not mean a general enhancement of the value of the tract from the occupant's operations. It has a more limited meaning, which has in view the population of our forests, and the increase of agricultural products. All works which are directed to the creation of homes for families, or are substantial steps towards bringing lands into cultivation, have in their results the special character of "improvements," and, under the land laws of the United States and of the several states, are encouraged. Sometimes their minimum extent is defined as requisite to convey rights. In other cases not. But the test which runs through all the cases is always this : Are they real, and made bona fide, in accordance with the policy of the law, or are they only colorable, and made for the purpose of fraud and speculation? Simpson v. Robinson, 37 Ark. 137.

In the law of patents. An addition to, or modification of, a previous invention or discovery, intended or claimed to increase its utility or value. 2 Kent, Comm. 366-372. Steiner Sales Co. v. Schwartz Sales Co., C.C.A.Utah, 98 F.2d 999, 1010.
It includes two necessary ideas: the idea of a complete and practical operative art or instrument and the idea of some change in such art or instrument not affecting its essential character but enabling it to produce its appropriate results in a more perfect or economical manner. Rob. Pat. § 210.

Local improvement. See Local Improvement.

IMPROVEMENTS. A term used in leases, of doubtful meaning. It would seem to apply principally to buildings, though generally it extends to the amelioration of every description of property, whether real or personal; but, when contained in any document, its meaning is generally explained by other words. 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 174.

IMPROVIDENCE. As used in a statute excluding one found incompetent to execute the duties of an administrator by reason of improvidence, means that want of care and foresight in the management of property which would be likely to render the estate and effects of the intestate unsafe, and liable to be lost or diminished in value, in case the administration should be committed to the improvident person. In re Fulper's Estate, 99 N. J. Eq. 293, 132 A. 834, 843.

IMPROVIDENTLY. A judgment, decree, rule, injunction, etc., when given or rendered without adequate consideration by the court, or without proper information as to all the circumstances affecting it, or based upon a mistaken assumption or misleading information or advice, is sometimes said to have been "improvidently" given or issued.

IMPRUIARE. In old records. To improve land. Impruiamentum, IMPRUBES. Lat. In the civil law. A minor under the age of puberty; a male under fourteen years of age; a female under twelve. Calvin.; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 138.

IMPULSE. As to "irresistible" or "uncontrollable" impulse, see Insanity.

IMPUNITAS CONTINUUM AFFECTUM TRIBUTIT DELINQUENDI. 4 Coke, 45. Impunity confirms the disposition to commit crime.

IMPUNITIES SEMPER AD DETERIORA INVITAT. 5 Coke, 109. Impunity always invites to greater crimes.

IMPUNITY. Exemption or protection from penalty or punishment. Dillon v. Rogers, 36 Tex. 153.

IMPUNITATIO. Lat. In the civil law. Legal liability.

IMPUTATION OF PAYMENT. In the civil law. The application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

IMPUTED. As used in legal phrases, this word means attributed vicariously; that is, an act, fact, or quality is said to be "imputed" to a person when it is ascribed or charged to him, not because he is personally cognizant of it or responsible for it, but because another person is, over whom he has control or for whose acts or knowledge he is responsible.

IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE. This phrase is sometimes used as equivalent to "implied notice," i.e., knowledge attributed or charged to a person (often contrary to the fact) because the facts in question were open to his discovery and it was his duty to inform himself as to them. Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co., 140 Cal. 563, 74 P. 147.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE. Negligence which is not directly attributable to the person himself, but which is the negligence of a person who is in privy with him, and with whose fault he is chargeable. Smith v. Railroad Co., 38 N.Y.S. 666, 4 App. Div. 493.

IMPUTED NOTICE. Information as to a given fact or circumstance charged or attributed to a person, and affecting his rights or conduct on the ground that actual notice was given to some person whose duty was to report it to the person to be affected, as, his agent or his attorney of record.

IN. In the law of real estate, this preposition has always been used to denote the fact of seisin, title, or possession, and apparently serves as an elliptical expression for some such phrase as "in possession," or as an abbreviation for "intitled" or "invested with title." Thus, in the old books, a tenant is said to be "in by lease of his lessor." Litt. § 82.

An elastic preposition in other cases, expressing relation of presence, existence, situation, inclusion, action, etc.; inclosed or surrounded by limits, as in a room; also meaning for, in and about, on, within, etc., according to context. Ex parte Perry, 71 Fla. 250, 71 So. 174, 176. Rester v. Moody & Stewart, 172 La. 510, 134 So. 690, 692.

IN ACTION. Attainable or recoverable by action; not in possession. A term applied to property of which a party has not the possession, but only a right to recover it by action. Things in action are rights of personal things, which nevertheless are not in possession. See Chose in Action.

IN ADVERSUM. Against an adverse, unwilling, or resisting party. "A decree not by consent, but in adversum." 3 Story, 318.

IN ZEDIFICII LAPIS MALE POSITUS NON EST REMOVENDUS. 11 Coke, 69. A stone badly placed in buildings is not to be removed.

IN IEQUA MANU. In equal hand. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 2.

IN GENERALI PASSAGIO. In the general passage; that is, on the journey to Palestine with the general company or body of Crusaders. This term was of frequent occurrence in the old law of essoins, as a means of accounting for the absence of the party, and was distinguished from simplex passagium, which meant that he was performing a pilgrimage to the Holy Land alone.

IN GENERE. In kind; in the same genus or class; the same in quantity and quality, but not individually the same. In the Roman law, things which may be given or restored in genere are distinguished from such as must be given or restored in specie; that is, identically. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 161.

IN GREMIO LEGIS. In the bosom of the law; in the protection of the law; in abeyance. 1 Coke, 131a; T. Raym. 319; Hooper v. Farmers' Union Warehouse Co., 21 Ala.App. 91, 105 So. 725, 726.

IN GROSS. In a large quantity or sum; without division or particulars; by wholesale. Green v. Taylor, 10 Fed.Cas.No.1,126. At large; not annexed to or dependent upon another thing. Common in gross is such as is neither appendant nor appurtenant to land, but is annexed to a man's person. 2 Bl.Comm. 34.

IN HAC PARTE. In this behalf; on this side.

IN VERBA. In these words; in the same words.

IN HIEREDES NON SOLENT TRANSIRE ACTIONS QUIE PSEUMALES EX MALEFICIO SUNT. 2 Inst. 442. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs.

IN HIS ENIM QUIS SUNT FAVORABILIA ANQUAMVIS SUNT DAMNOSA REBUS, FIAT ALIQUANDO EXTENSION STATUTI. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should sometimes be made. 10 Coke, 101.

IN HIS QUIE DE JURE COMMUNI OMNIBUS CONCEDUNTUR, CONSUETUDO ALICUJUS PATRIE VEL LOCI NON EST ALLEGANDA. 11 Coke, 85. In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular district or place is not to be alleged.

IN HOC. In this; in respect to this.

IN IIS QUIE SUNT MERDE FACULTATIS NUNQUAM PRÆSCRIBITUR. Prescription does not run against a mere power or faculty to act. Tray. Max.

IN IISDEM TERMINIS. In the same terms. 9 East, 487.

IN INDIVIDUO. In the distinct, identical, or individual form; in specie. Story, Bailm. § 97.
IN INFINITUM. Infinitely; indefinitely. Imports indefinite succession or continuance.

IN INITIALIBUS. In the preliminaries. A term in Scotch practice, applied to the preliminary examination of a witness as to the following points: Whether he knows the parties, or bears ill will to either of them, or has received any reward or promise of reward for what he may say, or can lose or gain by the cause, or has been told by any person what to say. If the witness answer these questions satisfactorily, he is then examined in causa, in the cause. Bell, Dict. "Evidence."

IN INITIO. In or at the beginning. In initio litis, at the beginning, or in the first stage of the suit. Bract. fol. 400.

IN INTEGRUM. To the original or former state. Calvin.

IN INVIDIAM. To excite a prejudice.

IN INVITUM. Against an unwilling party; against one not assenting. A term applied to proceedings against an adverse party, to which he does not consent.

IN IPSIS FAUCIBUS. In the very throat or entrance. In ipsis faucibus of a port, actually entering a port. 1 C.Rob.Adm. 233, 234.

IN ITINERE. In eyre; on a journey or circuit. In old English law, the justices in itinere (or in eyre) were those who made a circuit through the kingdom once in seven years for the purposes of trying causes. 3 Bl.Comm. 58. In course of transportation; on the way; not delivered to the vendee. In this sense the phrase is equivalent to “in transitu.”

IN JUDICIO. In Roman law. In the course of an actual trial; before a judge, (judex.) A cause, during its preparatory stages, conducted before the prtor, was said to be in jure; in its second stage, after it had been sent to a judex for trial, it was said to be in judicio.

IN JUDICIO NON CREDITUR NISI JURATIS. Cro.Car. 64. In a trial, credence is given only to those who are sworn.

IN JURE. In law; according to law.

IN JURE ALTERIUS. In another’s right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JURE, NON REMOTA CAUSA SED PROXIMA SPECTATUR. Bac.Max. reg. 1. In law, the proximate, and not the remote, cause is regarded.

IN JURE PROPRIO. In one’s own right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JUS VOCARE. To call, cite, or summon to court. Inst. 4, 16, 3; Calvin. In jus vocando, summoning to court. 3 Bl.Comm. 279.

IN KIND. In the same kind, class, or genus. A loan is returned “in kind” when not the identical article, but one corresponding and equivalent to it, is given to the lender. See In Generae.

The agreement that a collector of taxes was to receive his commission “in kind” means the same kind of funds in which the tax is collected; Wilson v. State, 51 Ark. 213, 10 S.W. 491.

IN LAW. In the intendment, contemplation, or inference of the law; implied or inferred by law; existing in law or by force of law. See In Fact.

IN LECTO MORTALI. On the deathbed. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 28, § 12.

IN LIBERAM ELEMOSINAM. In free alms. Land given for a charitable motive was said to be so given. See Frankalmoine.

IN LIMINE. On or at the threshold; at the very beginning; preliminarily.

IN LITEM. For a suit; to the suit. Greenl.Ev. § 348.

IN LOCO. In place; in lieu; instead; in the place or stead. Townsh.Pl. 38.

IN MAJORE SUMMA CONTINETUR MINOR. 5 Coke, 115. In the greater sum is contained the less.

IN MAJOREM CAUTELAM. For greater security. 1 Strange, 105, arg.

IN MALAM PARTEM. In a bad sense, so as to wear an evil appearance.

IN MALEFICIIS VOLUNTAS SPECTATUR, NON EXITUS. In evil deeds regard must be had to the intention, and not to the result. Dig. 48, 8, 14; Broom, Max. 324.

IN MALEFICIO, RATIHABITIO MANDATO COMPARATUR. In case of malefeasance, ratification is equivalent to command. Dig. 50, 17, 152, 2.
IN MAXIMA POTENTIA MINIMA LICENTIA. In the greatest power there is the least freedom. Hob. 159.

IN MEDIAS RES. Into the heart of the subject, without preface or introduction.

IN MEDIO. Intermediate. A term applied, in Scotch practice, to a fund held between parties litigant.

IN MERCIBUS ILLICITIS NON SIT COMMER- CIUM. There should be no commerce in illicit or prohibited goods. 3 Kent, Comm. 262, note.

IN MERCY. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in respect to the imposition of a fine or other punishment.

IN MEDIAS RES. Into the heart of the subject, in the greatest power there is the least freedom. Hob. 159.

Scotch practice, to a fund held between parties without preface or introduction.

IN MISERICORDIA. The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, "Ideo in miseri-cordia," etc. Sometimes "misericordia" means the being quit of all amercements.

IN MITIORI SENSU. In the milder sense; in the less aggravat acceptance.

In actions of slander, it was formerly the rule that, if the words alleged would admit of two constructions, they should be taken in the less injurious and defamatory sense, or in mitiori sense.

IN MODUM ASS'S/E. In the manner or form of an assize. Bract. fol. 183b. In modum juratce, in manner of a jury. Id. fol. 181b.

IN MORA. In default; literally, in delay. In the civil law, a borrower who omits or refuses to return the thing loaned at the proper time is said to be in mora. Story, Bailm. §§ 254, 259.

In Scotch law. A creditor who has begun without completing diligence necessary for attaching the property of his debtor is said to be in mora. Bell.

IN MORTUA MANU. Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civiliter mortui. 1 Bl.Comm. 479; Tayl.Gloss.

IN NOMINE DEI, AMEN. In the name of God, Amen. A solemn introduction, anciently used in religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civiliter mortui. Bract. fol. 372; Fleta, 1. 6, c. 14, § 28.

IN NOTIS. In the notes.

IN NOVO CASU, NOVUM REMEDIE APPON- NENDUM EST. 2 Inst. 3. A new remedy is to be applied to a new case.

IN NUBIBUS. In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in mare, in terra, vel in custodid legis, in the air, sea, or earth, or in the custody of the law. Tayl.Gloss. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in gremio legis.

IN NULLIUS BONIS. Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure-trove and wreck were annually considered.

IN Nullo est erratum. In nothing is there error. The name of the common plea or joinder in error, denying the existence of error in the record or proceedings; which is in the nature of a demurrer, and at once refers the matter of law arising thereon to the judgment of the court. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1173; Booth v. Com., 7 Mete. (Mass.) 285, 287.

IN OBSCURIS, INSPICI SOLERE QUOD VERISIMILIS EST, AUT QUOD PLERUMQUE FIERI SOLET. In obscure cases, we usually look at what is most probable, or what most commonly happens. Dig. 50, 17, 114.

IN OBSCURIS, QUOD MINIMUM EST SEQUI- MUR. In obscure or doubtful cases, we follow that which is the least. Dig. 50, 17, 9; 2 Kent, Comm. 557.

IN ODIO SPOLIATORIS OMNIA PRISEUM- UNTUR. To the prejudice (in condemnation) of a despoiler all things are presumed; every presumption is made against a wrongdoer. 1 Vern. 452.

IN OMNIA ACTIONE UBI DUX CONCURRUNT DISTRICTIONES, VIDE LICET, IN REM ET IN PERSONAM, ILLA DISTRICTIO TENENDA EST QUPE MAGIS Timetur ET MAGIS LIGAT. In every action where two distresses concur, that is, in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreaded, and which binds most firmly. Bract. fol. 372; Fleta, 1. 6, c. 14, § 28.

IN OMNI RE NASCITUR RES QUAE IPSAM REM EXTERMINAT. In everything there arises a thing which destroys the thing itself. Everything contains the element of its own destruction. 2 Inst. 15.

IN OMNIBUS. In all things; on all points. "A case parallel in omnisibus." 10 Mod. 104.

IN OMNIBUS CONTRACTIBUS, SIVE NOMINA- TIS SIVE INNOMINATIS, PERMUTATIO CON-TINETUR. In all contracts, whether nominate or innominate, an exchange [of value, i. e., a consideration] is implied. Gravin. lib. 2, § 12; 2 Bl. Comm. 444, note.

IN OMNIBUS OBLIGATIONIBUS IN QUIBUS DIES NON PONITUR, PRISEENTI DIE DEBET- UR. In all obligations in which a date is not put, the debt is due on the present day; the liability accrues immediately. Dig. 50, 17, 14.
IN OMNIBUS [FERE] PENALIBUS JUDICII, ET ZETATIL ET IMPRUNIDENTI2E SUCCURRIC-TUR. In nearly all personal judgments, immaturity of age and imbecility of mind are favored. Dig. 50, 17, 108; Broom, Max. 314.

IN OMNIBUS QUIDEM, MAXIME TAMEN IN JURE, ZEQUITAS SPECTANDA SIT. In all things, but especially in law, equity is to be regarded. Dig. 50, 17, 90; Story, Bailm. § 257.

IN PACATO SOLO. In a country which is at peace.

IN PACE DEI ET REGIS. In the peace of God and the king. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 6. Formal words in old appeals of murder.

IN PAIS. This phrase, as applied to a legal transaction, primarily means that it has taken place without legal proceedings. Thus a widow was said to make a request in paix for her dower when she simply applied to the heir without issuing a writ. (Co. Litt. 32b.) So conveyances are divided into those by matter of record and those by matter in paix. In some cases, however, "matters in paix" are opposed not only to "matters of record," but also to "matters in writing," i.e., deeds, as where estoppel by deed is distinguished from estoppel by matter in paix. Id. 352a.)

Sweet. See, also, Pais.

IN PAIS, ESTOPEP IN. An estoppel not arising from deed or record or written contract. Steph. Pl. 197; Duke v. Griffith, 9 Utah 476, 35 P. 512. The doctrine is that a person may be precluded by his act or conduct or silence, when it is his duty to speak, from asserting a right which he otherwise would have had. Marshall v. Wilson, 175 Or. 506, 154 P.2d 547, 551. The effect of a party's voluntary conduct whereby he is precluded from asserting rights as against another person who had a good faith reliance upon such conduct and has been led thereby to change his condition for the worse and who acquires some corresponding right of property or contract. Oswego Falls Corporation v. City of Fulton, 265 N.Y.S. 436, 148 Misc. 170.

Elements or fundamentals of "estoppel in pais" include admission, statement, or act inconsistent with claim afterwards asserted, National Match Co. v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 227 Mo.App. 1115, 58 S.W.2d 797; Peyrefitte v. Union Homestead Ass'n, La.App., 185 So. 693, 697; change of position to loss or injury of party claiming estoppel, Personal Finance Co. of Providence v. Henley-Kimball Co., 61 R.I. 402, 1 A.2d 121, 125, 117 A.L.R. 1476; Malloy v. City of Chicago, 369 Ill. 97, 15 N.E.2d 861, 865; circumstances such that party estopped knew or should have known facts to be otherwise or pretended to know facts which he did not know, Briscoe v. O'Connor, 119 N.J.Eq. 270, 58 A.L.R. 932; Sinclair Refining Co. v. Jenkins Petroleum Process Co., C.C.A.Mo., 99 F.2d 9, 13, 14; misleading of one person by another person to his prejudice or injury, Garmon v. Davis, 63 Ga.App. 815, 12 S.E.2d 209, 211; Current News Features v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 81 F.2d 288, 292; prejudice or loss or injury to party claiming estoppel, City of St. Louis v. Mississippi River Fuel Corp., D.C.Mo., 57 F.Supp. 549, 554; In re Bremer's Estate, 141 Neb. 251, 3 N.W.2d 411, 413, 414; reliance by one party on belief induced by other party, Cleaver v. Peterson, 203 Minn. 337, 281 N.W. 275, 278; Strand v. State, 16 Wash.2d 107, 132 P.2d 1011, 1016.

Ratification is distinguishable in that the substance of "ratification" is confirmation of the unauthorized act or contract after it has been done or made, whereas substance of "estoppel" is the principal's inducement to another to act to his prejudice. Harvey v. J. P. Morgan & Co., Mun.Ct., 2 N.Y.S.2d 520, 531, 166 Misc. 455.

Silence where one should speak may be the basis of estoppel, Thomas v. Conyers, 198 N.C. 229, 151 S.E. 270, 273; waiver is distinguishable in that it is not essential to waive that the opposite party do anything on the strength of the statement relied upon, Langley v. Norris, Tex.Civ.App., 167 S.W.2d 603, 613; waiver designates act or consequence of act of one person only; it is voluntary act and implies abandonment of right or privilege. Mcdanels v. General Ins. Co. of America, 1 Cal.App.2d 454, 36 P.2d 829, 832.

See, also, Equitable Estoppel.

IN PAPER. A term formerly applied to the proceedings in a cause before the record was made up. 3 Bl.Comm. 406; 2 Burrows, 1098. Probably from the circumstance of the record being always on parchment. The opposite of "on record." 1 Burrows, 322.

IN PARI CAUSA. In an equal cause. In a cause where the parties on each side have equal rights.

IN PARI CAUSA POSSESSOR POTIOR HAB-ERL DEBET. In an equal cause he who has the possession should be preferred. Dig. 50, 17, 128, 1.

IN PARI DELICTO. In equal fault; equally culpable or criminal; in a case of equal fault or guilt. Rozell v. Vansyckle, 11 Wash. 79, 39 Pac. 270.

A person who is in part delicto with another differs from a particeps criminis in this, that the former term always includes the latter, but the latter does not always include the former. 8 East, 381.

IN PARI DELICTO POTIOR OST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS, [DEFENDENTIS.] In a case of equal or mutual fault [between two parties] the condition of the party in possession [or defending] is the better one. 2 Burrows, 926.

Where each party is equally in fault, the law favors him who is actually in possession. Broom, Max. 290, 729. Where the fault is mutual, the law will leave the case as it finds it, Story, Ag. § 195; Reaves Lumber Co. v. Cain-Hurley Lumber Co., 152 Tenn. 339, 279 S.W. 257, 258.

IN PARI MATERIA. Upon the same matter or subject. Statutes in pari materia are to be construed together. State v. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 439, 44 N.E. 469, 33 L.R.A. 313.

IN PATIENDO. In suffering, permitting, or allowing.

IN PECTORE JUDICIS. In the breast of the judge. Latch, 180. A phrase applied to a judgment.
IN PERPETUAM REI MEMORIAM. In perpetual memory of a matter; for preserving a record of a matter. Applied to depositions taken in order to preserve the testimony of the deponent.

IN PERPETUITY. Endless duration; forever.

IN PIOS USUS. For pious uses; for religious purposes.

IN PERSONAM, IN REM. In the Roman law from which they are taken, the expressions "in rem" and "in personam" were always opposed to one another, an act or proceeding in personam being one done or directed against or with reference to a specific person, while an act or proceeding in rem was one done or directed with reference to no specific person, and consequently against or with reference to all whom it might concern, or "all the world." The phrases were especially applied to actions; an actio in personam being the remedy where a claim against a specific person arose out of an obligation, whether ex contractu or ex maleficio, while an actio in rem was one brought for the assertion of a right of property, easement, status, etc., against one who denied or infringed it. See Inst. 4, 6, 1; Gaius, 4, 1, 1-10.

From this use of the terms, they have come to be applied to signify the antithesis of "available against a particular person," and "available against the world at large." Thus, Jura in personam are rights primarily available against specific persons; Jura in rem, rights only available against the world at large. Hook v. Hoffman, 147 P. 722, 727, 16 Ariz. 540; Beck v. Natalie Oil Co., 143 La. 153, 78 So. 430.

So a judgment or decree is said to be in rem when it binds third persons. Such is the sentence of a court of admiralty on a question of prize, or a decree of nullity or dissolution of marriage, or a decree of a court in a foreign country as to the status of a person domiciled there.

Lastly, the terms are sometimes used to signify that a judicial proceeding operates on a thing or a person. Thus, it is said of the court of chancery that it acts in personam, and not in rem, meaning that its decrees operate by compelling defendants to do what they are ordered to do, and not by producing the effect directly. See Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St. 613, 10 N.E. 160.

Judgment in Personam

See that title.

IN PERSONAM ACTIO EST, QUA CUM EO AGI-
MUS QUI OBLIGATUS EST NOBIS AD FACIEN-
DUM ALIQUID VEL DANDUM. The action in personam is that by which we sue him who is under obligation to us to do something or give something. Dig. 44, 7, 25; Bract. 101b.

IN PIOS USUS. For pious uses; for religious purposes.

IN PLACE. In mining law, rock or mineralized matter is "in place" when remaining as nature placed it, that is, unsevered from the circumjacent rock, or which is fixed solid and immovable in the form of a vein or lode. Williams v. Gibson, 84 Ala. 228, 4 So. 350, 5 Am.St.Rep. 368.

IN PLENA VITA. In full life.

IN PLENA VITA. In full life.

IN PLENO COMITATU. In full county court.

IN PLENO LUMINE. In public; in common knowledge; in the light of day.

IN PCENALIBUS CAUSIS BENIGNIUS INTER-
PRETANDUM EST. In penal causes or cases, the more favorable interpretation should be adopted. Dig. 50, 17, (197), 155, 2; Plowd. 86b, 124; 2 Hale, P.C. 365.

IN POSSE. In possibility; not in actual existence. See In Esse.

IN POTESTATE PARENTIS. In the power of a parent.

IN PRAEMISSORUM FIDEM. In confirmation or attestation of the premises. A notarial phrase.

IN PRAEPARATORIIS AD JUDICIUM FAVETUR
ACTORI. 2 Inst. 57. In things preceding judgment the plaintiff is favored.

IN PRIESENTI. At the present time.

IN PRINCIPIO. At the beginning.

IN PRINCIPIO. At the beginning.

IN PRISTO. In readiness; at hand. Usually written impromptu.

IN PROPRIA CAUSA NEMO JUDEX. No one can be judge in his own cause.

IN PROPRIA PERSONA. In one's own proper person.
IN PROPIA

It is a rule in pleading that pleads to the jurisdiction of the court must be plead in propon persona, because if pleaded by attorney they admit the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction.

In some jurisdictions, however, this rule is no longer recognized. 1 C.J. 255.

IN QUO QUIIS DELINQUIT, IN EO DE JURE EST PUNIENDUS. In whatever thing one offends, in that is he rightfully to be punished. Co. Inst. 255. Recognized.

plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction.

pleaded by attorney they admit the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction.

IN RE. In the affair; in the matter of; concerning; re. This is the usual method of entitling a judicial proceeding in which there are not adversary parties, but merely some res concerning which judicial action is to be taken, such as a bankrupt's estate, an estate in the probate court, a proposed public highway, etc. It is also sometimes used as a designation of a proceeding where one party makes an application on his own behalf, but such proceedings are more usually entitled "Ex parte _________________."

IN RE COMMUNI MELIOR EST CONDITIO PROHIBENTIS. In common property the condition of the one prohibiting is the better. In other words, either co-owner has a right of veto against the acts of the other. Gulf Refining Co. of Louisiana v. Carroll, 145 La. 299, 82 So. 277, 279.

IN RE COMMUNI NEMINEM DOMINORUM JURE FACERE QUIquam, INVIT0 ALTERO, POSSE. One co-proprietor can exercise no authority over the common property against the will of the other. Dig. 10, 3, 28. In other words, either co-owner has a right of veto against the acts of the other. Gulf Refining Co. of Louisiana v. Carroll, 145 La. 299, 82 So. 277, 279.

IN RE COMMUNI POTIOR EST CONDITIO PROHIBENTIS. In a partnership the condition of one who forbids is the more favorable.

IN RE DUBIA, BENIGNIOREM INTERPRETATIONEM SEQUI, NON MINUS JUSTIUS EST QUAM TUTIUS. In a doubtful matter, to follow the more liberal interpretation is not less the juster than the safer course. Dig. 50, 17, 192, 1.

IN RE DUBIA, MAGIS INFIICIATIO QUAM AFFIRMATIO INTELLIGENDA. In a doubtful matter, the denial or negative is to be understood, [or regarded,] rather than the affirmative. Godb. 37.

IN RE LUPANARI, TESTES LUPANARES ADMITTENTUR. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses. Van Epps v. Van Epps, 6 Barb. (N.Y.) 320, 324.

IN RE PARI POTIOREM CAUSAM ESSE PROHIBENTIS CONSTAT. In a thing equally shared [by several] it is clear that the party refusing [to permit the use of it] has the better cause. Dig. 10, 3, 28. A maxim applied to partnerships, where one partner has a right to withhold his assent to the acts of his copartner. 3 Kent.Comm. 45.

IN RE PROPIA INIQUUM ADMODUM EST ALICUI LICENTIAM TRIBUIRE SENTENTIJE. It is extremely unjust that any one should be judge in his own cause.

IN REBUS (Lat.) In things, cases, or matters.

IN REBUS MANIFESTIS, ERRAT QUI AUCTORITATES LEGUM ALLEGAT; QUIA PERSPICUA VERA NON SUNT PROBANDA. In clear cases, he mistakes who cites legal authorities; for obvious truths are not to be proved. 5 Coke, 67a. Applied to cases too plain to require the support of authority; "because," says the report, "he who endeavors to prove them obscures them."

IN REBUS QUIE SUNT FAVORABILIA ANIMA, QUAMVIS SUNT DAMNOSA REBUS, FIAT ALIQUANDO EXTENSIO STATUTI. 10 Coke, 101. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to things, an extension of a statute should sometimes be made.

IN REGARD TO. Concerning; relating to; in respect of; with respect to; about. Hart v. Hart, 181 Iowa 527, 164 N.W. 849, 850.

IN REM. A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam. See In Personam.

It is true that, In a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of property, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. So far as they affect property in this state, they are substantially proceedings in rem in the broader sense which we have mentioned. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 565; Continental Gin Co. v. Arnold, 66 Okl. 132, 167 F. 613, 617, L.R.A.1918B, 511.

In the strict sense of the term, a proceeding "in rem" is one which is taken directly against property or one which is brought to enforce a right in the thing itself. Austin v. Royal League, 316 Ill. 188, 147 N.E. 106, 109.

A divorce suit is a "suit in rem," the essential characteristic of which is found in the power of the state through the decree or judgment of its court to dispose of the subject-matter of the suit, the res, in accordance with the object of the suit, whether that subject-matter be physical property or the status of one or both of the parties litigant, which decree operates immediately and absolutely upon the status of the suitor which is the res in the suit without the necessity of execution, attachment, or contempt proceedings to enforce it. Lister v. Lister, 86 N.J.Eq. 30, 97 A. 170, 173.

A proceeding "in rem" is in effect a proceeding against the owner, as well as a proceeding against the goods, for it is his breach of the law which has to be proven to establish the forfeiture, and it is his property which is sought to be forfeited. Mack v. Westbrook, 148 Ga. 690, 98 S.E. 339, 343.

Judgment in rem. See that title.

Quasi in rem. A term applied to proceedings which are not strictly and purely in rem, but are brought against the defendant personally, though the real object is to deal with particular property or subject property to the discharge of claims asserted; for example, foreign attachment, or pro-

IN REM ACTIO EST PER QUAM REM NOSTRUM QUIE AB ALIO POSSIDETUR PETIMUS, ET SEMPER ADVERSUS EUM EST QUI REM POSSIDET. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property. Dig. 44, 7, 25; Bract. fol. 102.

IN RENDER. A thing is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant; as rent. It is said to lie in render when it consists in the right in the lord or other person to take something. See In Prender.

IN REPUBLICA MAXIME CONSERVANDA SUNT JURA BELLII. In a state the laws of war are to be especially upheld. 2 Inst. 58.

IN RERUM NATURA. In the nature of things; in the realm of actuality; in existence. In a dilatory plea, an allegation that the plaintiff is fictitious. 3 Bl.Comm. 301.

In civil law, this phrase is applied to things. Inst. 2, 20, 7. It is a broader term than in rebus humanis: before quickening, an infant is in rerum natura, but not in rebus humanis; after quickening, he is in rebus humanis as well as in rerum natura. Calvinus, Lex.

IN RESTITUTIONEM, NON IN PCENAM HIERES SUCCEDIT. The heir succeeds to the restitution when it retains its existence as a distinct individual of a particular class.

IN SATISFACTIONIBUS NON PERMITTITUR AMPHIUS FIERI QUAM SEMEL FACTUM EST. In payments, more must not be received than has been received once for all. 9 Coke, 53.

IN SCRINIO JUDICIS. In the writing-case of the judge; among the judge's papers. "That is a thing that rests in scrinio judicis, and does not appear in the body of the decree." Hardr. 51.

IN SEPARALI. In several; in severalty. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 20.

IN SIMILI MATERIA. Dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

IN SOLIDO. In the civil law. For the whole; as a whole. An obligation in solido is one where each of the several obligors is liable for the whole; that is, it is joint and several. Henderson v. Wadsworth, 6 S.Ct. 140, 115 U.S. 264, 29 L.Ed. 377. Possession in solidum is exclusive possession.

When several persons obligate themselves to the obligee by the terms "in solido," or use any other expressions which clearly show that they intend that each one shall be separately bound to perform the whole of the obligation, it is called an "obligation in solido" on the part of the obligors. Civ.Code La. art. 2082.

IN SOLIDUM. For the whole. Si plures sint fide jussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur, if there be several sureties, however numerous they may be, they are individually bound for the whole debt. Inst. 3, 21, 4. In parte sive in solidum, for a part or for the whole. Id. 4, 1, 16. See Id. 4, 6, 20; Id. 4, 7, 2.

IN SOLO. In the soil or ground. In solo alieno, in another's ground. In solo proprio, in one's own ground. 2 Steph.Comm. 20.

IN SPECIE. Specific; specifically. Thus, to decree performance in specie is to decree specific performance. In kind; in the same or like form. A thing is said to exist in specie when it retains its existence as a distinct individual of a particular class.

IN STATU QUO. In the condition in which it was. See Status Quo. McReynolds v. Harrigfeld, 26 Idaho 26, 140 P. 1096, 1098.

IN STIPULATIONIBUS CUM QUIERITUR QUID ACTUM SIT VERBA CONTRA STIPULATOREM INTERPRETANDA SUNT. In the construction of agreements words are interpreted against the person using them. Thus, the construction of the stipulatio is against the stipulator, and the construction of the promissio against the promissor. Dig. 45, 1, 38, 18; Broom, Max. 599.

IN STIPULATIONIBUS, ID TEMPUS SPECTAT QUI, CONTRAHIMUS. In stipulations, the time when we contract is regarded. Dig. 50, 17, 144, 1.

IN STIRPES. In the law of intestate succession. According to the roots or stocks; by representation; as distinguished from succession per capita. See Per Stirpes; Per Capita.

IN SUBSIDII. In aid.

IN SUO QUISQUE NEGOTIO HEBETIOR EST QUAM IN ALIENO. Every one is more dull in his own business than in another's.

IN TALI CASU EDITUM ET PROVISUM. See In Casu Proviso.

IN TANTUM. In so much; so much; so far; so greatly. Reg. Orig. 97, 106.

IN TERMINIS TERMINANTIBUS. In terms of determination; exactly in point. 11 Coke, 40b. In express or determinate terms. 1 Leon. 93.

IN TERROREM. In terror or warning; by way of threat. Applied to legacies given upon condition that the recipient shall not dispute the validity or the dispositions of the will; such a condition being usually regarded as a mere threat.
IN TERROREM

IN TERROREM POPULI. Lat. To the terror of the people. A technical phrase necessary in indictments for riots. 4 Car. & P. 373.

IN TESTAMENTIS PLENIUS TESTATORIS IN-

TENTIONEM SCRUTAMUR. In wills we more especially seek out the intention of the testator.

3 Bulst. 103; Broom, Max. 555.

IN TESTAMENTIS PLENIUS VOLUNTATES

TESTANTUM INTERPRETANTUR. Dig. 50, 17,

12. In wills the intention of testators is more especially regarded. "That is to say," says Mr.

Broom, (Max., 568,) "a will will receive a more liberal construction than its strict meaning, if alone considered, would permit."

IN TESTAMENTIS RATIO TACITA NON DE-

BET CONSIDERARI, SED VERBA SOLUM

SPECTARI DEBENT; ADEO PER DIVINATION-

EM MENTIS A VERB'S RECEDERE DURUM

EST. In wills an unexpressed meaning ought not to be considered, but the words alone ought to be looked to; so hard is it to recede from the words by guessing at the intention.

IN TESTIMONIUM. Lat. In witness; in evidence whereof.

IN THE FIELD. Any place, on land or water, apart from permanent cantonments or fortifications where military operations are being con-

IN THE PEACE OF THE STATE. In definition of murder as unlawful and felonious killing of human being "in the peace of the state," the quoted phrase means the same as "in the king's peace" under the English common law, and negatives the idea that deceased was actually engaged in waging war against the state. State v. Corneille, 153
La. 929, 96 So. 813, 817.

IN TOTIDEM VERBIS. In so many words; in precisely the same words; word for word.

IN TOTO. In the whole; wholly; completely; as the award is void in toto.

IN TOTO ET PARS CONTINETUR. In the whole the part also is contained. Dig. 50, 17, 113.

IN TRADITIONIBUS SCRIPTORUM. NON QUOD

DICTUM EST, SED QUOD GESTUM EST, IN-

SPICITUR. In the delivery of writings, not what is said, but what is done, is looked to. 9 Coke, 137a.

IN TRAJECUT. In the passage over; on the voy-

IN TRANSITU. In transit; on the way or passage; while passing from one person or place to Co. v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., 89 Tex. 419, 37 S.W. 856, 59
338.

IN UTROQUE JURE. In both laws; e., the civil and canon law.

IN VACUO. Without object; without concomit-ants or coherence.

IN VADIO. In gage or pledge. 2 Bl.Comm. 157.

IN VENTRE SA MERE. L. Fr. In his mother's womb; spoken of an unborn child.

IN VERAM QUANTITATEM FIDEJUSSOR TEN-

EATUR, NISI PRO CERTA QUANTITATE AC-

CESSIT. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity, unless he agree for a certain quantity, Bean v. Parker, 17 Mass. 597.

IN VERBIS, NON VERBA, SED RES ET RATIO, QUIERENDA EST. Jenk. Cent. 132. In the construction of words, not the mere words, but the thing and the meaning, are to be inquired after.

IN VINCI. In chains; in actual custody.

IN VINCULIS. In chains; in actual custody.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF. The initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands," etc. A translation of the Latin phrase "in cujus rei testimonium."

INADEQUATE. Insufficient; disproportionate; lacking in effectiveness or in conformity to a prescribed standard or measure.

INADEQUATE CONSIDERATION. One not adequate or equal in value to the thing conveyed.

INADEQUATE DAMAGES. See Damages.

INADEQUATE PRICE. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as would ordinarily be entirely incommensurate with its intrinsic value.
State v. Purcell, 131 Mo. 312, 33 S.W.2d 158, 163.

INADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW. Within the meaning of the rule that equity will not entertain a suit if there is an adequate remedy at law, this does not mean that there must be a failure to col-clect money or damages at law, but the remedy is considered inadequate if it is, in its nature and character, unfitted or not adapted to the end in view, as, for instance, when the relief sought is preventive rather than compensatory. Cruickshank v. Bidwell, 20 S.Ct. 280, 176 U.S. 73, 44 L.
Ed. 377.
INADMISSIBLE. That which, under the established rules of law, cannot be admitted or received; e. g., parol evidence to contradict a written contract.

INADVERTENCE. Needlessness; lack of attention; want of care; carelessness; failure of a person to pay careful and prudent attention to the progress of a negotiation or a proceeding in court by which his rights may be affected. Used chiefly in statutory enumerations of the grounds on which progress of a negotiation or a proceeding in court is held to be not competent. See "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." Skinner v. Terry, 107 N.C. 103, 12 S.E. 118. State ex rel. Regis v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 102 Mont. 74, 55 P.2d 1295, 1298.

INACCESSION. Lat. In the civil law. Building on another's land with one's own materials, or on one's own land with another's materials.

INALIENABLE. Not subject to alienation; the characteristic of those things which cannot be sold or transferred from one person to another, such as rivers and public highways, and certain personal rights; e. g., liberty.

INAUGURATION. The act of installing or inducting into office with formal ceremonies, as the coronation of a sovereign, the inauguration of a president or governor, or the consecration of a prelate. A word applied by the Romans to the ceremony of dedicating a temple, or raising a man to the priesthood, after the augurs had been consulted.

INBLAURA. In old records. Profit or product of ground. Cowell.

INBOARD. In maritime law, and particularly with reference to the stowage of cargo, this term is contrasted with "outboard." It does not necessarily mean under deck, but is applied to a cargo so piled or stowed that it does not project over the "board" (side or rail) of the vessel. Allen v. St. Louis Ins. Co., 46 N.Y.Super.Ct. 181.

INBOROW. In Saxon law. A security, pledge, or hypotheca, consisting of the chattels of a person unable to obtain a personal "borg," or surety.

INBOROW. A forecourt or gate-house. A certain barony was inborow and outborow between England and Scotland. Cowell.

INBOUND COMMON. An uninclosed common, marked out, however, by boundaries.

INCAPACITY. Want of capacity; want of power or ability to take or dispose; want of legal ability to act. Ellicott v. Ellicott, 90 Md. 321, 45 A. 183, 48 L.R.A. 58. Inefficiency; incompetency; lack of adequate power. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Richmond, Tex.Com.App., 291 S.W. 1085, 1087.

Legal incapacity

This expression implies that the person in view has the right vested in him, but is prevented by some impediment from exercising it; as in the case of minors, femes covert, lunatics, etc. An administrator has no right until letters are issued to him. Therefore he cannot benefit (as respects the time before obtaining letters) by a saving clause in a statute of limitations in favor of persons under a legal incapacity to sue. Cates v. Brattle, 1 Root (Conn.) 187.

Total incapacity

In Workmen's Compensation Acts, such disqualification from performing the usual tasks of a workman that he cannot procure and retain employment. Western Indemnity Co. v. Corder, Tex.Civ.App., 249 S.W. 316, 317; Georgia Casualty Co. v. Ginn, Tex.Civ.App., 272 S.W. 591, 603; Moore v. Peet Bros. Mfg. Co., 99 Kan. 443, 162 P. 295, 296. Incapacity for work is total not only so long as the injured employee is unable to do any work of any character, but also while he remains unable, as a result of his injury, either to resume his former occupation or to procure remunerative employment at a different occupation suitable to his impaired capacity. Such period of total incapacity may be followed by a period of partial incapacity, during which the injured employee is able both to procure and to perform work at some occupation suitable to his then-existing capacity, but less remunerative than the work in which he was engaged at the time of his injury. That situation constitutes "partial incapacity." Austin Bros. Bridge Co. v. Whitmire, 121 S.E. 345, 346, 31 Ga.App. 560. Synonymous with "total disability." Consolidation Coal Co. v. Crisål, 289 S.W. 270, 273, 217 Ky. 371. See Disability.

INCARCERATION. Imprisonment; confinement in a jail or penitentiary. See Imprisonment.

This term is seldom used in law, though found occasionally in statutes. When so used, it appears always to mean confinement by competent public authority or under due legal process, whereas "imprisonment" may be effected by a private person without warrant of law, and if unjustifiable is called "false imprisonment." No occurrence of such a phrase as "false incarceration" has been noted.

INCASTELLARE. To make a building serve as a castle. Jacob.

INCAUSTUM, or ENCAUSTUM. Ink. Fleta, 1, 2, c. 27, § 5.

INCAUTE FACTUM PRO NON FACTO RABE-TUB. A thing done unwarily (or unadvisedly) will be taken as not done. Dig. 28, 4, 1.

INCENDIARY. A house-burner; one guilty of arson; one who maliciously and willfully sets another's building on fire.

INCENDIUM /ERE ALIENO NON EXUIT DEBI-TOREM. Cod. 4, 2, 11. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt.

INCESSION. Commencement; opening; initiation. The beginning of the operation of a contract or will, or of a note, mortgage, lien, etc.; the beginning of a cause or suit in court. Oriental Hotel Co. v. Griffiths, 88 Tex. 574, 33 S.W. 652, 30 L.R.A. 765, 53 Am.St.Rep. 790.

INCERTA QUANTITAS VITIAT ACTUM. 1 Roll. R. 465. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act.

INCERTA QUANTITAS VITIAT ACTUM. 1 Rolle R. 465. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act.

INCERTA PERSONAE. Uncertain persons, as posthumous heirs, a corporation, the poor, a Jew. Da'y. Ir.K.B. 33.

INCERTA QUANTITAS VITIAT ACTUM. 1 Rolle R. 465. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act.

INCERTA PERSONAE. Uncertain persons, as posthumous heirs, a corporation, the poor, a ju-ristic person, or persons who cannot be ascertained until after the execution of a will. Sohm.Inst. Rom.L.104, 458.

INCEST. The crime of sexual intercourse or cohabitation between a man and woman who are related to each other within the degrees wherein marriage is prohibited by law. People v. Stratton, 141 Cal. 604, 75 P. 166. Signs v. State, 35 Okl. Cr. 340, 250 P. 938, 940.

INCESTUOUS ADULTERY. The elements of this offense are that defendant, being married to one person, has had sexual intercourse with another related to the defendant within the prohibited degrees. Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am.Dec. 410.

INCESTUOUS BASTARDS. Incestuous bastards are those who are produced by the illegal connection of two persons who are relations within the degrees prohibited by law. Civ.Code La. art. 183.

INCH. A measure of length, containing onetwelfth part of a foot; originally supposed equal to three barleycorns.

Inch of candle. A mode of sale at one time in use among merchants. A notice is first given upon the exchange, or other public place, as to the time of sale. The goods to be sold are divided into lots, printed papers of which, and the conditions of sale, are published. When the sale takes place, a small piece of candle, about an inch long, is kept burning, and the last bidder, when the candle goes out, is entitled to the lot or parcel for which he bids. Wharton.

Inch of water. The unit for the measurement of a volume of water or of hydraulic power, being the quantity of water which, under a given constant head or pressure, will escape through an orifice one inch square (or a circular orifice having a diameter of one inch) in a vertical plane. Jackson Milling Co. v. Chandos, 82 Wis. 437, 52 N. W. 759.

Miner's inch. The quantity of water which will escape from a ditch or reservoir through an orifice in its side one inch square, the center of the orifice being six inches below the constant level of the water, equivalent to about 1.6 cubic feet of water per minute. Defined by statute in Colorado as "an inch-square orifice under a five-inch pressure, a five-inch pressure being from the top of the orifice of the box put into the banks of the ditch to the surface of water." Mills' Ann.St.Colo. § 4643 (Comp.Laws 1921, § 4111). See Longmire v. Smith, 26 Wash. 439, 67 P. 246, 58 L.R.A. 308. The standard miner's inch of water, as fixed by St.Ca1.1901, p. 660, is the equivalent of 1/2 cubic feet of water per minute measured through any aperture or orifice, making it equivalent to one-fortieth of a second foot. Lillis v. Silver Creek & Panoche Land & Water Co., 32 Cal.App. 668, 163 P. 1040, 1043.

INCHARTARE. To give, or grant, and assure anything by a written instrument.

INCHOATE DOWER. A wife's interest in the lands of her husband during his life, which may become a right of dower upon his death. Smith v. Shaw, 150 Mass. 297, 22 N.E. 924.

A contingent claim or possibility of acquiring dower by outliving husband and arises, not out of contract, but as an institution of law constituting a mere chose in action incapable of transfer by separate grant but susceptible of extinguishment, which is effected by wife joining with husband in deed, which operates as release or satisfaction of interest and not as conveyance. Auerbach v. Chase Nat. Bank of City of New York, 296 N.Y.S. 487, 489, 251 App. Div. 543.

INCHOATE INSTRUMENT. Instruments which the law requires to be registered or recorded are said to be "inchoate" prior to registration, in that they are then good only between the parties and privies and as to persons having notice. Wilkins v. McCorkle, 112 Tenn. 688, 80 S.W. 834.

INCHOATE INTEREST. An interest in real estate which is not a present interest, but which may ripen into a vested estate, if not barred, extinguished, or divested. Rupe v. Hadley, 113 Ind. 416, 16 N.E. 391.

INCHOATE LIEN. The lien of a judgment, from the day of its entry, subject to be defeated by its vacation, becoming a consummate lien if the motion for a new trial is thereafter overruled; such lien then relating back to the original entry of the judgment. Sterling v. Parker-Washington Co., 185 Mo.App. 192, 170 S.W. 1156, 1159.

INCHOATE RIGHT. In patent law. The right of an inventor to his invention while his application is pending which matures as "property" when the patent issues. Mullins Mfg. Co. v. Booth, C. C.A.Mich., 125 F.2d 660, 664.

INCIDENT. Used both substantively and adjec- tively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably, depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. Watts v. Copeland, 170 S.C. 449, 170 S.E. 780, 783. Used as a noun, it denotes anything which inseparably belongs to, or is connected with, or inherent in, another thing, called the "principal." In this sense, a court-baron is incident to a manor. Also, less strictly, it denotes anything which is usually connected with another, or connected for some purposes, though not inseparably. Thus, the right of alienation is incident to an estate in fee-simple, though separable in equity. Cromwell v. Phipps, Sur., 1 N.Y.S. 278; Mount Carmel Fruit Co. v. Webster, 140 Cal. 183, 73 P. 826.

INCIDENTAL. Depending upon or appertaining to something else as primary; something necessary, appertaining to, or depending upon another which is termed the principal; something incidental to the main purpose. The Robin Goodfellow, D.C.Wash., 20 F.2d 924, 925.

The term “incidental powers,” within the rule that a corporation possesses only those powers which its charter confers upon it, either expressly or as incidental to its existence, means such powers as are directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of the powers expressly granted and exist only to enable the corporation to carry out the purpose of its creation. State ex inf. Harvey v. Missouri Athletic Club, 261 Mo. 576, 170 S. W. 904, 909, L.R.A. 1915C, 876, Ann.Cas.1916D, 931; State ex rel. Barrett v. First Nat. Bank, 297 Mo. 397, 249 S. W. 619, 622, 30 A.L.R. 918.

INCIDENTAL TO EMPLOYMENT. A risk is “incidental to employment” within Workmen’s Compensation Act, when it belongs to or is connected with what a workman has to do in fulfilling his contract of service. Barresse v. Standard Silk Dyeing Co., 10 N.J.Misc. 892, 161 A. 653, 654.

INCIDERE. Lat. In the civil and old English law. To fall into; to fall out; to happen; to come to pass. Calvin. To fall upon or under; to become subject or liable to. Incidere in legem, to incur the penalty of a law. Brissonius.

INCILE. Lat. In the civil law. A trench. A cut (incidatur) in the civil law to instigate, persuade, or move another to come to pass. Calvin. To fall upon or under; to become subject or liable to. Incidere in legem.

INCISED WOUND. In medical jurisprudence. A cut or incision on a human body; a wound made by a cutting instrument, such as a razor. Burrill, Circ.Ev. 693; Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 808.

INCISIONATION. Burning to ashes; destruction of a substance by fire, as, the corpse of a murdered person.

INCIPITUR. Lat. It is begun; it begins. In old practice, when the pleadings in an action at law, instead of being recited at large on the issue-roll, were set out merely by their commencements, this was described as entering the incipitur; e., the beginning.

INCISED WOUND. In medical jurisprudence. A cut or incision on a human body; a wound made by a cutting instrument, such as a razor. Burrill, Circ.Ev. 693; Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 808.

INCITE. To arouse; urge; provoke; encourage; spur on; goad; stir up; instigate; set in motion; as, to “incite” a riot. Also, generally, in criminal law to instigate, persuade, or move another to commit a crime; in this sense nearly synonymous with “abet.” Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33, 36 N.W. 310; United States v. Ault, D.C.Wash., 263 F. 800; 810; Commonwealth v. Eggn, 113 Pa.Super. 375, 173 A. 764, 766.

INCIVILE. Lat. Irregular; improper; out of the due course of law.

INCIVILE EST, NISI TOTA SENTENTIA IN- SPECTA, DE ALIQUA PARTE JUDICARE. It is irregular, or legally improper, to pass an opinion upon any part of a sentence, without examining the whole. Hob. 171a.

INCIVISM. Unfriendliness to the state or government of which one is a citizen.

INCLAUSA. In old records. A home close or inclosure near the house. Paroch. Antiq. 31; Cowell.

INCLOSE. To surround; to encompass; to bound; fence, or hem in, on all sides. White Chapel Memorial Ass’n v. Willson, 260 Mich. 238, 244 N.W. 460. To shut up. “To inclose a jury,” in Scotch practice, is to shut them up in a room by themselves. Bell. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Harris, 28 Kan. 210; Campbell v. Gilbert, 57 Ala. 569.

INCLOSED LANDS. Lands which are actually inclosed and surrounded with fences. Kimball v. Carter, 95 Va. 77, 27 S.E. 823, 38 L.R.A. 570.

INCLOSURE. In English law. Act of freeing land from rights of common, commonable rights, and generally all rights which obstruct cultivation and the productive employment of labor on the soil.

INCLOSURE ACTS. English statutes regulating the subject of inclosure. The most notable was that of 1801.

INCLOSURE COMMISSION ACT, 1845. The statute 8 and 9 Vict. c. 118, establishing a board of commissioners for England and Wales and empowering them, on the application of persons interested to the amount of one-third of the value of the land, and provided the consent of persons interested to the amount of two-thirds of the land and of the lord of the manor (in case the land be waste of a manor) be ultimately obtained, to inquire into the case and to report to parliament as to the expediency of making the inclosure. 1 Steph.Com. 655.

INCLUSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIIUS.
The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another. The certain designation of one person is an absolute exclusion of all others. N Coke, 58b; Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d 321, 325.

INCLUSIVE. Embraced; comprehended; comprehending the stated limits or extremes. Opposed to "exclusive."

INCLUSIVE SURVEY. In land law, one which includes within its boundaries prior claims excepted from the computation of the area within such boundaries and excepted in the grant. Stockton v. Morris, 19 S.E. 531, 39 W.Va. 432.

INCOLA. Lat. In the civil law. An inhabitant; a dweller or resident. Properly, one who has transferred his domicile to any country.

INCOME. The return in money from one's business, labor, or capital invested; gains, profits, or private revenue. In re Slocum, 169 N.Y. 153, 62 N.E. 130.

The gain derived from capital, from labor or effort, or both of them combined, including profit or gain through sale or conversion of capital; income is not a gain accruing to capital or a growth in the value of the investment, but is a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value, proceeding from the property, severed from the capital, however invested or employed, and coming in, being derived, that is, received or drawn by the recipient for his separate use, benefit, and disposal. Goodrich v. Edwards, 41 S.Ct. 390, 255 U.S. 527, 65 L.Ed. 758. The true increase in amount of wealth which comes to a person during a stated period of time. Commissioner of Corporations and Taxation v. Filoon, 310 Mass. 374, 38 N.E.2d 693, 700.

INCOME TAX. A tax relating to the product or income from property or from business pursuits; a tax on the yearly profits arising from property, professions, trades, or offices; a tax on a person's income, emoluments, profits, and the like, or the excess thereof over a certain amount. Interstate Bond Co. v. State Revenue Commission of Georgia, 50 Ga.App. 744, 179 S.E. 559.

An income tax is not levied upon property, funds, or profits, but upon the right of an individual or corporation to receive income or profits. Paine v. City of Oshkosh, 190 Wis. 69, 208 N.W. 790, 791. Under various constitutional and statutory provisions, a tax on incomes is sometimes said to be an excise tax and not a tax on property. Hattiesburg Grocery Co. v. Robertson, 126 Miss. 34, 88 So. 4, 5, 25 A.L.R. 748; nor on business, but a tax on the proceeds arising therefrom, Young v. Illinois Athletic Club, 310 Ill. 75, 141 N.E. 369, 371, 30 A.L.R. 985. But in other cases an income tax is said to be a property and not a personal or excise tax: Commonwealth v. P. Horillard Co., 129 Va. 74, 105 S.E. 683, 684; Kennedy v. Commissioner of Corporations & Taxation, 256 Mass. 426, 152 N.E. 747, 748, 749.

An "excise tax" is an indirect charge for the privilege of following an occupation or trade, or carrying on a business; while an "income tax" is a direct tax imposed upon income, and is as directly imposed as is a tax on land.

INCOME TAX DEFICIENCY. Exists whenever taxpayer has failed to make adequate return of income, notwithstanding lack of determination by commissioner or his agents. Moore v. Cleveland Ry. Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 108 F.2d 656, 659.

INCOMMODUM NON SOLVIT ARGUMENTUM. An inconvenience does not destroy an argument.

INCOMMUNICATION. In Spanish law. The condition of a prisoner who is not permitted to see or to speak with any person visiting him during his confinement. A person accused cannot be subjected to this treatment unless it be expressly ordered by the judge, for some grave offense, and it cannot be continued for a longer period than is absolutely necessary. This precaution is resorted to for the purpose of preventing the accused from knowing beforehand the testimony of the witnesses, or from attempting to corrupt them and concert such measures as will efface the traces of his guilt. As soon, therefore, as the danger of his doing so has ceased, the interdiction ceases likewise. Escriche.

INCOMMUTABLE. Not capable of or entitled to be commuted. See Commutation.

INCOMPATIBILITY. Incapability of existing or being exercised together.

Thus the relations of landlord and of tenant cannot exist in one man at the same time in reference to the same land. “Incompatibility” which at common law operates to vacate one office by reason of incumbency of another exists when the character and nature of offices or relation to each other are such that one person should not hold both because of the contrariety and antagonism which would result toward incumbent of one office in attempt to discharge duties of other office faithfully and impartially. It is apparent when the holder of one office is subordinate to or has supervision over the other, or has the power of appointment, removal, or punishment of that other, or the audit of his accounts, or the regulation of his compensation. State ex rel. Schenck v. Barrett, 121 Conn. 237, 184 A. 379, 381.

INCOMPATIBLE. Not compatible, incapable of harmonizing or agreeing, mutually repelling, incongruous. And two or more relations, offices, functions, or rights which cannot naturally, or may not legally, exist in or be exercised by the same person at the same time, are said to be incompatible. People v. Green, 46 How.Prac., N.Y., 170; Com. v. Sheriff, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 276; State v. Johnson, 37 N.M. 280, 21 P.2d 813, 89 A.L.R. 1368. See, also, Incompatibility.

INCOMPETENCY. Lack of ability, legal qualification, or fitness to discharge the required duty. In re Leonard’s Estate, 95 Mich. 295, 54 N.W. 1082.

In New York, the word “incompetency” is used to designate the condition or legal status of a person who is unable or unfitted to manage his own affairs by reason of insanity, imbecility, or feeble-mindedness, and for whom, therefore, a committee may be appointed; and such a person is designated and “incompetent.” In re Palestine’s Estate, 270 N.Y.S. 844, 151 Misc. 100.

In French law. Inability or insufficiency of a judge to try a case brought before him, proceeding from lack of jurisdiction.

INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE. Evidence which is not admissible under the established rules of evidence; evidence which the law does not permit to be presented at all, or in relation to the particular matter, on account of lack of originality or of some defect in the witness, the document, or the nature of the evidence itself. Texas Brewing Co. v. Dickey, Tex.Civ.App., 43 S.W. 578; Bell v. Bumstead, 14 N.Y.S. 697, 60 Hun. 580.
As applied to evidence, the word "incompetent" means not proper to be received; inadmissible, as distinguished from that which the court should admit for the consideration of the jury, though they may not find it worthy of credence.

INCONCLUSIVE. That which may be disproved or rebutted; not shutting out further proof or consideration. Applied to evidence and presumptions.

INCONSISTENT. Mutually repugnant or contradictory; contrary, the one to the other, so that both cannot stand, but the acceptance or establishment of the one implies the abrogation or abandonment of the other; as, in speaking of "inconsistent defenses," or the repeal by a statute of "all laws inconsistent herewith." Borough of Oakland v. Board of Conservation and Development, 98 N.J.L. 99, 118 A. 787, 788. Berry v. City of Fort Worth, Tex.Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 95, 103.

INCONSULTO. Lat. In the civil law. Unadvisedly; unintentionally. Dig. 28, 4, 1. INCONTESTABILITY CLAUSE. In life policy means that within the limits of the coverage, the policy shall stand unaffected by any defense that it was invalid in its inception or thereafter became invalid by reason of a condition broken by insured. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. v. Weining, 290 N.Y. 6, 47 N.E.2d 418, 421. Jolley v. Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co., 199 N.C. 269, 154 S.E. 400, 402.

INCONTINENT. See In Continenti.

INCONVENIENCE. In the rule that statutes should be so construed as to avoid "inconvenience," this means, as applied to the public, the sacrifice or jeopardizing of important public interests or hampering the legitimate activities of government or the transaction of public business, and, as applied to individuals, serious hardship or injustice. Black, Interp.Laws, 102; Betts v. U. S., C.C.A.Mass., 132 F. 237, 65 C.C.A. 452.

INCOPOLITUS. A proctor or vicar.

INCORPORAMUS. We incorporate. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England. 1 Bl.Comm. 473; 3 Steph.Comm. 173.

INCORPORATE. To create a corporation; to confer a corporate franchise upon determinate persons. To declare that another document shall be taken as part of the document in which the declaration is made as much as if it were set out at length therein. Railroad Co. v. Cupp, 8 Ind.App. 388, 35 N.E. 703.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY. A society of attorneys and solvent whose function it is to carry out the acts of parliament and orders of court with reference to articulated clerks; to keep an alphabetical roll of solicitors; to issue certificates to persons duly admitted and enrolled, and to exercise a general control over the conduct of solicitors in practice, and to bring cases of misconduct before the judges. 3 Steph. Corn. 217.

INCORPORATION. The act or process of forming or creating a corporation; the formation of a legal or political body, with the quality of perpetual existence and succession, unless limited by the act of incorporation. Abbott v. Limited Mut. Compensation Ins. Co., 30 Cal.App.2d 157, 85 P.2d 961, 964.

The method of making one document of any kind become a part of another separate document by referring to the former in the latter, and declaring that the former shall be taken and considered as a part of the latter the same as if it were fully set out therein. This is more fully described as "incorporation by reference." If the one document is copied at length in the other, it is called "actual incorporation."

In the civil law. The union of one domain to another.

INCORPOREAL. Without body; not of material nature; the opposite of "corporeal," (q. v.). INCORPOREAL CHATTELS. A class of incorporeal rights growing out of or incident to things personal; such as patent-rights and copyrights. 2 Steph.Comm. 72. See Boreel v. New York, 2 Sandf. (N.Y.) 559.

INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS. See Hereditaments.

INCORPOREAL PROPERTY. In the civil law. That which consists in legal right merely. The same as choses in action at common law.

INCORPOREAL THINGS. In the civil law. Things which can neither be seen nor touched, such as consist in rights only, such as the mind alone can perceive. Inst. 2, 2; Civ. Code La. art. 460; Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 14 So. 692.

INCORRIGIBLE. Incapable of being corrected, amended, or improved; with respect to juvenile offenders, unmanageable by parents or guardians. People v. Purcell, 70 Colo. 399, 201 P. 881. Shinn v. Barrow, Tex.Civ.App., 121 S.W.2d 450, 451.

INCORRIGIBLE ROGUE. A species of rogue or offender, described in the statutes 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38. 460; Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 14 So. 692.

INCORRUPTIBLE. That which cannot be affected by immoral or debasing influences, such as bribery or the hope of gain or advancement.

INCROACHMENT. An unlawful gaining upon the right or possession of another. See Encroachment.

INCUMBENT. A person who is in present possession of an office; one who is legally authorized to discharge the duties of an office. State v. Blakemore, 15 S.W. 960, 104 Mo. 340.

In ecclesiastical law, the term signifies a clergyman who is in possession of a benefice.

INCUMBER. To incumber land is to make it subject to a charge or liability; e. g., by mortgaging it. Incumbrances include not only mortgages and other voluntary charges, but also liens, lites pendentes, registered judgments, and writs of execution, etc. Sweet; Newhall v. Insurance Co., 52 Me. 181.

INCUMBRE. Any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in another to the diminution of its value, but consistent with the passing of the fee. Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N.Y. 81, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L.R.A. 789, 10 AntSt.Rep. 432; Miller v. Schwinn, Inc., 113 F.2d 748, 751, 752, 753, 72 App. D.C. 282.

The term "incumbrance" is sometimes used to denote a burden or charge on personal property as e. g. a chattel mortgage on a stock of goods. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Jones, 31 Ariz. 8, 250 P. 248, 251.

INCUMBRANCER. The holder of an incumbrance, e. g., a mortgage, on the estate of another. De Voe v. Rundle, 33 Wash. 604, 74 P. 836.

INCUMBRANCES, COVENANT AGAINST. See Covenant.

INCUR. To have liabilities cast upon one by act or operation of law, as distinguished from contract, where the party acts affirmatively. Beekman v. Van Dolsen, 70 Hun, 288, 24 N.Y.S. 414. Boise Development Co. v. City of Boise, 26 Idaho 347, 143 P. 531, 534.

INCURABLE DISEASE. Any disease which has reached an incurable stage in the patient afflicted therewith, according to general state of knowledge of the medical profession. Freeman v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 54 Okl. 531, 154 P. 56, 57, L.R.A. 1916D, 436; State Board of Medical Examiners v. Jordan, 92 Wash. 234, 158 P. 982, 985.

INCURRMENT. L. Thence; thenceforth; thereof; thereupon; for that cause.

INDE. Lat. Thence; thenceforth; thereof; thereupon; for that cause.
INDE DAVE LEGES NE FORTIOR OMNIA POSSET. Laws are made to prevent the stronger from having the power to do everything. Da27. Ir. K. B. 36.

INDEBITATUS ASSUMPSIT. Lat. Being indebted, he promised or undertook. That form of the action of assumptis in which the declaration alleges a debt or obligation to be due from the defendant, and then avers that, in consideration thereof, he promised to pay or discharge the same.

This form of action is brought to recover in damages the amount of the debt or demand and upon the trial the jury will, according to evidence, give verdict for whole or part of that sum; 3 Bla.Com. 155; Selw.N.P. 68; whereas debt and covenant proceed directly for the debt, and damages are given only for the detention of the debt.

INDEBITI SOLUTIO. Lat. In the civil and Scotch law. A payment of what is not due. When made through ignorance or by mistake, the amount paid might be recovered back by an action termed "conditio indebiti." (Dig. 12, 6.) Bell.

INDEBITUM. In the civil law. Not due or owing. (Dig. 12, 6.) Calvin.

Strictly the word implies an absolute or complete liability. McCrea v. First Nat. Bank, 162 Minn. 455, 203 N.W. 220; West Florida Grocery Co. v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co., 74 Fla. 220, 77 So. 209, 211, L.R.A.1918B. 968. A contingent liability, such as that of a surety before the principal has made default, does not constitute indebtedness. On the other hand, the money need not be immediately payable. Obligations yet to become due constitute indebtedness, as well as those already due. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Goodfellow, 9 Mo. 149. And in a broad sense and in common understanding the word may mean anything that is due and owing. Jones v. Heinzle, 75 Ind.App. 431, 130 N.E. 815, 816.

Involuntary indebtedness. Of a county, a liability imposed by law, which the county is not privileged to evade or postpone. Dexter Horton Trust & Savings Bank v. Clearwater County, D.C. Idaho, 235 F. 743, 756; Wingate v. Clatsop County, 71 Or. 94, 142 P. 561, 562.

Voluntary indebtedness. One which a county is at liberty to evade or postpone until means are provided for the payment of the expenses incident thereto; opposed to involuntary indebtedness. Wingate v. Clatsop County, 71 Or. 94, 142 P. 561, 562.

This is scarcely a technical term of the law, and is not susceptible of exact definition or description in its judicial uses. The question whether or not a given act, publication, etc., is indecent is for the court and jury in the particular case.

INDECENT. Offensive to common propriety; offending against modesty or delicacy; grossly vulgar; lewd; unseemly; unbecoming; indecorous; unfit to be seen or heard. Hutcheson v. State, 24 Ga.App. 54, 99 S.E. 715; Wood v. State, 45 Ga.App. 783, 165 S.E. 908.

Indecent assault. The act of a male person taking indecent liberties with the person of a female. Martin v. Jansen, 113 Wash. 290, 193 P. 674, 675; Commonwealth v. Gregory, 132 Pa.Super. 507, 1 A.2d 501, without her consent and against her will, but with no intent to commit the crime of rape.

Indecent exhibition. Any exhibition contra bonos mores, as the taking a dead body for the purpose of dissection or public exhibition. 2 T.R. 734.

Indecent exposure. Exposure to sight of the private parts of the body in a lewd or indecent manner in a public place. It is an indictable offense at common law, and by statute in many of the states. Commonwealth v. Broadland, 315 Mass. 20, 51 N.E.2d 961, 962. See, further, Exposure of Person.

Indecent liberties. In the statutory offense of "taking indecent liberties with the person of a female child," this phrase means such liberties as the common sense of society would regard as indecent and improper. According to some authorities, it involves an assault or attempt at sexual intercourse, (State v. Kunz, 90 Minn. 526, 97 N. W. 131,) but according to others, it is not necessary that the liberties or familiarities should have related to the private parts of the child, (People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 86, 56 N.W. 1102.)

Indecent publications. Such as are offensive to modesty and delicacy; obscene; lewd; tending to the corruption of morals. Dunlop v. U. S., 17 S. Ct. 375, 165 U.S. 486, 41 L.Ed. 799.

Public indecency. This phrase has no fixed legal meaning, is vague and indefinite, and cannot, in itself, imply a definite offense. The courts, by a kind of judicial legislation, in England and the United States, have usually limited the operation of the term to public displays of the naked person, the publication, sale, or exhibition of obscene books and prints, or the exhibition of a monster,—acts which have a direct bearing on public morals, and affect the body of society. Irven v. State, 138 Tex.Cr.R. 368, 136 S.W.2d 608, 609.

INDECIMABLE. In old English law. That which is not titheable, or liable to pay tithe. 2 Inst. 490.

INDEFEASIBLE. That which cannot be defeated, revoked, or made void. This term is usually applied to an estate or right which cannot be defeated.

INDEFINITE. Without fixed boundaries or distinguishing characteristics; not definite, determinate, or precise. In re Knoll’s Estate, 262 N.Y.S. 619, 146 Misc. 613.

INDEFINITE FAILURE OF ISSUE. A failure of issue not merely at the death of the party whose issue are referred to, but at any subsequent period, however remote. 1 Steph.Comm. 562. A failure of issue whenever it shall happen, sooner or later, without any fixed, certain, or definite period within which it must happen. 4 Kent.Comm. 274. Anderson v. Jackson, 16 Johns. (N.Y.) 399, 8 Am.Dec. 330.

INDEFINITE LEGACY. See Legacy.

INDEFINITE NUMBER. A number which may be increased or diminished at pleasure.

INDEFINITE PAYMENT. In Scotch law. Payment without specification. Indefinite payment is where a debtor, owning several debts to one creditor, makes a payment to the creditor, without specifying to which of the debts he means the payment to be applied. See Bell.

INDEFINITUM AEQUIPOLLET UNIVERSALIS. The undefined is equivalent to the whole. 1 Vent. 368.

INDEFINITUM SUPPLET LOCUM UNIVERSALIS. The undefined or general supplies the place of the whole. Branch. Princ. 4 Co. 77.

INDEMNIFICATUS. Lat. Indemnified. See Indemnify.

INDEMNIFY. To save harmless; to secure against loss or damage; to give security for the reimbursement of a person in case of an anticipated loss falling upon him. Hasbrouck v. Carr, 19 N.M. 586, 145 P. 133, 136.

To make good; to compensate; to make reimbursement to one of a loss already incurred by him. Cousins v. Paxton & Gallagher Co., 98 N. W. 277, 122 Iowa 465; U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Williams, 148 Md. 289, 129 A. 660, 664.

INDEMNIS. Lat. Without hurt, harm, or damage; harmless.

INDEMNITEE. The person who, in a contract of indemnity, is to be indemnified or protected by the other. Hasbrouck v. Carr, 19 N.M. 586, 145 P. 133, 136.

INDEMNITOR. The person who is bound, by an indemnity contract, to indemnify or protect the other. Hasbrouck v. Carr, 19 N.M. 586, 145 P. 133, 136.

INDEMNITY. A collateral or assurance, by which one person engages to secure another against an anticipated loss or to prevent him from being damned if by the legal consequences of an act or forbearance on the part of one of the parties or of some third person. National Bank of Tifton v. Smith, 142 Ga. 663, 83 S.E. 526, 528, L. R.A.1915B, 1116.

The term is also used to denote a compensation given to make the person whole from a loss already sustained; as where the government gives indemnity for private property taken by it for public use. Proctor v. Dillon, 235 Mass. 538, 129 N.E. 265, 269. It means, also, restitution or reimbursement. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Georgia Power Co., 51 Ga.App. 579, 181 S.E. 111.

A legislative act, assuring a general dispensation from punishment or exemption from prosecution to persons involved in offenses, omissions of official duty, or acts in excess of authority, is called an indemnity; strictly it is an act of indemnity. Loss. See Loss.

Thus, insurance is a contract of indemnity. So an indemnifying bond is given to a sheriff who fears to proceed under an execution where the property is claimed by a stranger.

INDEMNITY AGAINST LIABILITY. A contract to indemnify when liability of person indemnified arises, irrespective of whether person indemnified has suffered actual loss. Indemnity against loss, on the other hand, does not render indemnitor liable until person indemnified makes payment or sustains loss. City of Topeka v. Ritchie, 102 Kan. 384, 170 P. 1003, 1004.

INDEMNITY BOND. A bond for the payment of a penal sum conditioned to be void if the obligor shall indemnify and save harmless the obligee against some anticipated loss.

INDEMNITY CONTRACT. A contract between two parties whereby the one undertakes and agrees to indemnify the other against loss or damage arising from some contemplated act on the part of the indemnitor, or from some responsibility assumed by the indemnatee, or from the claim or demand of a third person, that is, to make good to him such pecuniary damage as he may suffer. See Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 99, 18 L.Ed. 752.

INDEMNITY LANDS. Lands granted to railroads, in aid of their construction, being portions of the public domain, to be selected in lieu of other parcels embraced within the original grant, but which were lost to the railroad by previous disposition or by reservation for other purposes. Altschul v. Clark, 39 Or. 315, 65 P. 991.

INDEMNITY POLICY. As distinguished from general liability policy, a policy on which no action can be maintained except to indemnify for money actually paid. Most v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Mo.App., 196 S.W. 1064, 1065.

See Indemnity insurance and Liability insurance under Insurance.

INDENIZATION. The act of making a denizen, or of naturalizing.

INDENT, n. In American law. A certificate or indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the Revolution, for the principal or interest of the public debt. Webster; U. S. v. Irwin, 26 Fed.Cas. 546.

INDENT, v. To cut in a serrated or waiving line. In old conveyancing, if a deed was made by more parties than one, it was usual to make as many copies of it as there were parties, and each was cut or indented (either in acute angles, like the teeth of a saw, or in a waving line) at the top or side, to tally or correspond with the others, and the deed so made was called an "indenture." Anciendy, both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters written between them through which the parchment was cut, but afterwards, the word or letters being omitted, indenting came into use, the idea of which was that the genuineness of each part might be proved by its fitting into the angles cut in the other. But at length even this was discontinued, and at present the term serves only, to give name to the species of deed executed by; two or more parties, as opposed to a deed-poll (q. v.) 2 Bl. Comm. 295.

To bind by indentures; to apprentice; as to indent a young man to a shoe-maker. Webster.

INDENTURE. A deed to which two or more persons are parties, and in which these enter into reciprocal and corresponding grants or obligations towards each other; whereas a deed-poll is properly one in which only the party making it executes it, or binds himself by it as a deed, though the grantors or grantees therein may be several in number. 3 Washb, Real Prop. 311, See Indent, v.

INDENTURE OF A FINE. Indentures made and engrossed at the chirographer's office and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee, usually beginning with the words: "Hec est finalis concordia." And then reciting the whole proceedings at length. 2 Bla, Corn. 351.

INDENTURE OF APPRENTICESHIP. A contract in two parts, by which a person, generally a minor, is bound to serve another in his trade, art, or occupation for a stated time, on condition of being instructed in the same.

INDEPENDENCE. The state or condition of being free from dependence, subjection, or control. A state of perfect irresponsibility. Political independence is the attribute of a nation or state exercising an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods and without being subject to the control of his employer except as to the result of the work. People v. Orange County Road Const. Co., 175 N.Y. 84, 67 N.E. 129, 65 L.R.A. 33. Fox v. Dunning, 124 Okl. 228, 255 P. 582, 584; Bell v. State, 153 Md. 333, 138 A. 227, 228, 58 A.L.R. 1051.

One who exercises an independent employment and contracts to do a piece of work according to his own judgment and methods, and without being subject to his employer except as to the results of the work, and who has the right to employ and direct the action of the workmen, independently of such employer and freed from any superior authority in him to say how the specified work shall be done, or what the laborers shall do as it progresses. Johnson v. Asheville Hosiery Co., 199 N.C. 38, 153 S.E. 591, 593. It is very generally held that the right of control as to the mode of doing the work contracted for is the principal consideration in determining whether one employed is an "independent contractor" or servant. Thompson v. Twiss, 90 Conn. 444, 97 A. 328, 330, L.R.A.1916E, 506. If the employee is merely subject to the control or direction of the employer as to the result to be obtained, he is an independent contractor; if he is subject to the control of the employer as to the means to be employed, he is not an independent contractor. Gulf Refining Co. v. Wilkinson, 94 Fla. 664, 114 So. 503. Nettleship v. Shipman, 161 Wash. 292, 296 P. 1056, 1057.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACT, See Contract.

INDEPENDENT ADJUSTER. A person, firm or corporation who holds himself or itself out for employment to more than one insurance company, is not a regular employee of the company, does not work exclusively for one company and is paid in each case assigned for time consumed and expenses incurred. Cole v. State, 37 N.Y.S.2d 1002, 1006, 179 Misc. 172.

INDEPENDENT ADJUSTER. A person, firm or corporation who holds himself or itself out for employment to more than one insurance company, is not a regular employee of the company, does not work exclusively for one company and is paid in each case assigned for time consumed and expenses incurred. Cole v. State, 37 N.Y.S.2d 1002, 1006, 179 Misc. 172.

INDEPENDENT ADJUSTER. A person, firm or corporation who holds himself or itself out for employment to more than one insurance company, is not a regular employee of the company, does not work exclusively for one company and is paid in each case assigned for time consumed and expenses incurred. Cole v. State, 37 N.Y.S.2d 1002, 1006, 179 Misc. 172.

INDEPENDENT ADVICE. Concerning a trust deed or will which must be shown where a fiduciary relationship exists, means that the donor had the preliminary benefit of conferring fully and privately upon the subject of his intended gift with a person who was not only competent to inform him correctly as to its legal effect, but who was, furthermore, so disassociated from the interests of the donee as to be in a position to advise with the donor impartially and confidentially as to the consequences to himself of his proposed benefaction. Madden v. Glanghart, 125 Kan. 466, 265 P. 42, 45.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACT, See Contract.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. One who, exercising an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods and without being subject to the control of his employer except as to the result of the work. People v. Orange County Road Const. Co., 175 N.Y. 84, 67 N.E. 129, 65 L.R.A. 33. Fox v. Dunning, 124 Okl. 228, 255 P. 582, 584; Bell v. State, 153 Md. 333, 138 A. 227, 228, 58 A.L.R. 1051.

One who exercises an independent employment and contracts to do a piece of work according to his own judgment and methods, and without being subject to his employer except as to the results of the work, and who has the right to employ and direct the action of the workmen, independently of such employer and freed from any superior authority in him to say how the specified work shall be done, or what the laborers shall do as it progresses. Johnson v. Asheville Hosiery Co., 199 N.C. 38, 153 S.E. 591, 593. It is very generally held that the right of control as to the mode of doing the work contracted for is the principal consideration in determining whether one employed is an "independent contractor" or servant. Thompson v. Twiss, 90 Conn. 444, 97 A. 328, 330, L.R.A.1916E, 506. If the employee is merely subject to the control or direction of the employer as to the result to be obtained, he is an independent contractor; if he is subject to the control of the employer as to the means to be employed, he is not an independent contractor. Gulf Refining Co. v. Wilkinson, 94 Fla. 664, 114 So. 503. Nettleship v. Shipman, 161 Wash. 292, 296 P. 1056, 1057.

INDEPENDENT COVENANT, See Covenant.

INDEPENDENTER SE HABET ASSECURATIO A VIAGGIO NAVIS. The voyage insured is an independent or distinct thing from the voyage of the ship. 3 Kent, Comm. 318, note.

INDETERMINATE. That which is uncertain, or not particularly designated; as if I sell you one hundred bushels of wheat, without stating what wheat. 1 Bouv. Inst. no. 950.

INDETERMINATE OBLIGATION. See Obligation.

INDETERMINATE SENTENCE. A sentence to imprisonment for the maximum period defined by law, subject to termination by the parole board or other agency at any time after service of the minimum period. Such a sentence is invalid unless specifically authorized by statute. 24 C.J.S. p. 1217.

INDEX. A book containing references, alphabetically arranged, to the contents of a series or collection of volumes; or an addition to a single volume or set of volumes containing such references to its contents.
INDEX

INDEX ANIMI SERMO. Language is the exponent of the intention. The language of a statute or instrument is the best guide to the intention. Broom, Max, 622.

INDIAN COUNTRY. As the term is used in the federal statutes, is a country to which the Indians retained the right of use and occupancy, involving under certain restrictions freedom of action and of enjoyment in their capacity as a distinct people, and ceases to be such when their title is extinguished, unless by virtue of some reservation expressed at the time and clearly appearing. Schaap v. United States, C.C.A.Ark., 210 F. 853, 855; Royal Brewing Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., D.C.Kan., 211 F. 146, 148. This term does not necessarily import territory owned and occupied by Indians, but it means all those portions of the United States designated by this name in the legislation of Congress. Waters v. Campbell, 4 Sawy. 121, Fed.Cas. No. 17,264.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS ACTS. As early as May 19, 1796, an act was passed by Congress, providing an eventual indemnification to citizens of the United States for depredations committed by Indians in taking or destroying their property; 1 St.L. 472. Other acts of a similar character were passed from time to time. By the act of March 3, 1891, Congress conferred on the court of claims jurisdiction of claims for property taken and destroyed by Indians.

INDICARE. Lat. In the civil law. To show or discover. To fix or tell the price of a thing. Calvin. To inform against; to accuse.

INDICATIF. An abolished writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a court-christian to the queen’s bench. Enc. Lond.

INDICATION. In the law of evidence. A sign or token; a fact pointing to some inference or conclusion. Burrill, Circ. 251, 252, 263, 275.

INDICATIVE EVIDENCE. This is not evidence properly so called, but the mere suggestion of evidence proper, which may possibly be procured if the suggestion is followed up. Brown.

INDICATIVE. In English practice. A writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by the clerk of another patron, for tithes amounting to a fourth part of the value of the living. 3 Bl.Comm. 91; 3 Steph.Comm. 711. So termed from the emphatic word of the Latin form. Reg.Orig. 35b, 36.

IN DICTA. Signs; indications. Circumstances which point to the existence of a given fact as probable, but not certain. For example, "indicia of partnership" are any circumstances which would induce the belief that a given person was in reality, though not ostensibly, a member of a given firm.

The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely synonymous with circumstantial evidence. It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather than the inferences themselves. Graham Ice Cream Co. v. Petros, 127 Neb. 172, 254 N.W. 869.

INDICIO. In the civil law. A sign or mark. A species of proof, answering very nearly to the circumstantial evidence of the common law. Best, Pres. p. 13, § 11, note; Wills, Circ. Ev, 34.

INDICT. See Indictment.

INDICTABLE. Proper or necessary to be prosecuted by process of indictment. Indictable offenses embrace common-law offenses or statutory offenses the punishments for which are infamous. Lakes v. Goodloe, 195 Ky, 240, 242 S.W. 632, 639.

INDICTED. Charged in an indictment with a criminal offense. See Indictment.

INDICTEE. A person indicted.

INDICTIO. In old public law. A declaration; a proclamation. Indictio belli, a declaration or induction of war. An indictment.

INDICATION, CYCLE OF. A mode of computing time by the space of fifteen years, instituted by Constantine the Great; originally the period for the payment of certain taxes. Some of the charters of King Edgar and Henry III. are dated by indications. Wharton.

INDICTMENT. An accusation in writing found and presented by a grand jury, legally convoked and sworn, to the court in which it is impaneled, charging that a person therein named has done some act, or been guilty of some omission, which, by law, is a public offense, punishable on indictment. Kennedy v. State, 86 Tex.Cr.R. 450, 216 S.W. 1086; State v. Engler, 217 Iowa 138, 251 N.W. 88.

A presentment differs from an indictment in that it is an accusation made by a grand jury of their own motion, either upon their own observation and knowledge, or upon evidence before them; while an indictment is preferred at the suit of the government, and is usually framed in the first instance by the prosecuting officer of the government, and by him laid before, the grand jury, to be found or ignored. An information resembles in its form and substance an indictment, but is filed at the mere discretion of the proper law officer of the government, without the intervention or approval of a grand jury, and an affidavit is a charge made and preferred by an individual. 2 Story,
Joint Indictment

When several offenders are joined in the same indictment, as when principals in the first and second degree, and accessories before and after the fact, are all joined in the same indictment. 2 Hale, P.C. 173; Brown.

INDICTMENT DE FELONY EST CONTRA PACEM DOMINI REGIS, CORONAM ET DIGNITATEM SUAM, IN GENERE ET NON IN INDIVIDUO; QUAIA IN ANGLIA NON EST INTERREGNUM. Jenk. Cent. 205. Indictment for felony is against the peace of our lord the king, his crown and dignity in general, and not against his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.

INDICTOR. He who causes another to be indicted. The latter is sometimes called the "indictee."

INDIFFERENT. Impartial; unbiased; disinterested. People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. (N.Y.) 122; Fox v. Hills, 1 Conn. 307.

INDIGENA. In old English law. A subject born; one born within the realm, or naturalized by act of parliament. Co.Litt. 8a. The opposite of "alienigena," (q. v.).

INDIGENT. In a general sense, one who is needy and poor, or one who has not sufficient property to furnish him a living nor anyone able to support him to whom he is entitled to look for support. Storrs Agricultural School v. Whitney, 54 Conn. 342, 8 A. 141.

INDIGENT INSANE PERSON. An insane person with insufficient estate to pay for his maintenance in the hospital, after providing for those who could claim his support. Massachusetts General Hospital v. Inhabitants of Belmont, 233 Mass. 190, 124 N.E. 21, 23.

INDIGNITY. In the law of divorce, a species of cruelty addressed to the mind, sensibilities, self-respect, or personal honor of the subject, rather than to the body, and defined as "unmerited contemptuous conduct towards another; any action towards another which manifests contempt for him; contumely, incivility, or injury accompanied with insult." Goodman v. Goodman, 80 Mo.App. 281; 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 826; O’I-Tern v. O’Hern, 206 Mo.App. 651, 228 S.W. 533, 536.

The phrase "indignities to the person," as used in statutes, has reference to bodily indignities, as distinguished from such as may be offered to the mind, sensibilities, or reputation. Kurtz v. Kurtz, 38 Ark. 123. But compare Miller v. Miller, 78 N.C. 105.

INDIRECT. Not direct in relation or connection; not having an immediate bearing or application; not related in the natural way. Runyon v. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co., 48 Ohio App. 251, 192 N.E. 882, 883. Almost always used in law in opposition to "direct," though not the only antithesis of the latter word, as the terms "collateral" and "cross" are sometimes used in contrast with "direct."

INDIRECT EVIDENCE. Is that which only tends to establish the issue by proof of various facts sustaining by their consistency the hypothesis claimed. It consists of both inferences and presumptions. Lake County v. Neilon, 44 Or. 14, 74 P. 212, 214.

See, also, Circumstantial Evidence; Inference; Presumption.

INDISPENSABLE. That which cannot be spared, omitted, or dispensed with.

INDISPENSABLE EVIDENCE. That without which a particular fact cannot be proved. Ballinger’s Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 689 (Code 1930, § 9-113).

INDISPENSABLE PARTIES. In a suit in equity, those who not only have an interest in the subject-matter of the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting their interests or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Kendig v. Dean, 97 U.S. 425, 24 L.Ed. 1061. State of Washington v. United States, C.C.A.Or. & Wash., 87 F.2d 421, 426, 427, 429, 431.

INDISTANTER. Forthwith; without delay.

INDITEE. L. Fr. In old English law. A person indicted. Mirr. c. 1, § 3; 9 Coke, pref.

INDIVIDUAL. As a noun, this term denotes a single person as distinguished from a group or class, and also, very commonly, a private or natural person as distinguished from a partnership, corporation, or association; but it is said that this restrictive signification is not necessarily inherent in the word, and that it may, in proper cases, include artificial "persons. State v. Bell Telephone Co., 36 Ohio St. 310, 38 Am.Rep. 583.

As an adjective, "individual" means pertaining or belonging to, or characteristic of, one single person, either in opposition to a firm, association, or corporation, or considered in his relation there-to.

INDIVIDUAL ASSETS. In the law of partnership, property belonging to a member of a partnership as his separate and private fortune, apart from the assets or property belonging to the firm as such or the partner's interest therein.

INDIVIDUAL DEBTS. Such as are due from a member of a partnership in his private or personal capacity, as distinguished from those due from the firm or partnership. Goddard v. Hapgood, 25 Vt. 360, 60 Am.Dec. 272.

INDIVIDUAL SYSTEM OF LOCATION. A term formerly used in Pennsylvania to designate the location of public lands by surveys, in which the land called for by each warrant was separately surveyed. Ferguson v. Bloom, 144 Pa. 549, 23 A. 49.

INDIVIDUALLY. Separately and personally, as distinguished from jointly or officially, and as opposed to collective or associate action or common interest. Southern Distributing Co. v. Carraway, 189 N.C. 420, 127 S.E. 427, 428.

INDIVIDUUM. Lat. In the civil law. That cannot be divided. Calvin.

INDIVISIBLE. Not susceptible of division or apportionment; insepable; entire. Thus, a contract, covenant, consideration, etc., may be divisible or indivisible; e., separable or entire. Garon v. Credit Foncier Canadien, 37 R.I. 273, 92 A. 561, 564. See, also, Contract.

INDIVISUM. Lat. That which two or more persons hold in common without partition; undivided.

INDORSAT. In old Scotch law. Indorsed. 2 Pick, Crim. Tr. 41.

INDORSE. To write a name on the back of a paper or document. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are indorsed by a party's writing his name on the back. Hartwell v. Hemmenway, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 117.

"Indorse" is a technical term, having sufficient legal certainty without words of more particular description. Brooks v. Edson, 7 Vt. 351.

See In Dorso,

INDORSEE. The person to whom a bill of exchange, promissory note, bill of lading, etc., is assigned by indorsement.

INDORSEE IN DUE COURSE. An indorsee in due course is one who, in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value, before its apparent maturity or presumptive dishonor, and without knowledge of its actual dishonor, acquires a negotiable instrument duly indorsed to him, or indorsed generally, or payable to the bearer. More v. Finger, 128 Cal. 313, 60 P. 933.

INDORSEMENT. The act of a payee, drawee, accommodation indorser, or holder of a bill, note, check, or other negotiable instrument, in writing his name upon the back of the same, with or without further or qualifying words, whereby the property in the same is assigned and transferred to another.

That which is so written upon the back of a negotiable instrument. State v. Hearn, 115 Ohio St. 340, 154 N.E. 244, 245.

In the law of negotiable instruments, a new and substantive contract by which title to the instrument is transferred and by which indorser becomes a party to the instrument and is liable, on certain conditions for its payment. Johnson v. Bkeery, 64 Utah, 43, 228 P. 189, 191. In this respect, indorsement differs from a common-law assignment. Jones County Trust & Savings Bank v. Kurt, 192 Iowa, 965, 182 N.W. 409, 413.

One who writes his name upon a negotiable instrument, otherwise than as a maker or acceptor, and delivers it, with his name thereon, to another person, is called an "indorser," and his act is called "indorsement."

The word "endorsement" is also used with reference to writs, insurance policies, certificates of stock, etc. The term as used in the Uniform Stock Transfer Act contemplates a writing passing or attempting to pass title or an interest. Stoltz v. Carroll, 99 Ohio St. 289, 124 N.E. 226, 231. As applied to a writ or warrant "indorsement" is an entry made on the back thereof. Gondas Gondas, 99 N.J.Eq. 473, 134 A. 615, 617.

Accommodation indorsement In the law of negotiable instruments, one made by a third person without any consideration, but merely for the benefit of the holder of the instrument, or to enable the maker to obtain money or credit on it. Unless otherwise explained, it is understood to be a loan of the indorser's credit without restriction. Young v. Exchange Bank of Kentucky, 152 Ky. 293, 153 S.W. 444, 445, Ann.Cas.1915B, 148.

Blank indorsement One made by the mere writing of the indorser's name on the back of the note or bill, without mention of the name of any person in whose favor the indorsement is made, but with the implied understanding that any lawful holder may fill in his own name above the indorsement if he so chooses. Southern Distributing Co. v. Drexel State Bank of Chicago, 37 N.D. 521, 164 N.W. 151, 154; Aufderheide v. Moeller, 221 Mo.App. 442, 281 S.W. 965, 967.

Conditional indorsement One by which the indorser annexes some condition (other than the failure of prior parties to pay) to his liability. The condition may be either precedent or subsequent. 1 Daniel, Neg.Inst. 697.

Full indorsement One by which the indorser orders the money to be paid to some particular person by name; it differs from a blank indorsement, which consists merely in the name of the indorser written on the back of the instrument. Kilpatrick v. Heaton, 3 Brev., S.C., 92; Lee v. Chillicothe Branch of State Bank, 15 Fed.Cas. 153.

Irregular indorsement One made by a third person before delivery of the note to the payee; an indorsement in blank by a third person above the name of the payee, or when the payee does not indorse at all. Bank of Bellows Falls v. Dorset Marble Co., 61 Vt. 106, 17 Atl. 43; Metropolitan Bank v. Muller, 50 La.Ann. 1278, 24 South. 295, 69 Am.St.Rep. 475.

Qualified indorsement One which restrains or limits, or qualifies or enlarges, the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deductible from the nature of the instrument. Chitty, Bills, 261; Stover Bank v. Welpman, Mo.App., 284 S.W. 77, 180. A transfer of a bill of exchange or promissory note to an indorsee, without any liability to the indorser. The words usually employed for this purpose are "sans recours," without recourse. I Bouv.Inst. No. 1138.

Regular indorsement

An indorsement in blank by a third person under the name of the payee or after delivery of the note to him. Bank of Bellows Falls v. Dorset Marble Co., 61 Vt. 106, 17 Atl. 42.

Restrictive indorsement

One which stops the negotiability of the instrument, or which contains such a definite direction as to the payment of the amount sought to be recovered in the action, after giving credit for any payment or set-off; and this special indorsement (as it is called) of the writ is applicable in all actions where the plaintiff seeks merely to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the defendant, with or without interest, arising upon a contract, express or implied, as, for instance, on a bill of exchange, promissory note, check, or other simple contract debt, or on a guaranty, whether under seal or not. Brown. Houston v. Tyler, 140 Mo. 252, 36 S.W. 654.

Special indorsement

Special indorsement of writ

In English practice. The writ of summons in an action may, under Order iii. 6, be indorsed with the particulars of the amount sought to be recovered in the action, after giving credit for any payment or set-off; and this special indorsement (as it is called) of the writ is applicable in all actions where the plaintiff seeks merely to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the defendant, with or without interest, arising upon a contract, express or implied, as, for instance, on a bill of exchange, promissory note, check, or other simple contract debt, or on a bond or contract under seal for payment of a liquidated amount of money, or on a statute where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money or in the nature of a debt, or on a guaranty, whether under seal or not. Brown.

INDORSER. He who indorses; e., being the payee or holder, writes his name on the back of a bill of exchange, etc.

INDUBITABLE PROOF. Evidence which is not only found credible, but is of such weight and directness as to make out the facts alleged beyond a doubt. Jermy v. McClure, 195 Pa. 245, 45 A. 938.

INDUCE. To bring on or about, to affect, cause, to influence to an act or course of conduct, lead by persuasion or reasoning, incite by motives, prevail on. State v. Stratford, 55 Idaho 65, 37 P.2d 681, 682.

INDUCEMENT. In Contracts. The benefit or advantage which the promisor is to receive from a contract is the inducement for making it. Collins v. Harris, 130 Wash. 394, 227 P. 508, 509.

In Criminal Evidence. Motive; that which leads or tempts to the commission of crime. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 283.

In Pleading. That portion of a declaration or of any subsequent pleading in an action which is brought forward by way of explanatory introduction to the main allegations. Brown. Houston v. Tyler, 140 Mo. 252, 36 S.W. 654.

INDUCLE. In International Law. A truce; a suspension of hostilities; an agreement during war to abstain for a time from warlike acts.

In Old Maritime Law. A period of twenty days after the safe arrival of a vessel under bottomry, to dispose of the cargo, and raise the money to pay the creditor, with interest.

In Old English Practice. Delay or indulgence allowed a party to an action; further time to appear in a cause. Bract. fol. 352b; Flota, lib. 4, c. 5, § 8.

In Scotch Practice. Time allowed for the performance of an act. Time to appear to a citation. Time to collect evidence or prepare a defense.

Induciae legales. In Scotch law. The days between the citation of the defendant and the day of appearance; the days between the test day and day of return of the writ.

INDUCT. To put in enjoyment or possession, especially to introduce into possession of an office or benefice, with customary ceremonies, to bring in, initiate, to be put formally in possession, inaugurate or install. State ex rel. Slattery v. Raupp, 303 Mo. 684, 263 S.W. 834, 835.

INDUCTI SUNT IN CARCEREM ET IMPARCATI. See Imparcare.

INDUCTIO. Lat. In the civil law. Obliteration, or benefice, with customary ceremonies, to bring or constitution to a benefice is vested with full possession of all the profits belonging to the church, and is then complete incumbent. It is performed by virtue of a mandate of induction directed by the bishop to the arch-deacon, who either performs it in person, or directs his precept to one or more other clergymen to do it. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 477.

In military law. Induction is complete where a man successfully passes the physical examination and is accepted by the army for training and service, and all the steps prescribed by statute and regulations having the force of law have been taken, whether he takes the oath administered to him or not. United States ex rel. Diamond v. Smith, D.C.Mass., 47 F.Supp. 607, 609.

INDULGENCE. In the Roman Catholic Church. A remission of the punishment due to sins, granted by the pope or church, and supposed to save the sinner from purgatory. Its abuse led to the Reformation in Germany. Wharton. Forbearance, (q. v.)

INDULTO. In Ecclesiastical law. A dispensation granted by the pope to do or obtain something contrary to the common law.

In Spanish Law. The condonation or remission of the punishment imposed on a criminal for his offense. This power is exclusively vested in the king.

INDUMENT. Endowment, (q. v.)
INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES. Societies formed in England for carrying on any labor, trade, or handicraft, whether wholesale or retail, including the buying and selling of land and also (but subject to certain restrictions) the business of banking.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS. Schools (established by voluntary contribution) in which industrial training is provided, and in which children are lodged, clothed, and fed, as well as taught.

INDUSTRIAL TRACK. One connecting with main line track and used and equipped for moving freight in carloads to or from one or more industries thereby reached and served, in incidental services such as loading, reloading, or storing, and in incidental switching or yard movements. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co., C.C.A. Tex., 4 F.2d 904, 906, 907; Miller Engineering Co. v. Louisiana Ry. & Na.Y. Co., 144 La. 786, 81, So. 314, 317.

INDUSTRIAM, PER. Lat. A qualified property in animals ferox nature may be acquired per industriam, e., by a man’s reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, and education; or by % confining them within his own immediate power that they cannot escape and use their natural liberty. 2 Steph.Comm. 5.

INDUSTRY. Any department or branch of art, occupation, or business conducted as a means of livelihood or for profit; especially, one which employs much labor and capital and is a distinct branch of trade. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. State, 83 Okl. 161, 201 P. 260, 264; Dennen v. Department of Labor and Industries of Washington, 190 Wash. 69, 66 P.2d 867, 869.

INE, CODE OF. A code of the West Saxons dat-

INESSE POTEST DONATION!, MODUS, CONDI-

TIO SIVE CAUSA; UT MODUS EST; SI CON-

DITO; QUIA CAUSA. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause; as [ut] introduces a manner; if, [si,] a condition; because, [quia,] a cause. Dyer, 138.

INESCAPABLE PERIL. Within last clear chance doctrine, means peril which the plaintiff is helpless to avoid by his own efforts, but which requires action on part of defendant to avert it. Melenson v. Howell, 344 Mo. 1137, 130 S.W.2d 555, 560.

INEST DE JURE. Lat. It is implied of right; it is implied by law.

INEVITABLE. Incapable of being avoided; fortuitous; transcending the power of human care, foresight, or exertion to avoid or prevent, and therefore suspending legal relations so far as to excuse from the performance of contract obligations, or from liability for consequent loss.

INEVITABLE ACCIDENT. An unavoidable accident; one produced by an irresistible physical cause; an accident which cannot be prevented by human skill or foresight, but results from natural causes, such as lightning or storms, perils of the sea, inundations or earthquakes, or sudden death or illness. By irresistible force is meant an interposition of human force, from its nature and power absolutely uncontrollable. Brousseau v. The Hudson, 11 La.Ann. 428; Leland v. Empire Engineering Co., 108 A. 570, 575, 135 Md. 208.

An accident is “indefensible”, so as to preclude recovery on ground of negligence, if person by whom it occurs neither has nor is legally bound to have sufficient power to avoid it or prevent its injuring another. Stephens v. Virginia Elec. & Power Co., 184 Va. 94, 34 S.E.2d 374, 377.

Inevitable accident occurs where a vessel is pursuing a lawful avocation in a lawful manner, using the proper precautions against danger, and an accident occurs. The highest degree of caution that can be used is not required. It is enough that it is reasonable under the circumstances; such as is usual in similar cases, and has been found by long experience to be sufficient to answer the end in view, the safety of life and property. The Grace Girdler, 7 Wall. 196, 19 L.Ed. 113. Inevitable accident is only when the disaster happens from natural causes, without negligence or fault on either side, and when both parties have endeavored, by every means in their power, with due care and caution, and with a proper display of nautical skill, to prevent the occurrence of the accident. The Philip J. Kenny, C.C.A.N.J., 60 F.2d 457, 458.

INEWARDUS. A guard; a watchman. Domes-

INFALISTATUS. In old English law. Exposed upon the sands, or seashore. A species of punishment mentioned in Hengham. Cowell.

INFAMIA. Lat. Infamy; ignominy or disgrace. By infamia juris is meant infamy established by law as the consequence of crime; infamia facti is where the party is supposed to be guilty of such crime, but it has not been judicially proved. Comm. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515, 541.

INFAMIS. Lat. In Roman law. A person whose right of reputation was diminished (involving the loss of some of the rights of citizenship) either INFANZON. In Spanish law. A person of noble birth, who exercises within his domains and inheritance no other rights and privileges than those conceded to him. Escriche.

INFECTION. In medical jurisprudence. The transmission of disease or disease germs from one person to another, either directly by contact with morbidly affected surfaces, or more remotely through inhalation, absorption of food or liquid tainted with excremental matter, contact with contaminated clothing or bedding, or other agencies.

A distinction is sometimes made between “infection” and “contagion,” by restricting the latter term to the communication of disease by direct contact. Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U.S. 468, 16 S.Ct. 1064, 41 L.Ed. 230. But “infection” is the wider term and in proper use includes “contagion,” and is frequently extended so as to include the local inauguration of disease from other than human sources, as from miasmas, poisonous plants, etc. In another, and perhaps more accurate sense, contagion is the entrance or lodgment of pathogenic germs in the system as a result of direct contact; infection is their fixation in the system or the inauguration of disease as a consequence. In this meaning, infection does not always result from contagion, and on the other hand it may result from the introduction of disease germs into the system otherwise than by contagion.

Auto-infection. The communication of disease from one part of the body to another by mechanical transmission of virus from a diseased to a healthy part.

Infectious disease. One capable of being transmitted or communicated by means of infection.

INFEFT. In Scotch law. To give seisin or possession of lands; to invest or enfeoff. 1 Karnes, Eq. 215.

INFEFTMENT. In Old Scotch law. Investiture or infeudation, including both charter and seisin. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 2, p. 110.

In Later law. Saisine, or the instrument of possession. Bell.

INFENSARE CURIAM. Lat. An expression applied to a court when it suggested to an advocate something which he had omitted through mistake or ignorance. Spelman.

INFECTION. In the law of evidence. A truth or proposition drawn from another which is supposed or admitted to be true. A process of reasoning by which a fact or proposition sought to be established is deduced as a logical consequence from other facts, or a state of facts, already proved or admitted. Whitehouse v. Bolster, 95 Me. 458, 50 A. 240; Joske v. Irvine, 91 Tex. 574, 44 S.W. 1059.

A deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of law to that effect. Puget Sound Electric Ry. v. Benson, C.C.A. Wash., 253 F. 710, 714.

A “presumption” and an “inference” are not the same thing, a presumption being a deduction which the law requires a trier of facts to make, an inference being a deduction which the trier may or may not make, according to his own conclusions; a presumption is mandatory, an INFERENTIAL FACTS. Such as are established not directly by testimony or other evidence, but by inferences or conclusions drawn from the evidence. Railway Co. v. Miller, 141 Ind. 533, 37 N.E. 343.

INFERIOR. One who, in relation to another, has less power and is below him; one who is bound to obey another. He who makes the law is the superior; he who is bound to obey it, the inferior. 1 Bouv. Inst. no. 8.

INFERIOR COURT. This term may denote any court subordinate to the chief appellate tribunal in the particular judicial system; but it is commonly used as the designation of a court of special, limited, or statutory jurisdiction, whose record must show the existence and attaching of jurisdiction in any given case, in order to give presumptive validity to its judgment. In re Heard’s Guardianship, 174 Miss. 37, 163 So. 685, 687.

The English courts of judicature are classed generally under two heads,—the superior courts and the inferior courts; the former division comprising the courts at Westminster, the latter comprising all the other courts in general, many of which, however, are far from being of inferior importance in the common acceptation of the word. Brown.

INFEUDATION. The placing in possession of a freehold estate; also the granting of tithes to laymen.

INFICIARI. Lat. In the civil law. To pledge; to deny one’s liability; to refuse to pay a debt or restore a pledge; to deny the allegation of a plaintiff; to deny the charge of an accuser. Calvin.

INFICIATIO. Lat. In the civil law. Denial; the denial of a debt or liability; the denial of the claim or allegation of a party plaintiff. Calvin.

INFIDEL. One who does not believe in the existence of a God who will reward or punish in this world or that which is to come. Hale v. Everett, 53 N.H. 54, 16 Am.Rep. 82. One who professes no religion that can bind his conscience to speak the truth. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 368. One who does not recognize the inspiration or obligation of the Holy Scriptures, or generally recognized features of the Christian religion. Gibson v. Ins. Co., 37 N.Y. 580.

INFIDELIS. In Old English law. An infidel or heathen.

In Feudal law. One who violated fealty.

INFIDELITAS. In feudal law. Infidelity; faithlessness to one’s feudal oath. Spelman.

INFIDUCIARE. In old European law. To pledge property. Spelman.

INFIHT. Sax. An assault made on a person inhabiting the same dwelling.

INFINITUM IN JURE REPROBATUR. That which is endless is reprobated in law. 12 Coke, 24. Applied to litigation.

INFIRM. Weak, feeble. The testimony of an “infirm” witness may be taken de bene esse in some circumstances. 1 P. Wms. 117.

INFIRMATIVE. In the law of evidence. Having the quality of diminishing force; having a tendency to weaken or render infirm. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 14; Best, Pres. § 217. Exculpatory is used by some authors as synonymous. Wills, Circ. Ev. 120; Best, Pres. § 217.

INFIRMATIVE CONSIDERATION. In the law of evidence. A consideration, supposition, or hypothesis of which the criminative facts of a case admit, and which tends to weaken the inference or presumption of guilt deducible from them. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 153-455.

INFIRMATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact set up, proved, or even supposed, in opposition to the criminative facts of a case, the tendency of which is to weaken the force of the inference of guilt deducible from them. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 14; Best, Pres. § 217, et seq.

INFIRMATIVE HYPOTHESIS. A term sometimes used in criminal evidence to denote an hypothesis or theory of the case which assumes the defendant’s innocence, and explains the criminative evidence in a manner consistent with that assumption.

INFIRMITY. In an application for insurance an ailment or disease of a substantial character, which apparently in some material degree impairs the physical condition and health of the applicant and increases the chance of his death or sickness and which if known, would have been likely to deter the insurance company from issuing the policy. Eastern Dist. Piece Dye Works v. Travelers’ Ins. Co., 234 N.Y. 441, 138 N.E. 401, 404, 26 A.L.R. 1505.

INFLUENCE. See Undue Influence.

INFORMAL. Deficient in legal form; inartificially drawn up.

INFORMATION. An accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offense, without an indictment. 4 Bl.Comm. 308. An accusation in the nature of an indictment, from which it differs only in being presented by a competent public officer on his oath of office, instead of a grand jury on. their oath. 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 141; People v. Sponsler, 46 N.W. 459, 1 Dak. 289; Howard v. State, 143 Tenn. 539, 227 S.W. 36. A written accusacusser sworn to before a magistrate, upon which, an accusation is afterwards founded. Common-

The word is also frequently used in the law in its sense are frequently made, and pleadings and other documents verified, on “information and belief.”

In French Law. The act or instrument which contains the depositions of witnesses against the accused. Poth.
Proc. Civil, § 2, art. 5.

Criminal information. A formal accusation of crime, differing from an indictment only in that it is preferred by a prosecuting officer instead of by a grand jury. People v. Gahagan, 368 Ill. 475, 14 N.E.2d 838, 839.

Information in the nature of a quo warranto.
A proceeding against the usurper of a franchise or office. Jarman v. Mason, 102 Okl. 278, 229 P. 459, 460. See Quo Warranto.

Information of intrusion. A proceeding instituted by the state prosecuting officer against inc. 141 (Gen. Laws, c. 245); Corn. v. Hite, 6 Leigh (Va.) 588, 29 Am.Dec. 226.

INFORMATUS NON SUM. In practice. I am not informed. A formal answer made by the defendant’s attorney in court to the effect that he has not been advised of any defense to be made to the action. Thereupon judgment by default passes.

INFORMER. A person who informs or prefers an accusation against another, whom he suspects of the violation of some penal statute.

Common informer. A common prosecutor. A person who habitually ferrets out crimes and offenses and lays information thereof before the ministers of justice, in order to set a prosecution on foot, not because of his office or any special duty in the matter, but for the sake of the share of the fine or penalty which the law allots to the informer in certain cases. Also used in a less in-vidious sense, as designating persons who were authorized and empowered to bring action for penalties. U. S. v. Stocking, D.C.Mont., 87 F. 861;
In re Barker, 56 Vt. 20.

INFORTIATUM. The name given by the glossa-sors to the second of the three parts or volumes into which the Pandects were divided. It com-ences with the third title of the twenty-fourth book and ends with the thirty-eighth book. The glossators at Bologna had at first only two parts, the first called “Digestum Vetus,” (the old Digest;) and the last called “Digestum Novum,” (the New Digest.) When they afterwards received the mid-der or second part, they separated from the Digesturn, Novum the beginning it had then, and added it to the second part, from which enlargement the latter received the name “Infortiatum.” Mackeld.
Rom. Law, § 110.

INFORTUNIUM, HOMICIDE PER. Where a man doing a lawful act, without intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another.

INFRA. (Lat.) Below, under, beneath, underneath. The opposite of supra, above. Thus, we say, prima grade est—supra, pater, mater, infra, filius, filia: in the first degree of kindred in the ascending line, above is the father and the mother, below, in the descending line, son and daughter.
Inst. 3. 6. 1.

In another sense, this word signifies within: as, intra corpus civitatis, within the body of the country; intra præsidia, within the guards. So of time, during: intra fuorem, during the madness.
This use is not classical. The use of infra for infra seems to have sprung up among the barbarians after the fall of the Roman empire.

INFRA AETATEM. Under age; not of age. Ap-piled to minors.

INFRA ANNOS NUBILES. Under marriageable years; not yet of marriageable age.

INFRA ANNUM. Under or within a year. Bract.
fol. 7.

INFRA ANNUM LUCTUS. (Within the year of mourning.) The phrase is used in reference to the marriage of a widow within a year after her husband’s death, which was prohibited by the civil law.

INFRA BRACHIA. Within her arms. Used of a husband de jure, as well as de facto. 2 Inst.
317. Also inter brachia. Bract. fol. 148b. It was in this sense that a woman could only have an appeal for murder of her husband inter brachia sua.

INFRA CIVITATEM. Within the state. 1 Camp.
23, 24.

INFRA CORPUS COMITATUS. Within the body (territorial limits) of a county. In English law, waters which are infra corpus comitatus are exempt from the jurisdiction of the admiralty.
War-
ing v. Clarke, 5 How. 441, 451, 12 L.Ed. 226.

INFRA DIGNITATEM CURLE. Beneath the dignity of the court; unworthy of the consideration of the court. Where a bill in equity is brought upon a matter too trifling to deserve the attention of the court, it is demurrable, as being infra dignitatem curie. Smets v. Williams, 4 Paige, Ch.
(N.Y.) 364.

INFRA FUOREM. During madness; while in a

INFRA HOSPITIUM. Within the inn. When a traveler’s baggage comes infra hospitium, in the care and under the custody of the innkeeper, the latter’s liability attaches. Davidson v. Mad-Div. 421.

INFRA JURISDICTIONEM. Within the jurisdiction. 2 Strange, 827.
INFRA LIGEANTIAM REGIS. Within the king's ligeance. Comb. 212.

INFRA METAS. Within the bounds or limits. Infras metas forsete, within the bounds of the forest. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 12. Infra metas hospitii, within the limits of the household; within the verge. Id. lib. 2, c. 2, § 2.

INFRA PR2ESIDIA. Within the protection; within the defenses. In international law, when a prize, or other captured property, is brought into a part of the captors, or within their lines, or otherwise under their complete custody, so that the chance of rescue is lost, it is said to be infra proesicilia.

INFRA QUATUOR MARIA. Within the four seas; within the kingdom of England; within the jurisdiction.

INFRA QUATUOR PARIETES. Within four walls. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 106, § 1089.

INFRA REGNUM. Within the realm.

INFRA SEX ANNOS. Within six years. Used in the Latin form of the plea of the statute of limitations.

INFRA TRIDUUM. Within three days. Formal words in old appeals. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 6; Id. c. 35, § 3.

INFRACTION. A breach, violation, or infringement; as of a law, a contract, a right or duty.

In French law, this term is used as a general designation of all punishable actions.

INFRINGEMENT. A breaking into; a trespass or encroachment upon; a violation of a law, regulation, contract, or right. Used especially of invasions of the rights secured by patents, copyrights, and trademarks. Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson, C.C.A.Mass., 112 F. 146, 50 C.C.A. 159, 55 L.R.A. 692.

To constitute infringement of a patent claim there must be present in the infringing device or combination every element of such claim or its equivalent, so combined as to produce substantially the same result operating in substantially the same way. Safety Car Heating & Lighting Co. v. Gould Coupler Co., D.C.N.Y., 230 F. 848, 851; Montgomery Ward and Co. v. Clair, C.C.A.Mo., 123 F.2d 878, 881.

Contributory infringement. The intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making or selling of a patented invention; usually done by making or selling one part of the patented invention, or one element of the combination, with the intent and purpose of so aiding. Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Specialty Co., C.C. Conn., 72 F. 1016; Safety Car Heating & Lighting Co. v. Gould Coupler Co., D.C.N.Y., 229 F. 429, 439.

Infringement of trademark. The unauthorized use or colorable imitation of the mark already appropriated by another, on goods of a similar class. Block v. Jung Arch Brace Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 300 F. 308, 309. Weiss v. Tucker, 222 N.Y.S. 487, 488, 129 Misc. 648; Northam Warren Corporation v. Universal Cosmetic Co., C.C.A.Ill., 18 F.2d 774, 775. It exists if words or designs used by defendant are identical with or so similar to plaintiff's that they are likely to cause confusion, or deceive or mislead others. McGraw-Hill Pub. Co. v. American Aviation Associates, 117 F.2d 293, 294, 73 App.D.C. 131; Seattle Street Railway & Municipal Employees Relief Ass'n v. Amalgamated Ass'n of Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employees of America, 101 P.2d 338, 344, 3 Wash.2d 520; California Fruit Growers Exchange v. Windsor Beverages, C.C.A.II., 118 F.2d 149, 152.

INFRINGER. One who appropriates another's patented invention. Stebler v. Riverside Heights Orange Growers' Ass'n, C.C.A.Cal., 205 F. 735, 739. One who affixes the trademark of another to similar articles in such way that his use of it is liable to cause confusion, or deceive or mislead others. McGraw-Hill Pub. Co. v. American Aviation Associates, 117 F.2d 293, 294, 73 App.D.C. 131; Seattle Street Railway & Municipal Employees Relief Ass'n v. Amalgamated Ass'n of Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employees of America, 101 P.2d 338, 344, 3 Wash.2d 520; California Fruit Growers Exchange v. Windsor Beverages, C.C.A.II., 118 F.2d 149, 152.

INFUGARE. Lat. To put to flight.

INFULA. A coif, or a cassock. Jacob.

INFUSION. In medical jurisprudence. The process of steeping in liquor; an operation by which the medicinal qualities of a substance may be extracted by a liquor without boiling. Also the product of this operation. "Infusion" and "decoc-tion," though not identical, are ejusdem generis in law. 3 Camp. 74. Decoction. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in pouring a hot or cold fluid upon a substance whose medical properties it is desired to extract. The product of this operation.

INGE. Meadow, or pasture. Jacob.

INGENIUM. (1) Artifice, trick, fraud; (2) an engine or device. Spelman. (3) A net or hook.
(4) A machine, Spelman, Gloss., especially for' warlike purposes; also, for navigation of a ship.
Du Cange,

INGENUITAS. Lat. Freedom; liberty; the state or condition of one who is free. Also liberty given to a servant by manumission.

INGENUITAS REGNI. In old English law. The freemen, yeomanry, or commonalty of the kingdom. Cowell. Applied sometimes also to the bar-sons.

INGENUITY. Acuteness of understanding. Tol-free v. Wetzler, D.C.N.J., 22 F.2d.214.

INGENUUS. In Roman law. A person who, immediately that he was born, was a free person.
He was opposed to libertinus, or libertus, who, having been born a slave, was afterwards manu-mitted or made free. It is not the same as the English law term "generosus," which denoted a person not merely free, but of good family. There were no distinctions among ingenui; but among libertine there were (prior to Justinian's abolition of the distinctions) three varieties, namely: Those of the highest rank, called "Cives Romani;" those of the second rank, called "Latini Juniani;" and those of the lowest rank, called "Dediticii." Brown.

INGRATITUDE. In Roman law, ingratitude was accounted a sufficient cause for revoking a gift or recalling the liberty of a freedman. Such is also the law of France, with respect to the first case. But the English law has left the matter entirely to the moral sense.

INGERESS, EGRESS, AND REGRESS. These words express the right of a lessee to enter, go upon, and return from the lands in question.

INGERESSU. In English law. An ancient writ of entry, by which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Abolished in 1833.

INGERESSUS. In old English law. Ingress; entry. The relief paid by an heir to the lord was sometimes so called. Cowell.

INGROSSATOR. An engrosser. Ingrossator magna rotuli, engrosser of the great roll; afterwards called "clerk of the pipe." Spelman; Cowell.

INGROSSING. The act of making a fair and perfekt copy of any document from a rough draft of it, in order that it may be executed or put to its final purpose.

INGUINAL. A term referring to the groin. Cav-aller v. Chevrolet Motor Co. of New York, 178

INHABIT. Synonymous with dwell, live, sojourn, stay, rest. MacLeod v. Stelle, 43 Idaho, 64, 249 P.
254, 256.

INHABITANT. One who resides actually and permanently in a given place, and has his domicile there. Ex parte Shaw, 12 S.Ct. 935, 145 U.S. 444, 36 L.Ed. 768; The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. 245, 4 L.Ed.
226.

"The words 'inhabitant,' 'citizen,' and 'resident,' as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors, mean substantially the same thing; and one is an inhabitant, resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile or home." Cooley, Const.Lim. *600; State ex rel. Sathre v. Moodie, 65 N.D. 340, 258 N.W. 558, 564. But the terms "resident" and "inhabitant" have also been held not synonymous, the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former, and importing privileges and duties to which a mere resident would not be subject. Tazewell County v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 197; State, 607, 173 S.W. 101, 102.

When relating to municipal rights, powers, or duties, the word inhabitant is almost universally used as signifying precisely the same as domiciled; Borland v. City of Boston,

A corporation can be an inhabitant only in the state of its incorporation. Sperry Products v. Association of American Railroads, C.C.A.N.Y., 132 F.2d 408, 411; Vogel v.
Crown Cork & Seal Co., D.C.Md., 36 F.Supp. 74, 75; International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers v. Tennessee Copper Co., D.C.Tenn., 31 F.Supp. 1015, 1017; 957, 958.

INHABITED HOUSE DUTY. A tax assessed in England on inhabited dwelling houses, according to their annual value, (St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, § 11,) which is payable by the occupier, the landlord being deemed the occupier where the house is let to several persons. (St. 48 Geo. III. c. 55, Schedule B.) Houses occupied solely for business purposes are exempt from duty, although a care-taker may dwell therein, and houses partially occupied for business purposes are to that extent exempt. Sweet.

INHERE. To exist in and inseparable from some-ting else; to stick fast. Majestic Theater Co. v.
Lutz, 210 Ky. 92, 275 S.W. 16, 20.

INHERENT POWER. An authority possessed without its being derived from another. A right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without recieving that right, ability, or faculty from another.
See, also, "Power."

INHERENT POWERS OF A COURT. Those reaonably necessary for administration of justice.
State ex rel. Gentry v. Becker, 351 Mo. 769, 174 S.
W.2d 181, 183. Ex parte Wetzel, 243 Ala. 130, 8
So.2d 824, 825.

INHERENTLY DANGEROUS. Danger inhering in instrumentality or condition itself at all times, so as to require special precautions to prevent injury, not danger arising from mere casual or collateral negligence of others with respect thereto under particular circumstances. Brown v. City of Craig, 350 Mo. 836, 168 S.W.2d 1080, 1082; Em-INHERETRIX

INHERETRIX. The old term for “heiress.” Co. Litt. 13a.

INHERIT. To take by inheritance; to take as heir on death of ancestor; to take by descent from ancestor; to take or receive, as right or title, by law from ancestor at his decease. Condren v. Martin, 113 Okl. 259, 241 P. 826, 827. In re Buell’s Estate, 167 Or. 295, 296, 117 P.2d 828, 826. “To inherit to” a person is a common expression in the books. 2 Bl. Comm. 254, 255; 3 Coke, 41.

The word is also used in its popular sense, as the equivalent of to take or receive. Manchester v. Loomis, 191 Iowa 554, 181 N.W. 415, 442.

INHERETABLE BLOOD. Blood which has the purity (freedom from attainder) and legitimacy necessary to give its possessor the character of a lawful heir; that which is capable of being the medium for the transmission of an inheritance.

INHERITANCE. An estate in things real, descending to the heir. 2 Bl. Comm. 201; Rountree v. Pursell, 39 N.E. 747, 11 Ind.App. 522. Such an estate in lands or tenements or other things as may be inherited by the heir. Terms de la Ley. An estate or property which a man has by descent, as heir to another, or which he may transmit to another, as his heir. Litt. § 9.

A perpetuity in lands or tenements to a man and his heirs. Cowell; Blount. The method by which children or relatives take property from another at his death. Friedy v. Green, Tex.Civ.App., 220 S.W. 243, 248; Horner v. Webster, 33 N.J.L. 413.

“Inheritance” is also used in the old books where “hirdament” is now commonly employed. Thus, Coke divides inheritances into corporeal and incorporeal, into real, personal, and mixed, and into entire and several.

Civil Law

The succession of the heir to all the rights and property of the estate-leaver. It is either testamentary, where the heir is created by will, or ab intestato, where it arises merely by operation of law. Heinec. § 484.

In General

Estate of inheritance. See Estate.

Inheritance act. The English statute of 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, by which the law of inheritance or descent was considerably modified. 1 Steph. Comm. 359, 500.

Inheritance tax. A tax on the transfer or passing of estates or property by legacy, devise, or intestate succession; not a tax on the property itself, but on the right to acquire it by descent or testamentary gift. In re Gihon’s Estate, 169 N.Y. 443; First Nat. Bank v. Commissioner of Corporations and Taxation, 258 Mass. 253, 154 N.E. 844, 845. A tax on the succession to, or transfer of, property occasioned by death. Waddell v. Doughton, 194 N.C. 537, 140 S.E. 160.

“Estate taxes” are based on the power to transmit or the transmission from the dead to the living, while “legacy taxes,” or “inheritance taxes,” are based on the transmission or right to receive the property. Frick v. Lewellyn, D.C.Pa., 298 F. 803, 810.

INHIBITION. In Ecclesiastical law. A writ issuing from a superior ecclesiastical court, forbidding an inferior judge to proceed further in a cause pending before him. In this sense it is closely analogous to the writ of prohibition at common law. Also the command of a bishop or ecclesiastical judge that a clergyman shall cease from taking any duty.

In English law. The name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause depending before him; it is in the nature of a prohibition. Terms de la Ley; Fitzh. N. B. 39.

In Scotch law. A species of diligence or process by which a debtor is prohibited from contracting any debt which may become a burden on his inheritable property, in competition with the creditor at whose instance the inhibition is taken out; and from granting any deed of alienation, etc., to the prejudice of the creditor. Brande.

In the Civil law. A prohibition which the law makes or a judge ordains to an individual. Hallifax; Civil Law, p. 126.

INHIBITION AGAINST A WIFE. In Scotch law. A writ in the sovereign’s name, passing the signature of such danger. Whaley v. Whaley, 68 Iowa 647, 27 N.W. 809; Cole v. Cole, 23 Iowa 433. The phrase commonly employed in statutes is “cruel and inhuman treatment,” from which it may be inferred that “inhumanity” is an extreme or aggravated “cruelty.”

INIQUISSIMA PAX EST ANTEPONENDA JUS TISSIMO BELLO. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war. Root v. Stuyvesant, 18 Wend. (N.Y.) 257, 305.

INHUMAN TREATMENT. In the law of divorce. Such barbarous cruelty or severity as endangers the life or health of the party to whom it is addressed, or creates a well-founded apprehension of such danger. Whaley v. Whaley, 68 Iowa 647, 27 N.W. 809; Cole v. Cole, 23 Iowa 433. The phrase commonly employed in statutes is “cruel and inhuman treatment,” from which it may be inferred that “inhumanity” is an extreme or aggravated “cruelty.”

Whaley, 68 Iowa 647, 27 N.W. 809; Cole v. Cole, 23 Iowa 433. The phrase commonly employed in statutes is “cruel and inhuman treatment,” from which it may be inferred that “inhumanity” is an extreme or aggravated “cruelty.”
INJUNCTION. A prohibitive writ issued by a court of equity, at the suit of a party complainant, directed to a party defendant in the action, or to a party made a defendant for that purpose, forbidding the latter to do some act, or to permit his servants or agents to do some act, which he is threatening or attempting to commit, or restraining him in the continuance thereof, such act being unjust and inequitable, injurious to the plaintiff, and not such as can be adequately redressed by an action at law. Dupre v. Anderson, 45 La.Ann. 1134, 13 So. 743; City of Alma v. Loehr, 42 Kan. 368, 22 P. 424. A judicial process operating in personam, and requiring person to whom it is directed to do or refrain from doing a particular thing. Gainsburg v. Dodge, 193 Ark. 473, 101 S.W.2d 178, 180.

Final injunction
One granted when the rights of the parties are determined; distinguished from a preliminary injunction. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Oakland, C.C.Cal., 58 F. 54.

Interlocutory injunction
One granted prior to the final hearing and determination of the matter in issue, and which is to continue until answer, or until the final hearing, or until the further order of the court. Gas & Electric Securities Co. v. Manhattan & Queens Traction Corporation. C.C.A.N.Y., 266 F. 625, 632.

Mandatory injunction
One which (1) commands the defendant to do some positive act or particular thing; (2) prohibits him from refusing (or persisting in a refusal) to do or permit some act to which the plaintiff has a legal right; or (3) restrains the defendant from permitting his previous wrongful act to continue operative, thus virtually compelling him to undo it. Bailey v. Schnitziус, 43 N.J.Eq. 178, 16 A. 680.

Permanent injunction
One intended to remain in force until the final termination of the particular suit. Riggins v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 154, 71 S.W. 14.

Perpetual injunction
An injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time. Riggins v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 154, 71 S.W. 14.

Preliminary injunction
An injunction granted at the institution of a suit, to restrain the defendant from doing or continuing some act, the right to which is in dispute, and which may either be discharged or made perpetual, according to the result of the controversy, as soon as the rights of the parties are determined. Darlington Oil Co. v. Pee Dee Oil Co., 62 S.C. 196, 40 S.E. 169: Appeal of Mammoth Vein Consol. Coal Co., 54 Pa. 188.

Preventive injunction
One which prohibits the defendant from doing a particular act or commands him to refrain from it. Leaksville Woolen Mills v. Spray Water Power & Land Co., 183 N.C. 511, 112 S.E. 24, 25.

Provisional injunction
Another name for a preliminary or temporary injunction or an injunction pendente lite.

Special injunction
An injunction obtained only on motion and petition, usually with notice to the other party. Aldrich v. Kirkland, 6 Rich.Law S.C. 340; 4 Steph.Comm. 12, note z.

Temporary injunction
A preliminary or provisional injunction, or one granted pendente lite; as opposed to a final or perpetual injunction.
INJURE

INJURE. To violate the legal right of another or inflict an actionable wrong. Krom v. Antigo Gas Co., 154 Wis. 528, 143 N.W. 163, 164. To do harm to; to hurt; damage; impair; to hurt or wound, as the person; to impair the soundness of, as health. Ziolkowski v. Continental Casualty Co., 284 Ill.App. 505, 1 N.E.2d 410, 412. As applied to a building, "injure" means to materially impair or destroy any part of the existing structure. F. W. Woolworth Co. v. Nelson, 204 Ala. 172, 85 So. 449, 451, 13 A.L.R. 820.

INJURES GRAVES. Fr. In French law. Grievous insults or injuries, including personal insults and reproachful language, constituting a just cause of divorce. Butler v. Butler, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 344.

INJURIA. Lat. Injury; wrong; the privation or violation of right. 3 Bl. Comm. 2; J. A. & C. E. Bennett v. Winston-Salem Southbound R. Co., 170 N.C. 389, 87 S.E. 133, 134, L.R.A. 1916D, 1074.

INJURIA ABSQUE DAMNO. Injury or wrong without damage. A wrong done, but from which no loss or damage results, and which, therefore, will not sustain an action.

INJURIA FIT EI CUI CONVICIUM DICTUM EST, VEL DE EO FACTUM CARMEN FAMOSUM. An injury is done to him of whom a reproachful thing is said, or concerning whom an infamous song is made. 9 Coke, 60.

INJURIA ILLATA JUDICI, SEU LOCUM TENENTI REGIS, VIDENTUR IPSI REGI ILLATA MAXIME SI FIAT IN EXERCENTEM OFFICIUM. 3 Inst. 1. An injury offered to a judge, or person representing the king, is considered as offered to the king himself, especially if it be done in the exercise of his office.

INJURIA NON EXCUSAT INJURIAM. One wrong does not justify another. Broom, Max. 395. See 6 El. & Bl. 47.

INJURIA SERVI DOMINUM PERTINGIT. The master is liable for injury done by his servant. Loft, 229.

INJURIA PROPRIA NON CADET IN BENEFICIUM FACIENTIS. One's own wrong shall not fall to the advantage of him that does it. A man will not be allowed to derive benefit from his own wrongful act. Branch, Princ.

INJURIOUS WORDS. In Louisiana. Slander, or libelous words. Civil Code La. art. 3501.

The words "damage," "loss," and "injury" are used interchangeably, and, within legislative meaning and judicial interpretation, import the same thing. In re City of Pittsburgh, 90 A. 329, 331, 243 Pa. 392, 52 L.R.A.,N.S., 262.

The term "injury," used to describe an error for which a reversal may be had, means an error which affects the result. Ryan v. State, 8 Odk.Cr. 623, 129 P. 685, 687.

Civil Law

A delict committed in contempt or outrage of any one, whereby his body, his dignity, or his reputation is maliciously injured. Voet, Com. ad Pand. 47, t. 10, no. 1.

In General

Absolute injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Within the Workmen's Compensation Act, one which occurs in the course of the employment, unexpectedly, and without the affirmative act or design of the employe; it being something which is unforeseen and not expected by the person to whom it happens. Jakub v. Industrial Commission, 288 Ill. 87, 123 N.E. 263, 264. Any injury to an employee in the course of his employment due to any occurrence referable to a definite time, and of the happening of which he can give notice to his employer, regardless of whether the injury is a visible hurt from external force, or disease or infection induced by sudden and catastrophic exposure. Lerner v. Rump Bros., 209 N.Y.S. 698, 701, 212 App.Div. 747. The term is to receive a broad and liberal construction with a view to compensating injured employees where injury resulted through some accidental means, was unexpected and undesigned and may be the result of mere mischance or miscalculation as to effect of voluntary action. Thomas v. Ford Motor Co., 114 Okl. 3, 242 P. 765, 766. It includes an accident causing injury to the physical structure of the body, notwithstanding a natural weakness predisposing to injury. Wilkins v. Ben's Home Oil Co., 166 Minn. 41, 207 N.W. 183. The words indicate, not so much the existence of an accident, but rather the idea that the injury was unexpected or unintended. Victory Sparkler & Specialty Co. v. Francks, 147 Md. 368, 128 A. 635, 639, 44 A.L.R. 363.

Civil injury. Injuries to person or property, resulting from a breach of contract, delict, or criminal offense, which may be redressed by means of a civil action. Cullinan v. Burkhard, 41 Misc.Rep. 321, 84 N.Y.S. 825.

An infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals, considered merely as individuals. State v. Magee Pub. Co., 29 N.M. 455, 224 P. 1028, 38 A. L. R. 142.

Irreparable injury. This phrase does not mean such an injury as is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond possible compensation in damages, or necessarily great damage, but includes an injury, whether great or small, which ought not to be submitted to, on the one hand, or inflicted, on the other; and which, because it is so large or so small, or of such constant and frequent occurrence, or because no certain pecuniary standard exists for the measurement of damages, cannot receive reasonable redress in a court of law.

Personal injury. A hurt or damage done to a man's person, such as a cut or bruise, a broken limb, or the like, as distinguished from an injury to his property or his reputation. The phrase is chiefly used in connection with actions of tort. See L. & N. & Hardart Baking Co., 261 Pa. 329, 124 A. 17, 20; Lane v. Horn & Hardart Baking Co., 261 Pa. 329, 124 A. 17, 20; Lane v. Horn & Hardart Baking Co., 261 Pa. 329, 124 A. 17, 20.

In Workmen's Compensation Acts, "personal injury" means any harm or damage to the health of an employee, however caused, whether by accident, disease, or otherwise, which arises in the course of and out of his employment, and incapacitates him in whole or in part. Hines v. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co., 228 Mass. 57, 116 N.E. 972, 973, L.R.A.1918F, 864; Taylor v. Swift & Co., 114 Kan. 431, 219 P. 516, 519. A "personal injury," as that term is used in the Workmen's Compensation Act, refers not to some break in some part of the body, or some wound thereon, or the like, but rather to the consequence or disability that results therefrom. Indian Creek Coal & Mining Co. v. Calvert, 68 Ind.App. 329, 124 A. 17, 20; Lane v. Horn & Hardart Baking Co., 261 Pa. 329, 124 A. 17, 20.

In old English law, inland was used for the demesne (q.v.) of a manor; that part which lay next or most convenient for the lord's mansion-house, as within the view thereof, and which, therefore, he kept in his own hands for support of his family and for hospitality; in distinction from outlaw or outland, which was the portion let out to tenants. Cowell; Kennett; Spelman.

INLAND. Within a country, state or territory; within the same country.

In old English law, inland was used for the demesne (q.v.) of a manor; that part which lay next or most convenient for the lord's mansion-house, as within the view thereof, and which, therefore, he kept in his own hands for support of his family and for hospitality; in distinction from outlaw or outland, which was the portion let out to tenants. Cowell; Kennett; Spelman.

INLAND BILL OF EXCHANGE. A bill of which both the drawer and drawee reside within the same state or country. Otherwise called a "domestic bill," and distinguished from a "foreign bill." Buckner v. Finley, 2 Pet. 589, 7 L.Ed. 528; Lonsdale v. Brown, 15 Fed.Cas. 857; Strawbridge v. Robinson, 10 Ill. 472, 50 Am.Dec. 420.

See Bill.

INLAND NAVIGATION. Within the meaning of the legislation of congress upon the subject, this phrase means navigation upon the rivers of the country, but not upon the great lakes. Moore v. American Transp. Co., 24 How. 38, 16 L.Ed. 674.

INLAND TRADE. Trade wholly carried on at home; as distinguished from commerce. See commerce.
INLAND WATERS. Such waters as canals, lakes, rivers, water-courses, inlets and bays, exclusive of the open sea, though the water in question may open or empty into the ocean. United States v. Steam Vessels of War, 1 S.Ct. 539, 106 U.S. 607, 27 L.Ed. 286; The Cotton Plant, 10 Wall. 581, 19 L.Ed. 983; Cogswell v. Chubb, 36 N.Y.S. 1076, 1 App.Div. 93.

INLANTAL, INLANTALE. Demesne or inland, opposed to delantal, or land tenanted. Cowell.

INLAUGHE, INLANTA. In old English law. Under the law, (sub lege,) in a frank-pledge, or decenary. Bract. fol. 125b.

INLAW. To place under the protection of the law, "Swearing obedience to the king in a leet, which doth inlaw the subject." Bacon.

INLEASED. In old English law. Entangled, or ensnared. 2 Inst. 247; Cowell; Blount.

INLIGARE. In old European law. To confederate; to join in a league, (in ligam coire.) Spelman.

INMATE. A person who lodges or dwells in the same house with another, occupying different rooms, but using the same door for passing in and out of the house. Webster; Jacob.

INMATE OF HOUSE OF PROSTITUTION. Those words apply only to the woman who goes there more or less regularly and who plies her trade there, and do not include a man found there-in who has gone there for the purpose of illicit sexual intercourse. People v. Anonymous, 292 N.Y.S. 282, 285, 161 Misc. 379.

INN. An inn is a house where a traveler is furnished with everything which he has occasion for while on his way. Waitt Con. Co. v. Chase, 188 N.Y.S. 589, 592, 197 App.Div. 327. A house where all who conduct themselves properly, and who are able and ready to pay for their entertainment, are received, if there is accommodation for them, and who, without any stipulated engagement as to the duration of their stay, or as to the rate of compensation, are, while there, supplied at a reasonable charge with their meals, their lodging, and such services and attention as are necessarily incident to the use of the house as a temporary home. Ford v. Waldorf System, 57 R.I. 131, 188 A. 633, 635. A place where the public will be received and accommodations provided for guests for compensation. Edwards v. City of Los Angeles, 48 Cal.App.2d 62, 119 P.2d 370, 373, 374.

See, also Hotel.

The words "inn," "tavern," and "hotel" are used synonymously to designate what is ordinarily and popularly known as an "inn" or "tavern," or place for the entertainment of travelers, and where all their wants can be supplied. A restaurant where meals only are furnished is not an inn or tavern. Carpenter v. Taylor, 1 Hilt., N.Y., 193. An inn is distinguished from a private boarding-house mainly in this: that the keeper of the latter is at liberty to choose his guests, while the innkeeper is obliged to entertain and furnish all travelers of good conduct and means of payment with what they may have occasion for, as such travelers, while on their way. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657. Another distinction is that in a boarding-house the guest is under an express contract for a certain time at a certain rate, whereas, in an inn the guest is entertained from day to day upon an implied contract. Willard v. Reinhardt, 2 E.D.Smith, N.Y., 148. A lodging house does not become an "inn" because a register is kept. Roberts v. Case Hotel Co., 175 N.Y.S. 123, 127, 106 Misc. 481.

Common Inn. A house for the entertainment of travelers and passengers, in which lodging and necessaries are provided for them and for their horses and attendants. Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N.Y.) 15. The word "common," in this connection, does not appear to add anything to the common-law definition of an inn, except in so far as it lays stress on the fact that the house is for the entertainment of the general public or for all suitable persons who apply for accommodations.

INNAVIGABLE. In old English law. A pledge.

INNAVIGABILITY. In insurance law. The condition of being innavigable, (q. v.) The foreign writers distinguish "innavigability" from "shipwreck." 3 Kent, Comm. 323, and note. The term is also applied to the condition of streams which are not large enough or deep enough, or are otherwise unsuited, for navigation.

INNAVIGABLE. As applied to streams, not capable of or suitable for navigation; impassable by ships or vessels.

As applied to vessels in the law of marine insurance, it means unfit for navigation; so damaged by misadventures at sea as to be no longer capable of making a voyage. See 3 Kent, Comm. 323, note.

INNER BARRISTER. A serjeant or king's counsel, in England, who is admitted to plead within the bar.

INNER HOUSE. The name given to the chambers in which the first and second divisions of the court of session in Scotland hold their sittings. See Outer House.

INNINGS. In old records. Lands recovered from the sea by draining and banking. Cowell.

INKEEPER. One who keeps an inn or house for the lodging and entertainment of travelers. The keeper of a common inn for the lodging and entertainment of travelers and passengers, their horses and attendants, for a reasonable compensation. Story, Bailm. § 475. One who keeps a tavern or coffeehouse in which lodging is provided. 2 Steph. Comm. 133. See Inn.

One who receives as guests all who choose to visit his house, without any previous agreement as to the time of their stay, or the terms. His liability as innkeeper ceases when his guest pays his bill, and leaves the house with the declared intention of not returning, notwithstanding the guest leaves his baggage behind him. Wintermute v. Clark, 5 Sandf., N.Y., 242.

The words "innkeeper" and "hotel keeper" are synonymous, but each is distinct from a "boarding house keeper," in that the innkeeper has no right to select his guests, but must receive every one applying for accommodation who conducts himself in a proper manner, etc., while the keeper of a boarding house is one who maintains a house for the accommodation of those who enter under contract for entertainment at a certain rate for a certain period at an agreed compensation. McClaugherty v. Cline, 128 Tenn. 605, 163 S.W. 801. One who entertains strangers occasionally, although he may receive compensation for it, is not an innkeeper.

INNOCENCE. The absence of guilt.

INNOCENT. Free from guilt; acting in good faith and without knowledge of incriminatory circumstances, or of defects or objections.

INNOCENT AGENT. In criminal law. One who, being ignorant of any unlawful intent on the part of his principal, is merely the instrument of the guilty party in committing an offense; one who does an unlawful act at the solicitation or request of another, but who, from defect of understanding or ignorance of the inculpatory facts, incurs no legal guilt. Smith v. State, 21 Tex.App. 107, 17 S.W. 552; State v. Carr, 28 Or. 389, 42 P. 215.

INNOCENT CONVEYANCES. A technical term of the English law of conveyancing, used to designate such conveyances as may be made by a leasehold tenant without working a forfeiture. These are said to be lease and re-lease, bargain and sale, and, in case of a life-tenant, a covenant to stand seised. 1 Chit. Pr. 243.

INNOCENT PURCHASER. One who, by an honest contract or agreement, purchases property or acquires an interest therein, without knowledge, or means of knowledge sufficient to charge him in law with knowledge, of any infirmity in the title of the seller. Republic Power and Service Co. v. Continental Credit Corporation, 178 Ark. 966, 12 S.W.2d 906, 908.

INNOCENT TRESPASS. A trespass to land, committed, not recklessly, but through inadvertence or mistake, or in good faith, under an honest belief that the trespasser was acting within his legal rights. Elk Garden Big Vein Mining Co. v. Gerstell, 100 W.Va. 472, 131 S.E. 152, 153.

INNOCENT TRESPASSER. One who enters another's land unlawfully, but inadvertently or unintentionally, or in the honest, reasonable belief of his own right so to do, and removes sand or other material therefrom, is an "innocent trespasser." American Sand & Gravel Co. v. Spencer, 55 Ind. App. 523, 103 N.E. 426, 427.

INNOCENT WOMAN. One who has never had illicit intercourse with a man. State v. Cline, 170 N.C. 751, 87 S.E. 106, 107.

INNOMINATE. In the civil law. Not named or classed; belonging to no specific class; ranking under a general head. A term applied to those contracts for which no certain or precise remedy was appointed, but a general action on the case only. Dig. 2, 1, 4, 7, 2; Id. 19, 4, 5.

INNOMINATE CONTRACTS, literally, are the "unclassified" contracts of Roman law. They are contracts which are neither re, verbis, litteris, nor consensu simply, but some mixture of or variation upon two or more of such contracts. They are principally the contracts of permutatio, de cestimo, precarium, and transactio. Brown.

INNONIA. In old English law. A close or enclosure, (clausum, inclausura.) Spelman.

INNOTESCIMUS. Lat. We make known. A term formerly applied to letters patent, derived from the emphatic word at the conclusion of the Latin forms. It was a species of exemplification of charters of feuoffment or other instruments not of record. 5 Coke, 54a.

INNOVATION. In Scotch law. The exchange of one obligation for another, so as to make the second obligation come in the place of the first, and be the only subsisting obligation against the debtor. Bell. The same with "novation," (q. v.)

INNOXIARE. In old English law. To purge one of a fault and make him innocent.

INNS OF CHANCERY. So called because anciently inhabited by such clerks as chiefly studied the framing of writs, which regularly belonged to the cursitors, who were officers of the court of chancery. There are nine of them,—Clement's, Clifford's, and Lyon's Inn; Furnival's, Thavies', and Symond's Inn; New Inn; and Barnard's and Staples' Inn. These were formerly preparatory colleges for students, and many entered them before they were admitted into the inns of court. They consist chiefly of solicitors, and possess corporate property, hall, chambers, etc., but perform no public functions like the inns of court. Wharton.

INNS OF COURT. These are certain private unincorporated associations, in the nature of collegiate houses, located in London, and invested with the exclusive privilege of calling men to the bar; that is, conferring the rank or degree of a barrister. They were founded probably about the beginning of the fourteenth century. The principal inns of court are the Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. (The two former originally belonged to the Knights Templar; the two latter to the earls of Lincoln and Gray respectively.) These bodies now have a "common council of legal education," for giving lectures and holding examinations. The inns of chancery, distinguishable from the foregoing, but generally classed with them under the general name, are the buildings known as "Clifford's Inn," "Clement's Inn," "New Inn," "Staples' Inn," and "Barnard's Inn." They were formerly a sort of collegiate houses in which law students learned the elements of law before being admitted into the inns of court, but they have long ceased to occupy that position.

INUENDO. This Latin word (commonly translated "meaning") was the technical beginning of that clause in a declaration or indictment for slander or libel in which the meaning of the alleged libelous words was explained, or the application of the language charged to the plaintiff was pointed out. Hence It gave its name to the whole clause; and this usage is still retained, although an equivalent English word is now substituted. Thus, it may be charged that the defendant said "he (meaning the said plaintiff) is a perjurer."

An "innuendo" in pleading in libel action is a statement by plaintiff of construction which he puts upon words which are alleged to be libelous and which meaning he will induce jury to adopt at trial. Burr v. Winnett Times Pub. Co., 80 Mont. 70, 258 P. 242, 244.

The word is also used, (though more rarely,) in other species of pleadings, to introduce an explanation of a preceding word, charge, or averment. Guide Pub. Co. v. Futrell, 175 Va. 77, 7 S.E.2d 133, 138.

It is said to mean no more than the words "id est," "scilicet," or "meaning," or "aforesaid," as explanatory of a subject-matter sufficiently expressed before; as "such a one, meaning the defendant," or "such a subject, meaning the subject in question." Cwon. 683. It is only explanatory of some matter already expressed. It serves to point out where there is precedent matter, but never for a new charge. It may apply what is already expressed, but cannot add to or enlarge or change the sense of the previous words. See Grand v. Dreyfus, 122 Cal. 58, 54 P. 389; Kee v. Armstrong, Byrd & Co., 182 P. 494, 498, 5 A.L.R. 1349. The office of an "innuendo" is to explain the words published, and to give to them their true meaning, and it cannot introduce new matter, add to or enlarge the sense of those words, or impute to them a meaning not warranted by the publication, when taken alone, or read in connection with the inducement and colloquium. Bowie v. Evening News, 148 Md. 569, 129 A. 797, 800; Drebin v. Jewish World Pub. Co., 262 Pa. 169, 105 A. 58, 59. Its office is to set a meaning upon words or language of doubtful or ambiguous import which alone would not be actionable. Rail v. National Newspaper Ass'n, 198 Mo.App. 463, 192 S.W. 129, 134.

INOFFICIUM. In the civil law. Inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti. Dig. 2, 5, 3, 13; Paulus, lib. 4, tit. 5, § 1.

INOFFICIOUS TESTAMENT. A will not in accordance with the testator's natural affection and moral duties. In re Willford's Will (N.J.) 51 A. 502. But particularly, in the civil law, a will which deprives the heirs of that portion of the estate to which the law entitles them, and of which they cannot legally be disinherited. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 714; Civ. Code La. art. 3556, subd. 16. A testament contrary to the natural duty of the parent, because it totally disinherited the child, without expressly giving the reason therefor.

INOFICIACIO. In Spanish law. Every thing done contrary to a duty or obligation assumed, as well as in opposition to the piety and affection dictated by nature: inofficiacio dictur id quod contrarium virtutis officii factum est. The term applies especially to testaments, donations, dower, etc., which may be either revoked or reduced when they affect injuriously the rights of creditors or heirs.

INOPS CONSILI. Lat. Destitute of counsel; without legal counsel. A term applied to the acts or condition of one acting without legal advice, as a testator drafting his own will.

INORDINATUS. An intestate.

INPENY and GUTPENY. In old English law. A customary payment of a penny on entering into and going out of a tenancy, (pro exitu de tenura, et pro ingressu.) Spelman.

INQUEST. A body of men appointed by law to inquire into certain matters. The grand jury is sometimes called the "grand inquest." The judicial inquiry made by a jury summoned for the purpose is called an "inquest." The finding of such men, upon an investigation, is also called an "inquest." People v. Coombs, 55 N.Y.S. 276, 36 App.Div. 284; Davis v. Bibb County, 116 Ga. 23, 42 S.E. 403.

The inquiry by a coroner, termed a "coroner's inquest," into the manner of the death of any one who has been slain, or has died suddenly or in prison.

This name is also given to a species of proceeding under the New York practice, allowable where the defendant in a civil action has not filed an affidavit of merits nor verified his answer. In such case the issue may be taken up, out of its regular order, on plaintiff's motion, and tried without the admission of any affirmative defense.

An inquest is a trial of an issue of fact where the plaintiff alone introduces testimony. The defendant is entitled to appear at the taking of the inquest, and to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses; and, if he do appear, the inquest must be taken before a jury, unless a jury be expressly waived by him. Haines v. Davis, 6 How.Prac., N.Y., 118.

The term "inquest," as applied to Surrogates' Courts, is a term of larger signification than as applied to proceedings at common law, and includes the exercise of the surrogate's function to determine all the circumstances concerning the genuineness of a will offered for probate, and the validity of its execution, without reference to whether there is a contest or not; his judicial power arising only after he has determined that the will is genuine and validly executed. In re Hermann's Will, 145 N.Y.S. 291, 297, 83 Misc. 283.

General
Coroner's inquest. See Coroner.

Inquest, arrest of. See Arrest.

Inquest of lunacy. See Inquisition (or Inquest) of Lunacy.

Inquest of office. See Inquisition (or Inquest) of Lunacy.

Inquest of office. In English practice. An inquiry made by the king's or the queen's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute or by writ sent to them for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenantments, goods or chattels; as to inquire whether the king's tenant for life died seised, whereby the reversion accrues to the king; whether A., who held immediately of the crown, died without heir, in which case the lands belong to the king by escheat; whether B. be attainted of treason, whereby his estate is forfeited to the crown; whether C., who has purchased land, be an alien, which is another cause of forfeiture, etc. 3 Bl. Comm. 258. These inquests of office were more frequent in practice during the continuance of the military tenures than at present; and were devised by law as an authentic means to give the king his right by solemn matter of record. Id. 258, 259; 4 Steph. Comm. 40, 41. Sometimes simply termed "office," as in the phrase "office found," (q. v.). Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Mingus, 17 S.Ct. 348, 165 U.S. 413, 41 L.Ed. 770; Baker v. Shy, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 89.

Inquest of sheriffs. An inquest which directs a general inquiry as to the methods in which the sheriffs had been conducting the local government of the country (1170). 1 Holdsw. H. E. L. 21.

INQUILINUS. In Roman law. A tenant; one who hires and occupies another's house; but particularly, a tenant of a hired house in a city, as distinguished from colonus, the hirer of a house or estate in the country. Calvin.

INQUIRENDO. An authority given to some official person to institute an inquiry concerning the crown's interests.

INQUIRY, WRIT OF. A writ sued out by a plaintiff in a case where the defendant has let the proceedings go by default, and an interlocutory judgment has been given for damages generally, where the damages do not admit of calculation. It issues to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, and commands him to inquire, by a jury of twelve men, concerning the amount of damages. The sheriff thereupon tries the cause in his sheriff's court, and some amount must always be returned to the court. But the return of the inquest merely informs the court, which may, if it choose, in all cases assess damages and thereupon give final judgment. 2 Archb. Pr., Waterman ed. 952; 3 Bla. Corn. 398; 3 Chitty, Stat. 495, 497.

INQUISTIO. In old English law. An inquisition or inquest. Inquisitio post mortem, an inquisition after death. An inquest of office held, during the continuance of the military tenures, upon the death of every one of the king's tenants, to inquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer seisin, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. 3 Bl. Comm. 258. Inquisitio patrice, the inquisition of the country; the ordinary jury, as distinguished from the grand assise. Bract. fol. 15b.

INQUISITION. In practice. An inquiry or inquest; particularly, an investigation of certain matters, as prevents a man from comprehending the nature and consequences of his acts or from distinguishing between right and wrong conduct. Crosswell v. Insurance Co., 83 Me. 182, 22 A. 107; Frazer v. Frazer, 2 Del.Ch. 263.

"Insanity" does not include certain states of transitory mental disorder, such as trances, epilepsy, hysteria, and delirium. Martin v. Fraternal Reserve Life Ass'n, 200 Ill. App. 359, 364, and from both the pathologic and the legal definitions are to be excluded temporary mental aberrations caused by or accompanying alcoholic or other intoxication and the delirium of fever.

The legal problem must resolve itself into the inquiry, whether there was mental capacity and moral freedom to INSANITY

Other definitions

Insanity is a manifestation of disease of the brain, characterized by a general or partial derangement of one or more faculties of the mind, and in which, while consciousness is not abolished, mental freedom is perverted, weakened, or destroyed. Hammond, Nervous System, 332. The prolonged departure, without any adequate cause, from the states of feeling and modes of thinking usual to the individual intellect. Bouvier. By insanity is not meant (in law) a total deprivation of reason, but only an inability, from defect of perception, memory, and judgment, to do the act in question, [with an intelligent apprehension of its nature and consequences.] So, by a lucid interval is meant a perfect restoration to reason, but a restoration so far as to be able, beyond doubt, to comprehend and to do the act with such reason, memory, and judgment as to make it a legal act. Frazer v. Frazer, 2 Del. Ch. 263.

Eccentricities and idiosyncracies, however gross, do not constitute “Insanity.” In re Hansen’s Will, 50 Utah, 207, 167 P. 256, 261. And drunkenness is not insanity, nor does it answer to what is termed an unsound mind, unless the derangement which it causes becomes fixed and continued by the drunkenness being habitual, or by chronic alcoholism, and thereby rendering the party incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, the same as insanity produced by any other cause. Rucker v. State, 119 Ohio St. 189, 162 N.E. 802, 805.

Synonyms

Delusion is sometimes loosely used as synonymous with insanity. But this is incorrect. Delusion is not the substance but the evidence of insanity. Ryan v. People, 60 Colo. 425, 153 P. 756, 757, L.R.A. 1917F, 646, Ann.Cas.1917C, 605.

The presence of an insane delusion is a recognized test of insanity in all cases except amentia and imbecility, and where there is no frenzy or raving madness; and in this sense an insane delusion is a fixed belief in the mind of the patient of the existence of a fact which has no objective existence but is purely the figment of his imagination, and which is so extravagant that no sane person would believe it under the circumstances of the case, the belief, nevertheless, being so unchangeable that the patient is incapable of being permanently disabused by argument or proof. Walker v. Struthers, 273 Ill. 387, 112 N.E. 961, 966. The characteristic which distinguishes an “insane” delusion from other mistaken beliefs is that it is not a product of the imagination, that is, not a mistake of fact induced by deception, fraud, insufficient evidence, or erroneous reasoning, but the spontaneous conception of a perverted imagination, having no basis in reason or in evidence. Riggs v. Missionary Soc., 35 Hun, N.Y., 658; Buchanan v. Pierce, 205 Pa. 123, 54 Atl. 583, 97 Am.St.Rep. 725. An “insane delusion” is an idea or belief which springs spontaneously from a diseased or perverted mind without reason or without foundation in fact. It is distinguishable from a belief which is founded upon prejudice or aversion, no matter how unreasonable or unfounded the prejudice or aversion may be, and if it is the product of a reasoning mind, no matter how slight the evidence on which it is based, it cannot be classed as an insane delusion. Coffey v. Miller, 160 Ky. 415, 169 S.W. 852, 854, Ann.Cas.1916C, 30.

As to the distinctions between “Delusion” and “Illusion” and “Hallucination,” see those titles.

Derangement. This term includes all forms of mental unsoundness, except of the natural born idiot. Hiett v. Shull, 36 W.Va. 563, 15 S.E. 147.

Idiocy is congenital amentia, that is, a want of reason and intelligence existing from birth and due to structural defect or malformation of the brain. It is a congenital obliteration of the chief mental powers and is the condition in which the patient has never had, from his birth, even the least glimmering of reason; for a man is not legally an “idiot” if he can tell his parents, his age, or other like common matters. This is not the condition of a deranged mind, but that of a total absence of mind, so that, while idiocy is generally classed under the general designation of “insanity,” it is rather to be regarded as a natural defect than as a disease or as the result of a disease. It differs from “lunacy,” because there are no lucid intervals or periods of ordinary intelligence. In re Beaumont, 1 Whart. Pa.) 53, 29 Am.Dec. 33; Clark v. Robinson, 88 Ill. 502.

Imbecility. A more or less advanced decay and feebleness of the intellectual faculties; that weakness of mind which, without depriving the person entirely of the use of his reason, leaves only the faculty of conceiving the most common and ordinary ideas and such as relate almost always to physical wants and habits. It varies in shades and degrees from merely excessive folly and eccentricity to an almost total vacuity of mind or amentia, and the test of legal capacity, in this condition, is the stage to which the weakness of mind has advanced, as measured by the degree of reason, judgment, and memory remaining. It may proceed from paresis or general paralysis, from senile decay, or from the advanced stages of any of the ordinary forms of insanity; and the term is rather descriptive of the consequences of insanity than of any particular type of the disease. Campbell v. Campbell, 130 Ill. 466, 22 N.E. 620, 6 L.R.A. 167.

Mere imbecility or weakness of mind, however great, is not “insanity.” There must be a total want of understanding. Johnson v. Millard, 110 Neb. 830, 195 N.W. 485, 487.

Lunacy. At the common law, was a term used to describe the state of one who, by sickness, grief, or other accident, has wholly lost his memory and understanding. Co. Litt. 246b, 247a; Corn. v. Haskell, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 496. It is distinguished from idiocy, an idiot being one who from his birth has had no memory or understanding, while lunacy implies the possession and subsequent loss of mental powers. Bishop v. Sparr, 77 N.Y.S. 920, 38 Misc. Rep. 389. On the other hand, lunacy is a total deprivation or suspension of the ordinary powers of the mind, and is to be distinguished from imbecility, where there is a more or less advanced decay and feebleness of the intellectual faculties. In re Vanauken, 10 N.J.Eq. 186, 195; Odell v. Buck, 21 Wend. (N.Y.) 142. As to all other forms of insanity, lunacy was originally distinguished by the occurrence of lucid intervals, and hence might be described as a periodical or recurrent insanity. In re Anderson, 132 N.C. 243, 43 S.E. 649. But while these distinctions are still observed in some jurisdictions, they are more generally disregarded; so that, at present, in inquisitions of lunacy and other such proceedings, the term “lunacy” has almost everywhere come to be synonymous with “insanity,” Smith v. Hickenbottom, 57 Iowa, 733, 11 N.W. 664, 667, and is used as a general description of all forms of derangement of mental or mental unsoundness, this rule being established by statute in many states and by judicial decisions in others, In re Clark, 175 N.Y. 139, 67 N. E. 212.
Cases of arrested mental development would come within the definition of lunacy, that is, where the patient was born with a normal brain, but the cessation of mental growth occurred in infancy or so near it that he never acquired any greater intelligence or discretion than belongs to a normally healthy child. Such a subject might be scientifically denominated an "idiot," but not legally, for in law the latter term is applicable only to congenital amentia. The term "lucid interval" means not an apparent tranquility or seeming repose, or cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder, or a simple diminution or remission of the disease, but a temporary cure—an intermission so clearly marked that it perfectly resembles a return of health; and it must be such a restoration of the faculties as enables the patient beyond doubt to comprehend the nature of his acts and transact his affairs as usual; and it must be continued for a length of time sufficient to give certainty to the temporary restoration of reason. Godden v. Burke, 35 La.Ann. 160, 173; Frazer v. Frayer, 2 Del. Ch. 260.

Non compos mentis. Lat. Not of sound mind. A generic term applicable to all insane persons, of whatsoever specific type the insanity may be and from whatever cause arising, provided there be an entire loss of reason, as distinguished from mere weakness of mind. Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 244. Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 350, 50 Am. Dec. 329.

Forms and Varieties of Insanity

Without attempting a scientific classification of the numerous types and forms of insanity, (as to which it may be said that there is as yet no final agreement among psychologists and alienists either as to analysis or nomenclature,) definitions and explanations will here be appended of the compound and descriptive terms most commonly met with in medical jurisprudence. And, first, as to the origins or causes of the disease:

Choreic insanity is insanity arising from chorea, the latter being a nervous disease, more commonly attacking children than adults, characterized by irregular and involuntary twitchings of the muscles of the limbs and face, popularly called "St. Vitus' dance."

Congenital insanity is that which exists from the birth of the patient, and is (in law) properly called "idiocy." See supra.

Cretinism is a form of imperfect or arrested mental development, which may amount to idiocy, with physical degeneracy or deformity or lack of development; endemic in Switzerland and some other parts of Europe, but the term is applied to similar states occurring elsewhere.

Delirium tremens. A disease of the nervous system, induced by the excessive and protracted use of intoxicating liquors. Etna Life Ins. Co. v. Deming, 123 Ind. 384, 24 N.E. 86, 87, usually occurring in habitual drinkers after a few days' total abstinence from liquors, but sometimes resulting directly and immediately from drunkenness, Erwin v. State, 10 Tex.App. 700, 702; Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U.S. 350, 354, 26 L.Ed. 1055; Evers v. State, 31 Tex.Cr.R. 318, 29 S.W. 744, 748, 18 L.R.A. 421, 37 Am.St.Rep. 811; and affecting the brain so as to produce incoherence and lack of continuity in the intellectual processes, a suspension or perversion of the power of volition, and delusions, particularly of a terrifying nature, but not generally prompting to violence except in the effort to escape from imaginary dangers. It is recognized in law as a form of insanity, and may be of such a nature or intensity as to render the patient legally incapable of committing a crime. United States v. McGlue, 1 Curt. 1, 26 Fed.Cas. 1093; Insurance Co. v. Deming, 123 Ind. 384, 24 N.E. 86; Maconnehey v. State, 5 Ohio St. 77; Erwin v. State, 10 Tex.App. 700.

In some states the insanity of alcoholic intoxication is classed as "temporary," where induced by the voluntary use of intoxicating spirits and carried to such a degree that the person becomes incapable of judging the consequences or the moral aspect of his acts, and "settled," where the condition is that of delirium tremens. Settled insanity, in this sense, excuses from civil or criminal responsibility; temporary insanity does not. The ground of the distinction is that the former is a remote effect of imbibing alcoholic liquors and is not voluntarily incurred, while the latter is a direct result voluntarily sought for. Evers v. State, 31 Tex.Cr.R. 318, 20 S.W. 744, 18 L.R.A. 421, 37 Am.St.Rep. 811; State v. Kidwell, 62 W.Va. 466, 59 S.E. 494, 495, 13 L.R.A.,N.S., 1024.

Polie brightique. A French term sometimes used to designate an access of insanity resulting from nephritis or "Bright's disease." In re McKean's Will, 66 N.Y.S. 44, 31 Misc. 703.

Idiopathic insanity is such as results from a disease of the brain itself, lesions of the cortex, cerebral anemia, etc.

Paranoia. A form of mental distress known as delusional insanity, and a person afflicted with it has delusions which dominate, but do not destroy, the mental capacity, and, though sane as to other subjects, as to the delusion and its direct consequences the person is insane. Mounger v. Gandy, 110 Miss. 133, 69 So. 817, 818.

It is sometimes characterized as logical perversion, and is said to have "misplaced the antiquated term monomania, which not only implied that the delusion was restricted to one subject, but was otherwise insufficient and misleading." The memory, emotions, judgment, and conceptions are in most cases unimpaired, though each of these mental divisions may be involved. 2 Clevenger, Med.Jur. 860. It is characterized by systematized delusions, the term taking the place of "monomania" or "partial insanity". Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S.W. 405.

Pellagrous insanity. Insanity caused by or derived from pellagra, which is an endemic disease of southern Europe, (though not confined to that region,) characterized by erythema, digestive derangement, and nervous affections. (Cent. Dict.)

Polyneuritic insanity. Insanity arising from an inflammation of the nerves, of the kind called "polyneuritis" or "multiple neuritis" because it involves several nerves at the same time. This is often preceded by tuberculosis and almost always by alcoholism, and is characterized specially by delusions and falsification of the memory. It is otherwise called "Korssakoff's disease." (Kraepelin.)

Puerperal insanity. A mental derangement occurring in women at the time of child-birth or immediately after; it is also called "eclampsia parturientum."

Syphilitic insanity. A paresis or progressive imbecility resulting from the infection of syphilis.
INSANITY

It is sometimes called (as being a sequence or result of that disease) "metasypihlis" or "parasypilis."

Tabetic dementia. A form of mental derangement or insanity complicated with "tabes dorsalis" or "locomotor ataxia," which generally precedes, or sometimes follows, the mental attack. As to insanity resulting from cerebral embolism, see Embolism; from epilepsy, see Epilepsy. As to chronic alcoholicism as a form of insanity, see Alcoholism.

Traumatic insanity is such as results from a wound or injury, particularly to the head or brain, such as fracture of the skull or concussion of the brain.

General Descriptive and Clinical Terms

Affective insanity. A modern comprehensive term descriptive of all those forms of insanity which affect or relate to the feelings and emotions and hence to the ethical and social relations of the individual.

Circular insanity. Another name for maniacal-depressive insanity, which see.

"Emotional insanity" or mania transitoria applies to the case of one in the possession of his ordinary reasoning faculties who allows his passions to convert him into a temporary maniac. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. 580, 583, 21 L.Ed. 236.

In a criminal case the law rejects the doctrine of what is called emotional insanity, which begins on the eve of the criminal act, and leaves off when it is committed. People v. Kernaghan, 72 Cal. 609, 14 P. 566, 568; Graves v. State, 45 N.J.L. (16 Vroom) 347, 350, 46 Am.Rep. 778.

Folie circulaire. The French name for circular insanity or maniacal-depressive insanity.

General paralysis. Dementia paralytica or paralytic madness.

Habitual insanity. Such insanity as is, in its nature, continuous and chronic. Wright v. Market Bank, Tenn.Ch.App., 60 S.W. 623, 624.

Involutional insanity. That which sometimes accompanies the "involution" of the physical structure and physiology of the individual, the reverse of their "evolution," hence practically equivalent to the imbecility of old age or senile dementia.

Katatonia. A form of insanity distinguished by periods of acute mania and melancholia and especially by cataleptic states or conditions; the "insanity of rigidity." (Kahlbaum.) A type of insanity characterized particularly by "stereotypism," an instinctive inclination to purposeless repetition of the same expressions of the will, and "negativism," a senseless resistance against every outward influence. (Kraepelin.)

Legal insanity. Legal insanity is a disorder of the intellect, and is distinguished from "moral insanity," which is a disorder of the feelings and propensities. In re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. 274, 291; Bensberg v. Washington University, 251 Mo. 641, 158 S.W. 330, 336. A disease of the brain, rendering a person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong with respect to the offense charged. State v. Privitt, 175 Mo. 207, 75 S.W. 457, 459.

Maniacal-depressive insanity. A form of insanity characterized by alternating periods of high maniacal excitement and of depressed and stuporous conditions in the nature of or resembling melancholia, often occurring as a series or cycle of isolated attacks, with more or less complete restoration to health in the intervals. (Kraepelin.) This is otherwise called "circular insanity" or "circular stupor."

Moral insanity. A morbid perversion of the feelings, affections, or propensities, but without any illusions or derangement of the intellectual faculties; irresistible impulse or an incapacity to resist the prompting of the passions, though accompanied by the power of discerning the moral or immoral character of the act. Moral insanity is not admitted as a bar to civil or criminal responsibility for the patient's acts, unless there is also shown to be intellectual disturbance, as manifested by insane delusions or the other recognized criteria of legal insanity. Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S.W. 405, 412; Bensberg v. Washington University, 251 Mo. 641, 158 S.W. 330, 336.

In a very few of the states where moral insanity is recognized as a defense, it means an incapacity of resistance, as where there was an entire destruction of the freedom of the will, although the person perceived the moral or immoral character of the act. State v. Leehman, 2 S.D. 171, 49 N.W. 3, 5.

Partial insanity, as a legal term, may mean either monomania (see insanity) or an intermediate stage in the development of mental derangement. In the former sense, it does not relieve the patient from responsibility for his acts, except where investigated directly by his particular delusion or obsession: Trich v. Trich, 165 Pa. 586, 30 A. 1053. In the latter sense, it denotes a clouding or weakening of the mind, not inconsistent with some measure of memory, reason, and judgment. But the term, in this sense, does not convey any very definite meaning, since it may range from mere feeble-mindedness to almost the last stages of imbecility. Appeal of Dunham, 27 Conn. 205; State v. Jones, 50 N.H. 369, 383, 9 Am.Rep. 242.

"Neurosis," in its broadest sense, may include any disease or disorder of the mind, and hence all the forms of insanity proper. But the term "psychoneurosis" is now employed by Freud and other European specialists to describe that class of exaggerated individual peculiarities or idiosyncrasies of thought towards special objects or topics which are absent from the perfectly normal mind, and which yet have so little influence upon the patient's conduct or his general modes of thought that they cannot properly be described as "insanity" or as any form of "mania," especially because ordinarily unaccompanied by any kind of delusions. At most, they lie on the debatable border-line between sanity and insanity. These idiosyncrasies or obsessions may arise from superstition, from a real incident in the patient's past history upon which he has brooded until it has assumed an unreal importance or significance, or from general neurasthenic conditions. Such, for example, are a terrified shrinking from certain kinds of animals, unreasonable dread of being shut up in some enclosed place or of being alone in a crowd, excessive fear of being poi-

- stoned, groundless conviction of irredeemable sinfulness,
- and countless other prepossessions, which may range from
- or of being alone in a crowd, excessive fear of being poi-
- unreasonable dread of being shut up in some enclosed place
- mere weak-minded superstition to actual monomania.

Recurrent insanity. Insanity which returns from time to time, hence equivalent to "lunacy" (see supraj in its common-law sense, as a mental disorder broken by lucid intervals. There is no presumption that fitful and exceptional attacks of insanity are continuous. Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 3 S.W. 538, 58 Am.Rep. 638.

Settled insanity. The term applied to delirium tremens, which is a kind of insanity produced by alcoholism, caused by the breaking down of the person's system by long-continued or habitual drunkenness, and brought on by abstinence from drink. It is thus termed, to distinguish it from.
- "temporary insanity," or drunkenness directly re-

Temporary delusion. The word implies un- soundness or derangement of mind or intellect, not a mere temporary or slight delusion, which might be occasioned by fever or accident. Karow v. New York Continental Ins. Co., 57 Wis. 56, 15 N.W. 27, 31, 46 Am.Rep. 17.

Other Forms of Insanity

Amentia, dementia, and mania. The classification of insanity into these three types or forms, though once common, has of late given way to a more scientific nomenclature, based chiefly on the origin or cause of the disease in the particular pa- tient and its clinical history. These terms, how-
- ever, are still occasionally encountered in medical jurisprudence, and the names of some of their subdivisions are in constant use.

Amentia. A total lack of intelligence, reason, or mental capacity. Sometimes so used as to cov-
- er imbecility or dotage, or even as applicable to all forms of insanity; but properly restricted to a lack of mental capacity due to original defective organization of the brain (idiocy) or arrested cere-
- bral development, as distinguished from the degen-
- eration of intellectual faculties which once were normal.

Dementia. A form of insanity resulting from degeneration or disorder of the brain (idiopathic or traumatic, but not congenital) and characterized by general mental weakness and decrepitude, for-
- getfulness, loss of coherence, and total inability to reason, but not accompanied by delusions or un-

Among the sub-divisions of dementia should be noticed the following:
- Acute primary dementia is a form of temporary dementia, though often extreme in its intensity, and occurring in young people as a prodromal symptom, usually but not necessarily concurrent with slight degeneration of the physical, intellectual, and moral powers, and leading to complete loss of mentality, or imbecil-
- ity, with general paralysis. Also called paresis, paretic dementia, or cirrhosis of the brain, or (popularly) "soften-
- ing of the brain." Dementia praecox. A term applicable either to the early stages of dementia or to the dementia of adolescence, but more commonly applied to the latter. It is often (but not invariably) attributable to onanism or self-abuse, and is characterized by mental and moral stu-
- pidity, absence of any strong feeling of the impressions of life or interest in its events, blunting or obscuration of the moral sense, weakness of judgment, flightiness of thought, senseless laughter without mirth, automatic obe-
- dience, and apathetic despondency. (Kraepelin.) Senile dementia. Dementia occurring in persons of advanced age, and characterized by slowness and weakness of the mental processes and general physical degeneration, verging on or passing into imbecility, indicating the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of bodily decay. Hiett v. Shull, 36 W.Va. 563, 15 S.E. 146. Toxic dementia occurring in cases of neurotic over-
- dose, as in cases of lead poisoning and in some cases of addiction to such drugs as opium or alcohol.

Dementia praecox paranoid. A medical term in-
- dicating that form of dementia in which the pa- tient exhibits ideas of persecution and has delu-
- sions. Rasmussen v. George Benz & Sons, 168 Minn. 319, 210 N.W. 75, 76.

Dipsomania. An irresistible impulse to indulge in intoxication, either alcohol or other drugs.
- opiums. This mania, or dipsomania, is classed as one of the minor forms of insanity. Repeated intoxication for a number of "ears, which is en-

Erotomania. A form of mania similar to nym-
- phomania, except that the present term is applied to patients of both sexes, and that (according to some authorities) it is applicable to all cases of excessive sexual craving irrespective of origin; while nymphomania is restricted to cases where the disease is caused by a local disorder of the sexual organs reacting on the brain. In erotoma-
- nia, there is often an absence of any lesion of the intellectual powers. Krafft-Ebing, Psychopathia Sexualis, Chaddock's ed. And it is to be observed that the term "erotomania" is now often used, especially by French writers, to describe a morbid propensity for "falling in love" or an exaggerated and excited condition of amativeness or love-sick-
- ness, which may affect the general physical health, but is not necessarily correlated with any sexual craving, and which, though it may unnaturally color the imagination and distort the subject's view of life and affairs, does not at all amount to insanity, and should not be so considered when it leads to crimes of violence, as in the common case of a rejected lover who kills his mistress.
INSANITY

Fit of mania. A fit of mania includes a temporary depression or aberration of the mind, which sometimes accompanies or follows intoxication, and is often accompanied by delusions, hallucinations, and illusions. Gunter v. State, 3 So. 600, 607, 83 Ala. 96.

Homicidal mania. A form of mania in which the morbid state of the mind manifests itself in an irresistible inclination or impulse to commit homicide, prompted usually by an insane delusion either as to the necessity of self-defense or the avenging of injuries, or as to the patient being the appointed instrument of a superhuman justice. Com. v. Sayre, 5 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 425.

Hypomania. A mild or slightly developed form or type of mania.

Kleptomania. See Kleptomania.

In the case first above cited, the following description is given by Justice Field: "Mania is that form of insanity where the mental derangement is accompanied with more or less of excitement. Sometimes the excitement amounts to a fury. The individual in such cases is subject to hallucinations and illusions. He is impressed with the reality of events which have never occurred, and of things which do not exist, and acts more or less in conformity with his belief in these particulars. The mania may be general, and affect all or most of the operations of the mind; or it may be partial, and be confined to particular subjects. In the latter case it is generally termed 'monomania.' " In a more popular but less scientific sense, "mania" denotes a morbid or unnatural or excessive craving, issuing in impulses of such fixity and intensity that they cannot be resisted by the patient in the enfeebled state of the will and blurred moral concepts which accompany the disease. It is used in this sense in such compounds as "homicidal mania," "dipsomania," and the like.

Mania transitoria. The term applies to the case of one in the possession of his ordinary reasoning faculties, who allows his passions to convert him into a temporary maniac. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 82 U.S. (15 Wall.) 580, 583, 21 L.Ed. 236.

Megalomania. The so-called "delirium of grandeur" or "folie de grandeur;" a form of mania in which the besetting delusion of the patient is that he is some person of great celebrity or exalted rank, historical or contemporary.

Melancholia. A form of insanity the characteristics of which are extreme mental depression, with delusions and hallucinations, the latter relating especially to the financial or social position of the patient or to impending or threatened dangers to his person, property, or reputation, or issuing in distorted conceptions of his relations to society or his family or of his rights and duties in general. State v. Reidel, 9 Houst., Del., 470, 14 A. 551; People v. Krist, 168 N.Y. 19, 60 N.E. 1057. Hypochondria or hypochondriasis. A form of melancholia in which the patient has exaggerated or causeless fears concerning his health or suffers from imaginary disease. Toxiphobia. Morbid dread of being poisoned; a form of insanity manifesting itself by an excessive and unfounded apprehension of death by poison.

Methomania. An irresistible craving for alcoholic or other intoxicating liquors, manifested by the periodical recurrence of drunken debauches. State v. Savage, 89 Ala. 1, 7 So. 183, 7 L.R.A. 426.

Monomania. A perversion of the understanding in regard to a single object or a small number of objects, with the predominance of mental excitement, as distinguished from "mania," which means a condition in which the perversion of the understanding embraces all kinds of objects, and is accompanied with general mental excitement. State v. John, 30 N.C. 330, 337, 49 Am.Dec. 396; Freed v. Brown, 55 Ind. 310, 317; People v. Lake, 2 Parker, Cr.R. (N.Y.) 215, 218. A perversion or derangement of the reason or understanding with reference to a single subject or small class of subjects, with considerable mental excitement and delusions, while, as to all matters outside the range of the peculiar infirmity, the intellectual faculties remain unimpaired and function normally. Hopps v. People, 31 Ill. 390, 83 Am.Dec. 231; Bohler v. Hicks, 120 Ga. 800, 48 S.E. 306, 307.

Necrophilism. A form of affective insanity manifesting itself in an unnatural and revolting fondness for corpses, the patient desiring to be in their presence, to caress them, to exhume them, or sometimes to mutilate them, and even (in a form of sexual perversion) to violate them.

Nymphomania. A form of mania characterized by a morbid, excessive, and uncontrollable craving for sexual intercourse. This term is applied only to women. The term for a corresponding mania in men is "satyriasis."

Oilei mania. A form of insanity manifesting itself in a morbid state of the domestic affections, as an unreasonable dislike of wife or child without cause or provocation. Ekin v. McCracken, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 540.

Paranoia. Monomania in general, or the obsession of a delusion or system of delusions which dominate without destroying the mental capacity, leaving the patient sane as to all matters outside their particular range, though subject to perverted ideas, false beliefs, and uncontrollable impulses within that range; and particularly, the form of monomania where the delusion is as to wrongs, injuries, or persecution inflicted upon the patient and his consequently justifiable resentment or revenge. Winters v. State, 61 N.J.L. 613, 41 Atl. 220; People v. Braun, 158 N.Y. 558, 53 N.E. 529. Paranoia is called by Kraepelin 'progressive systematized insanity,” because the delusions of being wronged or of persecution and of excessive self-esteem develop quite slowly, without independent disturbances of emotional life or of the will becoming prominent, and because there occurs regularly a mental working up of the delusion to form a delusionary view of the world,—in fact, a system,—leading to a derangement of the stand-point which the patient takes up towards the events of life.

Pyromania. Incendiariam; a form of affective insanity in which the mania takes the form of an irresistible impulse to burn or set fire to things.

Sebastomania. Religious insanity; demonomania.

Toxicomania. An excessive addiction to the use of toxic or poisonous drugs or other substances,—a form of mania or affective insanity characterized by an irresistible impulse to indulge in opium, cocaine, chloral, alcohol, etc.

Specific Definitions and Applications in Law

There are numerous legal proceedings where insanity may be shown, and the rule for establishing mental capacity or the want of it varies according to the object or purpose of the proceeding. Among these may be enumerated the following:

A criminal prosecution where insanity is alleged as a defense; a proceeding to defeat a will on the ground of the insanity of the testator; a suit to avoid a contract (including that of marriage) for similar reasons; a proceeding to secure the commitment of a person alleged to be insane to an asylum; a proceeding to appoint a guardian or conservator for an alleged lunatic; a plea or proceeding to effect the void of the statute of limitations on account of insanity. What might be regarded as insanity in one of such cases would not necessarily be so regarded in another. No definite rule can be laid down which would apply to all cases alike. Snyder v. Snyder, 142 Ill. 60, 31 N.E. 303; Clarke v. Irwin, 63 Neb. 539, 88 N.W. 783. But the following rules or tests for specific cases have been generally accepted and approved:

In criminal law and as a defense to an accusation of crime, insanity means such a perverted and deranged condition of the mental and moral faculties as to render the person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, or to render him at the time unconscious of the nature of the act he is committing, or such that, though he may be conscious of it and also of its normal quality, so as to know that the act in question is wrong, yet his will or volition has been (otherwise than voluntarily) so completely destroyed that his actions are not subject to it but are beyond his control. Or, as otherwise stated, insanity is such a state of mental derangement that the subject is incompetent of having a criminal intent, or incapable of so controlling his will as to avoid doing the act in question. Davis v. U. S., 17 S.Ct. 360, 165 U.S. 373, 41 L.Ed. 750; Doherty v. State, 50 A. 1113, 73 Vt. 380; Butler v. State, 102 Wis. 364, 78 N.W. 590.

An insane person cannot be legally charged with a criminal intent; State v. Brown, 36 Utah, 46, 102 P. 641, 24 L.R.A.,N.S., 545.

In Coleman’s case, in New York it was held that the “test of the responsibility for criminal acts, when insanity is alleged, is the capacity of the accused to distinguish between right and wrong at the time and with respect to the act which is the subject of inquiry.” 1 N.Y.Cr.Rep. 1. With variations of expression this is the prevailing doctrine of the American courts. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. 590, 21 L.Ed 236.

The capacity to distinguish between right and wrong has been held not to be a safe test in all cases. State v. Felter, 25 Iowa 67, per Dillon, C. J. See also Brown v. Corn., 78 Pa. 122.

Insane delusion is of no avail as a defense unless, if true, the facts supposed to exist would have excused the crime. Thurman v. State, 32 Neb. 224, 49 N.W. 338; Smith v. State, 55 Ark. 259, 18 S.W. 237. Irresistible impulse to commit a crime is defined as that uncontrollable impulse produced by a disease of the mind, when that disease is sufficient to override judgment and obliterate the sense of right as to the acts done, and deprives the accused of power to control. This was recognized in Stevens v. State, 31 Ind. 485, 99 Am. Dec. 634. But it is held that no impulse, however irresistible, is a defense, where there is a knowledge as to the particular act between right and wrong. State v. Brandon, 53 N.C. 463; State v. Miller, 141 Mo. 542, 20 S.W. 243, and that it was a crime morally, and punishable by the laws of the country; State v. Alexander, 30 S.C. 74, 8 S.E. 440, 14 Am.St.Rep. 879; Williams v. State, 59 Ark. 511, 15 S.W. 3.

Mere frenzy or ungovernable passion which controls the will and motives is not insanity sufficient to excuse crime. Garner v. State, 112 Miss. 317, 73 So. 50, 5L.

Testamentary capacity includes an intelligent understanding of the testator’s property, its extent and items, and of the nature of the act he is about to perform, together with a clear understanding and purpose as to the manner of its distribution and the persons who are to receive it. Lacking these, he is not mentally competent. The presence of insane delusions is not inconsistent with testamentary capacity, if they are of such a nature that they cannot reasonably be supposed to have affected the dispositions made by the will; and the same is true of the various forms of monomania and of all kinds of eccentricity and personal idiosyncrasy. But imbecility, senile dementia, and all forms of systematized mania which affect the understanding and judgment generally disable the patient from making a valid will. Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 585, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141; Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. 495; Trustees of Ewowski Memorial Methodist Church v. Overman, 185 Ky. 773, 215 S.W. 942, 944. To constitute “senile dementia,” incapacitating one to make a will, there must be such a failure of the mind as to deprive the testator of intelligent action. Gates v. Cole, 137 Iowa 613, 115 N.W. 236, 237, 238.

As a ground for avoiding or annulling a contract or conveyance, insanity does not mean a total deprivation of reason, but an inability, from defect of perception, memory, and judgment, to do the act in question or to understand its nature and consequences. Frazier v. Frazier, 2 Del. Ch. 260; Durrett v. McWhorter, 161 Ga. 179, 129 S.E. 870, 874. The insanity must have entered into and induced the particular contract or conveyance; it must appear that it was not the act of the free and untrammeled mind, and that on account of the diseased condition of the mind the person entered into a contract or made a conveyance which he would not have made if he had been in the possession of his reason. Dewey v. Aligire, 37 Neb. 6, 55 N.W. 276, 40 Am.St.Rep. 468.

Insanity sufficient to justify the annulment of a marriage means such a want of understanding at the time of the marriage as to render the party incapable of assenting to the contract of marriage. The morbid propensity to steal, called "kleptomania," does not answer this description. Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 46 N.W. 323, '9 L.R.A. 505, 20 Am.St.Rep. 559. The marriage of a person insane was held void in Inhabitants of Middleborough v. Inhabitants of Rochester, 12 Mass. 363. Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am.Rep. 774; Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 271. A marriage contracted while one party was insane from delirium tremens was held void, but mere weakness of mind not amounting to derangement is not sufficient. Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; and Vir that merely, or intoxicated, a court has no power to declare a marriage null and void. The same degree of mental capacity which enables a person to make a valid deed or will is sufficient to enable him to marry; Inhabitants of Atkinson v. Inhabitants of Medford, 46 Me. 510.

One is "insane," so as to make self-destruction an accident, within the meaning of an insurance policy compensating death by accident, where he is so mentally diseased as to be incapable of understanding the nature of the act and unable to distinguish between right and wrong. London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Officer, 78 Colo. 441, 242 P. 989, 991.

As a ground for restraining the personal liberty of the patient, it may be said in general that the form of insanity from which he suffers should be such as to make his going at large a source of danger to himself or to others, though this matter is largely regulated by statute, and in many places the law permits the commitment to insane asylums and hospitals of persons whose insanity does not manifest itself in homicidal or other destructive forms of mania, but who are incapable of caring for themselves and their property or who are simply fit subjects for treatment in hospitals and other institutions specially designed for the care of such patients.

To constitute insanity such as will authorize the appointment of a guardian or conservator for the patient, there must be such a deprivation of reason and judgment as to render him incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life; a want of sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business and to take care of and manage his property and affairs. See Snyder v. Snyder, 142 Ill. 60, 31 N.E. 303.

Insanity as a plea or proceeding to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations means practically the same thing as in relation to the appointment of a guardian. On the one hand, it does not require a total deprivation of reason or absence of understanding. On the other hand, it does not include mere weakness of mind short of imbecility. It means such a degree of derangement as renders the subject incapable of understanding the nature of the particular affair and his rights and remedies in regard to it and incapable of taking discreet and intelligent action. Burnham v. Mitchell, 34 Wis. 134. The time of sanity required in order to allow the statute to begin to run is such as will enable the party to examine his affairs and institute an action, and is for the jury.

There are a few other legal rights or relations into which the question of insanity enters, such as the capacity of a witness or of a voter; but they are governed by the same general principles. The test is capacity to understand and appreciate the nature of the particular act and to exercise intelligence in its performance. A witness must understand the nature and purpose of an oath and have enough intelligence and memory to relate correctly the facts within his knowledge. So a voter must understand the nature of the act to be performed and be able to make an intelligent choice of candidates. In either case, eccentricity, "crankiness," feeble-mindedness not amounting to imbecility, or insane delusions which do not affect the matter in hand, do not disqualify. See District of Columbia v. Armes, 2 S.Ct. 840, 107 U.S. 521, 27 L.Ed. 618.

INSANUS EST QUI, ABJECTA RATIONE, OMNIA CUM IMPETU ET FURORE FACIT. He is insane who, reason being thrown away, does everything with violence and rage. 4 Coke, 128.

INSCRIBERE. Lat. In the civil law. To bind one's self, in case an accusation in which the accuser undertakes to suffer the same punishment if the accused is able to clear himself of the accusation. Calvin; Cod. 9, 1, 10; Id. 9, 2, 16, 17.

INSCRIPTION. In Evidence. Anything written or engraved upon a metallic or other solid substance, intended for great durability; as upon a tombstone, pillar, tablet, medal, ring, etc.

In Civil law. An engagement which a person who makes a solemn accusation of a crime against another enters into that he will suffer the same punishment which the accused would have suffered had he been proved guilty. Calvin.

INSCRIPTIO. Lat. In the civil law. A written accusation in which the accuser undertakes to suffer the punishment appropriate to the offense charged, if the accused is able to clear himself of the accusation. Calvin; Cod. 9, 1, 10; Id. 9, 2, 16, 17.

INSCRIPTION. In Evidence. Anything written or engraved upon a metallic or other solid substance, intended for great durability; as upon a tombstone, pillar, tablet, medal, ring, etc.

In Civil law. An engagement which a person who makes a solemn accusation of a crime against another enters into that he will suffer the same punishment, if he has accused the other falsely, which would have been inflicted upon him had he been guilty. Code, 9. 1. 10; 9. 2. 16 and 17.

In Modern Civil law. The entry of a mortgage, lien, or other document at large in a book of pub-
INSOLVENCY. The condition of a person who is insolvent; inability to pay one's debts; lack of means to pay one's debts. Such a relative condition of a man's assets and liabilities that the former, if all made immediately available, would not be sufficient to discharge the latter. Or the condition of a person who is unable to pay his debts as they fall due, or in the usual course of trade and business. Dewey v. St. Alburns Trust Co., 56 Vt. 475, 48 Am.Rep. 803; Toof v. Martin, 13 Wall. 47, 20 L.Ed. 481; Frank v. Stearns, 111 Neb. 101, 195 N.W. 949, 951.

Independent of statute, it may generally be said that insolvency, when applied to a person, firm, or corporation engaged in trade, means inability to pay debts as they become due in the usual course of business. Parker v. First Nat. Bank, 96 Okd. 70, 220 P. 39; Bushman v. Bushman, 311 Mo. 551, 279 S.W. 122, 126. The mere fact that a corporation or an individual is unable to pay its debts upon a particular day does not constitute "insolvency." Wiggins Co. v. McMinnville Motor Car Co., 111 Or. 123, 225 P. 314, 317, and a bank is not "insolvent" if its assets are sufficient to meet its obligations within a reasonable time, although it did not have cash sufficient for its daily needs. Dunlap v. Seattle Nat. Bank, 93 Wash. 568, 161 P. 364, 368.

A man may be fully able to pay his debts, if he will, and yet in the eye of the law he is insolvent, if his property is so situated that it cannot be reached by process of law, and subjected, without his consent, to the payment of his debts. Jackson v. Chattahoochee Grocery Co., 156 Ala. 500, 47 So. 672.

INSOLVENCY fund. In English law. A fund, consisting of moneys and securities, which, at the time of the passing of the bankruptcy act, 1861, stood, in the Bank of England, to the credit of the commissioners of the insolvent debtors' court, and was, by the twenty-sixth section of that act, directed to be carried by the bank to the account of the bankrupt. Provision has now been made for its transfer to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt. Robs. Bankr. 20, 56.
INSOLVENCY

Insolvency laws. Insolvency laws are generally statutory provisions by which the property of the debtor is surrendered for his debts; and upon this condition, and the assent of a certain proportion of his creditors, he is discharged from all further liabilities; Bartlet v. Prince, 9 Mass. 431; Otis v. Warren, 16 Mass. 53; 2 Kent 321; Ingr. Insolv.

9. Insolvency, according to some of the state statutes, may be of two kinds, voluntary and involuntary. Voluntary insolvency is the case in which the debtor institutes the proceedings, and is desirous of availing himself of the insolvent laws, and petitions for that purpose whereas involuntary insolvency is where the proceedings are instituted by the creditors in invitum, and so the debtor forced into insolvency.

Open insolvency. The condition of one who has no property, within the reach of the law, applicable to the payment of any debt. Hardesty v. Kinworthy, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 305; Somerby v. Brown, 73 Ind. 356.

INSOLVENT. (Lat. in, privative, solvo, to pay). The condition of a person who is unable to pay his debts. 2 Bla.Com. 285, 471; Brouwer v. Harbeck, 9 N.Y. 589. One who cannot or does not pay; one who is unable to pay his debts; one who is not solvent; one who has not means or property sufficient to pay his debts. One who is unable to pay commercial paper in the due course of business. Warren v. Nat. Bank, 10 Blatchf. 493, Fed. Cas. No. 17,202; Clarke v. Mott, 4 Cal.Unrep.Cas. 80, 33 P. 884. See, also, Insolvency.

Other definitions

One who is unable to pay his debts as they fall due in the usual course of trade or business, 2 Kent 389; 1 M. & S. 338; Lee v. Kilbourn, 3 Gray, Mass., 600; Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 22 S.W. 358, 724, 20 L.R.A. 138, 38 Am. Rep. 592; although his assets in value exceed the amount of his liability. In re Ramazzina, 110 Cal. 488, 42 P. 970; or the embarrassed is only temporary, Langham v. Lanier, 7 Tex.Civ.App. 4, 26 S.W. 255; but it is held that mere inability to pay debts promptly as they mature is not conclusive, Mensing v. Atchison, Tex.Civ.App., 26 S.W. 509; and that one who has sufficient property subject to legal process to satisfy all legal demands is not insolvent. Smith v. Collins, 94 Ala. 394, 10 So. 334. A corporation is insolvent when its assets are insufficient for the payment of its debts, and it has ceased to do business, or has taken, or is in the act of taking, a step which will practically incapacitate it from conducting the corporate enterprise with reasonable prospect of success, or its embarrassments are such that early suspension and failure must ensue. Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 11 So. 350, 23 L.R.A. 618, 42 Am.St.Rep. 29. A bank is insolvent when the cash value of its assets realizable in a reasonable time is not equal to its liabilities exclusive of stock liabilities. Ellis v. State, 138 Wis. 513, 119 N.W. 1110, 20 L.R.A.,N.S., 444, 131 Am.St.Rep. 1022.

INSOLVENCY LAW. See Insolvency Laws.

INSPECT. To look, to view or oversee for the purpose of ascertaining the quality or condition of the thing or for purpose of examination. U. S. v. A. Bentley & Sons Co., D.C.Ohio, 293 F. 229, 239; O’Hare v. Peacock Dairies, 26 Cal.App.2d 753, 79 i. 2d 433, 438.

INSPECTATOR. A prosecutor or adversary.

INSPECTION. A critical examination, close or careful scrutiny, a strict or prying examination, or an investigation. In re Becker, 192 N.Y.S. 754, 756, 200 App.Div. 178. An examination or testing of food, fluids, or other articles made subject by law to such examination, to ascertain their fitness for use or commerce. People of the State of New York v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, C. N.Y., 10 F. 361; Id., 2 S.Ct. 87, 107 U.S. 59, 27 L. Ed. 383; Turner v. Maryland, 2 S.Ct. 44, 107 U.S. 38, 27 L.Ed. 370. An examination by a private person of public records and documents; or of the books and papers of his opponent in an action, for the purpose of better preparing his own case for trial.

Reasonable inspection. As relates to duty of employer to provide employee with proper instrumentalities with which to work, does not mean such an inspection as would necessarily or infallibly disclose a defect if one existed, but only such inspection as reasonably prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, would make. Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Fountain, 145 Miss. 515, 111 So. 153, 154.

INSPECTION LAWS. Laws authorizing and directing the inspection and examination of various kinds of merchandise intended for sale, especially food, with a view to ascertaining its fitness for use, and excluding unwholesome or unmarketable goods from sale, and directing the appointment of official inspectors for that purpose. Const.U.S. art. 1, § 10, cl. 2; Story, Const. § 1017, et seq. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 202, 6 L.Ed. 23; Clintsman v. Northrop, 8 Cow. (N.Y.) 45; Patapsco Guano Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 18 S.Ct. 862, 171 U.S. 345, 41 L.Ed. 191; Turner v. State, 55 Md. 263.

INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS. This phrase refers to the right of a party, in a civil action, to inspect and make copies of documents which are essential or material to the maintenance of his cause, and which are either in the custody of an officer of the law or in the possession of the adverse party.

INSPECTION, TRIAL BY. A mode of trial formerly in use in England, by which the judges of a court decided a point in dispute, upon the testimony of their own senses, without the intervention of a jury. This took place in cases where the fact upon which issue was taken must, from its nature, be evident to the court from ocular demonstration, or other irrefragable proof; and was adopted for the greater expedition of a cause. 3 Bl.Comm. 331.

INSPECTOR. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction. Officers whose duty it is to examine the quality of certain articles of merchandise, food, weights and measures, etc.

INSPECTORSHIP, DEED OF. In English law. An instrument entered into between an insolvent debtor and his creditors, appointing one or more persons to inspect and oversee the winding up of such insolvent’s affairs on behalf of the creditors.
INSPEXIM'US (Lat.). We have seen. A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspeximus such former grant, and so reciting it verbatim; it then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient. 5 Co. 54.

INSTALL. To place in a seat, give a place to, to set, place, or instate in an office, rank, or order, etc. State ex rel. Slattery v. Raupp, 303 Mo. 684, 263 S.W. 834, 835. To set up or fix in position for use or service. King v. Elliott, 197 N.C. 93, 147 S.E. 701, 704.

INSTALLATION. The ceremony of inducting or investing with any charge, office, or rank, as the placing a bishop into his see, a dean or prebendary into his stall or seat, or a knight into his order. Wharton. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The president of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office, by being sworn agreeably to the constitution and laws.

Installation of machinery means to place in position where it will reasonably accomplish purposes for which it is set up. Long v. Ulmer Machinery Co., 77 Cal.App. 66, 246 P. 113, 116.

INSTANCE. In pleading and practice. Solicitation, properly of an earnest or urgent kind. An act is often said to be done at a party’s “special instance and request.” Miller v. Mutual Grocery Co., 214 Ala. 62, 106 So. 396.

“Instance” does not imply the same degree of obligation to obey as does “command.” Feore v. Trammel, 213 Ala. 293, 104 So. 808, 813.

In the civil and French law. A general term, designating all sorts of actions and judicial demands. Dig. 44, 7, 58.

In ecclesiastical law. Causes of instance are those proceeded in at the solicitation of some party, as opposed to causes of office, which run in the name of the judge. Halifax, Civil Law, p. 156.

In Scotch law. That which may be insisted on at one diet or course of probation. Wharton.

INSTANCE COURT. In English law. That division or department of the court of admiralty which exercises all the ordinary admiralty jurisdiction, with the single exception of prize cases, the latter belonging to the branch called the “Prize Court.” The term is sometimes used in American law for purposes of explanation, but has no proper application to admiralty courts in the United States, where the powers of both instance and prize courts are conferred without any distinction. 3 Kent, Comm. 355, 378; The Betsey, 3 Da11. 6, 1 L.Ed. 485; The Emulous, 1 Gall. 563, Fed.Cas.No.4,479.

INSTANCIA. In Spanish law. The institution and prosecution of a suit from its commencement until definitive judgment. The first instance, “primera instancia,” is the prosecution of the suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, “secunda instancia,” is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance, “tercera instancia,” is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisdiction of the same. Escruche.

INSTANS EST FINIS UNIUS TEMPORIS ET PRINCIPIIUS ALTERIUS. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another. Co_ Litt. 185.

INSTANT. Present, current, as instant case. Webster, Dict.

INSTANTANEOUS. An “instantaneous” crime is one which is fully consummated or completed in and by a single act (such as arson or murder) as distinguished from one which involves a series or repetition of acts. U. S. v. Owen, D.C.Or., 32 F. 537.

A death resulting within a few moments from a continuing injury is “instantaneous” within a statute respecting right of action for death. Beach v. City of St. Joseph, 192 Mich. 296, 158 N.W. 1045, 1046.

INSTANTER. Immediately; instantly; forthwith; without delay. Trial instanter was had where a prisoner between attainder and execution pleaded that he was not the same who was attainted.

When a party is ordered to plead instanter, he must plead the same day. The term is usually understood to mean within twenty-four hours. Fentress v. State, 16 Tex.App. 83; Champlin v. Champlin, 2 Edw.Ch., N.Y., 329.

INSTANTLY. Immediately; directly; without delay; at once.

INSTAR. Lat. Likeness; the likeness, size, or equivalent of a thing. Instar dentium, like teeth. 2 B1.Comm. 295. Instar omnium, equivalent or tantamount to all. Id. 146; 3 Bl.Comm. 231.

INSTAURAM. In old English deeds. A stock upon a farm, including cattle, wagons, plows, and all other implements of husbandry. 1 Mon. Angl. 548b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 7. Terra instaura-ta, land ready stocked.

INSTIGATE. To stimulate or goad to an action, especially a bad action; one of its synonyms is "abet". Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 499.

INSTIGATION. Incitation; urging; solicitation. The act by which one incites another to do something, as to commit some crime or to commence a suit. State v. Fraker, 148 Mo. 143, 49 S.W. 1017.

INSTIRPARE. To plant or establish.

INSTITOR. Lat. In the civil law. A clerk in a store; an agent.
INSTITORIA ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. The name of an action given to those who had contracted with an institor (q. v.) to compel the principal to performance. Inst. 4, 7, 2; Dig. 14, 3, 1; Story, Ag. § 426.

INSTITORIAL POWER. The charge given to a clerk to manage a shop or store. 1 Bell, Comm. 506, 507.

To nominate, constitute, or appoint; as to institute an heir by testament. Dig. 28, 5, 65.

INSTITUTE, n. In the civil law. A person named in the will as heir, but with a direction that he shall pass over the estate to another designated person, called the "substitute."

In Scotch law. The person to whom an estate is first given by destination or limitation; the others, or the heirs of tailzie, are called "substitutes."

INSTITUTED EXECUTOR. An instituted executor is one who is appointed by the testator without any condition.

INSTITUTES. A name sometimes given to textbooks containing the elementary principles of jurisprudence, arranged in an orderly and systematic manner. For example, the Institutes of Justinian, of Gaius, of Lord Coke.

Institutes of Gaius. An elementary work of the Roman jurist Gaius; important as having formed the foundation of the Institutes of Justinian, (q. v.). These Institutes were discovered by Niebuhr in 1816, in a codex rescriptus of the library of the cathedral chapter at Verona, and were first published at Berlin in 1820. Two editions have since appeared. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 54.

Institutes of Justinian. One of the four component parts or principal divisions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, being an elementary treatise on the Roman law, in four books. This work was compiled from earlier sources, (resting principally on the Institutes of Gaius,) by a commission composed of Tribonian and two others, by command and under direction of the emperor Justinian, and was first published November 21, A. D. 533.

Institutes of Lord Coke. The name of four volumes by Lord Coke, published A. D. 1628. The first is an extensive comment upon a treatise on tenures, compiled by Littleton, a judge of the common pleas, temp. Edward IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common-law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and Year Books, but greatly defective in method. It is usually cited by the name of "Co. Litt." or as "1 Inst." The second volume is a comment upon old acts of parliament, without systematic order; the third a more methodical treatise on the pleas of the crown; and the fourth an account of the several species of courts. These are cited as 2, 3, or 4 "Inst.," without any author's name. Wharton.

Theophilus' Institutes. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A. D. 533. This paraphrase maintained itself as a manual of law until the eighth or tenth century. This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harnepinus, the last of the Greek jurists. It is also conjectured that Theophilus was not the editor of his own paraphrase, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after his explanations and lectures, inasmuch as it contains certain barbarous phrases, and the texts of the manuscripts vary greatly from each other.

INSTITUTIO I11EREDIS. Lat. In Roman law. The appointment of the heures in the will. It corresponds very nearly to the nomination of an executor in English law. Without such an appointment the will was void at law, but the procuror (i. e., equity) would, under certain circumstances, carry out the intentions of the testator. Brown.

INSTITUTION. The commencement or inauguration of anything. The first establishment of a law, rule, rite, etc. Any custom, system, organization, etc., firmly established. An elementary rule or principle.

An establishment, specially one of public character or one affecting a community. State v. Clausen, 85 Wash. 260, 148 P. 28, 32, Ann.Cas. 1916B, 810. An established or organized society or corporation. It may be private in its character, designed for profit to those composing the organization, or public and charitable in its purposes. In re Peabody's Estate, 21 Cal.App. 2d 690, 70 P. 2d 249, 250. A foundation; as, a literary or charitable institution. Prescott Courier v. Board of Sup'er's of Yavapai County, 49 Ariz. 423, 67 P. 2d 483, 488.

The term "institution" is sometimes used as descriptive of an establishment or place where the business or operations of a society or association is carried on; at other times it is used to designate the organized body. Benjamin Rose Institute v. Myers, 92 Ohio St. 252, 110 N.E. 924, 926, 927, L.R.A. 1916D, 1170; Bartling v. Walt, 96 Neb. 532, 148 N.W. 507, 509.

Ecclesiastical Law
A kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice, as induction is of the temporal; for by institution the care of the souls of the parish is committed to the charge of the clerk. Brown.

Civil Law
The appointment of an heir; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights active and passive. Halifax, Anal. 39; Pothier, Tr. des Donations testamentaires, c. 2, s. 1, § 1; La Civ. Code, art. 1598 (Civil Code, art. 1605) ; Dig. 28. 5; 1, 1; 28. 6. 1, 2, § 4.
Jurisprudence

The plural form of this word (“institutions”) is sometimes used as the equivalent of “institutes,” to denote an elementary textbook of the law.

Practice

The commencement of an action or prosecution; as, A. B. has instituted a suit against C. D. to recover damages for trespass.

Political Law

A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government. Webster. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social. Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 70, 1 N.W. 92, 50 N.W. 1103; State v. Edmondson, 88 Ohio St. 625, 106 N.E. 41, 44.

A system or body of usages, laws, or regulations, of extensive and recurring operation, containing within itself an organism by which it effects its own independent action, continuance, and generally its own further development. Its object is to generate, effect, regulate, or sanction a succession of acts, transactions, or productions of a peculiar kind or class. We are likewise in the habit of calling single laws or usages “institutions,” if their operation is of vital importance and vast scope, and if their continuance is in a high degree independent of any interfering power. Lieb. Civil Lib. 300.

INSTITUTIONES. Lat. Works containing the elements of any science; institutions or institutes. One of Justinian’s principal law collections, and a similar work of the Roman jurist Gaius, are so entitled. See Institutes.

INSTRUCT. To convey information as a client to his attorney for the purpose of enabling the latter to draw a proper declaration or procure it to be done by a pleader.

INSTRUCTION. In French criminal law. The order given by a principal to his agent in relation to the business of his agency.

INSTRUMENT. A written document; a formal or solemn character, a writing given as a means of affording evidence. Smith v. Smith, Ind. App., 110 N.E. 1013, 1014. A document or writing which gives formal expression to a legal act or agreement, for the purpose of creating, securing, modifying, or terminating a right; a writing executed and delivered as the evidence of an act or agreement. Moore v. Diamond Dry Goods Co., 47 Ariz. 128, 54 P.2d 553, 554.

INSTRUMENT OF APPEAL. The document by which an appeal is brought in an English matrimonial cause from the president of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division to the full court. It is analogous to a petition. Browne, Div. 322.
INSTRUMENT OF EVIDENCE. Instruments of evidence are the media through which the evidence of facts, either disputed or required to be proved, is conveyed to the mind of a judicial tribunal; and they comprise persons and living things as well as writings. Best, Ev. § 123, 1 Whart. Ev. § 615.

INSTRUMENT OF Saisine. An instrument in Scotland by which the delivery of "saisine" (i.e., seisin, or the feudal possession of land) is attested. It is subscribed by a notary, in the presence of witnesses, and is executed in pursuance of a "precept of saisine," whereby the "grantor of the deed" desires "any notary public to whom these presents may be presented" to give saisine to the intended grantee or grantees. It must be entered and recorded in the registers of saisines. Mozley & Whiteley.

INSTRUMENTA. Lat. That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal; as court-rolls, accounts, and the like. 3 Co.Litt. 487.

INSTRUMENTALITY RULE. Under this rule, corporate existence will be disregarded where a corporation (subsidiary) is so organized and controlled and its affairs so conducted as to make it only an adjunct and instrumentality of another corporation (parent corporation). Jenkins Petroleum Process Co. v. Western Oil Corporation, D.C. Del., 21 F.Supp. 550, 551; and parent corporation will be responsible for the obligations of its subsidiary. Taylor v. Standard Gas & Electric Co., C.C.A.Okl., 96 F.2d 693, 704.

"Insubordination" by a servant imports a willful disregard of express or implied directions of the employer and refusal to obey reasonable orders. MacIntosh v. Abbot, 231 Mass. 180, 120 N.E. 383.

INSUCKEN MULTURES. A quantity of corn paid by those who are thrilled to a mill. See Thirlage.

INSUFFICIENT. Not sufficient; inadequate to some need, purpose, or use; wanting in needful value, ability, or fitness; incompetent; unfit; as insufficient food; insufficient means. It is the antonym of "sufficient." Nissen v. Miller, 44 N.M. 487, 105 P.2d 324, 325.

INSUFFICIENCY. In equity pleading. The legal inadequacy of an answer in equity which does not fully and specifically reply to some one or more of the material allegations, charges, or interrogatories set forth in the bill. White v. Joy, 13 N.Y. 89; Houghton v. Townsend, 8 How.Prac. (N.Y.) 446; Hill v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 75 Conn. 177, 52 A. 725.

INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT VERDICT. This phrase in a motion for new trial means that there is some evidence, but not enough in light of the evidence to the contrary to support a verdict. Arnold v. Haskins, 347 Mo. 320, 147 S.W.2d 469, 472. It means that there is no evidence which ought reasonably to satisfy jury that fact to be proved is established. Shtevelan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 295 N.Y.S. 735, 736, 162 Misc. 835.

INSULA. Lat. An island; a house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground. Calvin.

INSULATE. To separate from conducting bodies by means of nonconductors, as to prevent the transfer of electricity or heat. Mauney v. Electric Const. Co., 210 Ala. 554, 98 So. 874, 877.

INSUPER. Lat. Moreover; over and above.

An old exchequer term, applied to a charge made upon a person in his account. Blount.

INSURABLE INTEREST. Such a real and substantial interest in specific property as will prevent a contract to indemnify the person interested against its loss from being a mere wager policy. Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Wagner, Pa., 7 A. 104; Insurance Co. v. Brooks, 131 Ala. 614, 30 So. 876; Berry v. Insurance Co., 132 N.Y. 49, 30 N.E. 254, 28 Am. St.Rep. 548; Strong v. Insurance Co., 10 Pick. (Mass.) 43, 20 Am.Dec. 507; Insurance Co. v. Winsmore, 124 Pa. 61, 16 A. 516. Such an interest as will make the loss of the property of pecuniary damage to the insured; a right, benefit, or advantage arising out of the property or dependent thereon, or any liability in respect thereof, or any relation thereto or concern therein, of such a nature that it might be so affected by the contemplated peril as to directly damnify the insured. 2 Joyce, Ins. §§ 887, 888. German Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 34 Neb. 704, 52 N.W. 401, 402. Tischendorf v. Lynn Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 190 Wis. 33, 208 N.W. 917, 919, 45 A.L.R. 856; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Bolling, 176 Va. 182, 10 S.E.2d 518, 521.

Every interest in property, or any relation thereto, or liability in respect thereof, of such a nature that a contemplated peril might directly damnify the insured, is an insurable interest.

In the case of life insurance, a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of another; also, a reasonable ground, founded upon the relation of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured. Insurance Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U.S. 460, 24 L.Ed. 251; National Life & Acci-
INSURANCE. A contract whereby, for a stipulated consideration, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the compensation is usually called the "insurer" or "underwriter;" the other, the "insured" or "assured;" the agreed consideration, the "premium;" the written contract, a "policy;" the events insured against, "risks" or "perils;" and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the "insurable interest." 1 Phil.Ins. §§ 1-5. A contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss, damage, or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event and is applicable only to some contingency or act to occur in future. Com. v. Provident Bicycle Ass'n, 178 Pa. 636, 36 A. 197, 36 L.R.A. 589; Commonwealth v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 254 Pa. 510 98 A. 1072, 1073; and is applicable only to some contingency or act to occur in future. Clardy v. Grand Lodge of Oklahoma, A. 0. U. W., 132 Okl. 165, 269 P. 1065, 1066. For "Family," see that title.

An agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money or its equivalent or to do an act valuable to other party upon destruction, loss, or injury of something in which other party has an interest. Commissioneer of Banking and Insurance v. Community Health Service, 129 N.J.L. 427, 30 A.2d 44, 46.

Classification

Accident insurance is that form of insurance which undertakes to indemnify the assured against expense, loss of time, and suffering resulting from accidents causing him physical injury, usually by payment at a fixed rate per week while the consequent disability lasts, and sometimes including the payment of a fixed sum to his heirs in case of his death by accident within the term of the policy. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 404, 29 N.E. 529.

Automobile insurance may embrace insurance against loss of or damage to a motor vehicle caused by fire, windstorm, theft, collision, or other insurable hazards, and also against legal liability for personal injuries or damage to property resulting from operation of the vehicle. 44 C.J.S. p. 492; Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., § 3461.

Burglary insurance. Insurance against loss of property by the depredations of burglars and thieves.

Casualty insurance. This term is generally used as equivalent to "accident" insurance. State v. Federal Inv. Co., 48 Minn. 110, 50 N.W. 1028. But in some states it means insurance against accidental injuries to property, as distinguished from accidents resulting in bodily injury or death, Em-Indemnity insurance. This term has come to have a well defined and recognized meaning in insurance parlance, and is applied to contracts which provide indemnity against loss, and not the contracts which provide for indemnity against liability. The latter are known as liability contracts or policies, and the former as indemnity contracts or policies. 44 C.J.S. pp. 480, 482. As applied to motor vehicles, the distinctions between the two types of policies are discussed in Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., §§ 4011-4015.

Liability insurance is that form of insurance which indemnifies against liability on account of injuries to the person or property of another. It is distinguished from “indemnity insurance” (see that title, supra), and may be issued to cover the liability of, for example, carriers, contractors, employers, landlords, manufacturers, owners, and railroads. Liability insurance may extend to automobiles, elevators, fly wheels, libel, theaters, and vessels. 44 C.J.S. p. 481.

Life insurance. That kind of insurance in which the risk contemplated is the death of a particular person; upon which event (if it occurs within a prescribed term, or, according to the contract, whenever it occurs) the insurer engages to pay a stipulated sum to the legal representatives of such person, or to a third person having an insurable interest in the life of such person.

Straight life insurance or whole life insurance is insurance for which premiums are collected so long as the insured may live, whereas, term insurance is insurance which promises payment only within a stipulated number of years. Doty v. American Nat. Ins. Co., 350 Mo. 192, 165 S.W.2d 862, 869, 143 A.L.R. 1062.

Live-stock insurance. Insurance upon the lives, health, and good condition of domestic animals of the useful kinds, such as horses and cows.

Marine insurance. A contract whereby, for a consideration stipulated to be paid by one interested in a ship, freight, or cargo, subject to the risks of marine navigation, another undertakes to indemnify him against some or all of those risks during a certain period or voyage. 1 Phil.Ins. 1. A contract whereby one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other against certain perils or sea-risks to which his ship, freight, and cargo, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage, or a fixed period of time. An insurance against risks connected with navigation, to which a ship, cargo, freightage, profits, or other insurable interest in movable property may be exposed during a certain voyage or a fixed period of time. Civ.Code Cal. § 2655.

Motor vehicle insurance. See Automobile insurance, supra.

Old line life insurance. Insurance on a level or flat rate plan where, for a fixed premium payable without condition at stated intervals, a certain sum is to be paid upon death without condition. Mattero v. Central Life Ins. Co., 202 Mo.App. 293, 215 S.W. 750, 751.

Plate-glass insurance. Insurance against loss from the accidental breaking of plate-glass in windows, doors, show-cases, etc.

Steam boiler insurance. Insurance against the destruction of steam boilers by their explosion, sometimes including indemnity against injuries to other property resulting from such explosion.

Title insurance. Insurance against loss or damage resulting from defects or failure of title to a particular parcel of realty, or from the enforcement of liens existing against it at the time of the insurance. This form of insurance is taken out by a purchaser of the property or one loaning money on mortgage, and is furnished by companies specially organized for the purpose, and which keep complete sets of abstracts or duplicates of the records, employ expert title-examiners, and prepare conveyances and transfers of all sorts. A “certificate of title” furnished by such a company is merely the formally expressed professional opinion of the company’s examiner that the title is complete and perfect (or otherwise, as stated), and the company is liable only for a want of care, skill, or diligence on the part of its examiner; whereas an “insurance of title” warrants the validity of the title in any and all events. It is not always easy to distinguish between such insurance and a “guaranty of title” given by such a company, except that in the former case the maximum limit of liability is fixed by the policy, while in the latter case the undertaking is to make good any and all loss resulting from defect or failure of the title.

Tornado insurance. Insurance against injuries to crops, timber, houses, farm buildings, and other property from the effects of tornadoes, hurricanes, and cyclones.

Other Compound and Descriptive Terms

Assessment life insurance policy. A contract by which payments to insured are not unalterably fixed, but dependent on collection of assessments necessary to pay amounts insured, while an “old-line policy” unalterably fixes premiums and definitely and unchangedly fixes insurer’s liability. Clark v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 126 Me. 7, 135 A. 357, 358.

Comprehensive coverage. A simple and convenient form of indemnity now commonly available in contracts of automobile insurance. It includes not only the conventional coverages against loss caused by fire, theft, wind, water, or malicious mischief, but is generally designed to protect against all damage to the insured vehicle except by collision or upset. Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., § 3653. Among losses commonly incurred and paid under comprehensive policies are those caused by lighted cigarettes. Other examples of such losses include scratching of the finish by matches, thorns, or dust storms; damage to the upholstery caused by a child's loss of control of the urinary function, and by the clawing or chewing of the upholstery by a pet dog; and damage to the fenders resulting when a goat mistook them for hors d'oeuvres. Appleman, Ins. Law and Prac., § 3222.

Concurrent insurance. That which to any extent insures the same interest against the same casualty, at the same time, as the primary insurance, on such terms that the insurers would bear proportionately the loss happening within the provisions of both policies. Rubber Co. v. Assur. Co., 64 N.J. L. 580, 46 A. 777; Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Union Mercantile Co., 161 Ky. 718, 171 S.W. 407, 409; Camden Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Sutherland, Tex. Civ.App., 278 S.W. 907, 914.

Double insurance. See Double.

Excess insurance. See Excess Insurance.

General and special insurance. In marine insurance a general insurance is effected when the perils insured against are such as the law would imply from the nature of the contract considered in itself and supposing none to be specified in the policy; in the case of special insurance, further perils (in addition to implied perils) are expressed in the policy. Vandenheuvel v. United Ins. Co., 2 Johns.Cas. (N.Y.) 127.

Loss. See Loss.

Insurance adjuster. One undertaking to ascertain and report the actual loss to the subject-matter of insurance due to the peril insured against. Laws Wash.1911, p. 163, § 2; Jensen v. Lincoln Hail Ins. Co., 125 Neb. 87, 249 N.W. 94.

Insurance agent. Person authorized to represent insurer in dealing with third parties in matters relating to insurance. American Casualty Co. of Reading, Pa., v. Ricas, 179 Md. 627, 22 A.2d 484, 487. An agent employed by an insurance company to solicit risks and effect insurances. Agents of insurance companies are called "general agents" when clothed with the general oversight of the companies' business in a state or large section of country, and "local agents" when their functions are limited and confined to some particular locality. McKinney v. Alton, 41 Ill.App. 512; State v. Accident Ass'n, 67 Wis. 624, 31 N.W. 229. See also, Insurance broker, infra.

Insurance broker. One who acts as middleman between insured and company, and who solicits insurance from public under no employment from any special company and places order of insurance with company selected by insurer or, in absence of any selection, with company selected by such broker. Broker is agent for insured though at same time for some purposes he may be agent for insurer, and his acts and representations within scope of his authority as such agent are binding on insured. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Bowers, 163 Va. 349, 175 S.E. 763.

An "insurance agent" is tied to his company, whereas an "insurance broker" is an independent middleman not tied to a particular company. Osborn v. Ozlin, Va., 310 U.S. 53, 60 S.Ct. 758, 761, 84 L.Ed. 1074.

Insurance commissioner. A public officer in several of the states, whose duty is to supervise the business of insurance as conducted in the state by foreign and domestic companies, for the protection and benefit of policy-holders, and especially to issue licenses, make periodical examinations into the condition of such companies, or receive, file, and publish periodical statements of their business as furnished by them.

Insurance company. A corporation or association whose business is to make contracts of insurance. They are either mutual companies or stock companies. A "mutual" insurance company is one whose fund for the payment of losses consists not of capital subscribed or furnished by outside parties, but of premiums mutually contributed by the parties insured, or in other words, one in which all persons insured become members of the association and contribute either cash or assessable premium notes, or both, to a common fund, out of which each is entitled to indemnity in case of loss. Mygatt v. Insurance Co., 21 N.Y. 65; Insurance Co. v. Hoge, 21 How. 35, 16 L.Ed. 61; Given v. Rettew, 162 Pa. 638, 29 A. 703. A "stock" company is one organized according to the usual form of business corporations, having a capital stock divided into shares, which, with current income and accumulated surplus, constitutes the fund for the payment of losses, policy-holders paying fixed premiums and not being members of the association unless they also happen to be stockholders.

Insurance policy. See Policy.

Insurance trust. An agreement between insured and trustee, whereby proceeds of policy are paid directly to trustee for investment and distribution to designated beneficiaries in manner and at such time as insurer has directed in trust agreement. In re Reynolds' Estate, 131 Neb. 557, 268 N.W. 480, 486, 487.

Interinsurance is insurance system whereby several individuals, partnerships, or corporations, through common attorney in fact, underwrite one another's risks against loss under agreement that underwriters act separately and severally. Wysong v. Automobile Underwriters, 204 Ind. 493, 184 N.E. 783, 785, 94 A.L.R. 826; Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 63 S.Ct. 602, 604, 318 U.S. 313, 87 L.Ed. 777, 145 A.L.R. 1113.

It is distinguishable from all other forms of insurance, in that every insured is interinsurer, and every insurer is insured. Underwriters' Exchange v. Indianapolis St. Ry. Co., 204 Ind. 676, 185 N.E. 504, 506.

Mutual insurance. That form of insurance provided by mutual companies. An essential characteristic of a mutual insurance company is collective and entire ownership and control by its members, all of whom must be policyholders. A mutual company may collect cash premiums from members in advance or it may assess members to pay losses and overhead. An insurance company can be mutual even though policyholders are not subject to assessment. To be a mutual insurance company, it is also essential that the company provide insurance to its members substantially at cost.

Over-insurance. Insurance effected upon property, either in one or several companies, to an amount which, separately or in the aggregate, exceeds the actual value of the property.

Reinsurance. Insurance of an insurer; a contract by which an insurer procures a third person (usually another insurance company) to insure him against loss or liability by reason of the original insurance. Civ.Code Cal. § 2646; Insurance Co. v. Insurance Co., 38 Ohio St. 15, 43 Am.Rep. 413.

Specific insurance. That provided by a policy under the terms of which the insurance in the event of loss is to be distributed among the several items of property, a specific amount to each item. Wilson & Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 300 Mo. 1, 254 S.W. 266, 282.

INSURE. To make sure or secure, to guarantee, as, to insure safety to any one. State v. Mutual Mortuary Ass'n, 166 Tenn. 260, 61 S.W.2d 664. To engage to indemnify a person against pecuniary loss from specified perils. To act as an insurer. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Williams, 148 Md. 289, 129 A. 660, 664.

INSURER. The underwriter or insurance company with whom a contract of insurance is made.

INSURGENT. One who participates in an insurrection; one who opposes the execution of law by force of arms, or who rises in revolt against the constituted authorities. Hearon v. Calus, 178 S.C. 381, 183 S.E. 13. 20.

A distinction is often taken between "insurgent" and "rebel," in this: that the former term is not necessarily to be taken in a bad sense, inasmuch as an insurrection, though extralegal, may be just and timely in itself; as when it is undertaken for the overthrow of tyranny or the reform of gross abuses.

INSURRECTION. A rebellion, or rising of citizens or subjects in resistance to their government. See Insurgent.

Insurrection shall consist in any combined resistance to the lawful authority of the state, with intent to the denial thereof, when the same is manifested, or intended to be manifested, by acts of violence. Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 417, 35 Am. Rep. 670.

INTAKERS. In old English law. A kind of thieves inhabiting Redesdale, on the extreme northern border of England; so called because they took in or received such booties of cattle and other things as their accomplices, who were called "out-parters," brought in to them from the borders of Scotland. Spelman; Cowell.

INTAKES. Temporary inclosures made by customary tenants of a manor under a special custom authorizing them to inclose part of the waste until one or more crops have been raised on it. Elton, Common, 277.

INTANGIBLE ASSET. Such values as accrue to a going business as good will, trademarks, copyrights, franchises, or the like. It exists only in connection with something else, as the good will of a business. In re Armour's Estate, 94 A. 284, 294, 11 N.J. 257.

INTANGIBLE PROPERTY. Used chiefly in the law of taxation, this term means such property as has no intrinsic and marketable value, but is merely the representative or evidence of value, such as certificates of stock, bonds, promissory notes, and franchises. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Norman, C.C.Ky., 77 F. 26; In re Hanson's Estate, 195 N.Y.S. 255, 119 Mich. 100; City of Richmond v. Drewry-Hughes Co., 122 ya.- 178, 90 S.E. 635.

INTEGER. Lat. Whole; untouched. Res Integra means a question which is new and undecided. 2 Kent, Comm. 177.

INTEGRATED. An agreement is integrated where the parties thereto adopt the writing or writings as the final and complete expression of the agreement and an 'integration of the writing or writings so adopted. Wilson v. Viking Corporation, 134 Pa.Super. 153, 3 A.2d 180, 183.

INTEGRATED BAR. See Integration, infra.

INTEGRATION. The act or process of making whole or entire. Webster.

The writing or writings adopted by the parties to an agreement as the final and complete expression of the agreement. Restatement, Contracts, § 228; Pettett v. Cooper, 62 Ohio App. 377, 24 N.E.2d 299, 302.

The act of organizing the bar of a state into an association, membership in which is a condition precedent to the right to practice law. Integration is accomplished by enactment of detailed statutes, by enactment of a short statute conferring authority upon the highest court of the state.
state to integrate the bar, or by rule of court in the exercise of its inherent power. Integration of Bar Case, 244 Wis. 8, 11 N.W.2d 604, 608, 151 A.L.R. 586, rehearing denied 244 Wis. 8, 12 N.W.2d 699; In re Integration of State Bar of Oklahoma, 185 Okl. 505, 95 P.2d 113.

Integrated Bar

"The integrated bar movement was initiated in this country about 35 years ago [i.e., about 1914] by the American Judicature Society and since that time at least 27 States have adopted it. None of them have returned to the old system of voluntary organization, but all commend the integrated bar highly. * * * When we say the bar is integrated we mean that every lawyer within a given area has membership in a cohesive organization. An organization of less than all the members of the bar in a given area would not be an integrated bar. The area may be the state, the county, or the city. The integrated bar has also been defined as the process by which every member of the bar is given an opportunity to do his part in performing the public service expected of him, and by which each member is obliged to bear his portion of the responsibility. * * * The integrated bar of California has promulgated the best pattern for an integrated bar program to which our attention has been directed." Terrell, J., writing for a majority of the Supreme Court of Florida on the Petition of Florida State Bar Ass'n (1949), 40 So.2d 902, 904.

INTEGRITY. As occasionally used in statutes prescribing the qualifications of public officers, trustees, etc., this term means soundness of moral principle and character, as shown by one person dealing with others in the making and performance of contracts, and fidelity and honesty in the discharge of trusts; it is synonymous with "pro- bity," "honesty," and "uprightness." In re Bauquier's Estate, 88 Cal. 302, 26 Pac. 178; In re Gordon's Estate, 142 Cal. 125, 75 Pac. 672.

INTELLIGIBILITY. In pleading. The statement of matters of fact directly (excluding the necessity of inference or argument to arrive at the meaning) and in such appropriate terms, so arranged, as to be comprehensible by a person of common or ordinary understanding. Davis v. Trump, 43 W.Va. 191, 27 S.E. 397, 64 Am.St.Rep. 849.

INTEMPERANCE. Habitual intemperance is that degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating drinks which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon an innocent party. Hope v. The Maccabees, 91 N.J.L. 148, 102 A. 689, 691, 1 A.L.R. 455; Andrews v. United States Casualty Co., 154 Wis. 82, 142 N.W. 487, 490.

INTEND. To design, resolve, purpose. To apply a rule of law in the nature of presumption; to discern and follow the probabilities of like cases.

INTENDANT. One who has the charge, management, or direction of some office, department, or public business.

Used in the constitutional and statutory law of some European governments to designate a principal officer of state corresponding to the cabinet ministers or secretaries of the various departments of the United States government, as, "intendant of marine," "intendant of finance."

The term was also used in Alabama to designate the chief executive officer of a city or town, having practically the same duties and functions as a mayor. Const. Ala. 1901, § 176; Intendant and Council of Greensboro v. Mullins, 13 Ala. 341, INTENDED TO BE RECORDED. This phrase is frequently used in conveyances, when reciting some other conveyance which has not yet been recorded, but which forms a link in the chain of title. In Pennsylvania, it has been construed to be a covenant, on the part of the grantor, to procure the deed to be recorded in a reasonable time. Penn v. Preston, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 14.

INTENDENTE. In Spanish law. The immediate agent of the minister of finance, or the chief and principal director of the different branches of the revenue, appointed in the various departments in each of the provinces into which the Spanish monarchy is divided. Escriche.

INTENTMENT OF LAW. The true meaning, the correct understanding or intention of the law; a presumption or inference made by the courts. Co. Litt. 78.

Common intentment. The natural and usual sense; the common meaning or understanding; the plain meaning of any writing as apparent on its face without straining or distorting the construction.

"Intent" and "motive" are not in law one and the same thing. State v. Logan, 344 Mo. 351, 126 S.W.2d 256, 260, 122 A.L.R. 417. "Intent" in legal sense is purpose to use particular means to effect certain result; whereas, "motive" is reason which leads minds to desire that result. United Fidelity Life Ins. Co. v. Adair, Tex.Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 940, 943.

"Intent" expresses mental action at its most advanced point, or as it actually accompanies an outward, corporal act which has been determined on. Intent shows the presence of will in the act which consummates a crime. It is the exercise of intelligent will, the mind being fully aware of the nature and consequences of the act which is about to be done, and with such knowledge, and with full liberty of action, willing and electing to do it. Burrill, Circ.Ev. 284, and notes.

General intent. An intention, purpose, or design, either without specific plan or particular object, or without reference to such plan or object.

Meaning; purpose; signification; intentment; applied to words or language. See Certainty.

Common intent. The natural sense given to words.

Estoppel. See Estoppel.

INTENTIO. Lat.
INTENTIO MEA IMPONIT NOMEN OPERI MEO.

In Old English law. A count or declaration in a real action (narratio). Bract. lib. 4, tr. 2, c. 2; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7; Du Cange.

INTENTIO CZECA MALA. A blind or obscure meaning is bad or ineffectual. 2 Bulst. 179. Said of a testator’s intention.

INTENTIO INSERVIRE DEBET LEGIBUS, NON LEGES INTENTIONI. The intention [of a party] ought to be subservient to [or in accordance with] the laws, not the laws to the intention. Co. Litt. 314a, 314b.

INTENTIO MEA IMPONIT NOMEN OPERI MEO. Hob. 123. My intent gives a name to my act.

INTENTION. Determination to act in a certain way or to do a certain thing. State ex rel. Verbon v. County of St. Louis, 216 Minn. 140, 12 N.W.2d 193, 196; In re McCafferty’s Will, 254 N.Y.S. 789, 795, 142 Misc. 371. Meaning; will; purpose; design. 4 Kent, Comm. 534.

“Intention,” when used with reference to the construction of wills and other documents, means the sense and meaning of it, as gathered from the words used therein. Parol evidence is not ordinarily admissible to explain this. When used with reference to civil and criminal responsibility, a person who contemplates any result, as not unlikely to follow from a deliberate act of his own, may be said to intend that result, whether he desire it or not. Thus, if a man should, for a wager, discharge a gun among a multitude of people, and any should be killed, he would be deemed guilty of intending the death of such person; for every man is presumed to intend the natural consequence of his own actions. Intention is often confounded with motive, as when we speak of a man’s “good intentions.” Mozley & Whitley.

INTENTIONE. A writ that lay against him who entered into lands after the death of a tenant in dower, or for life, etc., and held out to him in reversion or remainder. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 203.

INTER. Lat. Among; between.

INTER ALIA. Among other things. A term anciently used in pleading, especially in reciting statutes, where the whole statute was not set forth at length. Inter alia enactatum fuit, among other things it was enacted. Plowd. 65.

INTER ALIAS CAUSAS ACQUISITIONIS, MAGNA, CELEBRIS, ET FAMOSA EST CAUSA DONATIONIS. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift. Bract. fol. 11.

INTER ALIOS. Between other persons; between those who are strangers to a matter in question.

INTER ALIOS RES GESTAS ALIIS NON POSSE PRIJUDICIJUM FACERE SIEPE CONSTITUTUM EST. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice. Code 7, 60, 1, 2.

INTER APICES JURIS. Among the subtleties of the law. See Apex Juris.

INTER ARMA SILENT LEGES. In time of war the laws are silent. Cicero, pro Milone. It applies as between the state and its external enemies; and also in cases of civil disturbance where extra-judicial force may supersede the ordinary process of law. Salmond, Jurispr. 641.

INTER BRACHIA. Between her arms. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 35, §§ 1, 2. See infra, Brachia.

INTER CIETEROS. Among others; in a general clause; not by name (nominatim). A term applied in the civil law to clauses of disinherition in a will. Inst. 2, 13, 1; ld. 2, 13, 3.

INTER CANEM ET LUPUM. (Lat. Between the dog and the wolf.) The twilight; because then the dog seeks his rest, and the wolf his prey. 3 Inst. 63.

INTER CONJUGES. Between husband and wife.

INTER CONJUNCTAS PERSONAS. Between conjunct persons. By the act 1621, c. 18, all conveyances or alienations between conjunct persons, unless granted for onerous causes, are declared, as in a question with creditors, to be null and of no avail. Conjunct persons are those standing in a certain degree of relationship to each other; such, for example, as brothers, sisters, sons, uncles, etc. These were formerly excluded as witnesses, on account of their relationship; but this, as a ground of exclusion, has been abolished. Tray. Lat. Max.

INTER FAUCES TERRIE. (Between the jaws of the land.) A term used to describe a roadstead or arm of the sea enclosed between promontories or projecting headlands.

INTER PARES. Between peers; between those who stand on a level or equality, as respects diligence, opportunity, responsibility, etc.

INTER PARTES. Between parties. Instruments in which two persons unite, each making conveyance to, or engagement with, the other, are called “papers inter partes.” Smith v. Emery, 12 N.J. Law, 60.

Judgment Inter Partes See Judgment in Personam.

INTER QUATUOR PARITIETES. Between four walls. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 55, § 4.

INTER REGALIA. In English law. Among the things belonging to the sovereign. Among these are rights of salmon fishing, mines of gold and silver, forests, forfeitures, casualties of superiority, etc., which are called “regalia minora,” and may be conveyed to a subject. The regalia majora include the several branches of the royal prerogative, which are inseparable from the person of the sovereign. Tray. Lat. Max.

INTER RUSTICOS. Among the illiterate or unlearned.

INTER SE, INTER SESE. Among themselves. Story, Partn. § 405.
INTER VIRUM ET UXOREM. Between husband and wife.

INTER VIVOS. Between the living; from one living person to another. Where property passes by conveyance, the transaction is said to be inter vivos, to distinguish it from a case of succession or devise. So an ordinary gift from one person to another is called a "gift inter vivos," to distinguish it from a donation made in contemplation of death, (mortis causa.)

INTERCALARE. Lat. In the civil law. To introduce a day or month into the calendar; to intercalate. Dig. 50, 16, 98, pr.

INTERCEDERE. Lat. In the civil law. To become bound for another's debt.

INTERCESSION. Within Federal Communications Act, prohibiting interception of communications by wire or radio, indicates taking or seizure by the way or before arrival at destined place, and does not ordinarily connote obtaining of what is to be sent before, or at the moment, it leaves the possession of the proposed sender, or after, or at the moment, it comes into possession of intended receiver. Communications Act of 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605; Goldman v. United States, N.Y., 62 S.Ct. 993, 995, 316 U.S. 129, 86 L.Ed. 1322.

INTERCHANGEABLY. By way of exchange or interchange. This term properly denotes the method of signing deeds, leases, contracts, etc., executed in duplicate, where each party signs the copy which he delivers to the other. Roosevelt v. Smith, 40 N.Y.S. 381, 17 Misc.Rep. 323.

INTERCOMMON. To enjoy a common mutually or promiscuously with the inhabitants or tenants of a contiguous township, vill, or manor. 2 Bl. Comm. 33; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 271, § 290.

INTERCOMMUNING. Letters of intercommuning were letters from the Scotch privy council passing (on their act) in the king's name, charging the lieges not to reset, supply, or intercommune with the persons thereby denounced; or to furnish them with meat, drink, house, harbor, or any other things useful or comfortable; or to have any intercourse with them whatever,—under pain of being reputed art and part in their crimes, and dealt with accordingly; and desiring all sheriffs, bailies, etc., to apprehend and commit such rebels to prison. Bell.

INTERCOURSE. Communication; literally, a running or passing between persons or places; commerce. As applied to two persons, the word standing alone, and without a descriptive or qualifying word, does not import sexual connection. People v. Howard, 143 Cal. 316, 76 P. 1116.

INTERDICT. In Roman law. A decree of the praetor by means of which, in certain cases determined by the edict, he himself directly commanded what should be done or omitted, particularly in causes involving the right of possession or a quasi possession. In the modern civil law, interdicts are regarded precisely the same as actions, though they give rise to a summary proceeding. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 258.

Interdicts are either prohibitory, restorative, or exhibitory; the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc. Heinec. § 1206.

An interdict was distinguished from an "action," (actio,) properly so called, by the circumstance that the praetor himself decided in the first instance, (principaliter,) on the application of the plaintiff, without previously appointing a judex, by issuing a decree commanding what should be done, or left undone. Gaius, 4, 139. It might be adopted as a remedy in various cases where a regular action could not be maintained, and hence interdicts were at one time more extensively used than were the actions themselves. Afterwards, however, they fell into disuse, and in the time of Justinian were generally dispensed with. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 258; Inst. 4, 15, 8.

In Ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which divine services are prohibited to be administered either to particular persons or in particular places.

In Scotch law. An order of the court of session or of an inferior court, pronounced on cause shown, for stopping any act or proceedings complained of as illegal or wrongful. It may be resorted to as a remedy against any encroachment either on property or possession, and is a protection against any unlawful proceeding. Bell.

INTERDICTION. In French law. Everyone who, on account of insanity, has become incapable of controlling his own interests, can be put under the control of a guardian, who shall administer his affairs with the same effect as he might himself. Such a person is said to be "interdit," and his status is described as "interdiction." Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 562.

In the Civil law. A judicial decree, by which a person is deprived of the exercise of his civil rights.

In French-Canadian law. A proceeding instituted for the purpose of obtaining a curator of the person and property, and includes the calling of a family council and a petition to the court or its prothonotary, followed by a hearing. In re Methot's Will, 98 A. 839, 840, 87 N.J.Eq. 256.

In International law. An "interdiction of commercial intercourse" between two countries is a governmental prohibition of commercial intercourse, intended to bring about an entire cessation for the time being of all trade whatever. The Edward, 1 Wheat. 272, 4 L.Ed. 86.

INTERDICTUM OF FIRE AND WATER. Banishment by an order that no man should supply the person banished with fire or water, the two necessaries of life.

INTERDICTUM SALVIANUM. Lat. In Roman law. The Salvian interdict. A process which /ay for the owner of a farm to obtain possession of the goods of his tenant who had pledged them to him for the rent of the land. Inst. 4, 15, 3.
INTERDUM EVENTIT UT EXCEPTIO QUIE PRIMA FACIE JUSTA VIDETUR, TAMEN INIQUE NOCEAT. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems \textit{prima facie} just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal. Inst. 4, 14, 1, 2.

INTERESSE, Lat. Interest. The interest of money; also an interest in lands.

Interesse termini. An interest in a term. That species of interest or property which a lessee for years acquires in the lands demised to him, before he has actually become possessed of those lands; as distinguished from that property or interest vested in him by the demise, and also reduced into possession by an actual entry upon the lands and the assumption of ownership therein, and which is then termed an "estate for years." Brown.

Pro interesse suo. For his own interest; according to, or to the extent of, his individual interest. Used (in practice) to describe the intervention of a party who comes into a suit for the purpose of protecting interests of his own which may be involved in the dispute between the principal parties or which may be affected by the settlement of their contention.

INTEREST.

Property

The most general term that can be employed to denote a property in lands or chattels. In its application to lands or things real, it is frequently used in connection with the terms "estate," "right," and "title," and, according to Lord Coke, it properly includes them all. Co. Litt. 345b. State v. McKellop, 40 Mo. 185; Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co., 20 So. 419, 112 Ala. 116, 33 L.R.A. 258, 57 Am.St.Rep. 17.

More particularly it means a right to have the advantage accruing from anything; any right in the nature of property, but less than title; a partial or undivided right; a title to a share.

The terms "interest" and "title" are not synonymous. A mortgagor in possession, and a purchaser holding under a deed defectively executed, have, both of them, absolute as well as insurable interests in the property, though neither of them has the legal title. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 25 Conn. 20, 76 Am.Dec. 581.

Absolute or conditional. That is an absolute interest in property which is so completely vested in the individual that he can by no contingency be deprived of it without his own consent. So, too, he is the owner of such absolute interest who must necessarily sustain the loss if the property is destroyed. The terms "interest" and "title" are not synonymous. A mortgagor in possession, and a purchaser holding under a deed defectively executed, have, both of them, absolute, as well as insurable, interests in the property, though neither of them has the legal title. "Absolute" is here synonymous with "vested," and is used in contradistinction to contingent or conditional. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am.Dec. 581; Garver v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 69 Iowa 202, 28 N.W. 555; Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 421, 431, 3 Am.Rep. 149; Elliott v. Ashland Mut. F. Ins. Co., 12 A. 676, 117 Pa. 548, 2 Am.St.Rep. 703.

Insurance

Interest or no interest. These words, inserted in an insurance policy, mean that the question whether the insured has or has not an insurable interest in the subject-matter is waived, and the policy is to be good irrespective of such interest. The effect of such a clause is to make it a \textit{wager} policy.

Interest policy. One which actually, or \textit{prima facie}, covers a substantial and insurable interest; as opposed to a \textit{wager} policy.

English Law

Interest suit. An action in the probate branch of the high court of justice, in which the question in dispute is as to which party is entitled to a grant of letters of administration of the estate of a deceased person. Wharton.

General

Joint interest. One owned by several persons in equal shares by a title created by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy, or when granted or devised to executors or trustees as joint tenants. Civ. Code Cal. § 683.

Law of Evidence

A relation to the matter in controversy, or to the issue of the suit, in the nature of a prospective gain or loss, which actually does, or presumably might, create a bias or prejudice in the mind, inclining the person to favor one side or the other.

For Money

Interest is the compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties for the use or forbearance or detention of money. Beach v. Peabody, 188 Ill. 75, 58 N.E. 680, Shealy v. U. S., D.C.S.C., 37 F.2d 918, 919.

Conventional interest is interest at the rate agreed upon and fixed by the parties themselves, as distinguished from that which the law would prescribe in the absence of an explicit agreement. Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 568; Vernon's Ann. Civ. St. art. 5069.

Legal interest. See Legal Interest.

Simple interest is that which is paid for the principal or sum lent, at a certain rate or allowance, made by law or agreement of parties.

Compound interest is interest upon interest, where accrued interest is added to the principal sum, and the whole treated as a new principal, for the calculation of the interest for the next period.

Ex-interest. In the language of stock exchanges, a bond or other interest-bearing security is said to be sold "ex-interest" when the vendor reserves to himself the interest already accrued and payable (if any) or the interest accruing up to the next interest day.

Interest, maritime. See Maritime Interest.

Interest upon interest. Compound interest.

INTEREST REIPUBLICE NE SUA QUIS MALE UTATUR. It concerns the state that persons do not misuse their property. 6 coke, 36a.

INTEREST REIPUBLICE QUOD HOMINES CONSERVENTUR. It concerns the state that [the lives of] men be preserved. 12 coke, 62.

INTEREST REIPUBLICE RES JUDICATAS NON RESCIND!. It concerns the state that things adjudicated be not rescinded. 2 Inst. 360. It is matter of public concern that solemn adjudications of the courts should not be disturbed. Best, Ev. p. 41, § 44.

INTEREST REIPUBLICE SUPREMA HOMINUM TESTAMENTA RATA HABERI. It concerns the state that men's last wills be held valid, [or allowed to stand.] Co. Litt. 236b.

INTEREST REIPUBLICE UT CARCERES SINT IN TUTO. It concerns the state that prisons be safe places of confinement. 2 Inst. 589.

INTEREST (IMPRIMIS) REIPUBLICE UT PAX IN REGNO CONSERVETUR, ET QUIECUNQUE PACI ADVERSENTUR PROVIDE DECLINENTUR. It especially concerns the state that peace be preserved in the kingdom, and that whatever things are against peace be prudently avoided. 2 Inst. 158.

INTEREST REIPUBLICE UT QUILIBET RE SUA BENE UTATUR. It is the concern of the state that every one uses his property properly.

INTEREST REIPUBLICE UT SIT FINIS LITUATIONIS. It concerns the state that there be an end of lawsuits. Co. Litt. 303. It is for the general welfare that a period be put to litigation. Broom, Max. 331, 343.

INTERFERE. To check; hamper; hinder; disturb; intervene; intermeddle; interpose; to enter into, or to take part in, the concerns of others. State v. Estes, 185 N.C. 752, 117 S.E. 581, 582; Conger v. Italian Vineyard Co., 186 Cal. 404, 199 P. 503. People ex rel. Benefit Ass'n of Railway Employees v. Miner, 387 Ill. 393, 56 N.E.2d 353, 356.

INTERERENCE. In patent law, this term designates a collision between rights claimed or granted; that is, where a person claims a patent for the whole or any integral part of the ground already covered by an existing patent or by a pending application. Milton v. Kingsley, 7 App.D.C. 540; Dederick v. Fox, C.C.Pa., 56 F. 717; Nathan Mfg. Co. v. Craig, C.C.Mass., 49 F. 370.

Strictly speaking, an "interference" is declared to exist by the patent office whenever it is decided by the properly constituted authority in that bureau that two pending applications (or a patent and a pending application), in their claims or essence, cover the same discovery or invention, so as to render necessary an investigation into the question of priority of invention between the two applications or the application and the patent, as the case may be. Lowrey v. Cowles Electric Smelting, etc., Co., C.C.Ohio, 68 F. 372.

INTERIM. Lat. In the meantime; meanwhile. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. 2 Bell, Comm. 355.

INTERIM COMMITITUR. "In the meantime, let him be committed." An order of court (or the docket-entry noting it) by which a prisoner is committed to prison and directed to be kept there until some further action can be taken, or until the time arrives for the execution of his sentence.

INTERIM CURATOR. In English law. A person appointed by justices of the peace to take care of the property of a felon convict, until the appointment by the crown of an administrator or administrators for the same purpose. Mozley & Whiteley.

INTERIM FACTOR. In Scotch law. A judicial officer elected or appointed under the bankruptcy law to take charge of and preserve the estate until a fit person shall be elected trustee. 2 Bell, Comm. 357.

INTERIM OFFICER. One appointed to fill the office during a temporary vacancy, or during an interval caused by the absence or incapacity of the regular incumbent.

INTERIM ORDER. One made in the meantime, and until something is done.

INTERIM RECEIPT. A receipt for money paid by way of premium for a contract of insurance for which application is made. If the risk is rejected, the money is refunded, less the pro rata premium.

INTERINSURANCE EXCHANGE. Reciprocal exchange. See that title.

INTERLAQUEARE. In old practice. To link together, or interchangeably. Writs were called "interlaqueata" where several were issued against several parties residing in different counties, each party being summoned by a separate writ to warrant the tenant, together with the other warrancers. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 4, § 2.

INTERLINEATION. The act of writing between the lines of an instrument; also what is written between lines. Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 67, 1 L.Ed. 38. Russell v. Eubanks, 84 Mo. 88.

INTERLOCUTOR. In Scotch practice. An order or decree of court; an order made in open court. 2 Swint. 362; Arkley, 32.
INTERLOCUTOR OF RELEVANCY. In Scotch practice. A decree as to the relevancy of a libel or indictment in a criminal case. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 373.

INTERLOCUTORY. Provisional; temporary; not final. Something intervening between the commencement and the end of a suit which decides some point or matter, but is not a final decision of the whole controversy. Mora v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 13 Abb. Prac. (N.Y.) 310.

INTERLOPERS. Persons who run into business to which they have no right, or who interfere wrongfully; persons who enter a country or place to trade without license. Webster.

INTERMARRIAGE. In the popular sense, this term denotes the contracting of a marriage relation between two persons considered as members of different nations, tribes, families, etc., as, between the sovereigns of two different countries, between an American and an alien, between Indians of different tribes, between the scions of different clans or families. But, in law, it is sometimes used (and with propriety) to emphasize the mutuality of the marriage contract and as importing a reciprocal engagement by which each of the parties "marries" the other. Thus, in a pleading, instead of averring that "the plaintiff was married to the defendant," it would be proper to allege that "the parties intermarried" at such a time and place.

INTERMEDDLE. To interfere with property or the conduct of business affairs officiously or without right or title. In re Shinn's Estate, 166 Pa. 121, 30 A. 1026, 45 Am.St.Rep. 656. Not a technical legal term, but sometimes used with reference to the acts of an executor de son tort or a negotiorum gestor in the civil law.

INTERMEDIARY. In modern civil law. A broker; one who is employed to negotiate a matter between two parties, and who for that reason is considered as the mandatary (agent) of both. Civ. Code La. art. 3016.

INTERMEDIATE. Intervening; interposed during the progress of a suit, proceeding, business, etc., or between its beginning and end.

INTERMEDIATE ACCOUNT. In probate law. An account of an executor, administrator, or guardian filed subsequent to his first or initial account and before his final account. Specifically for the purpose of disclosing the acts of the person accounting and the state or condition of the fund in his hands, and not made the subject of a judicial settlement. Code Civ.Proc. N.Y. 1899, § 2514, subd. 9 (Surrogate's Court Act, § 314, subd. 9).

INTERMEDIATE ORDER. An order made between the commencement of the action and its final determination, incident to and during its progress, which does not determine the cause but only some intervening matter relating thereto; one that is not directly appealable. Miami Copper Co. v. Strohl, 14 Ariz. 410, 130 P. 605, 608. People v. Priori, 163 N.Y. 99, 57 N.E. 85; Boyce v. Wabash Ry. Co., 63 Iowa 70, 18 N.W. 673, 50 Am.Rep. 730; State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 43 P. 1091; Hymes v. Van Cleef, 61 Hun 618, 15 N.Y.S. 341.

INTERMEDIATE TOLL. Toll for travel on a toll road, paid or to be collected from persons who pass thereon at points between the toll gates, such persons not passing by, through, or around the toll gates. Hollingworth v. State, 29 Ohio St. 552.

INTERMITTENT EASEMENT. See Easement.

INTERMIXTURE OF GOODS. Confusion of goods; the confusing or mingling together of goods belonging to different owners in such a way that the property of neither owner can be separately identified or extracted from the mass. Smith v. Sanborn, 6 Gray (Mass.) 134. And see Confusion of Goods.

INTERN. To restrict or shut up a person, as a political prisoner, within a limited territory.

INTERNAL. Relating to the interior; comprised within boundary lines; of interior concern or interest; domestic, as opposed to foreign.

INTERNAL COMMERCE. See Commerce.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS. With reference to governmental policy and constitutional provisions restricting taxation or the contracting of public debts, this term means works of general public utility or advantage, designed to promote facility of intercommunication, trade, and commerce, the transportation of persons and property, or the development of the natural resources of the state, such as railroads, public highways, turnpikes, and canals, bridges, the improvement of rivers and harbors, systems of artificial irrigation, and the improvement of water powers; but it does not include the building and maintenance of state institutions. State v. Froehlich, 115 Wis. 32, 91 N.W. 115, 58 L.R.A. 757, 95 Am.St.Rep. 894. State v. Knapp, 99 Kan. 852, 163 P. 181, 182, L.R.A. 1917C, 1034; State v. Donald, 160 Wis. 21, 151 N.W. 331, 346.

INTERNAL POLICE. A term sometimes applied to the police power, or power to enact laws in the interest of the public safety, health, and morality, which is inherent in the legislative authority of each state, is to be exercised with reference only to its domestic affairs and its own citizens, and is not surrendered to the federal government. Cheboygan Lumber Co. v. Delta Transp. Co., 100 Mich. 16, 58 N.W. 630.

INTERNAL REVENUE. In the legislation and fiscal administration of the United States, revenue raised by the imposition of taxes and excises on domestic products or manufactures, and on domestic business and occupations, inheritance taxes, and stamp taxes; as broadly distinguished. from "customs duties," i.e., duties or taxes on foreign commerce or on goods imported. Rev.St. U.S. tit. 35, § 3140 et seq.

INTERNAL WATERS. Such as lie wholly within the body of the particular state or country. The Garden City, D.C.N.Y., 26 F. 773.

INTERNATIONAL COMMERCE. See Corn. merce.

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE. An agency of the United Nations. It has jurisdiction to give advisory opinions on matters of law and treaty construction when requested by the General Assembly, Security Council or any other international agency authorized by the General Assembly to petition for such opinion. It has jurisdiction, also, to settle legal disputes between nations when voluntarily submitted to it. Its judgments may be enforced by the Security Council.

Every member of the United Nations is automatically a member of the court.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. The law which regulates the intercourse of nations; the law of nations. 1 Kent, Comm. 1, 4. The customary law which determines the rights and regulates the intercourse of independent states in peace and war. 1 Wildm. Int. Law, 1.

Public international law is the body of rules which control the conduct of independent states in their relations with each other.

Private international law is that branch of municipal law which determines before the courts of what nation a particular action or suit should be brought, and by the law of what nation it should be determined.

INTERNUNCIO. A minister of a second order, charged with the affairs of the papal court in countries where that court has no nuncio.

INTERNUNCIUS. A messenger between two parties; a go-between. Applied to a broker, as the agent of both parties. 4 C. Rob. Adm. 204.

INTERPELLATE. To address with a question, especially when formal and public; originally used with respect to proceedings in the French legislature; used in reference to questions by the court to counsel during an argument.

INTERPELLATION. In the civil law. The act by which, in consequence of an agreement, the party bound declares that he will not be bound beyond a certain time. Wolff, Inst. Nat. § 752.

INTERPLEA. A plea by which a person sues in respect to property disclaims any interest in it and demands that rival claimants shall litigate their titles between themselves and relieve him from responsibility. Bennett v. Wolverton, 24 Kan. 286. See Interpleader.

In Missouri, a statutory proceeding, serving as a substitute for the action of replevin, by which a third person intervenes in an action of attachment, sets up his own title to the specific property attached, and seeks to recover the possession of it. Rice v. Sall, 176 Mo. 107, 75 S.W. 398; Spooner v. Ross, 24 Mo.App. 603; State v. Barker, 26 Mo. App. 491; Brownwell, etc., Car. Co. v. Barnard, 139 Mo. 142, 40 S.W. 762.

INTERPLEADER. When two or more persons claim the same thing (or fund) of a third, and he, laying no claim to it himself, is ignorant which of them has a right to it, and fears he may be prejudiced by their proceeding against him to recover it, he may file a bill in equity against them, the object of which is to make them litigate their title between themselves, instead of litigating it with him, and such a bill is called a "bill of interpleader." Brown; Hall v. San Jacinto State Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 255 S.W. 506, 509; Alton & Peters v. Merritt, 145 Minn. 426, 177 N.W. 770, 771.

By the statute 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 58, summary proceedings at law were provided for the same purpose, in actions of assumpsit, debt, detinue, and trover. And the same remedy is known, in one form or the other, in most or all of the United States.

INTERPOLATE. To insert words in a complete document.

INTERPOLATION. The act of interpolating; the words interpolated.

INTERPOSITION. The doctrine that a state, in the exercise of its sovereignty, may reject a mandate of the federal government deemed to be unconstitutional or to exceed the powers delegated to the federal government. The doctrine denies constitutional obligation of states to respect Supreme Court decisions with which they do not agree. Bush v. Orleans Parish Sch. Bd., D.C.La., 188 F.Supp. 916.

The concept is based on the 10th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States reserving to the states powers not delegated to the United States. Historically, the doctrine emanated from Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dallas 419, wherein the state of Georgia, when sued in the Supreme Court by a private citizen of another state, entered a remonstrance and declined to recognize the court's jurisdiction. Amendment 11 validated Georgia's position.

Implementation of the doctrine may be peaceable, as by resolution, remonstrance or legislation, or may proceed ultimately to nullification, with forcible resistance.

The Constitution does contemplate and provide for the contingency of adverse state interposition or legislation to annul or defeat the execution of national laws. In re Charge to Grand Jury, Fed. Cas.No.18,274 [2 Spr. 292].

INTERPRET. To construe; to seek out the meaning of language; to translate orally from one tongue to another.

INTERPRETARE ET CONCORDARE LEGIBUS, EST OPTIMUS INTERPRETANDI MODUS. To interpret, and [in such a way as] to harmonize laws with laws, is the best mode of interpretation. 8 Coke, 169a.
The interpretation of deeds is to be liberal, that the thing may rather have effect than fail. Broom, Max. 543.

Such an interpretation is to be adopted that the thing may rather stand than fall.

An interpretation should always be made that what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided.

Such an interpretation is to be adopted that the thing may rather have effect than fail. Jenk. Cent. 198.

In cases of ambiguity, what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided. 4 Inst. 328.

The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas. Lieb. Herm.

"Construction" is a term of wider scope than "interpretation;" for, while the latter is concerned only with ascertaining the sense and meaning of the subject-matter, the former may also be directed to explaining the legal effects and consequences of the instrument in question. Hence interpretation precedes construction, but stops at the written text.

Interpretation and construction of written instruments are not the same. A rule of construction is one which governs the ascertainment of the meaning of an expression or implied intention, while a rule of interpretation is one which governs the ascertainment of the meaning of the maker of the instrument. In re Union Trust Co., 151 N.Y.S. 246, 249, 89 Misc. 69.

Close interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called "literal," but the term is inadmissible. Lieb. Herm. 54.

Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensa, called, also, "liberal interpretation") adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word. Lieb. Herm. 58.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excessens) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation. Lieb. Herm. 59.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle. Lieb. Herm. 59.

Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic one.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation, (interpretatio vafer,) by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows, to have been intended. Lieb. Herm. 60.

It is said to be either "legal," which rests on the same authority as the law itself, or "doctrinal," which rests upon its intrinsic reasonableness. Legal interpretation may be either "authentic," when it is expressly provided by the legislator, or "usual," when it is derived from unwritten practice. Doctrinal interpretation may turn on the meaning of words and sentences, when it is called "grammatical," or on the intention of the legislator, when it is described as "logical." When logical interpretation stretches the words of a statute to cover its obvious meaning, it is called "extensive;" when, on the other hand, it avoids giving full meaning to the words, in order not to go beyond the intention of the legislator, it is called "restrictive." Holl. Jur. 344.

As to strict and liberal interpretation, see Construction.

In the civil law, authentic interpretation of laws; isthat given by the legislator himself, which is obligatory on the courts. Customary interpretation (also called "usual") is that which arises from successive or concurrent decisions of the court on the same subject-matter, having regard to the spirit of the law, jurisprudence, usages, and equity; as distinguished from "authentic" interpretation, which is that given by the legislator himself. Houston v. Robertson, 2 Tex. 26.

INTERPRETATION CLAUSE. A section of a statute which defines the meaning of certain words occurring frequently in the other sections.

INTERPRETER. A person sworn at a trial to interpret the evidence of a foreigner or a deaf and dumb person to the court. Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 226; People v. Lem Deo, 132 Cal. 199, 64 P. 266.

INTERREGNUM. An interval between reigns. The period which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the election of another. The vacancy which occurs when there is no government.

INTERROGATOIRE. In French law. An act which contains the interrogatories made by the judge to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused. Poth. Proc. Crim. c. 4, art. 2, § 1.

INTERROGATORIES. A set or series of written questions drawn up for the purpose of being propounded to a party in equity, a garnishee, or a witness whose testimony is taken on deposition; a series of formal written questions used in the judicial examination of a party or a witness. In taking evidence on depositions, the interrogatories are usually prepared and settled by counsel, and reduced to writing in advance of the examination.

Written questions propounded by one party and served on adversary, who must serve written answers thereto under oath. Neske v. Burns, 8 N.J. Misc. 160, 149 A. 761.

Interrogatories are either direct or cross, the former being those which are put on behalf of the party calling a witness; the latter are those which are interposed by the adversary party.

INTERRUPTIO. Lat. Interruption. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription. Calvin.

INTERRUPTOO MULTIPLEX NON TOLLIT PRÆSCRIPTIONEM SEMEL OBTENTAM. 2 Inst. 654. Frequent interruption does not take away a prescription once secured.

INTERRUPTION. The occurrence of some act or fact, during the period of prescription, which is sufficient to arrest the running of the statute of limitations. It is said to be either "natural" or "civil," the former being caused by the act of the party; the latter by the legal effect or operation of some fact or circumstance. Innerarity v. Mims, 1 Ala. 674; Carr v. Foster, 3 Q.B. 588; Flight v. Thomas, 2 Adol. & El. 701.

Interruption of the possession is where the right is not enjoyed or exercised continuously; interruption of the right is where the person having or claiming the right ceases the exercise of it in such a manner as to show that he does not claim to be entitled to exercise it.

In Scotch law. The true proprietor’s claiming his right during the course of prescription. Bell.

INTERSECTION. As applied to a street or highway means the space occupied by two streets at the point where they cross each other. Rodgers v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co., 237 Ala. 301, 186 So. 684, 686. Space common to both streets or highways, formed by continuing the curb lines. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickson, 27 Tenn.App. 74, 173 S.W.2d 714, 718.

Point of intersection of two roads is the point where the middle lines intersect. In re Springfield Road, 73 Pa. 127. But the term may also mean the point which each of two approaching vehicles will reach at the same moment. Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm.Ed., § 983.

INTERSTATE. Between two or more states; between places or persons in different states; concerning or affecting two or more states politically or territorially.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE. Traffic, intercourse, commercial trading, or the transportation of persons or property between or among the several states of the Union, or from or between points in one state and points in another state; commerce between two states, or between places lying in different states. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 194, 6 L.Ed. 23; Wabash, etc. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U.S. 557, 7 S.Ct. 4, 30 L.Ed. 244; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Railroad Com’rs, C.C. Tenn., 19 F. 701; Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Lucky, 128 Minn. 171, 150 N.W. 790, 791; State v. Knights of Ku Klux Klan, 117 Kan. 564, 232 P. 254, 260, 37 A.L.R. 1267; Kirmeyer v. State of Kansas, 236 U.S. 568, 35 S.Ct. 419, 59 L.Ed. 721; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Foster, 247 U.S. 105, 38 S.Ct. 438, 439, 62 L.Ed. 1006, 1 A.L.R. 1278. It comprehends all the component parts of commercial intercourse between different states. Furst v. Brewster, 282 U.S. 493, 51 S.Ct. 295, 296, 75 L.Ed. 478.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT. The act of Congress of February 4, 1887 (49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.), designed to regulate commerce between the states, and particularly the transportation of persons and property, by carriers, between interstate points, prescribing that charges for such transportation shall be reasonable and just, prohibiting unjust discrimination, rebates, draw-backs, preferences, pooling of freights, etc., requiring schedules of rates to be published, establishing a commission to carry out the measures enacted, and prescribing the powers and duties of such commission and the procedure before it.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION. A commission created by the interstate commerce act (q. v.) to carry out the measures therein enacted, composed of eleven persons, appointed by the President, empowered to inquire into the business of the carriers affected, to enforce the law, to receive, investigate, and determine complaints made to them of any violation of the act, make annual reports, hold stated sessions, etc. 49 U.S.C.A. § 11.

INTERSTATE EXTRADITION. The reclamation and surrender, according to due legal proceedings, of a person who, having committed a crime in one of the states of the Union, has fled into another state to evade justice or escape prosecution.

INTERSTATE LAW. That branch of private international law which affords rules and principles for the determination of controversies between citizens of different states in respect to mutual rights or obligations, in so far as the same are affected by the diversity of their citizenship or by diversity in the laws or institutions of the several states.

INTERVENING ACT. Of third person in order to break chain of causation and obviate liability for original breach of duty must be a superseding cause and one which original wrongdoer was not bound to anticipate as the natural or ordinary result of his acts. Frazier v. Ayres, La.App., 20 So. 2d 754, 759; Littell v. Argus Production Co., C.C.A. Kan., 78 F.2d 955, 957.

INTERVENING AGENCY. To render an original wrong a remote cause, an "intervening agency," must be independent of such wrong, adequate to produce the injury, so interrupting the natural sequence of events as to produce a result different from what would have been produced, and one that could not have been reasonably expected from the original wrong. Lemos v. Madden, 28 Wyo.
1, 200 P. 791, 795.

An independent "intervening agency" which will protect the original wrongdoer must be the efficient cause of the injury of which complaint is made, and not a negligent act or omission of such agency concurring with or succeeding the original negligence permitted by the original wrongdoer to continue and which in the natural course of events results in such injury. In short, the result prevented by the intervening agency must be the injury complained of,
and not the resultant for that injury. Swanson v. Slagal, 212 Ind. 394, 8 N.E.2d 993, 1000.

An "intervening efficient cause" is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and injury, and itself becomes direct and immediate cause of injury. Philabaum v. Lake Erie & W.
R. Co., 315 Ill. 131, 145 N.E. 806, 808.

INTERVENING CAUSE. The "intervening cause," which will relieve of liability for an injury, is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and the injury, turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed and which could not have been reasonably anticipated. Hartman v. Atchison, T. & S. F.
Ry. Co., 94 Kan. 184, 146 P. 335, 336, L.R.A. 1915D, 563. An act of an independent agency which destrous the causal connection between the negligenent act of the defendant and the wrongful injury;
the independent act being the immediate cause, in which case damages are not recoverable because the original wrongful act is not the proximate cause. Davenport v. McClellan, 88 N.J.L.
653, 96 A. 921.

INTERVENING DAMAGES. See Damages.

INTERVENING FORCE. One which actively operates in producing harm to another after the actor's negligent act or omission has been commit-668, 671; American Mut. Liability Ins. Co. v.
Buckley & Co., C.C.A.Pa., 117 F.2d 845, 847.

INTERVENOR. An intervenor is a person who voluntarily interposes in an action or other procceeding with the leave of the court. Ladue v.
Goodhead, 181 Misc. 807, 44 N.Y.S.2d 783, 787.

INTERVENTION. In international law. Intervention is such an interference between two or more states as may (according to the event) result in a resort to force; while mediation always is,
and is intended to be and to continue, peaceful only. Intervention between a sovereign and his own subjects is not justified by anything in international law; but a remonstrance may be addressed to the sovereign in a proper case. Brown.

In English ecclesiastical law. The proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject-matter in dispute, in order the better to protect such interest, interposes his claim. 2 Chit. Pr. 492; 3 Chit. Commer. Law. 633; 2 Hagconst. 137; 3 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 586; Stillwell Hotel Co. v. Anderson, 16 Cal.App.2d 636, 61 P.2d 71, 72.

In the civil law. The act by which a third party demands to be received as a party in a suit pendning between other persons. Stillwell Hotel Co. v.

The intervention is made either for the purpose of being joined to the plaintiff, and to claim the same thing he does, or some other thing connected with it; or to join the defendant, and with him to oppose the claim of the plaintiff, which it is 2, § 7, no. 3.

In practice. A proceeding in a suit or action by which a third person is permitted by the court to make himself a party, either joining the plaintiff in claiming what is sought by the complaint, or uniting with the defendant in resisting the claims of the plaintiff, or demanding something adversely both to of them. Logan v. Greenlaw, C.C.Tenn., 12 F. 16; Fischer v. Hanna, 8 Colo.App. 471, 47
P. 303; Gale v. Frazier, 4 Dak. 196, 30 N.W. 138;
Reay v. Butler, Cal., 7 P. 671; Gorham v. Hall, 172
Ark. 744, 290 S.W. 357, 358; Adler v. Seaman, C.C.
A.Mo., 266 F. 828, 832; In re Prouty's Estate, 107
Vt. 496, 181 A. 134.

INTESTABILIS. Lat. A witness incompetent to testify. Calvin.

INTESTABLE. One who has not testamentary capacity; e. g., an infant, lunatic, or person civilly dead.

INTESTACY. The state or condition of dying without having made a valid will, or without having disposed of will of a part of his property. In re Shestack's Estate, 267 Pa. 115, 110 A. 166;

Besides the strict meaning of the word as above given, there is also a sense in which intestacy may be partial;
that is, where a man leaves a will which does not dispose of his whole estate, he is said to "die intestate" as to the property so omitted.

INTESTATE. Without making a will. A person is said to die intestate when he dies without making a will, or dies without leaving anything to testify what his wishes were with respect to the disposal of his property after his death. The word is also often used to signify the person himself.
Thus, in speaking of the property of a person who died intestate, it is said to use "the intestate's property;" e. g., the property of the person dying in an intestate condition. Brown. In re Cameron's Estate, 47 App.Div. 120, 62 N.Y.S. 187; Mess-more v. Egenberger, 46 App.Div. 46, 61 N.Y.S.
556; Code Civ.Proc.N.Y. 1899, § 2514, subd. 1 (Surrogate's Court Act, § 314, subd. 1).

INTESTATE LAWS. Statutes which provide and prescribe the devolution of estates of persons who die without disposing of their estates by law, will or 162, 125 S.E. 44, 46, 37 A.L.R. 532; In re Rogers'
Estate, Mo.Sup., 250 S.W. 576, 578; Ford v. U. S., C.C.A.N.Y., 205 F. 130, 134.

INTESTATE SUCCESSION. A succession is called "intestate" when the deceased has left no will, or when his will has been revoked or annull
as irregular. Therefore the heirs to whom a succession has fallen by the effects of law only are called "heirs ab intestato." Civ. Code La. art. 1096.

INTESTATO. Lat. In the civil law. Intestate; without a will. Calvin.

INTESTATUS. Lat. In the civil and old English law. An intestate; one who dies without a will. Calvin.

INTESTATUS DECEDIT, QUI AUT OMNIO TESTAMENTUM NON FECIT; AUT NON JURE FECIT; AUT ID QUOD FECERAT RUPTUM LAE- HARES EXSTITIT. A person dies intestate who either has made no testament at all or has made one not legally valid; or if the testament he has made be revoked, or made useless; or if no one becomes heir under it. Inst. 3, 1, pr.

INTIMATE. Close in friendship or acquaintance, familiar, confidential; also near, close, direct, thorough, complete. Atkins Corporation v. Tourny, 6 Cal.2d 206, 57 P.2d 480, 484.

INTIMATION. In the civil law. A notification to a party that some step in a legal proceeding is asked or will be taken. Particularly, a notice given by the party taking an appeal, to the other party, that the court above will hear the appeal.

In Scotch law. A formal written notice, drawn by a notary, to be served on a party against whom a stranger has acquired a right or claim; e. g., the assignee of a debt must serve such a notice on the debtor, otherwise a payment to the original creditor will be good.

INTIMIDATION OF VOTERS. This, by statute in several of the states, is made a criminal offense. Under an early Pennsylvania act, it was held that, to constitute the offense of intimidation of voters, there must be a preconceived intention for the purpose of intimidating the officers or interrupting the election. Respublica v. Gibbs, 3 Yeates, Pa., 429.

INTITLED. An old form of "entitiled." 6 Mod. 304.

INTO. A preposition signifying to the inside of; within. It expresses entrance, or a passage from the outside of a thing to its interior, and follows verbs expressing motion. It has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "at," "inside of," and "to," and has been distinguished from the words "from" and "through." 48 C.J.S. p. 120.

INTOL and UTTOL. In old records. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or bought in and sold out. Cowell.

INTOLERABLE CRUELTY. In the law of divorce, this term denotes extreme cruelty, cruel and inhuman treatment, barbarous, savage, and inhuman conduct, and is equivalent to any of those phrases. Shaw v. Shaw, 17 Conn. 193; Morehouse v. Morehouse, 70 Conn. 420, 39 A. 516; Blain v. Blain, 45 Vt. 544.

INTOXICATED. Affected by an intoxicant, under the influence of an intoxicating liquor. Taylor v. Joyce, 4 Cal.App.2d 612, 41 P.2d 967, 968.

INTOXICATING LIQUOR. Any liquor used as a beverage, and which, when so used in sufficient quantities, ordinarily or commonly produces entire or partial intoxication; any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such proportion that it will produce intoxication when imbibed in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 767, 37 Am. Rep. 284; Com'r's v. Taylor, 21 N.Y. 173; People v. Hawley, 3 Mich. 339; State v. Oliver, 26 W.Va. 431, 53 Am. Rep. 79; Frisvold v. Leahy, 15 Calif. App. 2d 752, 60 P.2d 151, 153; Worley v. Spurgeon, 38 Iowa 465. See, also, Alcoholic Liquors.

INTOXICATION. The state of being poisoned; the condition produced by the administration or introduction into the human system of a poison. But in its popular use this term is restricted to alcoholic intoxication, that is, drunkenness or inebriety, or the mental and physical condition induced by drinking excessive quantities of alcoholic liquors, and this is its meaning as used in statutes, indictments, etc. Sapp v. State, 116 Ga. 182, 42 S.E. 410; State v. Pierce, 65 Iowa 85, 21 N.W. 195; Wadsworth v. Dunnam, 98 Ala. 610, 13 So. 599; Ring v. Ring, 112 Ga. 854, 38 S.E. 330; State v. Kelley, 47 Vt. 296; Com. v. Whitney, 11 Cush., Mass., 477.

INTOXIMETER. A trade name for scientific breath testing device that operates on assumption that concentration of blood alcohol bears fixed relation to concentration of alcohol in the deep lung, or alveolar air. City of Sioux Falls v. Kohler, S.D., 118 N.W.2d 14.

INTRA. Lat. In; near; within. "Infra" or "inter" has taken the place of "intra" in many of the more modern Latin phrases.

INTRA ANNII SPATIUM. Within the space of a year. Cod. 5, 9, 2. Intra annule tempus. Id. 6, 30, 19.

INTRA FIDEM. Within belief; credible. Calvin.
INTRA LUCTUS TEMPUS. Within the time of mourning. Cod. 9, 1, auth.

INTRA MCENIA. Within the walls (of a house.) A term applied to domestic or mental servants. 1 Bl. Comm. 425.

INTRA PARIETES. Between walls; among friends; out of court; without litigation. Calvin.

INTRA PRZESIDIA. Within the defenses. See Infra Prsidia.

INTRA QUATUOR MARIA. Within the four seas. Shep. Touch. 378.

INTRA FIRES. An act is said to be intra vires ("within the power") of a person or corporation when it is within the scope of his or its powers or authority. It is the opposite of ultra vires, (q. v.). Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Dodd, 115 Ky. 176, 72 S.W. 827.

INTRALIMINAL. In mining law, the term "intraliminal rights" denotes the right to mine, take, and possess all such bodies or deposits of ore as lie within the four planes formed by the vertical extension downward of the boundary lines of the claim; as distinguished from "extraliminal," or more commonly "extralateral," rights. Jefferson Min. Co. v. Anchoria-Leland Mill. & Min. Co., 32 Colo. 176, 75 P. 1073, 64 L.R.A. 925.

INTRAMURAL. Within the walls. The powers of a municipal corporation are "intramural" and "extramural"; the one being the powers exercised within the corporate limits, and the other being those exercised without. State v. Port of Astoria, 79 Or. 1, 154 P. 399, 404.

INTRARE MARISCUM. L. Lat. To drain a marsh or low ground, and convert it into herbage or pasture.

INTRASTATE COMMERCE. See Commerce.

INTRINSECUM SERVITIUM. Lat. Common and ordinary duties with the lord's court.

INTRUSION. A species of injury by ouster or amotion of possession from the freehold, being an entry of a stranger, after a particular estate of freedom is determined, before him in remainder or reversion. Hulick v. Scovil, 9 Ill. 170; Boyle v. Deinzer, 45 N.J. Eq. 485, 18 A. 121.

INVADE. One who is under pledge; one who has had sureties or pledges given for him. Spelman.

INVASION. An encroachment upon the rights of another; the invasion of an army for conquest or plunder. Webster. See /Etna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U.S. 129, 24 L.Ed. 395.

INVASIONES. The inquisition of serjeanties and knights’ fees. Cowell.

INVENTIO. In the Civil law. Finding; one of the modes of acquiring title to property by occupancy. Heinecc. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 350.

INVENT. To find out something new; to devise, contrive, and produce something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment; particularly applied to machines, mechanical appliances, compositions, and patentable inventions of every sort. To create. E. W. Bliss Co. v. United States, 248 U.S. 37, 39 S. Ct. 42, 43, 63 L.Ed. 112.

INVENTIO. In the Civil law. Finding; one of the modes of acquiring title to property by occupancy. Heinecc. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 350.

INVENT. To find out something new; to devise, contrive, and produce something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment. Also the article or contrivance or composition so invented. Leidersdorf v. Flint, 15 Fed.Cas. 260; Smith v. Nichols, 21 Wall. 118, 22 L.Ed. 566; Hollister v. Manufacturing Co., 5 S.Ct. 717, 113 U.S. 72, 28 L. Ed. 901; Murphy Mfg. Co. v. Excelsior Car Roof Co., C.C.Mo., 70 F. 495.

A concept or thing evolved from the mind. "Invention" is not a revelation of something which existed and was unknown, but the creation of something which did not exist before, and possessing elements of novelty and utility in kind and measure different from, and greater than, what the art might expect from skilled workers. Pyrene Mfg. Co. v. Boyce, C.C.A.N.J., 292 F. 480, 481. The finding out—the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist, and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyment of mankind. Conover v. Roach, 4 Fish. 12. Fed.Cas.No.3,125. Not every improvement is invention; but to entitle a thing to protection it must be the product of some exercise of the inventive faculties. and it must involve something more than what is obvious to persons skilled in the art to which it relates. Rosenwasser v. Berry, C.C.Me., 22 F. 841. Mere adaptation of known process to clearly analogous use is not invention. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., C.C.A. Ohio, 79 F.2d 948, 952. 953.

"Invention" involves the exercise of the creative mind. Aeolian Co. v. Wanamaker, D.C., 221 F. 666, 668.

Inventive skill has been defined as that intuitive faculty of the mind put forth in the search for new results, or new methods, creating what had not before existed, or bringing to light what had been hidden from view; it differs from a suggestion of that common experience which arose spontaneously and by a necessity of human reasoning in the minds of those who had become acquainted with the circumstances with which they had to deal. Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 72, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901. -Invention, in the nature of improvements, is the double mental act of discerning, in existing machines, processes or articles, some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it. General Electric Co. v. Electric Co., Ill., 174 F. 246, 98 C. C. A. 154.

An “invention” differs from a “discovery.” The former term is properly applicable to the contrivance and production of something that did not before exist; while discovery denotes the bringing into knowledge and use of something which, although it existed, was before unknown. Thus, we speak of the “discovery” of the properties of light, electricity, etc., while the telescope and the electric motor are the results of the process of “invention.”

For "Examination of invention", see Examination.

INVENTIONES. See Inventio.

INVENTOR. One who finds out or contrives some new thing; one who devises some new art, manufacture, mechanical appliance, or process; one who invents a patentable contrivance. Sparkman v. Higgins, 22 Fed.Cas. 879; Henderson v. Tompkins, C.C.Mass., 60 F. 764.

INVENTORY. A detailed list of articles of property; a list or schedule of property, containing a designation or description of each specific article; an itemized list of the various articles constituting a collection, estate, stock in trade, etc., with their estimated or actual values. In law, the term is particularly applied to such a list made by an executor, administrator, or assignee in bankruptcy. See Silver Bow Min. Co. v. Lowry, 5 Mont. 618, 6 P. 62; Lloyd v. Wyckoff, 1 11 N.J.Law, 224; Roberts, etc., Co. v. Sun Mut. L. Ins. Co., 48 S.W. 559; Tex.Civ.App. 338; Southern F. Ins. Co. v. Knight, 111 Ga. 622, 36 S.E. 821, 52 L.R.A. 70, 78 Am.St. Rep. 216.

INVENTUS. Lat. Found. Thesaurus inventus, treasure-trove. Non est inventus, [he] is not found.
INVERSE ORDER OF ALIENATION DOCTRINE. Under this doctrine, mortgagee or other lienor, where land subject to lien has been aliened in separate parcels successively, shall satisfy his lien out of land remaining in grantor or original owner if possible, and, if that be insufficient, he shall resort to parcels aliened in inverse order of their alienation. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.N.C., 74 F.2d 881, 884.

INVEST. To loan money upon securities of a more or less permanent nature, or to place it in business ventures or real estate, or otherwise lay it out, so that it may produce a revenue or income. Drake v. Crane, 127 Mo. 85, 29 S.W. 990, 27 L.R.A. 653; Stramann v. Scheeren, 7 Colo.App. 1, 42 P. 191; Una v. Dodd, 39 N.J.Eq. 186.

To clothe one with the possession of a fief or benefice. See Investiture.

INVESTIGATION. To follow up step by step by patient inquiry or observation; to trace or track mentally; to search into; to examine and inquire into with care and accuracy; to find out by careful inquisition; examination; the taking of evidence; a legal inquiry. Lukert v. Eldridge, 49 Mont. 46, 139 N.W. 999, 1001; People ex rel. Fennell v. Wilmot, 217 N.Y.S. 477, 479, 127 Misc. 791. Application of Gilchrist, 130 Misc. 456, 224 N.Y.S. 210, 219.

INVESTITIVE FACT. The fact by means of which a right comes into existence; e. g., a grant of a monopoly, the death of one’s ancestor. Holl. Jur. 132.

INVESTITURE. A ceremony which accompanied the grant of lands in the feudal ages, and consisted in the open and notorious delivery of possession in the presence of the other vassals, which perpetuated among them the sera of their new acquisition at the time when the art of writing was very little known; and thus the evidence of the property was reposed in the memory of the neighborhood, who, in case of disputed title, were afterwards called upon to decode it. Brown.

In Ecclesiastical law. Investiture is one of the formalities by which the election of a bishop is confirmed by the archbishop. See Phillim. Ecc. Law, 42, et seq.

INVESTMENT. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. Securities & Exchange Commission v. Wickham, D.C.Minn., 12 F. Supp. 245, 247.

INVIOLABILITY. The attribute of being secured against violation. The persons of ambassadors are inviolable.

INVITATION. In the law of negligence, and with reference to trespasses on realty, invitation is the act of one who solicits or incites others to enter upon, remain in, or make use of, his property or structures thereon, or who so arranges the property or the means of access to it or of transit over it as to induce the reasonable belief that he expects and intends that others shall come upon it or pass over it. Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co., 10 Allen, Mass., 373, 87 Am.Dec. 644; Wilson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 18 R.I. 491, 29 A. 258; Wright v. Boston & A. R. Co., 142 Mass. 300, 7 N.E. 866.

Thus the proprietor of a store, theatre or amusement park “invites” the public to come upon his premises for such purposes as are connected with its intended use. Again, the fact that safety gates at a railroad crossing, which should be closed in case of danger, are left standing open, is an “invitation” to the traveler on the highway to cross. Roberts v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 177 Pa. 183, 35 A. 723. So, bringing a passenger train on a railroad to a full stop at a regular station is an “invitation to alight.”

License distinguished

A license is a passive permission on the part of the owner of premises, with reference to other persons entering upon or using them, while an invitation implies a request, solicitation or desire that they should do so. An invitation may be inferred where there is a commercial interest or mutual advantage; while a license will be inferred where the object is the mere pleasure or benefit of the person using it. Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 102 U.S. 580, 26 L.Ed. 235; Weldon v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 2 Pennewill, Del., 1, 43 A. 159; Babcock and Wilcox Co. v. Nolon, 58 Nev. 131, 71 P.2d 1051, 1053. An owner owes to a licensee no duty as to the condition of the premises (unless imposed by statute) save that he should not knowingly let him run upon a hidden peril or willfully cause him harm; while to one invited he is under the obligation to maintain the premises in a reasonably safe and secure condition. Beecher v. Daniels, 18 R.I. 563, 29 A. 6, 27 L.R.A. 512, 49 Am.St.Rep. 790.

Express and implied

An invitation may be express, when the owner or occupier of the land by words invites another to come upon it or make use of it or of something thereon; or it may be implied when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe that the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adapted and prepared and allowed to be used. Turess v. New York, S. & W. R. Co., 35 L.Ed. 15; Purey v. Chicago Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 67 N.J.L. 270, 51 A. 505; Lepnick v. Gaddis, 72 Miss. 200, 156 So. 213, 160 P.962, 964; Coburn v. Village of Swanton, 95 Vt. 320, 115 A. 153, 156; Bush v. Weed Lumber Co., 63 Cal.App. 426, 218 P. 618, 620; Polluck v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 44 S.D. 249, 183 N.W. 859, 862.

INVITED ERROR. See Error.

INVITO. Lat. Being unwilling. Against or without the assent or consent.

960
INVITO BENVFICIUM NON DATUR. A benefit is not conferred on one who is unwilling to receive it; that is to say, no one can be compelled to accept a benefit. Dig. 50, 17, 69; Broom, Max. 699, note.

INVOICE. In commercial law. A list or account of goods or merchandise sent by merchants to their correspondents at home or abroad, in which the marks of each package, with other particulars, are set forth. Marsh. Ins. 408; Jac. Sea Laws, 302; Dane Abr.; Merchants’ Exch. Co. v. Weisman, 132 Mich. 353, 93 N.W. 870; Southern Exp. Co. v. Hess, 53 Ala. 22; Cramer v. Oppenstein, 16 Colo. 495, 27 P. 713; Stone v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Or. 528, 198 P. 244. Written itemized accounts sent to a purchaser by the seller of merchandise. Cobb & Seal Shoe Store v. ‘Etna Ins. Co., 78 S.C. 388, 58 S.E. 1099; Garner Mfg. Co. v. Cornelius Lumber Co., 165 Ark. 119, 262 S.W. 1011, 1014; Wilmot v. Minneapolis Automobile Trade Ass’n, 169 Minn. 140, 210 N.W. 861, 862; Larlthi Co. v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co., 98 Misc. 446, 162 N.Y. S. 870, 871. A list sent to a purchaser, factor, consignee, etc., containing the items, together with the prices and charges of merchandise sent or to be sent to him. State v. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, 222 Iowa 1209, 271 N.W. 185, 187. A writing made on behalf of an importer, specifying the merchandise imported, and its true cost or value. And. Rev. Law, § 294.

INVOICE BOOK. A book in which invoices are copied.

In sale of retail stock of goods, this term ordinarily means wholesale cost at time goods were purchased by seller. Hamilton v. O’Rear, 224 Ala. 625, 141 So. 565, 567.

INVOLUNTARY. Without will or power of choice; opposed to volition or desire. Curry v. Federal Life Ins. Co., 221 Mo.App. 626, 287 S.W. 1053, 1056. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q. v.) or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary, then, which is performed under duress. Wolff Inst. Nat. § 5.

As to involuntary "Bankruptcy," "Indebtedness," "Nonsuit," and "Trust," see those titles.

INVOLUNTARY DEPOSIT. In the law of bailments, one made by the accidental leaving or plac-IRREGULAR JUDGMENT. One rendered contrary to the course and practice of the court.

IPSWICH, DOMESDAY OF. The earliest extant record of any borough court with elective officers sitting regularly and administering a customary law of the sea. Black Book of Admiralty, Vol. II. It was abolished by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76. Its twelve “capital portmen” were elected from the most fit, wealthy and discreet of the judges.

IRA MOTUS. Lat. Moved or excited by anger or passion. A term sometimes formerly used in the plea of son assault demesne. 1 Tidd, Pr. 645.

IRADE. A decree of the Sultan.

IRE AD LARGUM. Lat. To go at large; to escape; to be set at liberty.

IRENARCHA. In Roman law. An officer whose duties are described in Dig. 5, 4, 18, 7. See Id. 48, 3, 6; Cod. 10, 75. Literally, a peace-officer or magistrate.

IRON-SAFE CLAUSE. A common clause in policies of fire insurance, requiring the insured to preserve his books and inventory in an iron or fireproof safe, or in some secure place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the building. This provision casts on the insured the responsibility for the loss of books and records if due to the wrongful act or negligence of himself or his employees in failing to comply with the requirement. 45 C.J.S. p. 358.

IRRATIONAL. Unreasonable, foolish, absurd; a person may be irrational in such sense, and still not be insane in the legal sense. Lee v. State, 30 Okl.Cr. 14, 234 P. 654, 655.

IRRECUSABLE. A term used to indicate a certain class of contractual obligations recognized by the law which are imposed upon a person without his consent and without regard to any act of his own. They are distinguished from recusables which are the result of a voluntary act on the part of a person on whom they are imposed by law. A clear example of an irrecusables is the obligation imposed on every man not to strike another without some lawful excuse. A recusable obligation is based upon some act of the wrongful act or negligence of himself or his assent, or on the part of a person on whom they are imposed to a fire which would destroy the building. This provision casts on the insured the responsibility for the loss of books and records if due to the wrongful act or negligence of himself or his employees in failing to comply with the requirement. 45 C.J.S. p. 358.

IRREGULARITY. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done. Doe ex dem. Cooper v. Harter, 2 Ind. 252. Violation or nonobservance of established rules and practices. The want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding; consisting either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or doing it in an unreasonable or improper manner. Coulter v. Board of Com’rs of Bernalillo County, 22 N.M. 24, 158 P. 1086; Ex parte Davis, 118 Or. 693, 247 P. 809, 811; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 P. 418; Hall v. Mungen, 5 Lans., N.Y., 113; Corn Exch. Bank v. Byke, 119 N.Y. 414, 23 N.E. 805; Salter v. Hilgen, 40 Wis. 365; Turrill v. Walker, 4 Mich. 183. The technical term for every defect in practical proceedings, or the mode of conducting an action or defense, as distinguishable from defects in pleadings. 3 Chit. Gen. Pr. 509.

Not synonymous with illegality. City of Tampa v. Palmer, 89 Fla. 514, 105 So. 115, 117. ‘Irregularity’ is a want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding, while ‘illegality’ denotes a radical defect. United States v. Salomon, D.C.La., 231 F. 461, 463; U. S. v. Richmond, C.C.A.Pa., 17 F.2d 28, 32. ‘Illegality’ in the assessment of a tax is a substantial defect contrary to law and leaving the proceeding with nothing to stand on, while an “irregularity” is a formal defect contrary to the practice authorized by law, and relating rather to the manner of doing the act than to the act itself. Buntun v. Rock Springs Grazing Ass’n, 29 Wyo. 461, 215 P. 244, 254.

Under statutes authorizing the modification or setting aside of judgments, “irregularity” is some departure from the prescribed procedure in the trial, or in the determination of the action, not evidenced by a ruling or an order. Duncan v. Wilkins, 103 Okl. 221, 229 P. 801, 802; American Nat. Bank of Tucumcari v. Tarpley, 31 N.M. 667, 250 P. 18, 20. But under a statute providing for relief against an irregularity in obtaining a judgment, the term has no fixed legal meaning, and in every instance the question is one of fact, dependent upon the circumstances of each case. Nation v. Savely, 127 Okl. 117, 260 P. 32, 34.

Irregularity in the proceedings of the court, as used in a California statute pertaining to new trials, relates to matters occurring during the trial, and not after it. Diamond v. Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco, 189 Cal. 732, 210 P. 36, 37.

In Canon law. Any impediment which prevents a man from taking holy orders.

General

Legal Irregularity. An irregularity occurring in the course of some legal proceeding. A defect or informality which, in the technical view of the law, is to be accounted an irregularity.

IRRELEVANCY. The absence of the quality of relevancy, as in evidence or pleadings. The quality or state of being inapplicable or impertinent to a fact or argument.

Irrelevancy, in an answer, consists in statements which are not material to the decision of the case; such as do not form or tender any material issue. People v. McCumber, 18 N.Y. 321, 72 Am.Dec. 515; Walker v. Hewitt, 11 How.Prac., N.Y., 398; Carpenter v. Bell, 1 Rob., N.Y., 715; Smith v. Smith, 50 S.C. 54, 27 S.E. 545. See, also, Irrelevant.
IRELEVANT. Not relevant; not relating or applicable to the matter in issue; not supporting the issue. Crump v. Lanham, 67 Okl. 33, 168 P. 43, 44. Evidence is irrelevant where it has no tendency to prove or disprove any issue involved. Malone v. State, 16 Ala.App. 185, 76 So. 469, 470.

An allegation is irrelevant, where the issue made by its denial has no effect upon the cause of action or no connection with the allegation. Germofert Mfg. Co. v. Castles, 97 S.C. 389, 81 S.E. 665, 666. In this connection, "redundant" is almost a synonym for "irrelevant." Plank v. Hopkins, 35 S.D. 243, 151 N.W. 1017, 1019.

IRELEVANT ANSWER. See Answer.

IREMOVABILITY. The status of a pauper in England, who cannot be legally removed from the parish or union in which he is receiving relief, notwithstanding that he has not acquired a settlement there. 3 Steph.Comm. 60. Thus a pauper who has resided in a parish during the whole of the preceding year is irremovable, in view of Stat. 28 and 29 Vict. c. 79, § 8.

IREPARABLE DAMAGES. See Damages.

IREPARABLE INJURY. See Injury.

IREPLEVIALE. That cannot be repleved or delivered on sureties. Spelled, also, "irrepleviable." Co. Litt. 145; 13 Edw. I. c. 2.

IRRISTIBL FORCE. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as the inroads of a hostile army. Story, Bailm. § 25; Noel Bros. v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 16 La.App. 622, 133 So. 830, 832.

IRRISTIBLE IMPULSE. Used chiefly in criminal law, this term means an impulse to commit an unlawful or criminal act which cannot be resisted or overcome by the patient because insanity or mental disease has destroyed the freedom of his will and his power of self-control and of choice as to his actions. McCartney v. Corn., 114 Ky. 620, 71 S.W. 658; State v. Knight, 95 Me. 467, 50 A. 276, 55 L.R.A. 373; Leache v. State, 22 Tex.App. 279, 3 S.W. 539, 58 Am.Rep. 638; State v. Peel, 23 Mont. 358, 59 P. 169, 75 Am.St.Rep. 529. And see Insanity.

IRRIVOCABLE LETTER. A confirmed irrevocable letter of credit, irrevocable letter, or a confirmed credit is a contract to pay on compliance with its terms, and needs no formal acknowledg-
IS QUI COGNOSCIT. Lat. The cognizer in a fine. Is cui cognoscitur, the cognizee.

ISM In Scotch law. The period of the termination of a tack or lease. 1 Bligh, 522.

An island that arises in the bed of a stream usually first presents itself as a sand bar, Cox v. Arnold, 129 Mo. 337, 31 S.W. 592, 50 Am.St.Rep. 450; Glassell v. Hansen, 135 Cal. 569, 67 P. 964; Holman v. Hodler, 112 Iowa 714, 84 N.W. 950, 58 L.R.A. 673, 84 Am.St.Rep. 367: a bar, before it will support vegetation of any kind, may become valuable for fishing, hunting, as a shooting park, for the harvest of ice, for pumping sand, etc. If further deposits of alluvium upon it would make it more valuable, the law of accretion should still apply, Fowler v. Wood, 73 Kan. 511, 85 P. 763, 6 L.R.A., N.S., 162, 117 Am.St.Rep. 534. Land in a navigable stream which is surrounded by water only in times of high water is not an island within the rule that the state takes title to newly formed islands in navigable streams. Payne v. Hall, 192 Iowa, 780, 185 N.W. 912, 915.

ISOLATED TRANSACTION. This term, in connection with the rule that single or isolated transactions do not violate a statute prohibiting foreign corporations from doing business within a state without first filing a copy of their charter, may be inapplicable to a single transaction consummated in furtherance of a corporation's business, where it is shown that the corporation in question is a foreign corporation, with its principal office in a town in a sister state near the state line, and that it has solicited business generally in tributary territory within the adjoining state. Dahl Implement & Lumber Co. v. Campbell, 45 N.D. 239, 178 N.W. 197, 198.

ISSINT. A law French term, meaning "thus," "so," giving its name to part of a plea in debt. A term formerly used to introduce a statement that special matter already pleaded amounts to a denial.

An example of this form of plea, which is sometimes called the special general issue, occurs in Bauer v. Roth, 4 Rawle, Pa., 83.

ISSUABLE. In practice. Leading or tending to, or producing, an issue; relating to an issue or issues. See Colquitt v. Mercer, 44 Ga. 433.

ISSUABLE DEFENSE. A technical expression meaning a plea to the merits, properly setting forth a legal defense, as distinguished from a plea in abatement, or any plea going only to delay the case. Adamson v. Reagin, 143 Ga. 306, 84 S. E. 965.

ISSUABLE PLEA. A plea to the merits; a traversable plea. A plea such that the adverse party can join issue upon it and go to trial. It is true a plea in abatement is a plea, and, if it be properly pleaded, issues may be found on it. In the ordinary meaning of the word "plea," and of the word "issuable," such pleas may be called "issuable pleas," but, when these two words are used together, "issuable plea," or "issuable defense," they have a technical meaning, to-wit, pleas to the merits. Colquitt v. Mercer, 44 Ga. 434.

ISSUABLE TERMS. In the former practice of the English courts, Hilary term and Trinity term were called "issuable terms," because the issues to be tried at the assizes were made up at those terms. 3 Bl.Comm. 353. But the distinction is superseded by the provisions of the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875.

ISSUE, v. To send forth; to emit; to promulgate; as, an officer issues orders, process issues from a court. To put into circulation; as, the treasury issues notes. To send out, to send out officially; to deliver, for use, or authoritatively; to go forth as authoritative or binding. Stokes v. Paschall, Tex.Civ.App., 243 S.W. 611, 614; Blythe v. Doheny, C.C.A.Cal., 73 F.2d 799, 803.

A writ is "issued" when it is delivered to an officer, with the intent to have it served, Wilkins v. Worthen, 62 Ark. 401, 36 S.W. 21; Michigan Ins. Bk. v. Eldred, 130 U.S. 693, 9 S.Ct. 690, 32 L.Ed. 1080; Webster v. Sharpe, 116 N.C. 466, 21 S.E. 912; Ferguson v. Estes & Alexander, Tex.Civ.App., 214 S.W. 465, 466.

In financial parlance the term “Issue” seems to have two phases of meaning. “Date of issue” when applied to notes, bonds, etc., of a series, usually means the arbitrary date fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run, without reference to the precise time when convenience or the state of the market may permit of their sale or delivery. When the bonds are delivered to the purchaser, they will be “Issued” to him, which is the other meaning of the term. Turner v. Roseberry Irr. Dist., 33 Idaho, 746, 198 P. 465, 467. See, also, Anderson v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 164 Cal. 712, 130 P. 726, 727, Ann.Cas.1914B, 903.

ISSUE, n. The act of issuing, sending forth, emitting or promulgating; the giving a thing its first inception; as the issue of an order or a writ.

Pleading

A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other. Whitney v. Borough of Jersey Shore, 266 Pa. 537, 109 A. 767, 769; Village of Oak Park v. Eldred, 265 Ill. 605, 107 N.E. 145, 146. A single certain and material point arising out of the allegations of the parties, and it should generally be made up of an affirmative and a negative. Cowen Co. v. Houch Mfg. Co.,

The disputed point or question to which the parties in an action have narrowed their several allegations, and upon which they are desirous of obtaining the decision of the proper tribunal. When the plaintiff and defendant have arrived at some specific point or matter affirmed on the one side, and denied on the other, they are said to be at issue. Knaggs v. Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co., C.C.A. Ohio, 287 F. 314, 316; First Nat. Bank v. District Court of Har- din County, 193 Iowa, 561, 187 N.W. 457, 458. (But as used in a rule of court, a case is not "at issue" where nothing but a demurrer has been filed, presenting no issue except a question of law as to the sufficiency of the complaint. Arnett v. Hardwick, 27 Ariz. 179, 231 F. 922, 923.) The question so set apart is called the "issue," and is designated, according to its nature, as an "issue in fact" or an "issue in law." Brown v. Martin v. City of Columbus, 101 Ohio St. 1, 127 N.E. 411, 413.

Issues arise upon the pleadings, when a fact or conclusion of law is maintained by the one party and controverted by the other. They are of two kinds: (1) of law; and (2) of fact. Rev.Code Iowa 1880, § 2737 (Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 176); Code Civ.Proc. Cal. § 588; Comp.St.Vyo.1910, § 4451 (Rev.St.1931, § 89-1202); Berglar v. University City, Mo.App., 190 S.W. 620, 622; General Electric Co. v. Sapulpa & I. Ry. Co., 49 Okl. 376, 153 P. 189, 193.

The entry of the pleadings. 1 Chitty, P1. 630.

Issues are classified and distinguished as follows:

General and special. The former is a plea which traverses and denies, briefly and in general and summary terms, the whole declaration, indictment, or complaint, without tendering new or special matter. Steph. Pl. 155; Tilden v. E. A. Stevenson & Co., 3 W.W.Harr. 151, 132 A. 739, 740; McCallis- ter v. State, 94 Md. 290, 50 A. 1046; Standard Loan & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 97 Tenn. 1, 40 S.W. 136. Examples of the general issue are "not guil- ty," "non assumpsit," "nil debet," "non est fac- tum." The latter is formed when the defendant chooses one single material point, which he traverses, and restricts his whole case upon its determination.

Identical. Issues determined by same ques- tion of fact and of law. Allbee v. Elms, 93 N.H. 202, 37 A.2d 790, 791. Material and immaterial. They are so described according as they do or do not bring up some ma- terial point or question which, when determined by the verdict, will dispose of the whole merits of the case, and leave no uncertainty as to the judg- ment. Pearson v. Pearson, 104 Misc. 675, 173 N.Y. S. 563, 565.

Formal and informal. The former species of issue is one framed in strict accordance with the technical rules of pleading. The latter arises when the material allegations of the declaration are traversed, but in an artificial or untechnical mode. In the latter case, the defect is cured by verdict, by the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 30.

A collateral issue is an issue taken upon matter aside from the intrinsic merits of the action, as upon a plea in abatement; or aside from the di- rect and regular order of the pleadings, as on a demurrer. 2 Archb. Pr. K. B. 1, 6, bk. 2, pts. 1, 2; Strickland v. Maddox, 4 Ga. 394. The term "col- lateral" is also applied in England to an issue raised upon a plea of diversity of person, pleaded by a criminal who has been tried and convicted, in bar of execution, viz., that he is not the same person who was attained, and the like. 4 Bl. Comm. 396. Matters collateral to the main issue are those which do not constitute an essential element of the offense embraced within the charge.

State v. English, 308 Mo. 695, 274 S.W. 470, 474.

Real or feigned. A real or actual issue is one formed in a regular manner in a regular suit for the purpose of determining an actual controversy. A feigned issue is one made up by direction of the court, upon a supposed case, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a jury upon some question of fact collaterally involved in the cause. Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, to ascertain the truth of a disputed fact. They are also used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. 3 Bla.Comm. 452. The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the par- ties, and the circumstances only are fictitious.

Common issue is the name given to the issue raised by the plea of non est factum to an action for breach of covenant.

Ultimate issue signifies either such an issue as within itself is sufficient and final for the disposition of the entire case or one which in connection with other issues will serve such end. First State Bank of Seminole v. Dillard, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S. W. 2d 407, 410.

This is so called because it denies the deed only, and not the breach, and does not put the whole declaration in issue, and because there is no general issue to this form of action. 1 Chitty, P1. 482; Gould, Pl. c. 6, pt. 1, 17.

Realty Law.

In this sense, the word includes not only a child or chil- dren, but all other descendants in whatever degree; and it is so construed generally in deeds. But, when used in wills, it is, of course, subject to the rule of construction that the intention of the testator, as ascertained from the will, is to have effect, rather than the technical meaning of the language used by him; and hence issue may, in such a connection, be restricted to children, or to descendants liv- ing at the death of the testator, where such an intention clearly appears. Abbott; Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves.Jun. 523, 529; Ralph v. Carrick, 11 Ch.D. 873, 883; Barmore v. Dar- ragh, Tex.Civ.App., 231 S.W. 472, 479; Newcomb v. New- comb, 197 Ky. 801, 248 S.W. 198, 200; Horner v Haase, 177.
ISSUE

The word "issue" in a will is generally used in a sense of limitation, in re Packer's Estate, 246 Pa. 116, 92 A. 70, 74; Baxter v. Early, 131 S.C. 274, 127 S.E. 607; Bonnycastle v. Lilly, 153 Ky. 834, 156 S.W. 874, L.R.A. 1916B, 1076; and when so used, is sometimes said to be equivalent to "heirs of the body"; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Bridgham, 25 R.I. 161, 106 A. 149, 151, 5 A.L.R. 185; Parshby v. Hodges, 178 N.C. 133, 100 S.E. 256; Middletown Trust Co. v. Gaffey, 96 Conn. 61, 112 A. 689, 690. But it has been pointed out in other cases that this word is not as strong a word of limitation as the words "heirs of the body," Adams v. Verner, 102 S.C. 7, 86 S.E. 211, 214; City Nat. Bank v. Slocum, C.C.A.Ohio, 272 F. 11, 18; and yields readily to a context indicating its use as a word of purchase. Stout v. Good, 245 Pa. 385, 91 A. 613, 615; Eversmeyer v. McCollum, 171 Ark. 117, 283 S.W. 379, 382; Ford v. McBryer, 171 N.C. 420, 88 S.E. 736, 737; Yarrington v. Freeman, 201 Ky. 135, 255 S.W. 1034.

Business Law

A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted at one and the same time.

ISSUE IN FACT. In pleading. An issue taken upon or consisting of matter of fact, the fact only, and not the law, being disputed, and which is to be tried by a jury. 3 Bl.Comm. 314, 315; Co. Litt. 126a; 3 Steph.Comm. 572. An issue which arises upon a denial in the answer of a material allegation in the answer. Rev. Codes, Mont. § 589. The term "issue" may be so used as to include only legitimate issue. Page v. Roddie, 92 Okt. 236, 218 P. 1002, 1005; King v. Thissell, 222 Mass. 140, 109 N.E. 880; Hardesty v. Mitchell, 302 369, 134 N.E. 745, 746, 24 A.L.R. 565; Love v. Love, 179 N.C. 115, 101 S.E. 562, 563; contra: Eaton v. Eaton, 88 Conn. 286, 91 A. 196, 198.

The "issues of fact" which, if presented by the pleadings and supported by evidence, must be submitted to the jury, when so used, is sometimes said to be equivalent to "heirs of the body"; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Bridgham, 25 R.I. 161, 106 A. 149, 151, 5 A.L.R. 185; Parshby v. Hodges, 178 N.C. 133, 100 S.E. 256; Middletown Trust Co. v. Gaffey, 96 Conn. 61, 112 A. 689, 690. But it has been pointed out in other cases that this word is not as strong a word of limitation as the words "heirs of the body," Adams v. Verner, 102 S.C. 7, 86 S.E. 211, 214; City Nat. Bank v. Slocum, C.C.A.Ohio, 272 F. 11, 18; and yields readily to a context indicating its use as a word of purchase. Stout v. Good, 245 Pa. 385, 91 A. 613, 615; Eversmeyer v. McCollum, 171 Ark. 117, 283 S.W. 379, 382; Ford v. McBryer, 171 N.C. 420, 88 S.E. 736, 737; Yarrington v. Freeman, 201 Ky. 135, 255 S.W. 1034.

The "issues of fact" which, if presented by the pleadings and supported by evidence, must be submitted to the jury, where requested, are only the independent ultimate facts which go to make up plaintiff's cause of action and defendant's ground of defense. Texas City Transp. Co. v. Winters, Tex.Com.App., 222 S.W. 541, 542.

ISSUE IN LAW. In pleading. An issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joinder in demurrer on the other. 3 Bl.Comm. 314; 3 Steph.Comm. 572, 580; Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 445; Cod. of Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1664. The term "issue" may be so used as to include one of law raised by demurrer to the complaint, as well as one raised by answer. Fruth v. Bolt, 39 S.D. 371, 164 N.W. 270, 271.

ISSUE ROLL. In English practice. A roll upon which the issue in actions at law was formerly required to be entered, the roll being entitled of the term in which the issue was joined. 2 Tidd Pr. 733. It was not, however, the practice to enter the issue at full length, if triable by the country, until after the trial, but only to make an incipitur on the roll. Id. 734. It was abolished by the rules of Hilary Term, 1834. Moz. & W. Diet.

ISSUES. In English law. The goods and profits of the lands of a defendant against whom a writ of distringas or distress infinite has been issued, taken by virtue of such writ. 3 Bl.Comm. 280; 1 Chit. Crim. Law. 351.

ISSUES AND PROFITS, as applied to real estate, comprehend every available return therefrom, whether it arise above or below the surface. Minner v. Minner, 84 W.Va. 679, 100 S.E. 509, 510.

ISSUES ON SHERIFFS. Fines and amercements inflicted on sheriffs for neglects and defaults, levied out of the issues and profits of their lands. Toml.

ISTIMRARDAR. The holder of a perpetual lease. Moz. & W.

ITA EST. Lat. So it is; so it stands. In modern civil law, this phrase is a form of attestation added to exemplifications of a notary's register when the same are made by the successor in office of the notary who made the original entries.

ITA LEX SCRIPTA EST. Lat. So the law is written. Dig. 40, 9, 12; Allen v. Cook, 26 Barb., N.Y., 374, 380; Hemphill's Appeal, 18 Pa. 306; Monson v. Chester, 22 Pick., Mass., 389. The law must be obeyed notwithstanding the apparent rigor of its application. 3 Bl.Comm. 430. We must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. 1 Bl.Comm. 32.

ITA QUOD. Lat. In Old Practice. So that. Formal words in writs. ita quod habeas corpus, so that you have the body. 2 Mod. 180. The name of the stipulation in a submission to arbitration which begins with the words "so as ita quod the award be made of and upon the premises."

In Old Conveyancing. So that. An expression which, when used in a deed, formerly made an estate upon condition. Litt. § 329. Sheppard enumerates it among the three words that are most proper to make an estate conditional. Shep. Touch. 121, 122.

ITA SEMPER FIAT RELATIO UT VALEAT DISPOSITIO. 6 Coke, 76. Let the interpretation be always such that the disposition may prevail.

ITA TERUE TUO UT ALIENUM NON LIEADAS. Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbor, or prevent him from enjoying his. Frequently written, "Sic utere tuo," etc. (q. v.).

ITEM. Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. This word was formerly used to mark the beginning of a new paragraph or division after the first, whence is derived the common

One of the portions, equal or unequal, into which anything is divided, or regarded as divided; something less than a whole; a number, quantity, mass, or the like, regarded as going to make up, with others or another, a larger number, quantity, mass, etc., whether actually separate or not; a piece, fragment, fraction, member, or constituent. State ex rel. Wisconsin Telephone Co. v. Henry, 218 Wis. 302, 260 N.W. 486, 99 A.L.R. 1267. An article; a single detail of any kind. Board of Education of Prince George's County v. County Com'rs of Prince George's County, 131 Md. 658, 102 A. 1007, 1010. A separate entry in an account or a schedule, or a separate particular in an enumeration of a total. People v. Brady, 277 Ill. 124, 115 N.E. 204, 206.

The word is sometimes used as a verb. "The whole [costs] in this case that was thus itemed to counsel." Bunb. p. 164, case 233.

An "item" in an appropriation bill is an indivisible sum of money dedicated to a stated purpose. Commonwealth v. Dodson, 176 Va. 281, 11 S.E.2d 120, 124, 125, 127, 130, 131.

ITER. Lat.

In the Civil law. A way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country, (prcedium rusticum.) The right of way was of three kinds: (1) iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback, or in a litter; (2) actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; (3) via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Heinec. § 408. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e. g., via, 8 feet; actus, 4 feet, etc. Mackeld.

In old English law. A journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission. Du Cange; Bract. lib. 3, cc. 11, 12, 13.

In Maritime law. A way or route. The route or direction of a voyage; the route or way that is taken to make the voyage assured. Distinguished from the voyage itself.

ITER EST JUS EUNDI, AMBULANDI HOMINIS; NON ETIAM JUMENTUM AGENDI VEL VEHICULUM. A. way is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage. Co. Litt. 56a; Inst. 2, 3, pr.; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 318.

ITERATIO. Lat. Repetition. In the Roman law, a bonitary owner might liberate a slave, and the quiritory owner's repetition (iteratio) of the process effected a complete manumission. Brown.

ITINERA. Eyres, or circuits. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 52.

ITINERANT. Wandering; traveling; applied to justices who make circuits. Also applied in various statutory and municipal laws (in the sense of traveling from place to place) to certain classes of merchants, traders, and salesmen. Shiff v. State, 84 Ala. 454, 4 So. 419; Twining v. Elgin, 38 Ill.App. 357; Rev.Laws Mass. 1902, p. 595, c. 65, § 1 (Gen. Laws, c. 101, § 1); West v. Mt. Sterling, Ky., 65 S.W. 122.

ITINERANT PEDDLING. The going about of a merchant from place to place, meeting and dealing with his customers where he finds them. Good Humor Corporation v. City of New York, 264 App.Div. 620, 36 N.Y.S.2d 85, 91.

ITINERANT VENDOR. This term is variously defined in statutes; e. g., a person engaged in transient business either in one locality or in traveling from place to place selling goods, who, for the purpose of carrying on such business, sells goods at retail from a car. Rev. St. Me. c. 45, § 15 (Rev.St.1930, c. 46, § 25). See, also, Laws Mont. 1911, c. 110, § 1; St. Cal. 1903, p. 284, § 3.

ITS. This term does not necessarily import legal ownership, but may signify merely possession, or the temporary use of. Campbell v. Canadian Northern Ry. Co., 124 Minn. 245, 144 N.W. 772, IULE. In old English law. Christmas.

This letter is sometimes used for "I," as the initial letter of "Institutiones," in references to the Institutes of Justinian.

JAC. An abbreviation for "Jacobus," the Latin form of the name James; used principally in citing statutes enacted in the reigns of the English kings of that name; e. g., "St. 1 Jac. II." Used also in citing the second part of Croke's reports; thus, "Cro. Jac." denotes "Croke's reports of cases in the time of James I."

JACENS. Lat. Lying in abeyance, as in the phrase "hereditas jacens," which is an inheritance or estate lying vacant or in abeyance prior to the ascertainment of the heir or his assumption of the succession.

JACENS ILEREDITAS. See Hereditas Jacens.

JACET IN ORE. Lat. In old English law. It lies in the mouth. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 49.

JACK. A kind of defensive coat-armor worn by horsemen in war; not made of solid iron, but of many plates fastened together. Some tenants were bound by their tenure to find it upon invasion. Cowell.

JACOBUS. A gold coin an inch and three-eighths in diameter, in value about twenty-five shillings, so called from James I., in whose reign it was first coined. It was also called broad, laurel, and broad-piece. Its value is sometimes put at twenty-four shillings, but Macaulay speaks of a salary of eight thousand Jacobuses as equivalent to ten thousand pounds sterling. Hist. Eng. ch. xv.

JACTITATION. Boasting of something which is challenged by another. Moz. & W. A false boasting; a false claim; assertions repeated to the prejudice of another's right.

The species of defamation or disparagement of another's title to real estate known at common law as "slander of title" comes under the head of jactitation, and in some jurisdictions (as in Louisiana) a remedy for this injury is provided under the name of an "action of jactitation."

The action in jactitation of title is governed by the rules prescribed by the Code of Practice, under the title, "Possessory Actions," and differs materially from the common-law action of slander of title. Bill v. Saunders, 139 La. 1037, 72 So. 727, 729.

Jactitation of a right to a church sitting appears to be the boasting by a man that he has a right or title to a pew or sitting in a church to which he has legally no title.

Jactitation of marriage. In English ecclesiastical law. The boasting or giving out by a party that he or she is married to some other, whereby a common reputation of their matrimony may ensue. To defeat that result, the person may be put to a proof of the actual marriage, failing which proof, he or she is put to silence about it. 3 Bl. Comm. 93. The Scotch suit of a declarator of putting to silence is equivalent to jactitation of marriage.

Jactitation of tithes is the boasting by a man that he is entitled to certain tithes, to which he has legally no title. Rog. Ecc. L. 482.

JACTIVUS. Lost by default; tossed away. Cowell.

JACTURA. In the civil law. A throwing of goods overboard in a storm; jettison. Loss from such a cause. Calvin.

JACTUS. A throwing goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. Dig. 14, 2, "de lege Rhodia de Jactu;" Barnard v. Adams, 10 How. 303, 13 L.Ed. 417.

JACTUS LAPILLI. The throwing down of a stone. One of the modes, under the civil law, of interrupting prescription. Where one person was building on another's ground, and in this way acquiring a right by usucapio, the true owner challenged the intrusion and interrupted the prescriptive right by throwing down one of the stones of the building before witnesses called for the purpose. Tray. Lat. Max.

JAIL. A gaol; a prison; a building designated by law, or regularly used, for the confinement of persons held in lawful custody. State v. Bryan, 89 N.C. 534; Adle v. Herald Co., Sup., 36 N.Y.S.2d 905, 907. See Gaol.

A "jail" is therefore distinguishable both in Taw and in common understanding from a temporary place of detention, like a police station or lockup. People ex rel. Murphy v. Holcomb, 181 N.Y.S. 780, 783, 111 Misc. 460. While the primary function of a "jail" is a place of detention for persons committed therefor, under sentence of a court, it is also the proper and usual place where persons under arrest or awaiting trial are kept until they appear in court and the charge is disposed of. Grab v. Lucas, 156 Wis. 504, 146 N.W. 504, 505.

JAIL DELIVERY. See Gaol.

JAIL LIBERTIES. See Gaol.

JAKE. A low colloquialism applied to liquor reputed to be composed of a mixture of Jamaica ginger and some other beverage or beverages. Skelton v. State, 31 Okl.Cr. 343, 239 P. 189, 190.

JAMB. A side post or side of a doorway, window, opening, or fire place; a side or vertical piece of any opening or aperture in a wall which helps to bear an overhead member. Superior Skylight Co. v. Zerbe Const. Co., D.C.N.Y., 5 F.2d 982, 986.

JAMBEAUX. In old English and feudal law. Leg-armor. Blount.

JAMMA, JUMMA. In Hindu law. Total amount; collection; assembly. The total of a territorial assignment.

JAMMABUNDY, JUMMABUNDY. In Hindu law. A written schedule of the whole of an assessment.

JAMMUNDLING. See Jamunlingi.

JAMNUM. Furze, or grass, or ground where furze grows; as distinguished from "arable," "pasture," or the like. Co. Litt. 5a.

JAMUNLINGI, JAMUNDLINGI. Freemen who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Spelman. Also a species of serfs among the Germans. Du Cange. The same as commendati.

In modern law. A person employed to take charge of rooms or buildings, to see that they are kept clean and in order, to lock and unlock them, and generally to care for them. Fagan v. New York, 84 N.Y. 352; Kramer v. Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California, 31 Cal.App. 673, 161 P. 278.

JANUS-FACED. An argument looking in both directions at the same time, e. g., urging jurors not to be swayed by sympathy, but adding that any sympathy should be in favor of the arguing counsel's client. Davis v. Franson, 296 P.2d 600, 606, 141 Cal.App.2d 263.

JANCES. In old English law. Small money.

JASON CLAUSE. Clause in bills of lading which obligates cargo owners to contribute in general average in cases of danger, damage, or disaster resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in management of vessel, her machinery or appurtenances, provided that ship owner shall have exercised due diligence to make vessel in all respects seaworthy, and to have her properly manned, equipped, and supplied. Merklen v. Johnson & Higgins, D.C.N.Y., 3 F.Supp. 897, 898.

JAVELIN-MEN. Yeomen retained by the sheriff to escort the judge of assize.

JAVELOUR. In Scotch law. Jailer or gaoler. 1 Pitc, Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 33.

Also, crossing a street between intersections, or at a place other than a crosswalk.

JEDBURGH JUSTICE. Summary justice inflicted upon a marauder or felon without a regular trial, equivalent to “lynch law.” So called from a Scotch town, near the English border, where raiders and cattle lifters were often summarily hung. Also written "Jeddart" or "Jedwood" justice.

JEMAN. In old records. Yeoman. Cowell; Blount.

JENNY. With names of animals, often used to denote a female; also short for "jenny ass," "jenny wren," etc. Likewise short for "spinning jenny." Webster, Diet.; O’Rear v. Richardson, 17 Ala.App. 87, 81 So. 865, 866.

JEFAILE. L. Fr. I have failed; I am in error. An error or oversight in pleading.

Certain statutes are called “statutes of amendments and jeofailes” because, where a pleader perceives any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges the error, (jeofaile,) he is at liberty, by those statutes, to amend it. 111.Comm. -107: 1 Sound. p. 228, no. 1.

Jeofaile is when the parties to any suit in pleading have proceeded so far that they have joined issue which shall be tried or is tried by a jury or inquest, and this pleading or issue is so badly pleaded or joined that it will be error if they proceed. Then some of the said parties may, by their counsel, show it to the court, as well after verdict given and before judgment as before the jury is charged. And the counsel shall say: “This inquest ye ought not to take.” And if it be after verdict, then he may say: “To judgment you ought not to go.” Termer de la Ley.

JEOPARDY. Danger; hazard; peril.

The danger of conviction and punishment which the defendant in a criminal action incurs when a valid indictment has been found, and a petit jury has been impaneled and sworn to try him. Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 15 A. 466, 1 L.R.A. 451; Peavey v. State, 153 Ga. 119, 969
JEOPARDY

111 S.E. 420. The situation of a defendant when the jury is impaneled and sworn and the issues presented on a valid indictment or information in a court of competent jurisdiction. State v. Thompson, 58 Utah 291, 199 P. 161, 163, 38 A.L.R. 697. The condition of a person when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance. Allen v. State, 13 Okd.Cr. 533, 165 P. 745, 748, L.R.A.1917E, 1085; State v. Runyon, 100 W.Va. 647, 131 S.E. 466, 467; Commonwealth v. Grey, 249 Ky. 36, 60 S.W.2d 133.

Defendant is not in "jeopardy" until jury has been duly impaneled and charged with his deliverance, but conviction or acquittal by any competent tribunal, whether after jury trial or not, satisfies requirement of jeopardy. Pepin v. State ex rel. Chambers, 217 Wis. 568, 259 N.W. 410.

The terms "jeopardy of life and liberty for the same offense," "jeopardy of life or limb," "jeopardy for the same offense," "in jeopardy of punishment," and other similar provisions used in the various Constitutions, are to be construed as meaning substantially the same thing. Stout v. State, 130 P. 553, 556, 36 Okl. 744, 45 L.R.A.,N.S., 884, Ann.Cas.1916E, 858.

JERGUEUR. In English law. An officer of the custom-house who oversees the waiters. Techn. Dict.

JERK. A sharply arrested pull, thrust, push, motion, a sudden movement or lurch;—"lurch" being used, however, with specific reference to sidewise movements. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Farris, Tex.Civ.App., 166 S.W. 463; Trite v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 140 Kan. 671, 37 P.2d 996.

The ordinary jerks and jolts of a motorbus in starting or stopping are among the usual incidents of travel, and for injuries to passengers resulting from them the motor carrier is not liable. Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., § 2156.

JESSE. A large brass candlestick, usually hung in the middle of a church or choir. Cowell.

JITNEY. A self-propelled vehicle, other than a street car, traversing the public streets between certain definite points or termini, and, as a common carrier, conveying passengers at a five-cent or some small fare, between such termini and intermediate points, and so held out, advertised, or announced. City of Memphis v. State, 133 Tenn. 83, 179 S.W. 631, 634, L.R.A.1916B, 1151, Ann.Cas. 1917C, 1056. A motor vehicle carrying passengers for fare. Ft. Lee, etc., Transp. Co. v. JOB. The whole of a thing which is to be done. "To build by plot, or to work by the job, is to undertake a building for a certain stipulated price." Civ.Code La. art. 2727 (Civ.Code, art. 2756).

JOBBER. One who buys and sells goods for others; one who buys or sells on the stock exchange; a dealer in stocks, shares, or securities. One who buys and sells articles in bulk and resells them to dealers. A merchant buying and selling in job lots. Wasserstrom v. Cohen, Frank & Co., 165
JOBMASTER. In English law, one who carries on the business of letting out carriages and horses or other vehicles with drivers for hire; a livery stable keeper. Hyman v. Nye, 6 Queen's Bench, 685.

JOCALIA. In old English law. Jewels. This term was formerly more properly applied to those ornaments which women, although married, call their own. When these jocalia are not suitable to her degree, they are assets for the payment of debts. 1 Rolle, Abr. 911.

JOCELET. A little manor or farm. Cowell.

JOCUS PARTITUS. In old English practice. A divided game, risk, or hazard. An arrangement which the parties to a suit were anciently sometimes allowed to make by mutual agreement upon a certain hazard, as that one should lose if the case turned out in a certain way, and, if it did not, that the other should gain. Bract. fols. 211b, 379b, 432, 434, 200b.

JOHN DOE. A fictitious name frequently used to indicate a person for the purpose of argument or illustration, or in the course of enforcing a fiction in the law. The name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment. He was sometimes called "Goodtitle." So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.

The name "John Doe" is, and for some centuries has been, used in legal proceedings as a fictitious name to designate a party until his real name can be ascertained. State v. Rossignol, 22 Wash.2d 19, 153 P.2d 882, 885.

JOIN. To unite; to come together; to combine or unite in time, effort, action; to enter into an alliance. Lowery v. Westheimer, 58 Okl. 560, 160 P. 496, 500.

JOINDER. Joining or coupling together; uniting two or more constituents or elements in one; uniting with another person in some legal step or proceeding; union; concurrence.

Joinder in demurrer. When a defendant in an action tenders an issue of law, (called a "demurrer," ) the plaintiff, if he means to maintain his action, must accept it, and this acceptance of the defendant’s tender, signified by the plaintiff in a set form of words, is called a "joinder in demurrer." Brown; Co. Litt. 71 b; Thompson v. Goude-lock, 10 Rich., S.C., 49.

Joinder in issue. In pleading. A formula by which one of the parties to a suit joins in or accepts an issue in fact tendered by the opposite party. Steph. Pl. 57, 236. More commonly termed a "similiter." (q. v.)

Joinder in pleading. Accepting the issue, and mode of trial tendered, either by demurrer, error, or issue, in fact, by the opposite party.

Joinder of actions. This expression signifies the uniting of two or more demands or rights of action in one action; the statement of more than one cause of action in a declaration. Sickler v. City of Broken Bow, 143 Neb. 542, 10 N.W.2d 462, 464.

Joinder of error. In proceedings on a writ of error in criminal cases, the joinder of error is a written denial of the errors alleged in the assignment of errors. It answers to a joinder of issue in an action.

Joinder of issue. The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it.

Joinder of offenses. The uniting of several distinct charges of crime in the same indictment or prosecution.

Joinder of parties. The uniting of two or more persons as co-plaintiffs or as co-defendants in one suit.

Misjoinder. The improper joining together of parties to a suit, as plaintiffs or defendants, or of different causes of action. Burstall v. Beyfus, 53 L.J.Ch. 567; Phenix Iron Foundry v. Lockwood, 21 R.I. 556, 45 A. 546.

Misjoinder of actions is the joining several demands which the law does not permit to be joined, to enforce by one proceeding several distinct, substantive rights of recovery. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 98; Archb. Civ. Pl. 61; Dane, Abr. In equity, it is the joinder of different and distinct claims against one defendant; Adams, Eq. 309; 7 Sim. 241; Newland v. Rogers, 3 Barb. Ch., N.Y., 432.

Misjoinder of parties is the joining, as plaintiffs or defendants, parties who have not a joint interest. Billy v. McGill, 113 Okl. 153, 240 P. 119, 121; Gagle v. Besser, 162 Iowa 227, 144 N.W. 3, 4.

Misjoinder in a criminal prosecution is the charging in separate counts of separate and distinct offenses arising out of wholly different transactions having no connection or relation with each other. Optner v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., r3 F.2d 11, 13.

Nonjoinder. The omission to join some person as party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant, who ought to have been so joined, according to the rules of pleading and practice. Bardock Iron & Steel Co. v. Tenenbaum, 136 Va. 163, 118 S.E. 502, 505.

JOINT. United; combined; undivided; done by or against two or more unitedly; shared by or between two or more; coupled together in interest or liability.

The term is used to express a common property interest enjoyed or a common liability incurred by two or more persons. Thus, it is one in which the obligors (being two or more in number) bind themselves jointly but not severally, and who must therefore be prosecuted in a joint action against them all, distinguished from "joint and several" obligation.

A place of meeting or resort for persons engaged in evil and secret practices of any kind, as a tramps' joint, an "opium joint," or, generally speaking, a rendezvous for persons of evil habits and practices. State v. Shoaf, 179 N.C. 744, 102 S.E. 705, 706, 9 A.L.R. 426.

In masonry, the permanent meeting surface of two bodies, as stones or bricks, held together by cement or otherwise, and, in paving blocks, the space between the side faces of the blocks brought together or nearly in touch. JOINT ACCOUNT. An account in two or more names. Harbour v. Harbour, 207 Ark. 551, 181 S.W.2d 805, 807.

In order to bank that "my checking account be made joint" with another "for him to check on only in case of my death," means that other person should take as survivor as joint tenant. First Nat. Bank v. Mulich, 83 Colo. 518, 266 P. 1110, 1111.

JOINT ACTION. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants.

JOINT AND SEVERAL. A liability is said to be joint and several when the creditor may sue one or more of the parties to such liability separately, or all of them together at his option. Dicey, Parties 230.

A joint and several bond or note is one in which the obligors or-makers bind themselves both jointly and individually to the obligee or payee, so that all may be sued together for its enforcement, or the creditor may select one or more as the object of his suit. See Mitchell v. Darricott, 3 Brev., S.C., 145; Rice v. Gove, 22 Pick., Mass., 158, 33 Am.Dec. 724.

JOINT AUTHORSHIP. As to literary property, where there exists a common design to the execution of which several persons contribute. Mere alterations, additions or improvements, whether with or without the sanction of the author, will not entitle the person making them to claim to be a joint author of the work. 18 C.J.S., Copyright and Literary Property, § 11, p. 145.

JOINT CAUSE OF ACTION. This term, as used in Equity Rule 26 (see Rules of Civil Procedure, Rules 18, 20, 82, 28 U.S.C.A.), does not mean a technical legal privity, such as a joint contract; but the rule will be satisfied where there is a single question of law and fact common to all the complainants, as where in a suit to quiet title they claim separate parcels of land under a common source of title. Commodores Point Terminal Co. v. Hudsall, D.C.Fla., 283 F. 150, 171.

JOINT DEBTORS' ACTS. Statutes enacted in many of the states, which provide that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants, and that, "in an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper." The name is also given to statutes providing that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but jurisdiction is not obtained over the others, the plaintiff may still proceed to trial against those who are before the court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all of the defendants whom he shows to be jointly liable. 1 Black, Judgm. §§ 208, 235. And see Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 168, 23 L.Ed. 271.

JOINT ENTERPRISE. Also called "common enterprise." The joint prosecution of common purpose under such circumstances that each has authority express or implied to act for all in respect to the control, means or agencies employed to execute such common purpose. Hines v. Welch, Tex.Civ.App., 229 S.W. 681, 683; Greenwell's Adm'r v. Burba, 298 Ky. 255, 182 S.W.2d 436, 441; Illingworth v. Madden, 135 Me. 159, 192 A. 273, 276, 110 A.L.R. 1090. An enterprise participated in by associates acting together. Howard v. Zimmerman, 120 Kan. 77, 242 P. 131, 132. There must be a community of interests in the objects or purposes of the undertaking, and an equal right to direct and govern the movements and conduct of each other with respect thereto; each must have some voice and right to be heard in its control or management. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bell, 58 Okl. 84, 159 P. 336, 337, L.R.A. 1917A, 543; Trumpfeller v. Crandall, 130 Me. 279, 155 A. 646, 650; Murphy v. Keating, 204 Minn. 269, 283 N.W. 389, 392, 393; Bloom v. Leech, 120 Ohio St. 239, 166 N.E. 137, 138.

JOINT ESTATE. "Joint estate" involves unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession, and joint tenants must have the same interest accruing under the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held under the same undivided possession. Deslauriers v. Senesac, 331 Ill. 437, 163 N.E. 327, 329, 62 A.L.R. 511.

At common law, estates in which there were a plurality of tenants were described as "joint-estates" which designation includes estates in coparcenary, tenancies in common and joint tenancies, within which class are included tenancies by the entirety but the terms is not synonymous with “joint tenancies”. Mosser v. Dolsay, 132 N.J.Eq. 121, 27 A.2d 155, 157.

JOINT EXECUTORS. Co-executors; two or more who are joined in the execution of a will. See, also, Coexecutor.

JOINT FEASORS IN PARI DELICTO. Phrase means as between persons who by concert of action intentionally commit the wrong complained of; there is no right of contribution. Commercial Cas. Ins. Co. v. Leonard, 210 Ark. 575, 196 S.W.2d 919, 920.

JOINT INDUSTRY OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. This phrase, as applied in Oklahoma statutes to property passing by descent, means the industry of a husband and wife each, in his or her recognized sphere of marital activity, and not that both must pursue jointly the same business or calling. In re Stone’s Estate, 86 Okl. 33, 206 P. 246, 247. See, also, Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 121 Okl. 145, 247 P. 684, 687.

JOINT INTEREST. This term within federal rule requiring persons having a joint interest to be made parties, refers to parties designated as necessary or indispensable under former practice, and means an interest which must be directly affected by adjudication in the case. Platte County v. New Amsterdam Cas. Co., D.C.Neb., 6 F.R.D. 475, 482.

JOINT INVENTIONS. These are made when two or more persons jointly work or collaborate in devising and putting into practical form the subject-matter of patent. Altona Publix Theatres v. American Tri-Ergon Corporation, C.C.A.Pa., 72 F.2d 53, 56.

JOINT LIABILITY. One wherein joint obligor has right to insist that co-obligor be joined as a codefendant with him, that is, that they be sued jointly. Schram v. Perkins, D.C.Mich., 38 F.Supp. 404, 407.

JOINT LIVES. This expression is used to designate the duration of an estate or right which is granted to two or more persons to be enjoyed so long as they both (or all) shall live. As soon as one dies, the interest determines. See Highley v. Allen, 3 Mo.App. 524.

JOINT NEGLIGENCE. In case of “joint negligence” of several people, proximately causing accident, they act together in concert and either do something together which they should not do or fail to do something which they are together obligated to do under circumstances. Oul Homestead Ass’n, 301 Ill.App. 326, 22 N.E.2d 785, 786; Creighton v. Continental Roll & Steel Foundry Co., 155 Pa.Super. 165, 38 A.2d 337, 342. Participated in or used by two or more, held or shared in common. Wunderlich v. Bleyle, 96 N. J.Eq. 135, 125 A. 386, 388. These are the non-technical meanings of the word, which it frequently has in wills, as opposed to its technical significance creating a joint tenancy. Overheiser v. Lackey, 207 N.Y. 229, 100 N.E. 738, Ann.Cas.1914C, 229.

Persons are “jointly bound” in a bond or note when both or all must be sued in one action for its enforcement, not either one at the election of the creditor.

JOINTLY ACQUIRED PROPERTY. Property accumulated by joint industry of husband and wife during marriage. Tobin v. Tobin, 89 Okl. 12, 213 P. 884; Bruce v. Bruce, 141 Oki. 160, 285 P. 30, 36.

JOINTLY AND SEVERALLY. See Joint and Severally.

JOINTRESS, JOINTURESS. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survive him. Co.Litt. 46.

JOINTURE. A freehold estate in lands or tenements secured to the wife, and to take effect on the decease of the husband, and to continue during her life at the least, unless she be herself the cause of its determination. Vance v. Vance, 21 Me. 369.
A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements, to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband, for the life of the wife at least. Comstock v. Comstock, 146 Ark. 266, 225 S.W. 621, 622; Co. Litt. 36b; 2 Bl.Comm. 137; Gercke v. Gercke, 331 Ill. 413, 163 N.E. 323, 325. A competent livelihood for the wife in the husband's property to take effect after his death; it is an estate conveyed or devised to the wife in lieu of dower and it must be in satisfaction of it. Maynard's Adm'r v. Maynard, 285 Ky. 75, 146 S.W.2d 343, 344.

A jointure strictly signifies a joint estate limited to both husband and wife, and such was its original form; but, in its more usual form, it is a sole estate limited to the wife only, expectant upon a life-estate in the husband. 2 Bl. Comm. 137; 1 Steph.Comm. 255.

In England, before the time of Henry VIII, in order to protect a wife who was deprived of dower by conveyances to uses, it was the usual custom of the husband before marriage to take an estate from his fœcuses and limit it to himself and his intended wife for their lives in joint tenancy or jointure to protect the wife in case of his death, and St. 27 Henry VIII prohibited the widow from having both dower and jointure, which has been continued as part of law by Acts Va. 1785, c. 65 (1 Hening's St. at Large, p. 162), Rev. Code 1819, c. 107, and Code 1849, c. 110 (Code 1930, § 5117 et seq.). Jacobs v. Jacobs, 100 W. Va. 585, 131 S.E. 449, 453.

A jointure strictly signifies a joint estate limited to both husband and wife, and such was its original form; but, in its more usual form, it is a sole estate limited to the wife only, expectant upon a life-estate in the husband. 2 Bl. Comm. 137; 1 Steph.Comm. 255.

as distinguished from "precatory words." Cod. 6, 43, 2.

To assure or promise.
To decree or pass a law.

JUBILACION. In Spanish law. The privilege of a public officer to be retired, on account of infirmity or disability, retaining the rank and pay of his office (or part of the same) after twenty years of public service, and on reaching the age of fifty.

JUDZEUS, JUDEUS. Lat. A Jew.

JUDEX. Lat.

In Roman law. A private person appointed by the prtor, with the consent of the parties, to try and decide a cause of action commenced before him. He received from the prætor a written formula instructing him as to the legal principles according to which the action was to be judged. Calvin. Hence the proceedings before him were said to be in judicio, as those before the prtor were said to be in jure. A judge who conducted the trial from beginning to end; magistrates.

The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian's time: therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. Heiniec'h's, Elem. Jur.Civ. § 1327. The term judex is used with very different significations at different periods of Roman law.

In later and modern Civil law. A judge in the modern sense of the term.

JUDEX A QUO. In modern civil law. The judge from whom, as judex ad quem is the judge to whom, an appeal is made or taken. Halifax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 11, no. 34.

JUDEX AD QUEM. A judge to whom an appeal is taken.

JUDEX ANTE OCULOS IEQUITATEM SEMPER HABERE DEBET. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes. Jenk. Cent. p. 58.

JUDEX BONUS NIHIL EX ARBITRIO SUO FACIAT, NEO PROPOSITO DOMESTICIE VOLUNTATIS, SED JUXTA LEGES ET JURA PRONUNCIIET. A good judge should do nothing of his own arbitrary will, nor on the dictate of his personal inclination, but should decide according to law and justice. 7 Coke, 27a.

JUDEX DAMNATUR CUM NOCENS ABSOLVITUR. The judge is condemned when a guilty person escapes punishment.

JUDEX DATUS. In Roman law. A judge given, that is, assigned or appointed, by the praetor to try a cause.

JUDEX DEBET JUDICARE SECUNDUM ALLEGATA ET PROBATA. The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

JUDEX DELEGATUS. A delegated judge; a special judge.

JUDEX EST LEX LOQUENS. A judge is the law speaking, [the mouth of the law.] 7 Coke, 4a.

JUDEX FISCALIS. A fiscal judge; one having cognizance of matters relating to the fiscus, (q. v.).

JUDEX HABERE DEBET DUOS SALES,—SALEM SAPIENTII, NE SIT INSIPIDUS; ET SAL-EM CONSCIENTII, NE SIT DIABOLUS. A judge should have two salts,—the salt of wisdom, lest he be insipid [or foolish]; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish. 3 Inst. 147; Bart. Max. 189.

JUDEX NON POTEST ESSE TESTIS IN PRO-PRIA CAUSA. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause. 4 Inst. 279.

JUDEX NON POTEST INJURIAM SIBI DATAM PUNIRE. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself. See 12 Coke, 114.

JUDEX NON REDDIT PLUS QUAM QUOD PET-ENS IPSE REQUIрит. A judge does not give more than what the complaining party himself demands. 2 Inst. 286.

JUDEX ORDINARIUS. In the civil law. An ordinary judge; one who had the right of hearing and determining causes as a matter of his own proper jurisdiction, (ex pròpria jurisdictione,) and not by virtue of a delegated authority. Calvin. According to Blackstone judices ordinarii determined only questions of fact. 3 B1.Comm. 315.

JUDEX PEDANEUS. In Roman law. Inferior judge; deputy judge. The judge who was commissioned by the praetor to hear a cause was so-called, from the low seat which he anciently occupied at the foot of the praetor's tribunal.

JUDEX SELECTUS. A select or selected judex or judge. The judges in criminal suits selected by the prætor. Harper's Lat.Dict.; Cic.Verr. 2, 2, 13, § 32. These judices selecti were used in criminal causes, and between them and modern jurors many points of resemblance have been noticed; 3 Bla.Comm. 366.
JUDGE. An officer so named in his commission, who presides in some court; a public officer, appointed to preside and to administer the law in a court of justice; the chief member of a court, and charged with the control of proceedings and the decision of questions of law or discretion. Todd v. U. S., 15 S.Ct. 889, 158 U.S. 278, 39 L.Ed. 982; Foot v. Stiles, 57 N.Y. 405; State v. Le Blond, 108 Ohio St. 126, 140 N.E. 510, 512. A public officer who, by virtue of his office, is clothed with judicial authority. State ex rel. Mayer v. City of Cincinnati, 60 Ohio App. 119, 19 N.E.2d 902. Presiding officer of court. State v. Horn, 336 Mo. 524, 79 S.W.2d 1044, 1045. Any officer authorized to function as or for judge in doing specified acts. In re Roberts' Estate, 49 Cal.App.2d 71, 120 P.2d 933, 937.

The term is sometimes held to include all officers appointed to decide litigated questions while acting in that capacity, including justices of the peace, and even jurors who are judges of the facts; Corn. v. Dallas, 4 Dall. 229, 1 L.Ed. 812; In re Hess, 20 N.J.Misc. 12, 23 A.2d 298, 300, 301; Webber v. Boyer, 81 Or. 485, 159 P. 1166, Ann.Cas. 1918D, 988; see also Alcorn v. Felows, 102 Conn. 22, 127 A. 911, 915; Vollmer v. Board of Com'res of Dubois County, 53 Ind.App. 149, 101 N.E. 321, 322. In ordinary legal use, however, the term is limited to the sense of the first of the definitions here given, People v. Wilson, 15 Ill. 388; and it has been held that a surrogate is not a "judge" within a statute providing for additional compensation to a judge for his services in drawing jurors, People ex rel. Noble v. Mitchel, 170 App.Div. 379, 155 N.Y.S. 660, 662; nor are United States commissioners judges, although they at times act in a quasi judicial capacity and exercise the powers of a court, to so far as an act of Congress has conferred specific authority or imposed the performance of a special duty, United States v. Jones, D.C.N.Y., 230 F. 262, 264. As used in Chancery Act, means the judge of court of bankruptcy. London v. O'Dougherty, C.C.A.2, 102 P.2d 524, 525; Dickinson Industrial Site v. Cowan, Ill., 309 U.S. 382, 60 S.Ct. 595, 597, 84 L.Ed. 819. As used in statute authorizing introduction in criminal proceeding of a writing written for purpose of comparison under supervision of judge, means judge of a court of record, and does not include a judge. State v. Shade, 119 W.Va. 600, 195 S.E. 338.

"Judge" and "court", are often synonymous or interchangeable. In re Slattery, 310 Mich. 458, 17 N.W.2d 251, 259; Commonwealth v. Shawell, 325 Pa. 497, 191 A. 17, 19; but see holding that a judge is not a court, State ex rel. Mayer v. City of Cincinnati, 60 Ohio App. 119, 19 N.E.2d 902. "Judge" and "justice" (q. v.) are often used in substantially the same sense.

JUDGE ADVOCATE. An officer of a court-martial, whose duty is to swear in the other members of the court, to advise the court, and to act as the public prosecutor; but he is also so far the counsel for the prisoner as to be bound to protect him from the necessity of answering criminating questions, and to object to leading questions when propounded to other witnesses.

JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL. The adviser of the government in reference to courts-martial and other matters of military law. In England, he is generally a member of the house of commons and of the government for the time being.

JUDGE DE FACTO. One who holds and exercises the office of a judge under color of lawful authority and by a title valid on its face, though he has not full right to the office, as where he was appointed under an unconstitutional statute, or by an usurper of the appointing power, or has not taken the oath of office. State v. Miller, 111 Mo. 542, 20 S.W. 243; Walcott v. Wells, 21 Nev. 47, 24 P. 367, 9 L.R.A. 59, 37 Am.St.Rep. 478; Dredla v. Baache, 60 Neb. 655, 83 N.W. 916; Caldwell v. Barrett, 71 Ark. 310, 74 S.W. 748.

In Missouri, a special judge is a "judge de facto." State ex rel. McGaughey v. Grayston, 349 Mo. 700, 163 S.W.2d 335, 337.

JUDGE-MADE LAW. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them the legislature never intended. It is sometimes used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent. Cooley, Const.Lim., 4th ed. 70, note.

JUDGE ORDINARY. By St. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 9, the judge of the court of probate was made judge of the court for divorce and matrimonial causes created by that act, under the name of the "judge ordinary."

In Scotland, the title "judge ordinary" is applied to all those judges, whether supreme or inferior, who, by the nature of their office, have a fixed and determinate jurisdiction in all actions of the same general nature, as contrasted with the old Scotch privy council, or from those judges to whom some special matter is committed; such as commissioners for taking proofs, and messengers at arms. Bell.

JUDGE PRO TEMPORE. One appointed for the term or some part thereof, during which time he exercises all the functions of the regular judge. State ex rel. Hodshire v. Bingham, 218 Ind. 490, 33 N.E.2d 771, 134 A.L.R. 1126.

JUDGER. A Cheshire juryman. Jacob.

JUDGE’S CERTIFICATE. In English practice. A certificate, signed by the judge who presided at the trial of a cause, that the party applying is entitled to costs. In some cases, this is a necessary preliminary to the taxing of costs for such party. A statement of the opinion of the court, signed by the judges, upon a question of law submitted to them by the chancellor for their decision. See 3 Bl.Comm. 453.

JUDGE’S MINUTES, OR NOTES. Memoranda usually taken by a judge, while a trial is proceeding, of the testimony of witnesses, of documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence, and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.

JUDGE’S ORDER. An order made by a judge at chambers, or out of court.

The conclusion in a syllogism having for its major and minor premises issues raised by the pleadings and the proofs thereon. Barlow v. Scott, Mo.Sup., 85. S.W.2d 504, 517.

The formation of an opinion or notion concerning some thing by exercising the mind upon it.

S. W.2d 574, 575.
The term "judgment" is also used to denote the reason which the court gives for its decision; but this is more properly denominated an "opinion."
A decree is a judgment. Fuller v. Fuller, 49 R.I. 45, 139
A. 662, 663 ; Knettle v. Knettle, 190 Wash. 395, 68 P.2d

The words "decision" and "judgment" may be used interchangeably. Smith v. State, 196 Ga. 595, 27 S.E.2d 369, 373; Gutierrez v. Brady, 45 N.M. 209, 113 P.2d 585, 537;
but in a different context may not be synonymous. Mennel Milling Co. v. Slosser, 140 Ohio St. 445, 45 N.E.2d 306, 308. They are not the same thing under federal rules.
Winkelman v. General Motors Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 48
F.Supp. 490, 494. A written decision that finally determines rights of parties is a "judgment". Zbikowski v. Straz, 236 Wis. 161, 294 N.W. 541, 543. Decisions by Secretary of the Interior on matters relating to public lands are equivalent of a "judgment" of a court. Elliott v. Thompson, 63 Idaho 395, 120 P.2d 1014, 1022. Decisions of administrative boards are not "judgments". Dal Maso v. Board of Com'rs of Prince George's County, 182 Md. 200, 34 A.2d 464, 466. The decision of the court, when filed, amounts 234, 119 P.2d 806, 812.
To constitute act of bankruptcy, "judgment" suffered by debtor must be one that has become lien and, as such, a legal preference. Elkay Reflector Corporation v. Savory, Inc., C.C.A.N.Y., 57 F.2d 161, 162.

Judgments, considered with regard to the method of obtaining them, may be classified as follows.
Admission of facts by the parties, leaving only issues of law to be determined. Such judgments are: judgment upon a demurrer; judgment on a case stated; judgment on a general verdict subject to a special case; judgment on a special verdict.

977


Admissions or confessions of one only of the parties; judgments based on. Such judgments when for defendant upon the admissions of the plaintiff are: judgment of nol prosequi; judgment of retraxit; judgment on leave of court to discontinue; a stet processus. Judgments for the plaintiff upon facts admitted by the defendant are: judgment by cognovit actionem; cognovit or confession.

Trial of an issue of fact. Judgments upon facts found are: Judgment of nulli tiel record; judgment upon verdict; judgment non obstante veredicto; judgment of replieader.

Alternative judgment. One that by its terms might be satisfied by doing either of several acts at the election of the party or parties against whom the judgment is rendered and from whom performance is by the judgment required. Henderson v. Arkansas, 71 Okl. 253, 176 P. 751, 754. A judgment for one thing or another which does not specifically and in a definitive manner determine the rights of the parties. State v. Wilson, 216 N.C. 130, 4 S.E.2d 440, 442.

Assets in futuro, judgment of. One against an executor or heir, who holds at the time no property on which it can operate. See Quando Accident.

Case stated, judgment on. It sometimes happens that though the adverse parties are agreed as to the facts, and only differ as to the law arising out of them, still these facts do not so clearly appear on the pleadings as to enable them to obtain the opinion of the court by way of demurrer; for on demurrer the court can look at nothing whatever except the pleadings. In such circumstances the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 25, which has been imitated in most of the states, allows them after issue joined, and on obtaining the consent of a single judge, to state the facts in a special case for the opinion of the court, and agree that a judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff or defendant by confession or nolle prosequi immediately after the decision of the case; and judgment is entered accordingly, called judgment on a case stated.

Cassetur breve or billa, judgment of (that the writ or bill be quashed) is a judgment rendered in favor of a party pleading in abatement to a writ or action. Steph. Pl. 130, 131.

Cognovit. See Cognovit.

Cognovit actionem. See Cognovit Actionem.

Conditional judgment. One whose force depends upon the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties; as, one which may become of no effect if the defendant appears and pleads according to its terms, or one which orders the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mortgagor shall pay the amount decreed within the time limited. Mahoney v. New South Building & Loan Ass’n, C.C.Va., 70 F. 513; Simmons v. Jones, 118 N.C. 472, 24 S.E. 114.

Confession. At common law, judgment entered where defendant, instead of entering plea, confessed action, or withdrew plea and confessed action. Information Buying Co. v. Miller, 173 Ga. 786, 161 S.E. 617, 618. Judgment where a defendant gives the plaintiff a cognovit or written confession of the action by virtue of which the plaintiff enters judgment. The act of a debtor in permitting judgment to be entered against him by his creditor, for a stipulated sum, by a written statement to that effect or by warrant of attorney, without the institution of legal proceedings of any kind; voluntary submission to court’s jurisdiction. O’Hara v. Manley, 140 Pa. Super. 39, 12 A.2d 820, 822.

Consent judgment. A judgment, the provisions and terms of which are settled and agreed to by the parties to the action. Hargis v. Hargis, 252 Ky. 198, 66 S.W.2d 59; Andrews v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America, 55 R.I. 341, 181 A. 403; Matthews v. Looney, 132 Tex. 313, 123 S.W.2d 871, 872.

It is not the judgment of the court, it is the agreement of the parties, entered upon the record with the sanction and approval of the court, and is their act rather than that of the court. Andrews v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America, 55 R.I. 341, 181 A. 403; Cason v. Shutte, 211 N. C. 195, 189 S.E. 494, 495.

Consent judgments are, in effect, merely contracts acknowledged in open court and ordered to be recorded, but as such bind the parties as fully as do other judgments. Prince v. Frost-Johnson Lumber Co., Tex. Civ. App., 250 S.W. 785, 789; Belcher v. Cobb, 169 N.C. 689, 86 S.E. 600, 602.

Contradictory judgment. A judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard, either in support of their claims or in their defense. Cox’s Ex’rs v. Thomas, 11 La. 366.

It is used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by default.

De melioribus damnis. See De Melioribus Damnis.

Default and inquiry, judgment by. It establishes right of action of kind properly pleaded in complaint, determines right of plaintiff to recover at least nominal damages and costs, and precludes defendant from offering any evidence on execution of inquiry to show that plaintiff has no right of action. De Hoff v. Black, 206 N.C. 687, 175 S.E. 179.

Default judgment. A judgment rendered in consequence of the non-appearance of the defendant. Beard v. Sovereign Lodge, W. O. W., 184 N.C. 154, 113 S.E. 661; In re Smith, 38 Idaho, 746, 225 P. 495, 496; Brame v. Nolen, 139 Va. 413, 124 S.E. 299, 301. One entered upon the failure of a party to appear or plead at the appointed time. The term is also applied to judgments entered under statutes or rules of court, for want of affidavit of defense, plea, answer, and the like, or for failure to take some required step in the case.
Judgments rendered on defendant's default are: Judgment by default; judgment by non sum informatus; judgment null and void. Judgments rendered on plaintiff's default are: Judgment of non pros. (from non prossequitur) and judgment of nonsuit (from non sequitur, or ne suit pas).

Deficiency judgment. See Deficiency.

Demurrer, judgment on. Concludes party demurring, because by demurring, a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary and relies on their insufficiency in law. See Demurrer.

Discontinuance. A “judgment of discontinuance” is one of dismissal of plaintiff’s action based on interruption in proceedings occasioned by failure of plaintiff to continue suit regularly from time to time as he ought. Steele v. Beaty, 215 N.C. 680, 2 S.E.2d 854, 855.

A plaintiff sometimes, when he finds he has misconceived his action, obtains leave from the court to discontinue, on which there is a judgment against him and he has to pay costs; but he may commence a new action for the same cause.

Dismissal, judgment of. See Dismissal.

Domestic judgment. A judgment is domestic in the courts of the same state or country where it was originally rendered; in other states or countries it is called foreign. The federal court sitting for the state is a domestic court, and its judgments within the scope of its jurisdiction are domestic judgments. Louisvile & N. R. Co. v. Tally, 203 Ala. 370, 83 So. 114, 117.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied or extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment. Draper v. Nixon, 93 Ala. 436, 8 So. 489; General Electric Co. v. Husted, C.C.O.R., 171 F. 984; Burlington State Bank v. Marlin Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 207 S.W. 954, 956. Or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute. 1 Black, Judgm. (2d Ed.) § 462.

Error, judgment in. A judgment rendered by a court of error on a record sent up from an inferior court.

It is either in affirmance of the former judgment; in recall of it for error in fact; in reversal of it for error in law, that the plaintiff be barred of his writ of error, where a plea of release of errors or of the statute of limitations is found for the defendant; or that there be a venire facias de novo, which is an award of a new trial.

Execution of judgment. See Execution of Judgment or Decree.

Face of judgment. See Face of Judgment.

Final judgment. One which puts an end to a suit or action.

Foreign judgment. One rendered by the courts of a state or country politically and judicially distinct from that where the judgment or its effect is brought in question. One pronounced by a tribunal of a foreign country, or of a sister state. Karns v. Kunkle, 2 Minn. 313, Gil. 268; Gullick v. Loder, 13 N.J.L. 68, 23 Am.Dec. 711; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U.S. 287, 11 S. Ct. 92, 34 L.Ed. 670.

General verdict subject to a special case, judgment on. Where at the trial the parties agree on the facts and the only question is one of law and a verdict pro forma is taken and the jury find for the plaintiff generally but subject to the opinion of the court on a special case.

In personam or inter partes. See Judgment in Personam or Inter Parties.

In rem. See Judgment in Rem.

Interlocutory judgment. One given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. 3 Bl.Com. 396. One which determines some preliminary or subordinate point or plea, or settles some step, question, or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ultimate rights of the parties, or finally put the cause out of court. Thus, a judgment or order passed upon any provisional or accessory claim or contention is, in general, merely interlocutory, although it may finally dispose of that particular matter. 1 Black, Judgm. § 21; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. McDonald, 177 Ky., 838, 198 S.W. 225, 226; Frank P. Miller Paper Co. v. Keystone Coal & Coke Co., 275 Pa. 40, 118 A. 565, 566.

Junior judgment. One which was rendered or entered after the rendition or entry of another judgment, on a different claim, against the same defendant.

Merits, judgment on. One rendered after argument and investigation, and when it is determined which party is in the right, as distinguished from a judgment rendered upon some preliminary or formal or merely technical point, or by default and without trial. Bell Grocery Co. v. Booth, 250
JUDGMENT

Ky. 21, 61 S.W.2d 879; State ex rel. National Lead Co. v. Smith, Mo.App., 134 S.W.2d 1061, 1068.

Money judgment. One which adjudges the payment of a sum of money, as distinguished from one directing an act to be done or property to be restored or transferred. Fuller v. Aylesworth, Mich., 75 F. 694, 21 C.C.A. 505; Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 P. 659.

Ordinary "judgment for money" merely determines amount due. State ex rel. Lang v. Superior Court for King County, 176 Wash. 472, 30 P.2d 237, 239.

Nihil dicit. See Nihil Dicit.

Nil capiat per breve or per billa (that he take nothing by his writ, or by his bill). A judgment in favor of the defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Nil dicit, judgment by. One rendered where defendant fails to plead, or where, having pleaded, plea is stricken, withdrawn, or abandoned and no further defense is made. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Ware, Tex.Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 1076, 1077; Reliance Equipment Co. v. Montgomery, 27 Ala.App. 539, 175 So. 703.

At common law, it may be taken against defendant who omits to plead or answer whole or any separable substantial portion of declaration. Clonts v. Spurway, 104 Fla. 340, 139 So. 896, 897. It amounts to judgment by confession with reference to cause of action stated, Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Ware, Tex.Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 1076, 1077. For judgment nihil dicit, see Nihil Dicit. Judgment rendered on plea of guilty is not judgment nil dicit, which is substantially identical with default judgment. Stevens v. State, 100 Vt. 214, 136 A. 387.

Nisi. At common law, judgment nisi was a judgment entered on the return of the nisi prius record, which, according to the terms of the postea indorsed thereon was to become absolute unless otherwise ordered by the court within the first four days of the next succeeding term. See U. S. v. Winstead, D.C.N.C., 12 F. 51; Young v. McPherson, 3 N.J.L. 897.

Non obstante veredicto. See Non Obstante Vere-dicto.

Non pros (non prosequitur [he does not follow up, or pursue]). See Non Prosequitur.

Non sum informatus. See Non Sum Informa-tus.

Nonsuit. See Nonsuit.

Null tiel record. See Nul Tiel Record.

Nunc pro tune. One entered on a day subsequent to the time at which it should have been entered, as of the latter date. See Nunc Pro Tunc.

Personal judgment. One imposing on the defendant a personal liability to pay it, and which may therefore be satisfied out of any of his property which is within the reach of process, as distinguished from one which may be satisfied only out of a particular fund or the proceeds of particular property.

Thus, in a mortgage foreclosure suit, there may be a personal judgment against the mortgagor for any deficiency that may remain after the sale of the mortgaged premises. See Bardwell v. Collins, 44 Minn. 97, 46 N.W. 315, 9 L.R.A. 152.

Pocket judgment. A statute-merchant which was enforceable at any time after non-payment on the day assigned, without further proceedings. Wharton.

Pro retorno habendo. A judgment that the party have a return of the goods.

Quando acciderint. See Quando Acciderint.

Quod computet. See Quod Computet.

Quod partes replacient. See Quod Partes Re-placient.

Quod partitio fiat. Interlocutory judgment in a Writ of partition, that partition be made.

Quod recuperet. See Quod Recuperet.

Respondeat ouster. When the issue in law arises on a dilatory plea, and is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is only that the defendant "do answer over," called a judgment of respondeat ouster; it is interlocutory only.

Retraxit. See Retraxit.

Special verdict, judgment on. Where at the trial the parties find that they agree on the facts and the only question is one of law and a verdict pro forma is taken, and the jury state the facts as they find them, concluding that the opinion of the court shall decide in whose favor the verdict shall be, and that they assess the damages accordingly.

Stet Processus. See Stet Processus.

Verdict, judgment on. The most usual of the judgments upon facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdict.

Warrant of attorney. See Warrant.

JUDGMENT-BOOK. A book required to be kept by the clerk, among the records of the court, for the entry of judgments. In re Weber, 4 N.D. 119, 59 N.W. 523, 28 L.R.A. 621.

JUDGMENT CREDITOR. One who has obtained a judgment against his debtor, under which he JUDGMENT DEBT. One which has been recovered, and which remains a JUDGMENT DEBT. One which is evidenced by a security or agreed composition for, the debt, the debtors might be adjudicated bankrupt. This act set forth a procedure for adjudication may be presented, unless in the events provided for by that section. Wharton. The doctrine extends to matters actually adjudicated, MacDonnell v. Capital Co., C.C.A.Cal., 130 F.2d 311, 318; Panos v. Great Western Packing Co., Cal.App., 126 F.2d 889, 892; expressly or by necessary Implication adjudicated, McKee v. Producers’ & Refiners’ Corporation, 170 Okl. 559, 41 P.2d 466, 469; necessarily adjudicated, Capps v. Tocca Falls Light & Power Co., 46 Ga.App. 266, 167 S.E. 330, 333; Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Webb, Tex.Civ.App., 177 S.W.2d 218, 223. It extends to matters which might have been litigated in former case. Paine & Williams Co. v. Baldwin Rubber Co., C.C.A.Mich., 113 F.2d 842, 843; Knabb v. Duner, 141 N.Y. 719, 215 N.Y.S. 460. But it has been held that the doctrine does not apply where point at issue was not controverted in prior action but might have been. Haumesser v. Butcher, 98 Wash. 475, 167 P.2d 952, 956; and a judgment or decree without prejudice does not work an “estoppel”. In re McDermott, C.C.A. Ill., 115 F.2d 582, 584.

Ordinarily, “estoppel” at judgment does not exentCTO matters not expressly adjudicated, Sonken-Galamba Corporation v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 124 F.2d 952, 956; and a judgment or decree without prejudice does not work an “estoppel”. In re McDermott, C.C.A. Ill., 115 F.2d 582, 584.

Elements or essentials are or may include former judgment between same parties or their privies. Postelneck v. Edbro Realty Co., 228 App.Div. 105, 239 N.Y.S. 173, 175; former judgment must relate to same question and must be adjudicated absolutely between parties which has been determined by competent court, on ground that record of judgment imports absolute verity. Cauble v. Cauble, Tex.Civ.App., 2 S.W.2d 967, 970. The doctrine extends to matters actually adjudicated, Hamlin v. Johns, 41 Ga.App. 91, 151 S.E. 815, 817; Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Childs, 189 Ga. 835, 7 S.E.2d 907; actually and necessarily included in judgment, MacDonnell v. Capital Co., C.C.A.Cal., 130 F.2d 311, 318; Panos v. Great Western Packing Co., Cal.App., 126 P.2d 889, 892;
JUDGMENT, ESTOPPEL BY JUDGMENT EXECUTION. In the judgment on rem, mons commanding him to appear and show cause, which it issues, it is a species of execution process, it is recognized and enforced as against any person, it is binding upon all persons in the broader sense which we have mentioned.

JUDGMENT IN RETRAXIT. A "judgment" which is usually based upon and follows a settlement out of court, and like a judgment on the merits is a bar and estops plaintiff from again proceeding in another suit on same cause of action. Steele v. Beaty, 215 N.C. 680, 2 S.E.2d 854, 856, 857.

JUDGMENT IN PERSONAM OR INTER PARTES. A judgment against a particular person, as distinguished from a judgment against a thing or a right or status.

JUDGMENT RECORD. In English practice. A parchment roll, on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. 3 Steph.Comm. 632. In American practice, the record is signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk.
Findings of fact and conclusions of law held part of "judgment record;" the phrases "judgment roll," "judgment record," and "face of the record" are synonymous. Perrian Oil Co. v. Smith, 129 Tex. 413, 107 S.W.2d 564, 566, 111 A.L.R. 1152.

JUDGMENT RECOVERED. A plea by a defendant that the plaintiff has already recovered that which he seeks to obtain by his action. This was formerly a species of sham plea, often put in for the purpose of delaying a plaintiff's action.

JUDGMENT VOID ON ITS FACE. A judgment or order is "void on its face" when its invalidity is apparent upon inspection of judgment roll. Application of Behymer, 130 Cal.App. 200, 19 P.2d 829, 830.

JUDICANDUM EST LEGIBUS, NON EXEMPLIS. Judgment is to be given according to the laws, not according to examples or precedents. 4 Coke, 33b; 4 Bl.Comm. 405.

JUDICARE. Lat. In the civil and old English law. To judge; to decide or determine judicially; to give judgment or sentence.

JUDICATIO. Lat. In the civil law. Judging; the pronouncing of sentence after hearing a cause. Hallifax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 8, no. 7.

JUDICATORES TERRARUM. Lat. Certain tenants in the county palatine of Chester, who were bound by their tenures to perform judicial functions.

In case of an erroneous judgment being given by them, the party aggrieved might obtain a writ of error out of Chancery, directing them to reform it. They then had a month to consider of the matter. If they declined to reform their judgment, the matter came on writ of error before the king's bench; and if the court of king's bench held the judgment to be erroneous they forfeited £100 to the crown by custom. Jenk.Cent. 71.

JUDICATORIES. The term as used designates that department of government which it was intended should interpret and administer the laws. In re Opinion of the Justices, 86 N.H. 597, 166 A. 640, 646.

JUDICATURE. The state or profession of those officers who are employed in administering justice; the judiciary.

A judicatory, tribunal, or court of justice.

Jurisdiction; the right of judicial action; the scope or extent of jurisdiction.

JUDICATURE ACTS (ENGLAND). The acts under which the present system of courts in England was organized and is continued.

The statutes of 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, which went into force November 1, 1875, with amendments in 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 9; 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 78; and 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 68,—made most important changes in the organization of, and methods of procedure in, the superior courts of England, consolidating them together so as to constitute one supreme court of judicature, consisting of two divisions,—her majesty's high court of justice, having chiefly original jurisdiction; and her majesty's court of appeal, whose jurisdiction is chiefly appellate.

JUDICATURE ACTS (IRELAND). The att' of 40 & 41 Vict. c. 57, which went into operation Jan. 1, 1878, established a supreme court of judicature in Ireland, under which acts and subsequent ones a system essentially similar in its constitution to that in England is in force.

JUDICES. Lat. Judges. See Judex.

JUDICES NON TENENTUR EXPRIMERE CAUSAM SENTENTLZE SUIE. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their sentence. Jenk.Cent. 75.

JUDICES ORDINARII. Lat. Plural of judex ordinarius (q. v.).

JUDICES PEDANEI. Lat. Plural of judex pedaneus (q. v.).

JUDICES SELECTI, Lat. Plural of judex selectus (q. v.).

JUDICI OFFICCIUM SUUM EXCEDENTI NON PARETUR. A judge exceeding his office (or jurisdiction) is not to be obeyed. Jenk.Cent. p. 139, case 84. Said of void judgments.

JUDICI SATUS PENA EST, QUOD DEUM HABET ULTOREM. It is punishment enough for a judge that he has God as his avenger. 1 Leon. 295.

JUDICIA; JUDICIA PUBLICA. Lat. In Roman law. Judicial proceedings; trials. Judicata publica, criminal trials. Dig. 48, 1. See, also, Judicium.

JUDICIA IN CURIA REGIS NON ADHILEN-TUR, SED STENT IN ROBORE SUO QUOUSQUE TUR. Judgments in the king's court are not to be annihilated, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attain. 2 Inst. 539.

JUDICIA IN DELIBERATIONIBUS CREBRO MATURESCUNT, IN ACCELERATO PROCESSU NUNQUAM. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberations, never by hurried process or precipitation. 3 Inst. 210.

JUDICIA POSTERIORA SUNT IN LEGE FOR-TIORA. The later decisions are the stronger in law. 8 Coke, 97.

JUDICIA SUNT TANQUAM JURIS DICTA, ET PRO VERITATE ACCIPUNTUR. Judgments are, as it were, the sayings of the law, and are received as truth. 2 Inst. 537.

JUDICIAL. Belonging to the office of a judge; as judicial authority.

Relating to or connected with the administration of justice; as a judicial officer.

Having the character of judgment or formal legal procedure; as a judicial act.

Proceeding from a court of justice; as a judicial writ, a judicial determination.

Involving the exercise of judgment or discretion; as distinguished from ministerial.
JUDICIAL POWER, judicial proceedings. State v. Freitag, 53 Idaho 726, 27 P.2d 68.

As to quasi judicial, see Quasi Judicial.

It is also defined as an act by court or magistrate touching rights of parties or property brought before it or him by voluntary appearance, or by prior action of ministerial officers, Flournoy v. Jeffersonville, 17 Ind. 173, 79 Am. Dec. 496; Union Pac. R. Co. v. U.S., 99 U.S. 700, 761, 25 L.Ed. 496; United States v. Ward, C.C.A.Okl., 257 P. 372, 377; Board of Com'r's of Atoka County v. Cypert, 65 Okl. 168, 166 P. 195, 198; an act by member of judicial department in construing law or applying it to a particular state of facts, State ex rel. Tharel v. Board of Com'rs of Creek County, 188 Okl. 184, 107 P.2d 542, 549; an act of administrative board if it goes to determination of some right, protection of which is peculiar office of courts, Belk's Dept. Store v. Guilford County, 222 N.C. 441, 23 S.E.2d 897, 902; an act which imposes burdens or confers privileges according to finding of some person or body whether a general rule is applicable or according to discretion.

The act of an administrative or ministerial officer does not become judicial simply because it requires some discretion and judgment, but becomes judicial only when there is opportunity to be heard, and the production and weighing of evidence and a decision thereon. People ex rel. Kuberski v. Haussermann, 113 N.J.L. 162, 172 A. 738, 741; an act which undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation on a proper foundation on which it proceeds, Pearson v. Reed, 6 Cal.App.2d 277, 44 P.2d 592, 597; determination of what the law is and what rights of parties are with reference to transactions already had or thing already done or happened, Nider v. Homan, 32 Cal.App.2d 11, 89 P.2d 136, 139; Nash v. Brooks, 251 App.Div. 616, 297 N.Y. S. 853, 855; State v. Ramirez, 34 Idaho 623, 203 P.2d 279, 282, 29 A.L.R. 297; the action of judge in trying a cause and rendering a decision, Application of Gleit, 178 Misc. 198, 33 N.Y.S.2d 629, 630, 631.

The act of an administrative or ministerial officer does not become judicial simply because it requires some discretion and judgment, but becomes judicial only when there is opportunity to be heard, and the production and weighing of evidence and a decision thereon. People ex rel. Kuberski v. Haussermann, 113 N.J.L. 162, 172 A. 738, 741; an act which undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation on a proper foundation on which it proceeds, Pearson v. Reed, 6 Cal.App.2d 277, 44 P.2d 592, 597; determination of what the law is and what rights of parties are with reference to transactions already had or thing already done or happened, Nider v. Homan, 32 Cal.App.2d 11, 89 P.2d 136, 139; Nash v. Brooks, 251 App.Div. 616, 297 N.Y. S. 853, 855; State v. Ramirez, 34 Idaho 623, 203 P.2d 279, 282, 29 A.L.R. 297; the action of judge in trying a cause and rendering a decision, Application of Gleit, 178 Misc. 198, 33 N.Y.S.2d 629, 630, 631.

Rendition or pronouncement of a judgment is a judicial act and entry thereof a ministerial act. Peoples Electric Co. v. Hugo, 101 Misc. 102, 69 So. 771, 779; Accident & Indemnity Co. v. City of Thomasville, 100 Fla. 102, 69 So. 771, 779.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL. In English law. A tribunal established in 1833, composed of members of the privy council, being judges or retired judges, which acts as the king's adviser in matters of law referred to it, and exercises a certain appellate jurisdiction, though its power in this respect was curtailed by the judicature act of 1873. It consists of the Lord Chancellor, the six Lords of Appeal, if Privy Councillors, and such other members of the Privy Council as have held any high judicial office in the United Kingdom, India, or the colonies. It is the court of final appeal from the ecclesiastical courts, from the courts of India, the colonies, dominions, etc., the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, administering all the different systems of law of the countries under its appellate juris-JUDICIAL LEGISLATION. See Judge-Made Law.

JUDICIAL NOTICE. The act by which a court, in conducting a trial, or framing its decision, will, of its own motion, and without the production of evidence, recognize the existence and truth of certain facts, having a bearing on the controversy at bar, which, from their nature, are not properly the subject of testimony, or which are universally regarded as established by common notoriety, e. g., the laws of the state, international law, historical events, the constitution and course of nature, main geographical features, etc. North Hempstead v. Gregory, 53 App.Div. 350, 65 N.Y.S. 867; State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 37 A. 80, 36 L.R.A. 623, 61 Am.St.Rep. 30. The cognizance of certain facts which judges and jurors may properly take and act upon without proof, because they already know them. United States v. Hammers, D. C.Fla., 241 F. 542, 543.

The true conception of what is " judicially known" is that of something which is not, or rather need not be, unless the tribunal wishes it; the subject of either evidence or argument. Chiulla de Luca v. Board of Park Com'rs of City of Hartford, 94 Conn. 7, 107 A. 611, 612. The limits of "judicial notice" cannot be prescribed with exactness, but notoriety, generally speaking, supposes the judge to be acquainted with facts which judges and jurors may properly take and act upon without proof, because they already know them. Gottstein v. Lister, 88 Wash. 462, 153 P. 595, 602, Ann.Cas.1917D, 1008.

JUDICIAL OATH. See Oath.

JUDICIAL OFFICE. Offices which relate to the administration of justice; Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569; and which should be exercised by persons of sufficient skill and experience in the duties which appertain to them. A general term including courts of record and courts not of record. Buckley v. Holmes, 259 Pa. 176, 102 A. 497, 500.

A. term used in 34 & 35 Vict. c. 91, to define qualifications of additional members of the judicial committee of the Privy Council.

JUDICIAL OFFICER. The term, in the popular sense, applies generally to an officer of a court, but in the strictly legal sense applies only to an officer who determines causes between parties or renders decision in a judicial capacity. Hitt v. State, 182 Miss. 184, 181 So. 331; Alexander v. Holmes, 180 Ga. 397, 179 S.E. 77, 78. One who exercises judicial function. Adams v. State, 214 Ind. 603, 17 N.E.2d 84, 118 A.L.R. 1095. A person in whom is vested authority to decide causes or exercise powers appropriate to a court. Settle v. Van Evreia, 49 N.Y. 284; People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 203; Reid v. Hood, 2 Nott & McC., S.C., 170, 10 Am. Dec. 582.

JUDICIAL OPINION. A term synonymous with what has been adjudged or decreed and final in its character. Alleghany Corporation v. Aldebaran Corporation, 173 Md. 472, 196 A. 418, 421. See, also, Opinion.

JUDICIAL ORDER. One which involves exercise of judicial discretion and affects final result of litigation. Happy Coal Co. v. Brashear, 263 Ky. 257, 92 S.W.2d 23, 27. See, also, Order.

JUDICIAL POWER. The authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with declaration of what law is and its construction. People v. Bruner, 343 Ill. 146, 175 N.E. 400, 404. The authority vested in courts and judges, as distinguished from the executive and legislative power. Gilbert v. Priest, 65 Barb., N.Y., 448; State ex rel. Jamison v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 21 N.E. 252, 4 L.R.A. 79.

JURISDICTION

Ky. 447, 148 S.W.2d 278, 280, 281; Moffatt v. Cassimms, 28 Ala.App. 582, 190 So. 297, 298; State Board of Dental Examiners v. Saville, 90 Colo. 177, 8 P.2d 693, 695; jurisdiction of subject matter, of the person, and to render the particular judgment which was given, Wall v. Supervisor County, 53 Ariz. 344, 89 P.2d 624, 625; or it may mean only venue, Fiolat v. Minnesota-Atlantic Transit Co., D.C.Minn., 31 F.Supp. 219, 220. It does not depend upon the regularity of exercise of power, hear and determine or upon correctness or rightfulness of decision made, Mattice v. Kingston Trust Co., 33 N.Y.S.2d 799, 801, 178 Misc. 256; Thompson v. Terminal Shares, C.C.A.Colo., 112 F.2d 652, 655; Klauder v. Anderson, 174 Kan. 115, 131 P.2d 883, 889.

"Jurisdiction of the person" is power to subject parties to the jurisdiction of a court, and to determine whether the amount in controversy exceeds a certain sum, that the parties are citizens of different states, etc. Noble v. Railroad Co., 147 U.S. 165, 13 S.Ct. 271, 37 L.Ed. 123.

"Jurisdictional facts. Those matters of fact which must exist before the court can properly take jurisdiction of the particular case, as, that the defendant has been properly served with process, that the amount in controversy exceeds a certain sum, that the parties are citizens of different states, etc. Noble v. Railroad Co., 147 U.S. 165, 13 S.Ct. 271, 37 L.Ed. 123.

"Jurisdictional plea. While all dilatory pleas are sometimes referred to as "jurisdictional pleas," yet, strictly speaking, only those pleas to the jurisdiction of the court are "jurisdictional." Howe v. Lisbon Sa.

"Jurisdictional statement. A statement in appellant's brief that concisely and clearly informs the Supreme Court of the exact ground on which the Supreme Court's jurisdiction is claimed to rest, and refers briefly to the constitutional provisions and decided cases sustaining such claim of jurisdiction. Andrew County v. Maxwell, 347 Mo. 156, 146 S.W.2d 621, 623.

"Jurisimperator. Lat. A student of the civil law.

"Jurisperitus. Lat. Skilled or learned in the law.

"Jurisprudence. The philosophy of law, or the science which treats of the principles of positive law and legal relations.

The term is wrongly applied to actual systems of law, or to current views of law, or to suggestions for its amendment, but is the name of a science. This science is a formal, or analytical, rather than a material, one. It is the science of actual or positive law. It is wrongly divided into 'general' and 'particular,' or into 'philosophical' and 'historical.' It may therefore be defined as the formal science of positive law." Holl.Jur. 12.

In the proper sense of the word, "jurisprudence" is the science of law, namely, that science which has for its function to ascertain the principles on which legal rules are based, so as not only to classify those rules in their proper order, and show the relation in which they stand to one another, but also to settle the manner in which new or doubtful cases should be brought under the appropriate rules. Jurisprudence is more a formal than a material science. It has no direct concern with questions of moral or political policy, for they fall under the province of ethics and legislation; but, when a new or doubtful case arises to which two different rules seem, when taken literally, to be equally applicable, it may be, and often is, the function of jurisprudence to consider the ultimate effect which would be produced if each rule were applied, to find the indeterminate number of similar cases, and to choose that rule which, when so applied, will produce the greatest advantage to the community. Sweet.
For "Comparative Jurisprudence" and "Medical Jurisprudence," see those titles. For equity jurisprudence, see "Equity."

JURISPRUDENTIA. Lat. In the civil and common law. Jurisprudence, or legal science.

JURISPRUDENTIA EST DIVINARUM ATQUE HUMANARUM RERUM NOTITIA, JUSTITIÆ ET PRUDENTIÆ, see "Equity."

JURISPRUDENTIA EST DIVINARUM ATQUE HUMANARUM RERUM NOTITIA, JUSTITIÆ ET PRUDENTIÆ. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of what is right and what is wrong. Dig. 1, 1, 10, 2; Inst. 1, 1, 1. This definition is adopted by Bracton, word for word. Bract. fol. 3.

JURISPRUDENTIA LEGIS COMMUNIS ANGLICAE EST SCIENTIA SOCIALIS ET COPiosa. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a science social and comprehensive. 7 Coke, 28a.

JURIST. One who is versed or skilled in law; answering to the Latin "jurisperitus," (q. v.).

One who is skilled in the civil law, or law of nations. The term is now usually applied to those who have distinguished themselves by their writings on legal subjects.

JURISTIC. Pertaining or belonging to, or characteristic of, jurisprudence, or a jurist, or the legal profession.

JURISTIC ACT. One designed to have a legal effect, and capable thereof.

An act of a private individual directed to the origin, termination, or alteration of a right. Webster, Dict., citing T. E. Holland.

JURNEDUM. In old English law. A journey; a day's traveling. Cowell.

JURO. In Spanish law. A certain perpetual pension, granted by the king on the public revenues, and more especially on the salt-works, by favor, either in consideration of meritorious services, or in return for money loaned the government, or obtained by it through forced loans. Escriche.

JUROR. One member of a jury.

The term is not inflexible, and besides a person who has been accepted and sworn to try a cause "juror" may also mean a person selected for jury service. Green v. Smither, Ky., 199 S.W. 1056; People v. Newmark, 312 Ill. 625, 144 N.E. 338, 340. The term may apply to special jurors as well as members of regular panel. Beavers v. State, 187 Ark. 722, 61 S.W.2d 1113. Sometimes, one who takes an oath; as in the term "non-juror," a person who refuses certain oaths.

JURY. A body of men temporarily selected from the citizens of a particular district, and invested with power to present or indict a person for a public offense, or to try a question of fact. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 190.

"Jury trial" is not merely a trial by twelve men, but by twelve men selected by law, with judge who passes on many legal questions and has limited supervision over trial. Universal Truck Loading Co. v. Taylor, 178 Miss. 143, 172 So. 756, 757.

The right to "jury trial" guaranteed by Federal Constitution is the right of trial by jury as it existed at common law. Diederich v. American News Co., C.C.A.Okl., 128 F.2d 144, 145, 146.

The right to "jury trial" of controverted issues implies a trial by an impartial and qualified jury. Alexander v. R. D. Crier & Sons Co., 181 Md. 415, 30 A.2d 757, 759.

The terms "jury" and "trial by jury," as used in the constitution, mean twelve competent men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin, nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by officers free from all bias in favor of or against either party, duly impaneled and sworn to render a true verdict according to the law and the evidence. state v. McClure, 11 Nev. 39; H. Waggman & Co. v. Schafer Motor Freight Service, 4 N.Y.S.2d 526, 529, 167 Misc. 681.

Common Jury

In practice. The ordinary kind of jury by which issues of fact are generally tried, as distinguished from a special jury, (q. v.).

Fair and Impartial Jury

See Fair and Impartial Jury.

Foreign Jury

A jury obtained from a county other than that in which issue was joined.

Grand Jury

A jury of inquiry who are summoned and returned by the sheriff to each session of the criminal courts, and whose duty is to receive complaints and accusations in criminal cases, hear the evidence adduced on the part of the state, and find bills of indictment in cases where they are satisfied a trial ought to be had. They are first sworn, and instructed by the court.

This is called a "grand jury" because it comprises a greater number of jurors than the ordinary trial jury or "petit jury." At common law, a grand jury consisted of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three men, and this is still the rule in many of the states, though in some the number is otherwise fixed by statutory provision. In Oregon and Utah, the grand jury is composed of seven men; in South Dakota, not less than six nor more than eight; in Texas, twelve; in Idaho, sixteen; in Washington, twelve to seventeen; in North Dakota, sixteen to twenty-three; in California, nineteen; in New Mexico, twenty-one. See ex parte Bain, 121 U.S. 1, 7 S.Ct. 781, 30 L. Ed. 849; in re Gardiner, 64 N.Y.S. 760, 31 Misc. 364; Finley v. State, 61
JURY

Mixed Jury

A bilingual jury; a jury of the half-tongue. See De Medietat Linguæae. Also a jury composed partly of negroes and partly of white men.

Petit Jury

The ordinary jury of twelve men for the trial of a civil or criminal action. So called to distinguish it from the grand jury.

A petit jury is a body of twelve men impaneled and sworn in a district court, to try and determine, by a true and unanimous verdict, any question or issue of fact, in any civil or criminal action or proceeding, according to law and the evidence as given them in the court. Gen.St. Minn.1878, c. 71, § 1 (M.S.A. § 593.01).

Pix Jury

See Pix.

Special Jury

A jury ordered by the court, on the motion of either party, in cases of unusual importance or intricacy. Called, from the manner in which it is constituted, a "struck jury." 3 Bl.Comm. 357. A jury composed of persons above the rank of ordinary freeholders; usually summoned to try questions of greater importance than those usually submitted to common juries. Brown.

Struck Jury

See Striking A Jury.

Trial Jury

The jury participating in the trial of a given case; or a jury summoned and impaneled for the trial of a case, and in this sense a petit jury as distinguished from a grand jury.

A body of men returned from the citizens of a particular district before a court or officer of competent jurisdiction, and sworn to try and determine, by verdict, a question of fact. Code Civ.Proc.Cal. § 193.

JURY SOX. The place in court (strictly an enclosed place) where the jury sit during the trial of a cause. 1 Archb.Pr.K.B. 208; 1 Burrill, Pr. 455.

JURY COMMISSIONER. An officer charged with the duty of selecting the names to be put into the jury wheel, or of drawing the panel of jurors for a particular term of court.

JURY-LIST. A paper containing the names of jurors impaneled to try a cause, or it contains the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court.

JURY OF MATRONS. See Matrons, Jury Of.

JURY PROCESS. The process by which a jury is summoned in a cause, and by which their attendance is enforced.

JURY WHEEL. A machine containing the names of persons qualified to serve as grand and petit jurors, from which, in an order determined by the hazard of its revolutions, are drawn a sufficient number of such names to make up the panels for a given term of court.

JURYMAN. A juror; one who is impaneled on a jury.

JURYWOMAN. One member of a jury of matrons; a woman juror.

JUS. Lat. In Roman law. Right; justice; law; the whole body of law; also a right. The term is used in two meanings:

1. "Jus" means "law," considered in the abstract; that is, as distinguished from any specific enactment, the science or department of learning, or quasi personified factor in human history or conduct or social development, which we call, in a general sense, "the law." Or it means the law taken as a system, an aggregate, a whole; the sum total of a number of individual laws taken together.

2. In a second sense, "jus" signifies "a right;" that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand inherent in one person and incident upon another; or a capacity residing in one person of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state, the actions of another. This is its meaning in the expressions "jus in rem," "jus accrescendi," "jus possessions." It is thus seen to possess the same ambiguity as the words "droit," "recht," and "right," (which see.)

Within the meaning of the maxim that "ignorantia juris non excusat" (ignorance of the law is no excuse), the word "jus" is used to denote the general law or ordinary law of the land, and not a private right. Churchill v. Bradley, 58 Vt. 403, 5 A. 189, 56 Am.Rep. 563; Cooper v. Fibbs, L.R. 2 H.L. 149; Freichnecht v. Meyer, 39 N.J.Eq. 561.

The continental jurists seek to avoid this ambiguity in the use of the word "jus," by calling its former significations "objective," and the latter meaning "subjective." Thus Mackeldy (Rom.Law, § 2) says: "The laws of the first kind [compulsory or positive laws] form law [jus] in its objective sense, [jus est norma agendi, law is a rule of conduct.] The possibility resulting from law in this sense to do or require another to do is law in its subjective sense, [jus est facultas agendi, law is a license to act.] The voluntary action of man in conformity with the precepts of law is called 'justice,' [justitia.]"

Some further meanings of the word are:

An action. Bract. fol. 3. Or, rather, those proceedings in the Roman action which were conducted before the praetor.

Power or authority. Sui juris, in one's own power; independent. Inst. 1, 8, pr.; Bract. fol. 3. Alieni juris, under another's power. Inst. 1, 8, pr.

A court or judicial tribunal, (locus in quo redditur jus.) Id. fol. 3.

JUS ABSTINENDI. The right of renunciation; the right of an heir, under the Roman law, to renounce or decline the inheritance, as, for example, where his acceptance, in consequence of the necessity of paying the debts, would make it a burden to him. See Mackeldy Rom.Law, § 733.
JUS ABUTENDI. The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to do exactly as one likes with property, or having full dominion over property. 3 Toullier, no. 86.

JUS ACCRESCENDI. The right of survivorship. In re Brogan's Estate, 165 Misc. 111, 300 N.Y.S. 447, 455. The right of the survivor or survivors of two or more joint tenants to the tenancy or estate, upon the death of one or more of the joint tenants. In re Capria's Estate, 89 Misc. 101, 151 N.Y.S. 385, 386.

JUS ACCRESCENDI INTER MERCATORES, PRO BENEFICIO COMMERCII, LOCUM NON HABET. The right of survivorship has no place between merchants, for the benefit of commerce. Co.Litt. 182a; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1207; ' Broom, Max. 455. There is no survivorship in cases of partnership, as there is in joint-tenancy. Story, Partn. § 90.

JUS ACCRESCENDI PRÆFERTUR ONERIBUS. The right of survivorship is preferred to encumbrances. 185a. Hence no dower or curtesy can be claimed out of a joint estate. 1 Steph. Comm. 316.

JUS ACCRESCENDI PRÆFERTUR ULTIMAE VOLUNTATI. The right of survivorship is preferred to the last will. Co.Litt. 185b. A devise of one's share of a joint estate, by will, is no severance of the jointure; for no testament takes effect till after the death of the testator, and by such death the right of the survivor (which accrued at the original creation of the estate, and has therefore a priority to the other) is already vested. 2 Bl.Comm. 186; 3 Steph.Comm. 316.

JUS ACTUS. In Roman law. A rural servitude giving to a person a passage for carriages, or for cattle.

JUS AD REM. A term of the civil law, meaning "a right to a thing"; that is, a right exercisable by one person over a particular article of property in virtue of a contract or obligation incurred by another person in respect to it, and which is enforceable only against or through such other person. It is thus distinguished from jus in re, which is a complete and absolute dominion over a thing available against all persons.

The disposition of modern writers is to use the term "jus ad rem" as descriptive of a right without possession, and "jus in re" as descriptive of a right accompanied by possession. Or, in a somewhat wider sense, the former denotes an inchoate or incomplete right to a thing; the latter, a complete and perfect right to a thing. See The Carlos F. Roses, 177 U.S. 655, 20 S.Ct. 803, 44 L.Ed. 929; The Young Mechanic, 30 Fed.Cas. 873.

In canon law. A right to a thing. An inchoate and imperfect right, such as is gained by nomination and institution; as distinguished from jus in re, or complete and full right, such as is acquired by corporal possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 312.

JUS ZELIANUM. A body of laws drawn up by Sextus IElIius, and consisting of three parts, wherein were explained, respectively: (1) The laws of the Twelve Tables; (2) the interpretation of and decisions upon such laws; and (3) the forms of procedure. In date, it was subsequent to the jus Flavianum, (q. v.). Brown.

JUS ZEQUUM. Equitable law. A term used by the Romans to express the adaptation of the law to the circumstances of the individual case as opposed to jus strictum (q. v.).

JUS 1ESNECLE. The right of primogeniture (q. v.).

JUS ALBINATUS. The droit d'aubaine (q. v.). See Albinitus Jus.

JUS ANGARLE. See Angaria; Angry, Right of.

JUS ANGLORUM. The laws and customs of the West Saxons, in the time of the Heptarchy, by which the people were for a long time governed, and which were preferred before all others. Wharton.

JUS AQUAE HAUSTUS. In Roman law. A rural servitude giving to a person a right of watering cattle on another's field, or of drawing water from another's well.

JUS AQUIEDUCTUS. In the civil law. The name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another.

JUS BANCI. In old English law. The right of bench.

The right or privilege of having an elevated and separate seat of judgment, customarily allowed only to the king's judges, who hence were said to administer high justice, (summam administrant justitiam.) Blount.

JUS BELLII. The law of war. The law of nations as applied to a state of war, defining in particular the rights and duties of the belligerent powers themselves, and of neutral nations.

The right of war; that which may be done without injustice with regard to an enemy. Gro. de Jure B. lib. 1, c. 1, § 3.

JUS BELLUM DICENDI. The right of proclaiming war.

JUS CANONICUM. The canon law.

JUS CIVILE. Civil law. The system of law peculiar to one state or people. Inst. 1, 2, 1. Particularly, in Roman law, the civil law of the Roman people, as distinguished from the jus gentium. The term is also applied to the body of law called, emphatically, the "civil law."

The jus civile and the jus gentium are distinguished in this way. All people ruled by statutes and customs use a law partly peculiar to themselves, partly common to all men. The law each people has settled for itself is peculiar to that very state. The law, again, that natural reason has settled among all men,—the law that is guarded among all peoples quite alike,—is called the jus gentium, and all nations use it as if law. The Roman people, therefore, use a law that is partly peculiar to itself, partly common to all men. Hunter, Rom. Law, 38.

But this is not the only, or even the general, use of the words. What the Roman jurists had chiefly in view, when they spoke of "jus civile," was not local as opposed to cosmopolitan law, but the old law of the city as contrasted JUS DICERE, ET NON JUS DARE. To declare the law, not to make it. 7 Term 696; Arg. Barry v. Mandell, 10 Johns., N.Y., 563, 566; 7 Exch. 543; 2 Eden 29; 4 C.B. 560, 561; Broom, Max. 140.

JUS DISPONENDI. The right of disposing.

An expression used either generally to signify the right of alienation, as when we speak of depriving a married woman of the jus disponendi over her separate estate, or specially in the law relating to sales of goods, where it is often a question whether the vendor of goods has the intention of reserving to himself the jus disponendi; or, of preventing the ownership from passing to the purchaser, notwithstanding that he (the vendor) has parted with the possession of the goods. Sweet.

JUS DISTRAHENDI. The right of sale of goods pledged in case of non-payment. See Pledge; Distress.

JUS DIVIDENDI. The right of disposing of reality by will. Du Cange.

JUS DUPLICATUM. A double right; the right of possession united with the right of property; otherwise called "droit-droit." 2 Bl.Comm. 199.

JUS EDICERE, JUS EDICENDI. The right to issue edicts. It belonged to all the higher magistrates, but special interest is attached to the praetor's edicts in connection with the history of Roman law. See Praetor.

JUS EST ARS BONI ET I justify. Right and fraud never dwell together. 10 Coke, 738, note; 4 Bing. 639.

JUS ET FRAUS NUNQUAM COHABITANT. Law and fraud never dwell together. 10 Coke, 738, note; 4 Bing. 639.

JUS EX NORMA RECTI EST INJURIA. Law is a rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury. 3 Bulst. 313.

JUS ET FRAUS NUNQUAM COHABITANT. Right and fraud never dwell together. 10 Coke, 45a. Applied to the title of a statute. Id.; Best, Ev. p. 250, § 205.

JUS EX INJURIA NON ORITUR. A right does (or can) not rise out of a wrong. Broom, Max. 738, note; 4 Bing. 639.

JUS EX NON SCRIPTO. Law constituted by custom or such usage as indicates the tacit consent of the community.

JUS FALCANDI. The right of mowing or cutting. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 1. The right of cutting wood. Bract. fol. 231.

JUS FALCANDI. The right of mowing or cutting. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 1. The right of cutting wood. Bract. fol. 231.

JUS FIDUCIARIUM. In the civil law. A right in trust; as distinguished from jus legitimum, a legal right. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

JUS FLAVIANUM. In old Roman law. A body of laws drawn up by Cneius Flavius, a clerk of Appius Claudius, from the materials to which he had access. It was a popularization of the laws. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 39.
JUS FLUMINUM. In the civil law. The right to the use of rivers. Locc. de Jure Mar. lib. 1, c. 6.

JUS FODIENDI. In the civil and old English law. A right of digging on another's land. Inst. 2, 3, 2; Bract. fol. 222.

JUS FUTURUM. In the civil law. A future right; an inchoate, incipient, or expectant right, not yet fully vested.

It may be either "jus delatum," when the subsequent acquisition or vesting of it depends merely on the will of the person in whom it is to vest, or "jus nondum delatum," when it depends on the future occurrence of other circumstances or conditions. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 191.

JUS GENTIUM. The law of nations. That law which natural reason has established among all men is equally observed among all nations, and is called the "law of nations," as being the law which all nations use. Inst. 1, 2, 1; Dig. 1, 1, 9; 1 Bl.Comm. 43; 1 Kent, Comm. 7; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 125.

Although this phrase had a meaning in the Roman law which may be rendered by our expression "law of nations," it must not be understood as equivalent to what we now call "international law," its scope being much wider. It was originally a system of law, or more properly equity, gathered by the early Roman lawyers and magistrates from the common ingredients in the customs of the old Italian tribes,—those being the nations, gentes, whom they had opportunities of observing,—to be used in cases between foreigners or between a Roman citizen and a foreigner. The principle upon which they proceeded was that which is incident to full ownership or property, Inherent in his relation to it, and therefore fundamentally valid and just. From this it was an easy transition to the converse principle, viz., that any rule which instinctively commended itself to their sense of justice and reason must be a part of the jus gentium. And so the latter term came eventually to be about synonymous with "equity," (as the Romans understood it,) or the system of praetorian law.

Modern jurists frequently employ the term "jus gentium privatum" to denote private international law, or that subject which is otherwise styled the 'conflict of laws;' and "jus gentium publicum" for public international law, or the system of rules governing the intercourse of nations with each other as persons.

JUS GLADIL. The right of the sword; the executive power of the law; the right, power, or prerogative of punishing for crime. 4 Bl.Comm. 177.

JUS HABENDI. The right to have a thing. The right to be put in actual possession of property. Lewin, Trusts, 585.

JUS HABENDI ET RETINENDI. A right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage.

JUS HIEREDITATIS. The right of inheritance.

JUS HAUERIENDI. In the civil and old English law. The right of drawing water. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 1.

JUS HONORARIUM. The body of Roman law, which was made up of edicts of the supreme magistrates, particularly the praetors.

JUS HONORUM. In Roman law. The right of holding offices. See Jus Suffragii.

JUS IMAGINIS. In Roman law. The right to use or display pictures or statues of ancestors; somewhat analogous to the right, in English law, to bear a coat of arms.

JUS IMMUNITATIS. In the civil law. The law of immunity or exemption from the burden of public office. Dig. 50, 6.

JUS IN PERSONAM. A right against a person; a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something.

JUS IN RE. A right in a thing. Denver Joint Stock Land' Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 847, 140 A.L.R. 1270. A right existing in a person with respect to an article or subject of property, Inherent in his relation to it, implying complete ownership with possession, and available against all the world. See Jus ad Rem.

JUS IN RE ALIENA. An easement on servitude, or right in, or arising out of, the property of another.

JUS IN RE INHERIT OSSIBUS USUFRUCTUARI. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the usufructuary.

JUS IN RE PROPRIA. The right of enjoyment which is incident to full ownership or property, and is often used to denote the full ownership or property itself. It is distinguished from jus in re aliena, which is a mere easement or right in or over the property of another.

JUS INCOCITUM. An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws. Bowyer, Mod.Civil Law, 33.

JUS INDIVIDUUM. An individual or indivisible right; a right incapable of division. 36 Eng.Law & Eq. 25.

JUS ITAILICUM. A term of the Roman law descriptive of the aggregate of rights, privileges, and franchises possessed by the cities and inhabitants of Italy, outside of the city of Rome, and afterwards extended to some of the colonies and provinces of the empire, consisting principally in the right to have a free constitution, to be exempt from the land tax, and to have the title to the land regarded as Quiritarian property. See Gibbon, Rom.Emp. c. xvii; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 43.

JUS ITINERIS. In Roman law. A rural servitude giving to a person the right to pass over an adjoining field, on foot or horseback.

JUS JURANDI FORMA VERBIS DIFFERT, RE CONVENIT; HUNC ENIM SENSUM HABERE DEBET: UT DEUS -INVOCETUR. Grot. de Jur. B., 1. 2, c. 13, § 10. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense: that the Deity is invoked.

JUS LATH. In Roman law. The right of Latium or of the Latins.

The principal privilege of the Latins seems to have been the use of their own laws, and their not being subject to the edicts of the praetor, and that they had occasional access to the freedom of Rome, and a participation in her sacred rites. Butl.Hor.Jur. 41.

TUS LATIUM. In Roman law. A rule of law applicable to magistrates in Latium.

It was either major Latium or minor Latium,—the major Latium raising to the dignity of Roman citizen not only the magistrate himself, but also his wife and children; the minor Latium raising to that dignity only the magistrate himself. Brown.

JUS LEGITIMUM. A legal right. In the civil law. A right which was enforceable in the ordinary course of law. 2 B1.Comm. 328.

JUS LIBERORUM. In Roman law. The privilege conferred upon a woman who had three or four children.

Another author defines this privilege as one by which exemption was given from all troublesome offices. Brown, L.Dict.

In order that she should be able to take all the property given her by will, she must have had this privilege conferred upon her. Sohm, Inst.Rom.L. § 86. In the time of Hadrian, a decree was made conferring upon ft mother, as such, who, being an ingenua, had the jus trium liberorum, or being a libertina, the jus quattuor liberorum, a civil law right to succeed her intestate children; id. § 98.

JUS MARITI. The right of a husband; especially the right which a husband acquires to his wife's movable estate by virtue of the marriage. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 1, p. 63.

JUS MERUM. In old English law. Mere or bare right; the mere right of property in lands, without either possession or even the right of possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 197; Bract. fol. 23.

JUS MORIBUS CONSTITUTUM, See Jus Ex Non Scripto.

JUS NATURE. The law of nature. See Jus Naturale.

JUS NATURALE. The natural law, or law of nature; law, or legal principles, supposed to be discoverable by the light of nature or abstract reasoning, or to be taught by nature to all nations and men alike; or law supposed to govern men and peoples in a state of nature, i. e., in advance of organized governments or enacted laws.

This concept originated with the philosophical jurists of Rome, and was gradually extended until the phrase came to denote a supposed basis or substratum common to all systems of positive law, and hence to be found, in greater or less purity, in the laws of all nations. And, conversely, they held that if any rule or principle of law was observed in common by all peoples with whose systems they were acquainted, it must be a part of the jus naturale, or derived from it. Thus the phrases "jus naturale" and "jus gentium" came to be used interchangeably.

JUS NATURALE EST QUOD APUD HOMINES EANDEM HABET POTENTIAM. Natural right is that which has the same force among all mankind. 7 Coke, 12.

JUS NAVIGANDI. The right of navigating or navigation; the right of commerce by ships or by sea. Locc. de Jure Mar. lib. 1, c. 3.

JUS NECIS. In Roman law. The right of death, or of putting to death. A right which a father accordingly had over his children.

See Jus Vitae Necisque.

JUS NON HABENTI TUTE NON PARETUR. One who has no right cannot be safely obeyed. Hob. 146.

JUS NON PATITUR UT IDEM BIS SOLVATUR. Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.

JUS NON SACRUM. In Roman law. That portion of the jus publicum which regulated the duties of magistrates.

Non-sacred law; that which dealt with the duties of civil magistrates, the preservation of public order, and the rights and duties of persons in their relation to the state. Morey, Rom.L. 223.

It was analogous to that which would now be called the police power.

JUS NON SCRIPTUM. The unwritten law. 1 Bl. Comm. 64.

JUS OFFERENDI. In Roman law, the right of subrogation, that is, the right of succeeding to the lien and priority of an elder creditor on tendering or paying into court the amount due to him. See Mackeld. Rom.Law, § 355.

JUS ONERIS FERENDI. An urban servitude in the Roman Law, the owner of which had the right of supporting and building upon the house wall of another.

JUS PAPIRIANUM. The civil law of Papirius.

The title of the earliest collection of Roman leges curiae, said to have been made in the time of Tarquin, the last of the kings, by a pontifex maximus of the name of Sextus or Publius Papirius. Very few fragments of this collection now remain, and the authenticity of these has been doubted. Mackeld.Rom.Law, § 21.

JUS PASCENDI. In the civil and old English law. The right of pasturing cattle. Inst. 2, 3, 2; Bract. fols. 53b, 222.

JUS PATRONATUS. In English ecclesiastical law. The right of patronage; the right of presenting a clerk to a benefice. Blount.

A commission from the bishop, where two presentations are offered upon the same avoidance, directed usually to his chancellor and others of competent learning, who are to summon a jury of six clergymen and six laymen to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron. 3 Bl.Comm. 246; 3 Steph.Comm. 517.

JUS PERSONARUM. Rights of persons. Those rights which, in the civil law, belong to persons as such, or in their different characters and relations; as parents and children, masters and servants, etc.

JUS PCENITENDI. In Roman law, the right of rescission or revocation of an executory contract on failure of the other party to fulfill his part of the agreement. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 444.
JUS PORTUS. In maritime law. The right of port or harbor.

JUS POSSESSIONIS. The right of possession.

JUS POSSIDENDI. The right of possessing, which is the legal consequence of ownership. It is to be distinguished from the jus possessionis (q. v.), which is a right to possess which may exist without ownership.

JUS POSTLIMINII. In the Civil law. The right of postliminy; the right or claim of a person who had been restored to the possession of a thing, or to a former condition, to be considered as though he had never been deprived of it. Dig. 49, 15, 5; 3 Bl.Comm. 107, 210.

In International law. The right by which property taken by an enemy, and recaptured or rescued from him by the fellow-subjects or allies of the original owner, is restored to the latter upon certain terms. 1 Kent, Comm. 108.

JUS PRIESENS. In the civil law. A present or vested right; a right already completely acquired.

JUS PROJICIENDI. In the civil law. The name of the prcetor, as distinct from the leges, or standing laws. 3 Bl.Comm. 49. That kind of law which the prators introduced for the purpose of aiding, supplying, or correcting the civil law, for the public benefit. Dig. 1, 1, 7. Called, also, "jus honorarium," (q. v.).

JUS PRECARII. In the civil law. A right to a thing held for another, for which there was no remedy by legal action, but only by entreaty or request. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

JUS PRESENTATIONIS. The right of presentation.

JUS PRIVATUM. Private law; the law regulating the rights, conduct, and affairs of individuals, as distinguished from "public" law, which relates to the constitution and functions of government and the administration of criminal justice. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 124.

Also private ownership, or the right, title, or dominion of a private owner, as distinguished from "jus publicum," which denotes public ownership, or the ownership of property by the government, either as a matter of territorial sovereignty or in trust for the benefit and advantage of the general public. In this sense, a state may have a double right in given property, e. g., lands covered by navigable waters within its boundaries, including both "jus publicum," a sovereign or political title, and "jus privatum," a proprietary ownership. See Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 P. 277; G. L. Webster Co. v. Steelman, 172 Va. 342, 1 S.E.2d 305, 311.

JUS PROJICIENDI. In the civil law. The name of a servitude which consists in the right to build a projection, such as a balcony or gallery, from one’s house in the open space belonging to one’s neighbor, but without resting on his house. Dig. 50, 16, 242; Id. 8, 2, 2; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 317.

JUS PROPRIETATIS. The right of property, as distinguished from the jus possessionis or right of possession. Bract. fol. 3. Called by Bracton "jus merum," the mere right. Id.; 2 Bl.Comm. 197; 3 Bl.Comm. 19, 176.

JUS PROTEGENDE. In the civil law. The name of a servitude. It is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house. Dig. 50, 16, 242, 1; Id. 8, 2, 25; Id. 8, 5, 8, 5.

JUS PROTIMOSEOS. The right of pre-emption of a landlord in case the tenant wishes to dispose of his rights as a perpetual lessee. Sohm. Inst. Rom.L. § V. Pactum protimoseos was the right of pre-emption to the seller; i. e. in case the buyer should sell, he must sell to the former seller. Hunter. Rom. L., 503.

JUS PROVINCIARUM. A franchise conferred upon provincials much more limited than that conferred upon the people of Italy.

It has been described as "equivalent to the jus italicum respecting the freedom from land taxation which the latter right involved. In short, the provincials possessed no status as Roman citizens; and even their capacity of ownership in their own land was qualified by their tributary obligations to Rome. The civil incapacity of the provincials had reference, however, merely to their exclusion from the strictly legal rights sanctioned by the jus civile." Morey, Rom.L. 55.

JUS PUBLICUM. Public law, or the law relating to the constitution and functions of government and its officers and the administration of criminal justice. Also public ownership, or the paramount or sovereign territorial right or title of the state or government. See Jus Privatum.

It implies a right in a sovereign or public capacity to be exercised for the interest or benefit of the state or the public, as distinguished from the exercise in a proprietary capacity of a right of the sovereign or a right possessed by an individual in common with the public. G. L. Webster Co. v. Steelman, 172 Va. 342, 1 S.E.2d 305, 311.

Sovereign’s right of jurisdiction and dominion for governmental purposes over all lands and waters within its territorial limits, including tidal waters and their bottoms, is sometimes termed "jus publicum." Commonwealth v. City of Newport News, 158 Va. 521, 164 S.E. 689, 696.

JUS PUBLICUM ET PRIVATUM QUOD EX NATURELIBUS PR2ECEPTIS AUT GENTIUM AUT CIVILIBUS EST COLLECTUM; ET QUOD IN JURE SCRIPTO JUS APPELLATUR, ID IN LEGE ANGLIZE RECTUM ESSE DICITUR. Co. Litt. 185. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural principles, either of nations or in states; and that which in the civil law is called "jus," in the law of England is said to be "right."

JUS PUBLICUM PRIVATORUM PACTIS MUTANDUM NON POTEST. A public law or right cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons.

JUS QUIESITUM. A right to ask or recover; for example, in .an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus quiesitum in the obligee. 1 Bell, Comm. 323.

JUS QUIRITIUM. The old law of Rome, that was applicable originally to patricians only, and, under the Twelve Tables, to the entire Roman people, was so called, in contradistinction to the jus prcetorium, (q. v.,) or equity. Brown.
JUS QUO UNIVERSITATES UTUNTUR EST IDEM QUOD HABENT PRIVATI. The law which governs corporations is the same which governs individuals. Foster v. Essex Bank, 16 Mass. 265, 8 Am.Dec. 135.

JUS RECUPERANDI. The right of recovering lands.

JUS RELICTIE, In Scotch law. The right of a relict; the right or claim of a relict or widow to her share of her husband’s estate, particularly the movables. 2 Kames, Eq. 340; 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 1, p. 67.

JUS REPRESENTATION’S. The right of representing or standing in the place of another, or of being represented by another.

JUS RERUM. The law of things. The law regulating the rights and powers of persons over things; how property is acquired, enjoyed, and transferred.

JUS SACRUM. In Roman law. That portion of the public law which was concerned with matters relating to public worship and including the regulation of sacrifices and the appointment of priests. There was a general division of the jus publicum into jus sacrum and jus non sacrum (q. v.).

JUS SANGUINIS. The right of blood. See Jus Soli.

JUS SCRIPTUM, In English law. Written law, or statute law, otherwise called "lex scripta," as distinguished from the common law, "lex non scripta." 1 Bl.Comm. 62.

In Roman law. Written law. Inst. 1, 2, 3. All law that was actually committed to writing, whether it had originated by enactment or by custom, in contradistinction to such parts of the law of custom as were not committed to writing. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 126.

After stating that the Roman law was written and unwritten just as it was among the Greeks, Justinian adds “The written part consists of laws, plebiscite, senatus-consulte, enactments of emperors, edicts of magistrates, and answers of jurisprudents.” Sand.Inst.Just. 1, 2, 3. See Jus Ex Non Scripto.

JUS SINGULARE. In the civil law. A peculiar or individual rule, differing from the jus commune, or common rule of right, and established for some special reason. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 196.

JUS SOLI. The law of the place of one’s birth as contrasted with jus sanguinis, the law of the place of one’s descent or parentage. It is of feudal origin. Hershey, Int. L. 237.

JUS SPATIANDI. A right of way over land by the public by uses merely for the purposes of recreation and instruction.

It is usually limited to the cases of highways, parks, and squares. The public were denied any right in the grounds containing the ancient Druidical monuments at Stonehenge; Attorney-General V. Antrobus, [1905] 2 Ch. 188. See 19 Harv.L.Rev. 55. See Du Cange, Glossarium, for a definition under the word spatiare.

JUS STAPULAE. In old European law. The law of staple; the right of staple. A right or privilege of certain towns of stopping imported merchandise, and compelling it to be offered for sale in their own markets. Locc. de Jure Mar. lib. 1, c. 10.

JUS STILLICIDII VEL FLUMINIS RECIPIENDI, In Roman law. An urban servitude giving the owner a right to project his roof over the land of another or to open a house drain upon it.

JUS STRICTUM. Strict law; law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

JUS SUFFRAGII. In Roman law. The right of voting. This and the jus honorum (q. v.) were the public rights of the Roman citizen.

JUS SUPERVENIENS AUCTORI ACCRESCIT SUCCESSOR! A right growing to a possessor accrues to the successor. Halk. Lat. Max. 76.

JUS TERTII. The right of a third party.

A tenant, baillee, etc., who pleads that the title is in some person other than his landlord, bailor, etc., is said to set up a jus tertii. Dempsey Oil & Gas Co. v. Citizens’ Nat. Bank, 110 Oki. 39, 235 P. 1104, 1107.

JUS TESTAMENTORUM PERTINET ORDINARIO. Y. B. 4 Hen. VII., 13b. The right of testaments belongs to the ordinary.

JUS TIGNI IMMITTENDI. In Roman law. An urban servitude which gave the right of inserting a beam into the wall of another.

JUS TRIPERTITUM. In Roman law. A name applied to the Roman law of wills, in the time of Justinian, on account of its three-fold derivation, viz., from the praetorian edict, from the civil law, and from the imperial constitutions. Maine, Anc. Law, 207.

JUS TRIPLEX EST,—PROPIETATIS, POSSESSIONS, ET POSSIBILITATIS. Right is three-fold,—of property, of possession, and of possibility.

JUS TRIUM LIBERORUM. In Roman law. A right or privilege allowed to the parent of three or more children. 2 Kent, Comm. 85; 2 Bl.Comm. 247. These privileges were an exemption from the trouble of guardianship, priority in bearing offices, and a treble proportion of corn. Adams, Rom. Ant. (Am. Ed.) 227.

JUS UTENDI. The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi. 3 Toullier, no. 86.

JUS VENANDI ET PISCANDI. The right of hunting and fishing.

JUS VENDIT QUOD USUS APPROBAVIT. Elsem. Postn. 35. The law dispenses what use has approved.
JUS VITÆ NECISQUE. In Roman law. The right of life and death.

Originally a father, or his pater-familias if he was himself in domestic subjection, could decide—not arbitrarily, but judicially—whether or not to rear his child; and while this right became subject to certain restrictions, yet when the child had grown up, the father, in the exercise of his domestic jurisdiction, might visit his son's misconduct, both in private and public life, with such punishment as he thought fit; even banishment, slavery, or death. In the early Empire these rights became relaxed, and they disappeared in the Justinian law. Murihead, Roman Law, 28, 346, 417. See Patria Potestas.

JUS JURANDI FORMA VERBIS DIFFERT, RE CONVENIT; HUNC ENIM SENSUM HABERE DEBET, UT DEUS INVOCETUR. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense, that the Deity is invoked. Grotius, b. 2, c. 13, s. 10.

JUS JURANDUM. Lat. An oath.

JUS JURANDUM INTER ALIOS FACTUM NEC NOCERE NEO PRODESSE DEBET. An oath made between others ought neither to hurt nor profit. 4 Inst. 279.

JUST. In the sense of "joust," see Justs, infra.

"The words 'just' and 'justly' do not always mean 'just' and 'justly' in a moral sense, but they not unfrequently, in their connection with other words in a sentence, bear a very different signification. It is evident, however, that the word 'just' in the statute [requiring an affidavit for an attachment to state that plaintiff's claim is just] means 'just' in a moral sense; and from its isolation, being made a separate subdivision of the section, it is intended to mean 'morally just' in the most emphatic terms. The claim must be morally just, as well as legally just, in order to entitle a party to an attachment." Robinson v. Burton, 5 Kan. 300.

JUST BEYOND. Will directing erection of chapel "just beyond" the basin means barely beyond, scarcely beyond, or closely beyond, with the least practical space between it and the basin. Carroll v. Cave Hill Cemetery Co., 172 Ky. 204, 189 S.W. 186, 189.

JUST CAUSE. A cause outside legal cause, which must be based on reasonable grounds, and there must be a fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith. Dubois v. Gentry, 182 Tenn. 103, 184 S.W.2d 369, 371; Quick v. Southern Churchman Co., 171 Va. 403, 199 S.E. 489, 494, 495. Fair, adequate, reasonable cause. In re Municipal Garage in and for City of Utica, 141 Misc. 15, 252 N.Y.S. 18, 32. Legitimate cause; legal or lawful ground for action; such reasons as will suffice in law to justify the action taken. State v. Langford, 90 Or. 251, 176 P. 197, 202; State v. Donzi, 133 La. 925, 63 So. 405, 406; State v. Wohlfort, 123 Kan. 62, 254 P. 317, 320; Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 310 Mass. 528, 39 N.E.2d 87, 112, 124.

Under provision that no license shall be revoked without "just cause," the words imply that charges should be made and notice of hearing given and an opportunity to be heard afforded. Carroll v. California Horse Racing Board, 16 Cal.2d 164, 105 P.2d 110, 111.

JUST CAUSE OF PROVOCATION. That which will constitute the homicide murder in the second degree, as distinguished from a lawful provocation, which will reduce it to manslaughter. State v. McCracken, 341 Mo. 697, 108 S.W.2d 372, 376.

JUST COMPENSATION

To arrive at fair indemnity, the interests of the public and of the owner, and all the circumstances of the particular appropriation, should be taken into consideration. Lewis, Em.Dorn. § 462. And see Butler Hard Rubber Co. v. Newark, 61 N.J.L. 32, 40 A. 224; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U.S. 548, 17 S.Ct. 966, 42 L.Ed. 270; Newman v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 118 N.Y. 623, 23 N.E. 901, 7 L.R.A. 289. Evidence of reproduction cost of structures affected by condemnation, less depreciation, improvements made on the property, consequential damage to portions not appropriated, and the fair market value of the property taken as of the date of the appropriation, may be relevant in determining "just compensation," according to the situation in a particular case. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 277 N.Y. 452, 14 N.E.2d 789.

As regards public utility, just compensation is fair return on value of property. Fort Worth Gas Co. v. City of Fort Worth, D.C.Tex., 35 F.2d 743, 747; New York Edison Co. v. Maltbie, 150 N.Y. 452, 14 N.E.2d 789. To arrive at fair indemnity, the interests of the public and of the owner, and all the circumstances of the particular appropriation, should be taken into consideration. Lewis, Em.Dorn. § 462. And see Butler Hard Rubber Co. v. Newark, 61 N.J.L. 32, 40 A. 224; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U.S. 548, 17 S.Ct. 966, 42 L.Ed. 270; Newman v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 118 N.Y. 623, 23 N.E. 901, 7 L.R.A. 289. Evidence of reproduction cost of structures affected by condemnation, less depreciation, improvements made on the property, consequential damage to portions not appropriated, and the fair market value of the property taken as of the date of the appropriation, may be relevant in determining "just compensation," according to the situation in a particular case. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 277 N.Y. 452, 14 N.E.2d 789.

JUST DEBTS. As used in a will or a statute, this term means legal, valid, and incontestable obligations, not including such as are barred by the statute of limitations or voidable at the election of the party. See Burke v. Jones, 2 Ves. & B. 275; Peck v. Botsford, 7 Conn. 176, 18 Am. Dec. 92; Collamore v. Wilder, 19 Kan. 82; Smith v. Mayo, 9 Mass. 63, 6 Am. Dec. 28; Jones' Ex'r v. Jones, 275 Ky. 753, 122 S.W.2d 779, 780.

JUST TITLE. By the term "just title," in cases of prescription, is meant a title which the possessor may have received from any person whom he honestly believed to be the real owner, provided the title were such as to transfer the ownership of the property. Civ.Code La. art. 3484; Davis v. Green, 104 U.S. 400, 26 L.Ed. 757; Johnson v. Sugar, 163 La. 785, 112 So. 721, 722; B. Fernandez & Bros. v. Ayllon, 266 U.S. 144, 45 S.Ct. 52, 69 L.Ed. 209. One good against all the world. Virginia & West Virginia Coal Co. v. Charles, C.C.A. Va., 254 F. 379, 387.

JUST VALUE. In taxation, the fair, honest, and reasonable value of property, without exaggeration or depreciation; its actual market value. State v. Smith, 158 Ind. 543, 63 N.E. 214, 63 L.R.A. 686; Winnipiseogee Lake, etc., Co. v. Gilford, 67 N.H. 514, 35 A. 945. Correct, honest and true value. Fruit Growers Express Co. v. Brett, 94 Mont. 281, 22 P.2d 171.

JUSTA. In old English law. A certain measure of liquor, being as much as was sufficient to drink at once. Mon. Angl. t. 1, c. 149.

JUSTA CAUSA. In the civil law. A just cause; a lawful ground; a legal transaction of some kind. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 283.

JUSTICE, v. In old English practice. To do justice, to see justice done; to summon one to do justice.

JUSTICE, n. In common law. The title given in England to the judges of the king's bench and the common pleas, and in America to the judges of the supreme court of the United States and of the appellate courts of many of the states.

It is said that this word in its Latin form (justitia) was properly applicable only to the judges of common-law courts, while the term "justice" was used of ecclesiastical and other courts. See Leg.Hen. I, §§ 24, 63; Co. Litt. 71b.

The same title is also applied to some of the judicial officers of the lowest rank and jurisdiction, such as police justices and justices of the peace.

A term used in the United States and England to designate judicial officers and magistrates of every grade. School Dist. No. 18 v. Grubbs Special School Dist., 184 Ark. 863, 43 S.W.2d 765, 766.

In Feudal law. Jurisdiction; judicial cognizance of causes or offenses.

High justice was the jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. 1 Robertson's Car. V., appendix, note 23. Low justice was jurisdiction of petty offenses.

In Jurisprudence. The constant and perpetual disposition to render every man his due. Inst. 1, 1, pr.; 2 Inst. 56. See Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 528, 44 Am. Dec. 217; Collier v. Lindley, 203 Cal. 641, 266 P. 526, 530; The John E. Mulford, D.C. N.Y., 18 F. 455. The conformity of our actions and our will to the law. Toull. Droit Civil Fr. tit. pr. no. 5; Livingston Oil Corporation v. Henson, 90 Okl. 76, 215 P. 1057, 1059.

Commutative justice is that which should govern contracts. It consists in rendering to every man the exact measure of his dues, without regard to his personal worth or merits, i. e., placing all men on an equality. Distributive justice is that which should govern the distribution of rewards and punishments. It assigns to each the rewards which his personal merit or services deserve, or the proper punishment for his crimes. It does not consider all men as equally deserving or equally blameworthy, but discriminates between them, observing a just proportion and comparison. This distinction originated with Aristotle. (Eth.Nic. V.) See Fonbl.Eq. 3; Toull.Droit Civil Fr. tit. pre. no. 7.

In the most extensive sense of the word "justice" differs little from "virtue," for it includes within itself the whole circle of virtues. Yet the common distinction between them is that that which, considered positively and in itself, is called "virtue," when considered relatively and with respect to others has the name of "justice." But "justice," being in itself a part of "virtue," is confined to things simply good or evil, and consists in a man's taking such a proportion of them as he ought. Bouvier.
"Equity" and "Justice" are substantially equivalent terms, if not synonymous. In re Lessig's Estate, 6 N.Y. 52d 720, 721, 168 Misc. 889.

Under constitutional provision guaranteeing right to obtain justice, the "justice" to be administered by courts is not an abstract justice as conceived of by the judge but justice according to law or, as it is phrased in the constitution, "conformably to the laws." State ex rel. Department of Agriculture v. McCarthy, 238 Wis. 258, 299 N.W. 58, 64.

In Norman French. Amenable to justice. Kelham.

JUSTICE AYRES (or AIRES). In Scotch law. Circuits made by the judges of the justiciary courts, through the country, for the distribution of justice. Bell.

JUSTICE IN EYRE. From the old French word "eire," e., a journey. Those justices who in ancient times were sent by commission into various counties, to hear more especially such causes as were termed "pleas of the crown," were called "justices in eyre."

They differed from justices in oyer and terminer, inasmuch as the latter were sent to one place, and for the purpose of trying only a limited number of special causes; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the various counties, with a more indefinite and general commission. In some respects they resembled our present justices of assize, although their authority and manner of proceeding differed much from them. Brown.

In English law. Judges of record appointed by the crown to be justices within a certain district, (e. g., a county or borough,) for the conservation of the peace, and for the execution of divers things, comprehended within their commission and within divers statutes, committed to their charge. Weiss, 300 N.Y.S. 249, 254, 252 App. Div. 463. The essence of offense is the unlawful secret imprisonment. State v. Berry, 200 Wash. 495, 93 P.2d 782, 787, 792. Under the statutes of many states, one who enters another’s automobile and, without lawful authority, compels the driver against his will to drive to some other place, is guilty of kidnapping. Blashfield. Cyc. of Auto-mobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., § 5528.42.

KILDERKIN. A measure of eighteen gallons.

KILKETH. An ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry. Cowell.

KILL, n. A Dutch word, signifying a channel or bed of the river, and hence the river or stream itself. It is found used in this sense in descriptions of land in old conveyances. French v. Carhart, 1 N.Y. 96.

KILLED. The passive verb "to be killed" must generally impart to every one a meaning of some kind of external violence. City of Fort Smith v. Hairston, 196 Ark. 1005, 120 S.W.2d 689, 691.

KILLED INSTANTLY, in collision, may mean that death was instantaneous but not precisely coincidental with the impact. Cash v. Addington, 46 N.M. 451, 131 P.2d 265, 266; Justin v. Ketcham, 297 Mich. 592, 298 N.W. 294, 295.

KILLING BY MISADVENTURE. Accidental killing of a person where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminal carelessness or reckless conduct, State v. Dean, 2 W.W.Harr., Del., 290, 122 A. 448, 449; excusable homicide occurring where one engaged in doing lawful act, without intention to do harm and, with proper precaution to avoid danger, unfortunately kills another. State v. Phillips, 7 W.W.Harr. 544, 187 A. 108, 111.

KILLYTH-STALLION. A custom by which lords of manors were bound to provide a stallion for the use of their tenants’ mares. Spelman.

The primary and ordinary meaning of the word “kin” is related by ties of consanguinity, but the word “kin” is sometimes used in a general sense to include relationship by blood or by marriage. State v. Hooper, 140 Kan. 481, 37 P.2d 52.

KIND, Class, grade, or sort. City of St. Louis v. James Braudis Coal Co., Mo.App., 137 S.W.2d 668, 670. Genus; generic class; description. See In Kind.

KING. The sovereign, ruler, or chief executive magistrate of a state or nation whose constitution is of the kind called "monarchical" is thus named if a man; if it be a woman, she is called "queen."

The word expresses the idea of one who rules singly over a whole people or has the highest executive power; but the office may be either hereditary or elective, and the sovereignty of the king may or may not be absolute, according to the constitution of the country.

See Emperor.

KING CAN DO NO WRONG. This maxim means that the king is not responsible legally for aught he may please to do, or for any omission. Aust. Jur. sect. VI.

It does not mean that everything done by the government is just and lawful, but that whatever is exceptions in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the king, 2 Steph.Com., 11th ed. 486.

KING-CRAFT. The art of governing.

KINGDON. A country where an officer called a "king" exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. Wolff, Inst. Nat. § 994. In some kingdoms, the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a "queen."

KING-GELD. A royal aid; an escuage (q. v.).

KING'S ADVOCATE. An English advocate who holds, in the courts in which the rules of the canon and civil law prevail, a similar position to that which the attorney general holds in the ordinary courts, i.e., he acts as counsel for the crown in ecclesiastical, admiralty, and probate cases, and advises the crown on questions of international law. In order of precedence it seems that he ranks after the attorney general. 3 Steph. Comm. 275n.

KINGS-AT-ARMS. The principal herald of England was of old designated "king of the heralds," a title which seems to have been exchanged for "king-at-arms" about the reign of Henry IV.

The kings-at-arms at present existing in England are three—Garter, Clarenceux, and Norroy, besides Bath, who is not a member of the college. Scotland is placed under an officer called "Lyon King-at-Arms," and Ireland is the province of one named "Ulster." Wharton.

KING'S BENCH. The supreme court of common law in England, being so called because the king used formerly to sit there in person, the style of the court being "coram ipso rege."

It was called the "queen's bench" in the reign of a queen, and during the protectorate of Cromwell it was styled the "upper bench." It consisted of a chief justice and three puisne justices, who were by their office the sovereign conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of libel. It was a remnant of the aula regis, and was not originally fixed to any certain place, but might follow the king's person, though for some centuries past it usually sat at Westminster. It had a very extended jurisdiction both in criminal and civil causes; the former in what was called the "crown side" or "crown office," the latter in the "plea side," of the court. Its civil jurisdiction was gradually enlarged until it embraced all species of personal actions. Since the judicature acts, this court constitutes the "king's bench division" of the "high court of justice." See 3 Bl.Com. 41-43.

KING'S CHAMBERS. Those portions of the seas, adjacent to the coasts of Great Britain, which are inclosed within headlands so as to be cut off from the open sea by imaginary straight lines drawn from one promontory to another.

KING'S CORONER AND ATTORNEY. An officer of the court of king's bench, usually called "the master of the crown office," whose duty it is to file informations at the suit of a private subject by direction of the court. 4 Bl. Comm. 308, 309; 4 Steph. Comm. 374, 378.

KING'S COUNSEL. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar and selected to be the king's counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They must not be employed against the crown without special leave, which is, however, always granted, at a cost of about nine pounds. 3 Bl. Comm. 27.

KING'S EVIDENCE. When several persons are charged with a crime, and one of them gives evidence against his accomplices, on the promise of being granted a pardon, he is said to be admitted the king's or (in America) state's evidence. 4 Steph. Comm. 395; Sweet.

KING'S PROCTOR. A proctor or solicitor representing the crown in the former practice of the courts of probate and divorce.

In petitions for dissolution of marriage, or for declarations of nullity of marriage, the king's proctor may, under the direction of the attorney general, and by leave of the court, intervene in the suit for the purpose of proving collusion between the parties. Mozley & Whitley.

KING'S REMEMBRANCER. An officer of the central office of the English supreme court.

Formerly he was an officer of the exchequer, and had important duties to perform in protecting the rights of the crown, e.g., by instituting proceedings for the recovery of land by writs of intrusion, (q. v.) and for the recovery of legacy and succession duties; but of late years administrative changes have lessened the duties of the office. Sweet.

He was at the head of the department which had charge of all revenue suits, and of matters pertaining to the office of sheriff. He attended as the officer of the king's bench when the lord mayor made his appearance on November 9th, and as representing the old court of exchequer when the city of London did suit and service in discharge of quit-rents for certain lands anciently held under the crown. He presided at the Trial of the Pyx, the assaying and weighing of the coins of the realm. See Remembrances of Sir F. Pollock.

KING'S SILVER. In old English practice. A fine due the king pro licentia concordandi, (for leave to agree,) in the process of levying a fine. 5 Coke, 39, 43; 2 Inst. 511; 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

KING'S WIDOW. In feudal law. A widow of the king's tenant in chief, who was obliged to take oath in chancery that she would not marry without the king's leave.

KINSFOLK. Relations; those who are of the same family.

KINSHOTE. In Saxon law. A composition or satisfaction paid for killing a kinsman. Spelman.
KINSMAN. A man of the same race or family. Wood v. Mitcham, 92 N.Y. 379.

KINSWOMAN. A female relation.

KINTAL, or KINTLE. A hundred pounds in weight. See Quintal.

KIRBY'S QUEST. In English law. An ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the exchequer, being an inquisition or survey of all the lands in England, taken in the reign of Edward I. by John de Kirby, his treasurer. Blount; Cowell.

KIRK. In Scotch law. A church; the church; the established church of Scotland.

KIRK-OFFICER. The beadle of a church in Scotland.

KIRK-MOTE. A meeting of parishioners on church affairs.

KIRK-SESSION. A parochial church court in Scotland, consisting of the ministers and elders of each parish.

KISSING THE BOOK. The ceremony of touching the lips to a copy of the Bible, used in administering oaths. It is the external symbol of the witness' acknowledgment of the obligation of the oath.

KIST. In Hindu law. A stated payment; installment of rent.

It is said to be often shown in cases of women, laboring under their peculiar diseases or of those far advanced in pregnancy. A sharp distinction is made between kleptomaniacs and the tendency to steal so commonly observed in the well defined forms of insanity; the former is a defective mental characteristic approaching the confines of insanity on one subject alone, while the individual, on all other subjects, is perfectly sane. It differs from shoplifting in that the shoplifter steals for a purpose, and only those articles which are of value, while the kleptomaniac takes goods of any description, often of no use to herself and with no motive for their possession; 4 Am.Lawy. 533.

KNACKER. One who slaughters useless or diseased animals or deals in such. Cent. Dict. A regular occupation in London and other large cities, regulated by act of parliament August 18, 1911.

KNAVE. A rascal; a false, tricky, or deceitful person. The word originally meant a boy, attendant, or servant, but long-continued usage has given it its present signification.

KNAVESHIP. A portion of grain given to a mill servant from tenants who were bound to grind their grain at such mill.

KNEEL. To bend the knees in worship without resting on them is to kneel. 36 L.J.Ecc. 10.

KNIGHT. In English law. The next personal dignity after the nobility.

Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the Garter, instituted by Richard I. and improved by Edward III. in 1344; next follows a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV., and revived by George I.; and they were so called from a ceremony of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. 1 Bl.Comm. 403.

KNIGHTENGUILD. An ancient guild or society formed by King Edgar.

KNIGHTHOOD. The rank, order, character, or dignity of a knight.

KNIGHT-MARSHAL. In English law. An officer in the royal household who has jurisdiction and cognizance of offenses committed within the household and verge, and of all contracts made therein, a member of the household being one of the parties. Wharton.

KNIGHTS BACHELORS. In English law. The most ancient, though lowest, order of knighthood. 1 Bl. Comm. 404.

KNIGHTS BANNERET. In English law. Those created by the sovereign in person on the field of battle. They rank, generally, after knights of the Garter. 1 Bl. Comm. 403.

KNIGHT'S FEE. The determinate quantity of land, (held by an estate of inheritance,) or of annual income therefrom, which was sufficient to maintain a knight.

In the time of Henry II. the estate was estimated at £20 a year; but Lord Coke in his time it to be an estate of 680 acres. See 1 Bl.Comm. 404, 410; 2 Bl.Comm. 62; Co.Litt. 69a; 1 Poll. & Malt'. 232.

KNIGHTS OF ST. MICHAEL AND ST. GEORGE. An English order of knighthood, instituted in 1818.

KNIGHTS OF ST. PATRICK. Instituted in Ireland by George III., A. D. 1763. They have no rank in England.

KNIGHTS OF THE CHAMBER. Those created in the sovereign's chamber in time of peace, not in the field. 2 Inst. 666.

KNIGHTS OF THE GARTER. See Garter.
KNIGHTS

KNIGHTS OF THE POST. A term for hireling witnesses.

KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE. In English law. Members of parliament representing counties or shires, in contradistinction to citizens or burgesses, who represent boroughs or corporations.

A knight of the shire is so called, because, as the terms of the writ for election still require, it was formerly necessary that he should be a knight. This restriction was necessary that he should be a knight. This restriction was abolished at the restoration, by the statute of the writ for election still require, it was formerly necessary that he should be a knight. This restriction was abolished at the restoration, by the statute of 20 Geo. 3, c. 20, which represents boroughs or corporations.

KNIGHTS OF THE POST. A term for hireling witnesses.

KNIGHTS OF THE THISTLE. A Scottish order of knighthood. This order is said to have been instituted by Achalus, king of Scotland, A. D. 819. The better opinion, however, is that it was instituted by James V. in 1534, was revived by James VII. (James II. of England) in 1687, and reestablished by Queen Anne in 1703. They have no rank in England. Wharton.

KNIGHT'S SERVICE. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand.

For every knight's fee, a knight was bound to attend the king in his wars forty days in a year, in which space of time a campaign was generally finished. If a man only held half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend a half of the campaign, and so in proportion. But this personal service, in process of time, grew into pecuniary communications, or aids; until at last, with the military part of the feudal system, it was abolished at the restoration, by the statute of 12 Car. II. c. 24. 1 Bla.Com. 410; 2 id. 62; Will. Real Pr. 144; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 230.

KNock Down. To assign to a bidder at an auction by a knock or blow of the hammer.

Property is said to be "knocked down" when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale. "Knocked down" and "struck off" are synonymous terms. Sherwood v. Reade, 7 Hill, N.Y., 439.

KNOT. In seamen's language, a "knot" is a division of the log-line serving to measure the rate of the vessel's motion.

The number of knots which run off from the reel in half a minute shows the number of miles the vessel sails in an hour. Hence when a ship goes 8 nautical miles an hour 0.5 a minute shows the number of miles the vessel sails in an hour. Hence when a ship goes 8 nautical miles an hour.

Knowledge may be imputed, when the means of knowledge exists, known and accessible to the party, and capable of communicating positive information. Smith v. Industrial Acc. Commission of California, 174 Cal. 199, 162 P. 636, 637; Scheckells v. Ice Plant Mining Co., Mo.App., 180 S.W. 12, 15; Hopkins v. McCarthy, 121 Me. 27, 115 A. 513, 515. However closely actual notice may, in many instances, approximate knowledge, and constructive notice may be its equivalent in effect, there may be actual notice without knowledge; and, when constructive notice is made the test to determine priorities of right, it may fall far short of knowledge. Cleveland Woolen Mills v. Sibert, 21 Ala. 140, 1 So. 773; Dodge v. Grain Shippers’ Mut. Fire Ins. Ass’n, 176 Iowa 316, 157 N.W. 955, 961; Stanton v. Hawkins, 41 R.I. 501, 103 A. 229, 230. Thus, oral notice to employer by employe of injury is not “knowledge” of the injury, excusing employe’s failure to give notice of injury required by Workmen’s Compensation Act. In re Brown, 228 Mass. 31, 116 N.E. 897, 898; In re Simmons, 117 Me. 175, 103 A. 68.

“Knowledge” of contents of an instrument must include understanding of its actual contents. Mitchell v. Slye, 137 Md. 89, 111 A. 814, 819.

Law regards as “knowledge” reckless misrepresentation, with intent to deceive, about that which party pretended to know but knew nothing. Holt v. Gloer, 44 Ga.App. 685, 162 S.E. 663, 664.

Carnal knowledge. See Carnal Knowledge.

Knowledge of another’s peril. One has “knowledge of peril of another,” within doctrine of discovered peril, whenever it reasonably appears from the known facts and circumstances that the latter is pursuing a course which will probably terminate in serious bodily injury to him, and that he probably will pursue it to the end. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Wagner, Tex.Com. App., 298 S.W. 552, 554.

Knowledge of law includes knowledge of the decisions of the courts, which are part of the law. Spitzer v. Board of Trustees for Regina Public School Dist. No. 4, of Saskatchewan, C.C.A.Ohio, 267 F. 121, 126.

Personal knowledge. Knowledge of the truth in regard to a particular fact or allegation, which is original, and does not depend on information or hearsay. Personal knowledge of an allegation in an answer is personal knowledge of its truth or falsity; and if the allegation is a negative one, this necessarily includes a knowledge of the truth or falsity of the allegation denied. West v. Home Ins. Co., C.C.Or., 18 F. 622.

KNOWN. Familiar; perceived; recognized; understood; especially, when used absolutely, familiar to all; generally understood or perceived, and term may, according to context, refer to both actual and constructive knowledge. Wolf v. Mallincrodt Chemical Works, 336 Mo. 746, 81 S.W.2d 323, 333; McCullough v. National Bank of Union City, 127 Pa.Super. 452, 193 A. 65, 66.

KNOWN HEIRS. In a statute relating to the sale of property of unknown heirs, it has been held to mean those persons who are known, and whose right to inherit, or the extent of whose right to inherit, is dependent on the non-existence of other persons nearer or as near as the ancestor in the line of descent. People v. Ryder, 65 Hun 175, 19 N.Y.S. 977.

KNOWN-MEN. A title formerly given to the Lollards. Cowell.

KORAN. The Mohammedan book of faith. It contains both ecclesiastical and secular laws.

KULEANA. The Hawaiian term “kuleana” means a small area of land, such as were awarded in fee by the Hawaiian monarch, about the year 1850, to all Hawaiians who made application therefor. De Fries v. Scott, C.C.A.Hawaii, 268 F. 952, 953.

KUT-ItUBALA. In Hindu law. A mortgage-deed or deed of conditional sale, being one of the customary deeds or instruments of security in India as declared by regulation of 1806, which regulates the legal proceedings to be taken to enforce such a security. It is also called “Byebil-Wuffa.” Wharton.

KYMORTHA. A Welsh term for a waster, rhym-er, minstrel, or other vagabond who makes assemblies and collections. Barring. Ob. St. 360.

KYTH. Sax. Kin or kindred.
L. This letter, as a Roman numeral, stands for the number "fifty." It is also used as an abbreviation for "law," "liber," (a book) "lord," and some other words of which it is the initial.

L. 5. An abbreviation of "Long Quinto," one of the parts of the Year Books.

L. C. An abbreviation which may stand either for "Lord Chancellor," "Lower Canada," or "Leading Cases."

L. J. An abbreviation for "Law Judge;" also for "Law Journal."

L. L. (also L. Lat.) and L. F. (also L. Fr.) are used as abbreviations of the terms "Law Latin" and "Law French."

L. R. An abbreviation for "Law Reports."

LL. The reduplicated form of the abbreviation "L." for "law," used as a plural. It is generally used in citing old collections of statute law; as "LL. Hen. I."

LL.B., LL.M., and LL.D. Abbreviations used to denote, respectively, the three academic degrees in law,—bachelor, master, and doctor of laws.

LA. Fr. The. The definite article in the feminine gender. Occurs in some legal terms and phrases; as "Termes de la Ley," terms of the law.

LA. Fr. There. An adverb of time and place; whereas.

LA CHAMBRE DES ESTEILLES. The star-chamber.

LA CONSCIENCE EST LA PLUS CHANGEANTE DES REGIES. Conscience is the most changeable of rules.

LA LEY VOCT PLUS TOST SUFFER UN MISCHEIFE QUE UN INCONVENIENCE. The law will sooner suffer a mischief than an inconvenience. Litt. § 231. It is held for an inconvenience that any of the maxims of the law should be broken, though a private man suffer loss. Co. Litt. 152b.

L’OBLIGATION SANS CAUSE, OU SUR UNE FAUSSE CAUSE, OU SUR CAUSE ILLICITE, NE PEUT AVOIR AUCUN EFET. An obligation without consideration, or upon a false consideration (which fails), or upon unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect. Code 3. 3. 4; Chitty, Contr. 11th Am. ed. 25, note.

L’OU LE LAY DONE CHOSE, LA CEO DONE REMEDIE A VENER A CEO. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover. 2 Rolle 17.

LAAS. In old records. A net, gin, or snare.

LABEL. Anything appended to a larger writing, as a codicil; a narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writ, in order to hold the appending seal.

An affixation to or markings on a manufactured article, giving information as to its nature or quality, or the contents of a package or container, name of the maker, etc. See State v. Reickenbach, 235 Iowa 731, 17 N.W.2d 530, 531; Higgins v. Keuffel, 140 U.S. 428, 11 S.Ct. 731, 35 L.Ed. 470; Burke v. Cassin, 45 Cal. 481, 13 Am.Rep. 204; U._S. v. Skilken, D.C.Ohio, 293 F. 916, 919.

A copy of a writ in the exchequer. 1 Tidd, Pr. 156.

A slip, mark or tag of paper, or other material. National Battery Co. v. Western Molded Products Co., D.C.Cal., 39 F.Supp. 954, 956.

LABINA. In old records. Watery land.

LABOR. Work; toil; service.

A Spanish land measure, in use in Mexico and formerly in Texas, equivalent to 177½ acres.

Continued exertion, of the more onerous and inferior kind, usually and chiefly consisting in protracted expenditure of muscular force. It is used in this sense in several legal phrases, such as "a count for work and labor," "wages of labor," etc., and is commonly construed as having such meaning when used in statutes giving liens to laborers, Road Supply & Metal Co. v. Bechtelheimer, 119 Kan. 560, 240 P. 846, 847; Stuart v. Camp Carson Mining & Power Co., 84 Or. 702, 165 P. 359, 362; Beakley v. Lind, Tex.Civ.App., 32 S.W.2d 671, 672; and in the Immigration Act excluding aliens coming to the United States under contract, "to perform labor." Ex parte Aird, D.C.Pa., 276 F. 954, 957; U. S. v. Union Bank of Canada, C.C.A.N.Y., 262 F. 91, 93. For "Farm Labor," see that title.

Labor Organization. A combination of workmen usually, but not necessarily, of the same trade or of several allied trades, for securing by united action, the most favorable conditions as regards wages, hours of labor, etc., for its members. Keith Theatre v. Vachon, 134 Me. 392, 187 A. 490; People v. Distributors Division, Smoked Fish Workers Union, Local No. 20377, 169 Misc. 255, 7 N.Y.S.2d 185, 187.

Laboraris. An ancient writ against persons who refused to serve and do labor, and who had no means of living; or against such as, having served in the winter, refused to serve in the summer. Reg. Orig. 189.

Conduct of party which has placed another party in a situation where his rights will be impeded and his defenses embarrased is a basis of laches. State v. Abernathy, 159 Tenn. 175, 17 S.W.2d 17, 19.

Laches requires an element of estoppel or neglect which has operated to prejudice of defendant. Scarborough v. Pickens, 26 App.Tenn. 213, 170 S.W.2d 585, 588; Mattison-Greenlee Service Corporation v. Cuhlane, D.C.Ill., 20 F. Supp. 882, 884.

"Limitations" and "laches" are not synonymous; but "laches" signifies the fixed statutory period within which an action may be brought for some act done to preserve a right, while "laches" signifies delay independent of statute. In re Van Tassel's Will, 119 Misc. 478, 496 N.Y.S. 491, 494.

LACHES, ESTOPPEL BY. A failure to do something which should be done or to claim or enforce a right at a proper time. Hutchinson v. Kenney, C.C.A.N.C., 27 F.2d 254, 256. A neglect to do something which one should do, or to seek to enforce a right at a proper time. Jett v. Jett, 171 Ky. 548, 188 S.W. 669, 672. A species of "equitable estoppel" or "estoppel by matter in pais." See titles "Equitable Estoppel" and "In Pais, Estoppel In".

An element of the doctrine is that the defendant's alleged change of position for the worse must have been induced by or resulted from the conduct, misrepresentation, or silence of the plaintiff. Coyle v. Coyle, 184 Md. 126, 40 A.2d 374, 379. Delay in enforcement of rights until condition of other party has become so changed that he cannot be restored to his former state. Wisdom's Adm'r v. Sims, 284 Ky. 258, 144 S.W.2d 232, 235, 236; Oak Lawn Cemetery of Baltimore County v. Baltimore County Com'r, 174 Md. 356, 198 A. 605, 605, 115 A.L.R. 1478. Essence of "laches" is estoppel. Burke v. Gunther, 128 N.J. Eq. 565, 17 A.2d 481, 487. Laches is a species of estoppel. Bankers' Trust Co. v. Rood, 211 Iowa 289, 233 N.W. 794, 802, 73 A.L.R. 1421; Stewart v. Pelt, 198 Ark. 776, 131 S.W.2d 644, 648. To create "estoppel by laches" party sought to be estopped must with knowledge of transaction have done something which one should do, or to seek to enforce a right at a proper time. This office with them.

LADING, BILL OF. See Bill.

LAITY. In English law. Those persons who do not make a part of the clergy.

They are divided into three states: (1) Civil, including all the nation, except the clergy, the army, and navy, and subdivided, into the nobility and the commonality; (2) military; (3) maritime, consisting of the navy. Wharton.

LAIZ, LEEZ (0. Fr.). A legate. Kelh.

LAK, See Lac.

LAKE. A considerable body of standing water in a depression of land or expanded part of a river; an inland body of water or naturally enclosed basin serving to drain surrounding country; or a body of water of considerable size surrounded by land; a widened portion of a river or a lagoon. Wood v. Maitland, 169 Misc. 484, 8 N. Y.S.2d 146, 150.

Body of water, more or less, stagnant, in which the water is supplied from drainage. Amerada Petroleum Corporation v. State Mineral Board, 203 La. 473, 14 So.2d 61, 68, 69. An inland body of water of considerable size occupying natural basin or depression in earth's surface below ordinary drainage level of region. Keener v. Sharp, Mo.App., 95 S.W.2d 648, 652. A large body of water, contained in a depression of the earth's surface, and supplied from the drainage of a more or less extended area. Webster. See Jones v. Lee, 77 Mich. 35, 43 N.W. 855; Nepeanauk Club v. Wilson, 96 Wis. 290, 71 N.W. 661.

The fact that there is a current from a higher to a lower level does not make that a river which would otherwise be a lake; and the fact that a river swells out into broad, pond-like sheets, with a current, does not make that a lake which would otherwise be a river. State v. Gilman, 14 N.H. 477.

LAMB. A sheep, ram or ewe under the age of one year. 4 Car. & P. 216.

LAMBARD'S ARCHAIONOMIA. A work printed in 1568, containing the Anglo-Saxon laws, those of William the Conqueror, and of Henry I.

LAMBARD'S ARCHAIANOMIA. A work printed in 1568, containing the Anglo-Saxon laws, those of William the Conqueror, and of Henry I.

LAMBARD'S EIRENARCHA. A work upon the office of a justice of the peace, which, having gone through two editions, one in 1579, the other in 1581, was reprinted in English in 1599.

LAMBARTH DEGREE. In English law. A degree conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury, in prejudice of the universities. 3 Steph.Comm. 65; 1 Bl.Comm. 381.

LAME DUCK. A cant term on the stock exchange for a person unable to meet his engagements.

LAMMAS DAY. The 1st of August. It is one of the Scotch quarter days, and is what is called a "conventional term."
LAND is or includes the solid material of the earth, whatever may be the ingredients of which it is composed, whether soil, rock, or other substance. Civ.Code Cal. § 659; Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 296.

Philosophically, it seems more correct to say that the word "land" means, in law, as in the vernacular, the soil, or portion of the earth's crust; and to explain or justify such expressions as that "whoever owns the land owns the buildings above and the minerals below," upon the view, not that these are within the extension of the term "land," but that they are so connected with it that by rules of law they pass by a conveyance of the land. This view makes "land," as a term, narrower in signification than "realty;" though it would allow an instrument speaking of land to operate co-extensively with one granting really or real property by either of those terms. But many of the authorities use the expression "land" as including these incidents to the soil. Abbott.

The term "land" may be used interchangeably with "property;" it may include anything that may be classed as real estate or real property. Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 297.

LAND CERTIFICATE. An obligation of government entitling owner to secure designated quantity of land by following the requirements of law. State v. Balli, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 522, 538.

Upon the registration of freehold land under the English land transfer act, 1875, a certificate is given to the registered r-orriector, and similarly upon every transfer of registered land. This registration supersedes the necessity of any further registration in the register counties. Sweet.
LAND

It contains a description of the land as it appears on the register and the name and address of the proprietor, and is prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein set forth.

LAND COP. The sale of land which was evidenced in early English law by the transfer of a rod or festuca (q.v.) as a symbol of possession which was handed by the seller to the reeve and by the reeve to the purchaser. The conveyance was made in court, it is supposed, for securing better evidence of it, and barring the claims of expectant heirs; Mull. Dom. 232.

LAND COURT. In American law. A court formerly existing in St. Louis, Mo., having a limited territorial jurisdiction over actions concerning real property, and suits for dower, partition, etc.

LAND DAMAGES. See Damages.

LAND DEPARTMENT. That office of the United States government which has jurisdiction and charge of the public lands, including the secretary of the interior and the commissioner of the general land office and their subordinate officers, and being in effect the department of the interior considered with reference to its powers and duties concerning the public lands. See U. S. v. Winona & St. P. R. Co., Minn., 67 F. 956, 15 C.C.A. 96; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Barden, C.C.Mont., 46 F. 617.

LAND DISTRICT. A division of a state or territory, created by federal authority, in which is located a United-States land office, with a "register of the land office" and a "receiver of public money," for the disposition of the public lands within the district. See U. S. v. Smith, C.C.Or., 11 F. 491.

LAND GABEL. A tax or rent issuing out of land. Spelman says it was originally a penny for every house. This land-gabel, or land-gavel, in the register of Domesday, was a quit-rent for the site of a house, or the land whereon it stood; the same with what we now call "ground-rent." Wharton.

LAND GRANT. A donation of public lands to a subordinate government, a corporation, or an individual, as, from the United States to a state, or to a railroad company to aid in the construction of its road.

LAND, LAW OF. See Law of the Land.

LAND OFFICES. Government offices, subordinate to the general land office, established in various parts of the United States, for the transaction of local business relating to the survey, location, settlement, pre-emption, and sale of the public lands. See General Land Office.

LAND—POOR. The term generally means that a man has a great deal of unproductive land, and perhaps is obliged to borrow money to pay taxes; but a man "land-poor" may be largely responsible. Matteson v. Blackmer, 46 Mich. 397, 9 N.W. 445.

LAND—REEVE. A person whose business it is to overlook certain parts of a farm or estate; to attend not only to the woods and hedge-timber, but also to the state of the fences. gates, buildings, private roads, driftways, and water-courses; and likewise to the stocking of commons, and encroachments of every kind, as well as to prevent or detect waste and spoil in general, whether by the tenants or others; and to report the same to the manager or land steward. Enc. Lond.

LAND REVENUES. This term denotes income derived from crown lands in Great Britain.

These lands have been so largely granted away to subjects that they are now contracted within very narrow limits. The crown was so much impoverished in this manner by William III, that the stat. 1 Anne, c. 7, § 5, was passed, which, with stat. 34 George III, c. 75, which amends and continues it, makes void all grants or leases from the ground of royal manors or other possessions connected with land for a period exceeding thirty-one years, or three lives. Long prior to this a Scottish stat. 1445, c. 41, had made necessary the consent of parliament in case of the alienation of crown property. It is said that none of these statutes have succeeded in checking the practice. Early at the beginning of the reign of George III, the hereditary crown revenues derived from escheats, manors held in capite, estrays, fines, etc., were surrendered by the king to the general funds, and in the place of them he received a specified sum annually for the civil list.

LAND STEWARD. A person who overlooks or has the management of a farm or estate.

LAND TAX. A tax laid upon the legal- or beneficial owner of real property, and apportioned upon the assessed value of his land. A tax on land. Texas Co. v. Moynier, 129 Cal.App. 738, 19 P.2d 280, 282.

LAND TENANT. The person actually in possession of land; otherwise styled the "terre-tenant."

LAND TITLES AND TRANSFER ACT. An English statute (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87) providing for the establishment of a registry for titles to real property, and making sundry provisions for the transfer of lands and the recording of the evidences thereof. It presents some analogies to the recording laws of the American states.

LAND WAITER. In English law. An officer of the customhouse, whose duty is, upon landing any merchandise, to examine, taste, weigh, or measure it, and to take an account thereof.

In some ports they also execute the office of a coast waiter. They are likewise occasionally styled "searchers" and are to attend and join with the patent searcher in the execution of all cockets for the shipping of goods to be exported to foreign parts; and, in cases where drawbacks on bounties are to be paid to the merchant on the exportation of any goods, they, as well as the patent searchers, are to certify the shipping thereof on the debentures. Enc. Lond.

LAND WARRANT. A warrant issued at the local land offices of the United States to purchasers of public lands, on the surrender of which at the general land office at Washington, they receive a conveyance from the general government.

The evidence which the state, on good consideration, gives of which the person therein named is entitled to the quantity of land therein specified, the bounds and description of which the owner of the warrant may fix by entry and survey, in the section of country set apart for its location and satisfaction. Neal v. President, etc., of East Tennessee College, 6 Verg., Tenn., 205.

LANDA. An open field without wood; a lawnd or lawn. Cowell; Blount.
LANDEAGENDE, LANDHLAGFORD, or LANDRICA. In Saxon law. A proprietor of land; lord of the soil. Anc. Inst. Eng.

LANDBOC. In Saxon law. A charter or deed by which lands or tenements were given or held. Spelman; Cowell; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 10.

LANDCHEAP. In old English law. An ancient suburban or rural land, as distinguished from real estate.

LANDEFRICUS. A landlord; a lord of the soil.

LANDED SECURITIES. Mortgages or other incumbrances affecting land. 3 Atk. 805, 808.

LANDEFRICUS. A landlord; a lord of the soil.

LANDDIRECTA. In Saxon law. Services and duties laid upon all that held land, including the three obligations called "trinoda necessitas," (q. v.) quasi land rights. Cowell.

LANDLOCKED. An expression sometimes applied to a piece of land belonging to one person and surrounded by land belonging to others, so that it cannot be approached except over their land. L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 798; Sweet.

LANDEGANDMAN. Sax. In old English law. A kind of customary tenant or inferior tenant of a manor. Spelman.

LANDGRAVE. A name formerly given to those sovereign princes of the empire who possessed by inheritance certain estates called "landgravates," of which they received investiture from the emperor. Enc. Lond.

LANDIMER. In old Scotch law. A measurer of land.

LANDIMPER. In old Scotch law. A ditch or trench for conveying water from marshy grounds. Spelman.

LANDED. As used in a revenue act levying tolls on goods, the clear meaning and purport is "substantially imported." L. R. 4 Ex. 260.

Consisting in real estate or land; having an estate in land.

LANDED ESTATE OR PROPERTY. A colloquial or popular phrase to denote real property. Landed estate ordinarily means an interest in and pertaining to lands. Police Jury of Parish of St. Mary v. Harris, 10 La.Ann. 676.

In a tax law it "clearly embraces not only the land, but all houses, fixtures, and improvements of every kind thereon, and all machinery, neat cattle, horses, and mules, when attached to and used on a plantation or farm." A person holding such an estate is termed a landed proprietor. 10 La.Ann. 676. A devise of "all my landed property" carries the fee; Fogg v. Clark, 1 N.H. 163; and so does "my landed estate"; Bradstreet v. Clarke, 12 Wend., N.Y., 602.

Real estate in general, or sometimes, by local usage, suburban or rural land, as distinguished from real estate situated in a city. See Electric Co. v. Baltimore, 93 Md. 630, 49 A. 655, 52 L.R.A. 772; Sindall v. Baltimore, 93 Md. 526, 49 A. 645.

LANDED ESTATES COURT. In English law. Tribunals established by statute for the purpose of disposing more promptly and easily than could be done through the ordinary judicial machinery, of incumbered real estate.

These courts were first established in Ireland by the act of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 48, which being defective was followed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 77. The purpose of these was to enable the owner, or a lessee for any less than 63 years unexpired, of land subject to incumbrance, to apply to commissioners who constituted a court of record to direct a sale. This court was called the Incumbered Estates Court. A new tribunal called the Landed Estates Court was created by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 72, which abolished the former court and established a permanent tribunal.

LANDING. A place on a river or other navigable water for lading and unlading goods, or for the reception and delivery of passengers; the terminus of a road on a river or other navigable water, for the use of travelers, and the loading and unloading of goods. State v. Randall, 1 Strob., S.C., 111, 47 Am.Dec. 548; State v. Louisiana Terminal Co., 179 La. 671, 154 So. 731.

A place for loading or unloading boats, but not a harbor for them. Hays v. Briggs, 74 Pa. 373.

A place laid out by a town as a common landing place and used as such, but not designated as for the particular benefit of the town, is a public landing place.

LANDEIMPER. In old Scotch law. A ditch or trench for conveying water from marshy grounds. Spelman.

When the absolute property in or fee-simple of the land belongs to a landlord, he is then sometimes denominated the "ground landlord," in contradistinction to such a one as is possessed only of a limited or particular interest in land, and who himself holds under a superior landlord. Brown.

"Landlord" is ordinarily referred to as owner of tenement, to whom tenant pays rent, but is also defined as master or proprietor of inn or of lodging or boarding house. Murray v. Hagens, La.App., 143 So. 505, 506.

LANDEGRANDMAN. Sax. In old English law. A kind of customary tenant or inferior tenant of a manor. Spelman.

LANDGRAVE. A name formerly given to those who executed justice on behalf of the German emperors, with regard to the internal policy of the country. It was applied, by way of eminence, to those sovereign princes of the empire who possessed by inheritance certain estates called "landgravates," of which they received investiture from the emperor. Enc. Lond.

LANDEGRANDMAN. Sax. In old English law.

A place for loading or unloading boats, but not a harbor for them. Hays v. Briggs, 74 Pa. 373.

A place laid out by a town as a common landing place and used as such, but not designated as for the particular benefit of the town, is a public landing place.

LANDEGANDMAN. Sax. In old English law.

LANDHLAGFORD. In Saxon law.

LANDEFRICUS. A landlord; a lord of the soil.

LANDEGRANDMAN. Sax. In old English law.

"landgravates," of which they received investiture from the emperor. Enc. Lond.
LANDLORD'S

LANDLORD'S WARRANT. A distress warrant; a warrant from a landlord to levy upon the tenant's goods and chattels, and sell the same at public sale, to compel payment of the rent or the observance of some other stipulation in the lease.

LANDMARK. A monument or erection set up on the boundary line of two adjoining estates, to fix such boundary. The removing of a landmark is a wrong for which an action lies. Collins v. Brittingham, 90 A. 420, 5 Boyce (Del.) 89.

LANDS. This term, the plural of "land," is said, at common law, to be a word of less extensive signification than either "tenements" or "hereditaments." But in some of the states it has been provided by statute that it shall include both those terms.

LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACTS. The name given to certain English statutes, (8 Vict. c. 8, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 18,) the object of which was to provide legislative clauses in a convenient form for incorporation by reference in future special acts of parliament for taking lands, with or without the consent of their owners, for the promotion of railways, and other public undertakings. Mozley & Whiteley.

LANDS, PUBLIC. See Public Lands.

LANDS, TENEMENTS, AND HEREDITAMENTS. The technical and most comprehensive description of real property, as "goods and chattels" is of personality. Williams, Real Prop. 5.

LANDSLAGH. In Swedish law. A body of commons. In compounding about the thirteenth century, out of the particular customs of every province; being analogous to the common law of England. 1 Bl.Comm. 66.

LANDWARD. In Scotch law. Rural. 7 Bell, App. Cas. 2.

LANGEMAN. A lord of a manor. 1 Inst. 5.

LANGEMANNI. The lords of manors. 1 Co. Inst. 5.

LANEOLUM. An undergarment made of wool, formerly worn by the monks, which reached to their knees. Mon. Angl. 419.

LANGUAGE. Any means of conveying or communicating ideas; specifically, human speech, or the expression of ideas by written characters. The letter, or grammatical import, of a document or instrument, as distinguished from its spirit; as "the language of the statute." See Behling v. State, 110 Ga. 754, 36 S.E. 85; Stevenson v. State, 90 Ga. 456, 16 S.E. 95; Cavan v. Brooklyn, City Ct. Brook., 5 N.Y.S. 759. As to "offensive language," see Offensive Language.

LANGUIDUS. (Lat., sick.) In practice. The name of a return made by the sheriff when a defendant, whom he has taken by virtue of process, is so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or health. 3 Chit. Pr. 249, 358.

LANIS DE CRESCENTIA WALLIIE TRADUCENDIS ABSQUE CUSTUMATA, etc. An ancient writ that lay to the customer of a port to permit one to pass wool without paying custom, he having paid it before in Wales. Reg. Orig. 279.

LANNS MANUS (Old Fr.). A lord of the manor. Kelham.

LANZAS. In Spanish law. A commutation in money, paid by the nobles and high officers, in lieu of the quota of soldiers they might be required to furnish in war. Trevino v. Fernandez, 13 Tex. 660.

LAPIDATION. The act of stoning a person to death.

LAPIDICINA. Lat. In the civil law. A stone-quarry. Dig. 7, 1, 9, 2.

LAPILLI. Lat. In the civil law. Precious stones. Dig. 34, 2, 19, 17. Distinguished from "gems," (gemmce.) Id.

LAPIS MARMORIUS. A marble stone about twelve feet long and three feet broad, placed at the upper end of Westminster Hall, where was likewise a marble chair erected on the middle thereof, in which the English sovereigns anciently sat at their coronation dinner, and at other times the lord chancellor. Wharton.

LAPPO. v. To glide; to pass slowly, silently, or by degrees. To slip; to deviate from the proper path. Webster. To fall or fail. Life & Casualty Ins. Co. of Tennessee v. Wheeler, 265 Ky. 78, 98 S.W.2d 4, 8; Berry v. Coppersmith, 212 N.C. 50, 193 S.E. 3, 6.

LAPSE, n. The termination or failure of a right or privilege through neglect to exercise it within some limit of time, or through failure of some contingency. Wilmington Trust Co. v. Wilmington Trust Co., 25 Del.Ch. 204, 15 A.2d 830, 834.

In criminal proceedings. "Lapse" is used, in England, in the same sense as "abate" in ordinary procedure; i.e., to signify that the proceedings came to an end by the death of one of the parties or some other event.

In ecclesiastical law. The transfer, by forfeiture of a right to present or collate to a vacant benefice from a person vested with such right to another, in consequence of some act of negligence by the former. Ayl.Par. 331.

In the law of wills. The failure of a testamentary gift. Wilmington Trust Co. v. Wilmington Trust Co., 25 Del.Ch. 204, 15 A.2d 830, 834; Gredig
v. Sterling, C.C.A.Tex., 47 F.2d 832, 834.

LAPSE PATENT. A patent for land issued in substitution for an earlier patent to the same land, which was issued to another party, but has lapsed in consequence of his neglect to avail himself of it. Wilcox v. Calloway, 1 Wash., Va., 39.

LAPSED DEVERSE, See Devise.

LAPSED LEGACY. See Legacy.

LAPSED POLICY. A policy on which there has been default in payment of premiums; policy remaining in force according to statutory provisions after such default. Metcalf v. Metropolitan Life

LARCHBOARD. The left side of a ship or boat when one stands with his-face towards the bow.

The opposite term is starboard, which is the right-hand side looking forward. The word is now, however, no longer used, the term port having been substituted for it. The change was made by order of the English admiralty, for the very obvious reason that larboard was apt to be confused with the opposite term.

LARCENOUS. Having the character of larceny; as a "larcenous taking." Contemplating or intending larceny; as a "larcenous purpose."

LARCENOUS INTENT. A larcenous intent exists where a man knowingly takes and carries away the goods of another without any claim or pretense or right, with intent wholly to deprive the owner of them or convert them to his own use.

LARCENY. Felonious stealing, taking and carrying, leading, riding, or driving away another's personty, 4 Bl.Comm. 229; People v. Brickey, 346
III. 273, 178 N.E. 483, 485; State v. Miller, 170 La.
51, 127 So. 361, 362; with intent to convert it or to deprive owner thereof, Ledbetter v. State, 24
Ala.App. 447, 136 So. 430; Globe & Rutgers Fire
Ins. Co. v. House, 163 Tenn. 585, 45 S.W.2d 55, 56;
Commonwealth v. Estes, 265 Ky. 186, 95 S.W.2d 578, 580;
State v. Savage, Del., 130 A.W. Harr. 509, 188, 738, 739;
State v. Delk, 212 N.C. 631, 194, 94; wrongful or felonious taking property of another, with his consent and against his will, with intent to convert it, intending to steal, is guilty of "larceny". Calhoun v.
State, 191 Miss. 82, 2 So.2d 802, 804, 805.

Generally, one who unlawfully takes another's personal property, not intending to steal, and afterwards converts
it, intending to steal, is guilty of "larceny". Calhoun v.
State, 191 Miss. 82, 2 So.2d 802, 804, 805.

Every act of theft in the removal of property is in itself a complete "larceny". Schultz v. Lainson, 234 Iowa 606, 13 N.W.2d 326, 327, 156 A.L.R. 858.

Common Law Larceny
Feloniouss taking and carrying away of personal goods of another, Fowler v. Firth, 163 Misc. 942, them to the taker's own use and make them his own property without owner's consent. Riley v. State, 64 LARCENY

Compound Larceny

Larceny or theft accomplished ny taking the thing stolen either from one's person or from his house; otherwise called "mixed" larceny, and distinguished from "simple" or "plain" larceny, in which the theft is not aggravated by such an intrusion either upon the person or the dwelling. Anderson v. Winfree, 85 Ky. 597, 4 S.W. 351; State v. Chambers, 22 W.Va. 786, 46 Am.Rep. 550.

Constructive Larceny

One where the felonious intent to appropriate the goods to his own use, at the time of the asportation, is made out by construction from the defendant's conduct, although, originally, the taking was not apparently felonious. 2 East, P.C. 685; 1 Leach, 212.

False Pretense and Larceny Distinguished

See False Pretenses.

Grand Larceny

In criminal law. In England, simple larceny, was originally divided into two sorts,—grand larceny, where the value of the goods stolen was above twelve pence, and petit larceny, where their value was equal to or below that sum. 4 Bl. Comm. 229.

The distinction was abolished in England by St. 7 & Geo. IV. c. 29, and is not generally recognized in the United States, although in a few states there is a statutory offense of grand larceny, one essential element of which is the value of the goods stolen, which value varies. See State v. Bean, 74 Vt. 111, 52 A. 269; People v. Murray, 8 Cal. 520; State v. Kennedy, 88 Mo. 343.

Larceny by Bailee

In Pennsylvania law. The crime of larceny committed where any person, being a bailee of any property, shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or to the use of any other person except the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailement. Brightly's Purd. Dig. p. 436, § 177 (18 P.S. § 4816). And see Welsh v. People, 17 Ill. 339; State v. Skinner, 29 Or. 599, 46 P. 368.

Larceny from the Person

Act of taking property from the person by merely lifting it from the person or pocket. State v. Stanton, Mo., 68 S.W.2d 811, 812.

Larceny committed where the property stolen is on the person or in the immediate charge or custody of the person from whom the theft is made, but without such circumstances of force or violence as would constitute robbery, including pocket-picking and such crimes. Williams v. U. S., 3 App.D.C. 345; State v. Eno, 8 Minn. 220, Gil. 190.

Mixed Larceny

Otherwise called "compound" or "complicated larceny;" that which is attended with circumstances of aggravation or violence to the person, or taking from a house.

Petit Larceny

The larceny of things whose value was below a certain arbitrary standard, at common law twelve pence. See Ex parte Bell, 19 Fla. 612; Barnhart v. State, 154 Ind. 177, 56 N.E. 212; People v. Righetti, 66 Cal. 184, 4 P. 1185.

Simple Larceny

Larceny which is not complicated or aggravated with acts of violence. Larceny from the person, or with force and violence, is called "compound" larceny. See State v. Chambers, 22 W.Va. 786, 46 Am.Rep. 550; Anderson v. Winfree, 4 S.W. 351, 85 Ky. 597.

LARDARIUS REGIS. The king’s larderer, or clerk of the kitchen. Cowell.

LARDING MONEY. In the manor of Bradford, in Wilts, the tenants pay to their lord a small yearly rent by this name, which is said to be for liberty to feed their hogs with the mast of the lord’s wood, the fat of a hog being called “lard;” or it may be a commutation for some customary service of carrying salt or meat to the lord’s larder. Mon. Angl. t. 1, p. 321.

LARGE. L. Fr. Broad; the opposite of “estretye,” strait or strict. Pures et larges. Britt. c. 34.

LARONS. In old English law. Thieves.

LAS PARTIDAS. In Spanish law. The name of a code of laws, more fully described as “Las Siete Partidas,” (“the seven parts,” from the number of its divisions,) which was compiled under the direction of Alphonso X., about the year 1250.

Its sources were the customary law of all the provinces, the canon law as there administered, and (chiefly) the Roman law. This work has always been regarded as of the highest authority in Spain and in those countries and states which have derived their jurisprudence from Spain.

LASCAR. A native Indian sailor; the term is also applied to tent pitchers, inferior artillery-men, and others.

LASCIVIOUS CARRIAGE, In Connecticut. A term including those wanton acts between persons... of different sexes that flow from the exercise of lustful passions, and which are not otherwise punished as crimes against chastity and public decency. 2 Swift, Dig. 343. It includes, also, indecent acts by one against the will of another. Fowler v. State, 5 Day, Conn., 81.

LASCIVIOUS COHABITATION. The offense committed by two persons (not married to each other) who live together in one habitation as man and wife and practice sexual intercourse.

LASHITE, or LASHLITE. A kind of forfeiture during the government of the Danes in England. Enc. Lond.

LAST, n. In old English law, signifies a burden; also a measure of weight used for certain commodities of the bulkier sort.

LAST, adj. Latest; ultimate; final; most recent.

LAST ANTECEDENT RULE. A canon of statutory construction that relative or qualifying words or phrases are to be applied to the words or phrasing immediately preceding, and as not extending to or including other words, phrases, or clauses more remote, unless such extension or inclusion is clearly required by the intent and meaning of the context, or disclosed by an examination of the entire act. Stevens v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 306 Ill. 370, 137 N.E. 859, 861; Nebraska State Ry. Commission v. Alfalfa Butter Co., 104 Neb. 797, 178 N.W. 766, 768; Wisconsin Power & Light Co. v. Public Service Commission of Wisconsin, 224 Wis. 286, 272 N.W. 50, 52.

LAST CLEAR CHANCE. The "last clear chance doctrine" is that a party who has last clear chance to avoid damage or injury to another is liable.

The doctrine is limited, according to some decisions, to cases in which defendant actually discovered person injured and his peril. Walker v. East St. Louis & Suburban Ry. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 25 F.2d 579, 580, Gauthier v. Ford, 85 So. 2d 664, 666; if, with knowledge of peril to plaintiff or plaintiff's property, another acts or omits to act and injury results, Parsons v. Berry, 130 Neb. 264, 264 N.W. 742, 744.

The doctrine implies thought, appreciation, mental direction, and a lapse of sufficient time to effectually act upon the theory that negligence of injured party has produced or continued to cause injury. Ferran v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 350, 44 P.2d 533, 534. It places liability upon the theory that negligence of plaintiff without actual knowledge of situation, Chadwick v. Ek, 1 Wash.2d 117, 95 P.2d 398, 404; that the doctrine applies where plaintiff's negligence continues up to time of injury, if defendant actually sees the peril, or if plaintiff's negligence has later opportunity than plaintiff to avert the accident, Cheek v. Thompson, D.C.La., 28 F. Supp. 391, 394; or if defendant knew or could or should have known of peril, Arthur v. Rose, 289 Ky. 402, 158 S.W.2d 652, 653, 654; Warner v. City Fuel Oil Co., 147 Fla. 320, 2 So.2d 586, 587; Smith v. Pacific Greyhound Corporation, 139 Cal.App. 696, 35 P.2d 169, 172; or if defendant saw or discovered or should have seen or discovered the danger, Young v. Thompson, La.App., 12 So.2d 9, 11; or in which defendant had actual knowledge of plaintiff's peril or inability to extricate himself, Sarkise v. Boston & M. R. R., 88 N.H. 178, 186 A. 335. But other decisions hold that the doctrine applies where defendant, aware of plaintiff's peril or unaware of it only through carelessness, has later opportunity than plaintiff to avert the accident, Leidig v. Pickwick Greyhound Lines, 138 Kan. 50, 23 P.2d 449, 92 A.L.R. 1.

Other decisions hold that although plaintiff's negligence continued until accident he may recover if defendant, after knowing of plaintiff's danger, or by exercise of ordinary care could have known, could have avoided injury by ordinary care, McLeod v. Charlotte, Lake & Western Ry. Co., 106 W.Va. 361, 145 S.E. 756, 757; Newbern v. Lueb, 215 N.C. 134, 1 S.E.2d 384, 389, 393; Young v. Thompson, La.App., 189 So. 487, 489, 490, 491; that the doctrine applies when plaintiff's case is up to defendant's last clear chance to act, if defendant actually sees the peril, or if plaintiff's negligence has terminated and defendant should have seen it. Chadwick v. Ek, 1 Wash.2d 117, 95 P.2d 398, 404; that the doctrine applies where plaintiff's knowledge of situation stands over against continuing negligence of plaintiff without actual knowledge of situation, but not where plaintiff’s negligence with knowledge of situation stands over against defendant’s negligence also with such knowledge, Iverson v. Knorr, 68 S.D. 23, 298 N.W. 28, 31.

LAST COURT. A court held by the twenty-four jurats in the marshes of Kent, and summoned by the bailiffs, whereby orders were made to lay and levy taxes, impose penalties, etc., for the preservation of the said marshes. Enc. Lond.

LAST HEIR. In English law. He to whom lands come by escheat for want of lawful heirs; that is, in some cases, the lord of whom the lands were held; in others, the sovereign. Cowell.

LAST RESORT. A court from which there is no appeal is called the “court of last resort.”

LAST WILL. This term, according to Lord Coke, is most commonly used when lands and tenements are devised, and “testament” where it concerns chattels. Co. Litt. 111a. Both terms, however, are now generally employed in drawing a will either of lands or chattels. See Reagan v. Stanley, 11 Lea, Tenn., 322; Hill v. Hill, 7 Wash. 409, 35 P. 360.

The common usage the world over is to employ the words “will,” “testament,” and “last will and testament” as exactly synonymous. Occidental Life Ins. Co. v. Powers, 192 Wash. 475, 74 P.2d 27, 32, 114 A.L.R. 531.

LASTAGE. A custom exacted in some fairs and markets to carry things bought whither one will. But it is more accurately taken for the ballast or lading of a ship. Also custom paid for wares sold by the last, as herrings, pitch, etc. Wharton.

The common usage the world over is to employ the words “will,” “testament,” and “last will and testament” as exactly synonymous. Occidental Life Ins. Co. v. Powers, 192 Wash. 475, 74 P.2d 27, 32, 114 A.L.R. 531.

LATING. An under-ground survey.

LATE. Defunct; existing recently, but now dead. Pleasant v. State, 17 Ala. 190. Formerly; recently; lately.

LATER. Defunct; existing recently, but now dead. Pleasant v. State, 17 Ala. 190. Formerly; recently; lately.

LATELY. This word has been held to have "a very large retrospect, as we say 'lately deceased' of one dead ten or twenty years." Per. Cur. 2 Show. 294.

LATENS. Lat. Latent; hidden; not apparent. See Ambiguities.

LATENT. Hidden; concealed; dormant; that does not appear upon the face of a thing; as, a latent ambiguity. See Ambiguity.

LATENT DEED. A deed kept for twenty years or more in a man’s scrutoire or strongbox. Wright v. Wright, 7 N.J.L. 177, 11 Am.Dec. 546.

LATENT EQUITY. See Equity.

LATERA. In old records. Sidesmen; companions; assistants. Cowell.

LATERAL RAILROAD. A lateral road is one which proceeds from some point on the main trunk between its termini; it is but another name for a branch road, both being a part of the main road. Newhall v. Railroad Co., 14 Ill. 273. An offshoot from main line of railroad. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Anderson, 167 Or. 687, 120 P.2d 578, 588.

LATERARE. To lie sideways, in opposition to lying endways; used in descriptions of lands.

LATH, LATHE. The name of an ancient civil division in England, intermediate between the county or shire and the hundred. Said to be the same as what, in other parts of the kingdom, was termed a "rape." 1 Bl. Comm. 116; Cowell; Spelman.

LATHREVE. An officer under the Saxon government, who had authority over a lathe. Cowell; 1 Bl. Comm. 116.

LATIFUNDIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Great or large possessions; a great or large field; a com-LATIFUNDUS. A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones. Du Cange.

LATIMER. A word used by Lord Coke in the sense of an interpreter. 2 Inst. 515. Supposed to be a corruption of the French "latinier," or "latiner." Cowell; Blount.

LATIN. The language of the ancient Romans.

There are three sorts of law Latin: (1) Good Latin, allowed by the grammarians and lawyers; (2) false or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs, though it would not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, etc.; (3) words of art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians, called "Lawyers' Latin." Wharton.

LATINARIUS. An interpreter of Latin.

LATINI JUNIANI. Lat. In Roman law. A class of freedmen (libertini) intermediate between the two other classes of freedmen called, respectively, "Cives Romani" and "Dediticii."

Slaves under thirty years of age at the date of their manumission, or manumitted otherwise than by vindicta, census, or testamentum, or not the quiritary property of their manumissors at the time of manumission, were called "Latinini." By reason of one or other of these three defects, they remained slaves by strict law even after their manumission, but were protected in their liberties first by equity, and eventually by the Lex Junia Norbana, A. D. 19, from which law they took the name of "Juniani" in addition to that of "Latinini." Brown.

LATITAT. In old English practice. A writ which issued in personal actions, on the return of non est inventus to a bill of Middlesex; so called from the emphatic word in its recital, in which it was "testified that the defendant lurks [latitat] and wanders about" in the county. 3 Bl. Comm. 286. Abolished by St. 2 Wm. IV. c. 39.

LATITATIO. Lat. In the civil law and old English practice. A lying hid; lurking, or concealment of the person. Dig. 42, 4, 7, 5; Bract. fol. 126.

LATOR. Lat. In the civil law. A bearer; a messenger. Also a maker or giver of laws.

LATRO. Lat. In the civil and old English law. A robber. Dig. 50, 16, 118; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1. A thief.

LATROCINATION. The act of robbing; a depredation.

LATROCINUM. The prerogative of adjudging and executing thieves; also larceny; theft; a thing stolen.

LATROCINY. Larceny.

LATTER-MATH. A second mowing; the after-math.

LAUDARE. Lat.

In Civil law. To name; to cite or quote; to show one’s title or authority. Calvin.

In Feudal law. To determine or pass upon judicially. Laudamentum, the finding or award of a jury. 2 Bl. Comm. 285.

LAUDATIO. Lat. In Roman law. Testimony delivered in court concerning an accused person’s good behavior and integrity of life. It resembled the practice which prevails in our trials of calling persons to speak to a prisoner’s character. The least number of the laudatores among the Romans was ten. Wharton.

LAUDATOR. Lat. An arbitrator; a witness to character.

LAUDEMEO. In Spanish law. The tax paid by the possessor of land held by quit-rent or emphyteusis to the owner of the estate, when the tenant alienates his right in the property. Escriche.

LAUDEMIO. Lat. In the civil law, a sum paid by a new emphyteuta (q. v.) who acquires the emphyteusis, not as heir, but as a singular successor, whether by gift, devise, exchange, or sale.

It was a sum equal to the fiftieth part of the purchase money, paid to the dominus or proprietor for his acceptance of the new emphyteuta. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 328. Called, in old English law, “acknowledgment money.” Cowell.

LAUDUM. Lat. An arbitrament or award.

In Old Scotch law. Sentence or judgment; doom or doom. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, p. 8.

LAUGHE. Frank-pledge. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 17.

LAUNECEGAY. A kind of offensive weapon, now disused, and prohibited by 7 Rich. II. c. 13.

LAUNCH. The act of launching a vessel; the movement of a vessel from the land into the water, especially the sliding on ways from the stocks on which it is built. Homer v. The Lady of the Ocean, 70 Me. 352.

A boat of the largest size belonging to a ship of war; an open boat of large size used in any service; a lighter.

LAURATE. In English law. An officer of the household of the sovereign, whose business formerly consisted only in composing an ode annually, on the sovereign’s birthday, and on the new year; sometimes also, though rarely, on occasion of any remarkable victory.

LAURELS. Pieces of gold, coined in 1619, with the king’s head laureated; hence the name. See Jacobus.

LAUS DEO. Lat. Praise be to God. An old heading to bills of exchange.

LAVATORIUM. A laundry or place to wash in; a place in the porch or entrance of cathedral churches, where the priest and other officiating ministers were obliged to wash their hands before they proceeded to divine service.

LAVOR NUEVA. In Spanish law. A new work.
LAW

LAW. That which is laid down, ordained, or established. A rule or method according to which phenomena or actions co-exist or follow each other. That which must be obeyed and followed by citizens, subject to sanctions or legal consequences, is a "law." Koenig v. Flynn, 258 N.Y. 292, 179 N.E. 705.

In old English jurisprudence, "law" is used to signify an oath, or the privilege of being sworn; as in the phrases "to wage one's law," "to lose one's law."

The term is also used in opposition to "fact." Thus questions of law are to be decided by the court, while it is the province of the jury to solve questions of fact.

The earliest notion of law was not an enumeration of a principle, but a judgment in a particular case. When pronounced in the early ages, by a king, it was assumed to be the result of direct divine inspiration. Afterwards came the notion of a custom which a judgment affirms, or pronounces in the first time by a higher form into the judge’s mind at the moment of adjudication. Maine, Anc.Law, (Dwight’s Ed.) pp. xv, 5.

LAW FRENCH. The Norman French language, introduced into England by William the Conqueror.

For several centuries, it was, in an emphatic sense, the language of the English law. It is called by Blackstone a "barbarous dialect," and the later specimens of it fully warrant the appellation, but at the time of its introduction it was, as has been observed, the best form of the language spoken in Normandy. The doctrine has reference to decisions on legal questions and principles of law announced. Haynes Drilling Co. v. Indian Territory Illuminating Oil Co., 185 Okl. 122, 59 P.2d 639, 640; and does not embrace questions of fact or decisions on questions of fact. McNeely v. Connell, 87 Cal. App. 87, 261 P. 754, 755. (But see holding that the decision of appellate court on facts proved becomes “law of the case” Cauldwell-Wingate Co. v. State, Ct.C1., 31 N.Y.S.2d 211, 213.)

The doctrine includes all errors relied on for reversal, whether mentioned in court’s opinion or not, and all errors lurking in record on first appeal, which might have been, but were not, expressly relied on, Sowards v. Coleman, 223 Ky. 633, 4 S.W.2d 731, (but see holding that doctrine does not extend to facts or points of law which might have been but were not presented and determined on prior appeal, Steelduct Co. v. Henger-Selzer Co., Cal., 26 Cal.2d 634, 160 P.2d 804, 809); all matters, issues or questions actually decided on former appeal. Fleming v. Buerkli, 164 Wash. 136, 1 P.2d 915; all questions involved in judgment, Helper State Bank v. Crus, 95 Utah 320, 81 P.2d 359, 361, 363; all questions involved on former appeal because of error, Miller v. Brown, 186 Okl. 275, 97 P.2d 62; Miller v. Sisters of St. Francis, 5 Wash.2d 204, 105 P.2d 32, 33; Kuhrs v. Live Stock Nat. Bank of Omaha, 138 Neb. 797, 295 N.W. 818, 819, 820; decision on insufficiency of evidence. Wells v. Lloyd, 21 Cal.2d 452, 132 P.2d 471, 474; every applicable proposition of law actually applied to facts and pleadings involved, Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Trundle, 65 Ga.App. 553, 15 S.E.2d 909, 913; only facts appearing in original opinion, Timm v. McCartney, 30 Cal.App.2d 241, 85 P.2d 920, 922; points presented on former appeal, Etna Life Ins. Co. v. LAW OF THE LAND. Due process of law (q. v.).
By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. Dupuy v. Tedora, 204 La.
560, 15 So.2d 886, 891. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and i mmunities under the protection of general rules which govern society. Rich Hill Coal Co. v. Bra-shore, 334 Pa. 449, 7 A.2d 302, 316; In re Stobie's

Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment is not the law of the land. Sedg.St. & Const.Law, (2d Ed.) 475. When first used in Magna Charta, the phrase probably meant the established law of the kingdom, in opposition to the civil or Roman law. It is now generally regarded as meaning general public laws binding on all members of the community. Janes v. Reynolds, 2 Tex. 251;
Beasley v. Cunningham, 171 Tenn. 334, 103 S.W.2d 18, 20;
110 A.L.R. 306. It means due process of law warranted by LAW WORTHY. Being entitled to, or having the benefit and protection of, the law.

LAWFUL. Legal; warranted or authorized by law; not contrary to nor forbidden by the law.
Ohio Automatic Sprinkler Co. v. Fender, 108 Ohio
St. 149, 141 N.E. 269, 275; McDonnell v. Murnan
Shipbuilding Corporation, 210 Ala. 611, 98 So. 887, 899; Hafner Mfg. Co. v. City of St. Louis, 262 Mo.
621, 172 S.W.28, 33.

The principal distinction between the terms "lawful" and "legal" is that the former contemplates the substance of law, the latter the form of law. To say of an act that it is "lawful" implies that it is authorized, sanctioned, or at any rate not forbidden, by law. To say that it is "legal" implies that it is done or performed in accordance with the forms and usages of law, or in a technical manner. In this sense "illegal" approaches the meaning of "invalid." For example, a contract or will, executed without the required formalities, might be said to be invalid or illegal, but could not be described as unlawful. Further, the word "lawful" more clearly implies an ethical content than does "legal." The latter goes no further than to denote compliance, with positive, technical, or formal rules, while the former usually imports a moral substance or ethical possibility. A further distinction is that the word "lawful" is used as the synonym of "constructive," which "lawful" is not. Thus "legal fraud" is fraud implied or inferred by law, or made out by construction.
"Lawful fraud" would be a contradiction of terms. Again,
"legal" is used as the antithesis of "equitable." Thus, a "lawful" wrt, warrant, or process is the same as a "legal" wrt, warrant, or process.

LAWFUL AGE. Full age; majority; generally the age of twenty-one years, though sometimes eighteen as to a female. See McKim v. Handy, 4 Md.Ch. 237.

LAWFUL AUTHORITIES. The expression "lawful authorities," used in our treaty with Spain, refers to persons who exercised the power of mak-

St.Rep. 396.

LAWFUL GOODS. Whatever is not prohibited to be exported by the positive law of the country, even though it be contraband of war; for a neutral has a right to carry such goods at his own risk.
Seton v. Low, 1 Johns.Cas., N.Y., 1; Skidmore v.
Desdoity, 2 Johns.Cas., N.Y., 77; Juhe1 v. Rhinelander, 2 Johns.Cas., N.Y., 120.

LAWFUL HEIRS, See Heir.

LAWFUL ISSUE. As used in will the words primarily and generally mean descendants. In re Marsh's Will, 143 Misc. 609, 257 N.Y.S. 514, 521; they include descendants more remote than children. In re Woodcock's Will, Sur., 55 N.Y.S.2d 656, 658. At common law, the term includes only those who were children of legally recognized subsisting marriage. In re Sheffer's Will, 139 Misc.
519, 249 N.Y.S. 102, 105. Lawful descendants.

LEAGUE. 1. A treaty of alliance between different states or parties.

2. A measure of distance, varying in different countries.

It may be offensive or defensive, or both. It is offensive when the contracting parties agree to unite in attacking a common enemy; defensive when the parties agree to act in concert in defending each other against an enemy. Wharton.

The marine league, marking the limit of national jurisdiction on the high seas, is equal to three geographical (or marine) miles of 6,075 feet each.

In Spanish and Mexican law, the league, as a legal measure of length, consisted of 5,000 varas, and a vara was equivalent to 33% English inches, making the league equal to a little more than 2.63 miles, and the square league equal to 4,428 acres. This is its meaning as used in Texas land grants. United States v. Perot, 98 U.S. 428, 25 L.Ed. 251; Hunter v. Morse, 49 Tex. 219. "League and labor," to a little more than 2.63 miles, and the square league equal to 4,605 acres. Ammons v. Deyer, 78 Tex. 639, 15 S.W. 1099. See Labor.

LEAKAGE. The waste or diminution of a liquid caused by its leaking from the cask, barrel, or other vessel in which it was placed.

Also an allowance made to an importer of liquids, at the custom-house, in the collection of duties, for his loss sustained by the leaking of the liquid from its cask or vessel.

LEAL. L. Fr. Loyal; that which belongs to the law.

LEALTE. L. Fr. Legality; the condition of a legalis homo, or lawful man.

LEAN. To incline in opinion or preference.

A court is sometimes said to "lean against" a doctrine, construction, or view contended for, whereby it is meant that the court regards it with disfavor or repugnance, because of its inexpedience, injustice, or inconsistency.

LEAP-YEAR. See Bissextile.

LEARN. To gain knowledge or information of; to ascertain by inquiry, study, or investigation.

Fletcher Savings & Trust Co. v. American Surety Co. of New York, 92 Ind.App. 651, 175 N.E. 247, 251; Rambo v. Rambo, 245 Ala. 98, 16 So.2d 4, 5.

LEARNED. Possessing learning; erudite; versed in the law; informed.

In statutes prescribing the qualifications of judges, "learned in the law" designates one who has received a regular legal education, the almost invariable evidence of which is the fact of his admission to the bar. See Jamie-

LEARNING. Legal doctrine. 1 Leon. 77.

LEASE. Any agreement which gives rise to returers Trust Co., 262 App.Div. 525, 30 N.Y.S. 2d 542, 544; Moore v. Brandenberg, 234 Ky. 400, 28 S.W.2d 477, 478; Lewes Sand Co. v. Graves, Del., 1 Terry 189, 8 A.2d 21, 24. Conveyance of interest in real property for specified period or at will, Minneker v. Gardiner, 47 Ohio App. 203, 191 N.E. 793. Conveyance or grant of estate in real property for limited term with conditions attached, State ex rel. St. Louis County v. Evans, 246 Mo. 209, 139 S.W.2d 967, 969; Hol-

A contract in writing, under seal, whereby a person having a legal estate in hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, conveys a portion of his interest to another, in consideration of a certain annual rent or other recompense. Archb.Landl. & Ten. 2.

A contract in writing, under seal, whereby a person having a legal estate in hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, conveys a portion of his interest to another, in consideration of a certain annual rent or other recompense. Archb.Landl. & Ten. 2.

Instrument granting exclusive possession or control of premises, or portion, though use be restricted by reservations, will be considered lease, Barnett v. Lincoln, 162 Wash. 613, 299 P. 392, 394.

"Lease" or "hire" is a synallagmatic contract, to which consent alone is sufficient, and by which one party gives to the other the enjoyment of a thing, or his labor, at a fixed price. Civil Code La. art. 2669.

Oral agreement whereby property owner for fixed consideration gave another trapping privileges on his lands for trapping season held contract of "lease." Defelice v. Autin, La.App., 159 So. 648, 649.

The person who conveys is termed the "lessor," and the person to whom they are conveyed, the "lessee;" and when the lessee conveys lands or tenements to a lessee, he is said to lease, demise, or let them. 4 Cruise, Dig. 58: U. S. Nat. Bank of La Grande v. Miller, 122 Or. 285, 258 P. 205, 207, 58 A.L.R. 339; Howard v. Manning, 79 Okl. 165, 192 P. 358, 360, 79 A.L.R. 819. The word when used in writing means to transfer, for term specified therein from lessor to lessee property therein demised, also to let, to farm out, to rent; and there is authority for view that word "lease" may properly be used in two senses, first, in describing act of lessor in giving lease, and again in describing act of lessee in taking lease. Stone v. City of Los Angeles, 114 Cal.App. 192, 299 P. 838, 841.

Whatever is sufficient to show that one party shall divest himself of possession and the other party shall come into it for a determinate time and for a fixed rental amounts to a lease. General American Life Ins. Co. v. North American Mig. Co., 320 Ill.App. 488, 51 N.E. 2d 619.

When the contract is bipartite the one part is called the "lease", the other the "counterclaim."
LEASE

Concurrent Lease

One granted for a term which is to commence before the expiration or other determination of a previous lease of the same premises made to another person; or, in other words, an assignment of a part of the reversion, entitling the lessee to all the rents accruing on the previous lease after the date of his lease and to appropriate remedies against the holding tenant. Cargill v. Thompson, 57 Minn. 534, 59 N.W. 638.

Farm Lease

See Farm Lease.

Lease and Release

A species of conveyance much used in England, said to have been invented by Serjeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the statute of uses. It is thus contrived: A lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him. The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance. 2 Bl. Comm. 339; 4 Kent, Comm. 482; Co.Litt. 207; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 11.

Mining Lease

See Mining.

Parol Lease

A lease of real estate not evidenced by writing, but resting in an oral agreement.

Perpetual Lease

A lease of lands which may last without limitation as to time; a grant of lands in fee with the reservation of a rent in fee; a fee-farm. Edwards v. Noel, 88 Mo.App. 434.

Sublease, or Underlease

One executed by the lessee of an estate to a third person, conveying the same estate for a shorter term than that for which the lessee holds it. The distinction between an assignment of a term for years and a sublease or subletting is that if the lessee parts with his entire interest in the term, it constitutes an assignment and not a subletting, although the transfer is in form a sublease; but if the lessee reserves to himself a reversionary interest in the term, it constitutes a sublease, whatever the form of the transfer. Johnson v. Thompson, 185 Ala. 666, 64 So. 554, 555; Weigle v. Rogers, 202 Mo.App. 520, 213 S.W. 501, 502; Holden v. Tidwell, 37 Okl. 553, 133 P. 54, 55, 49 L.R.A., N.S., 369, Ann.Cas.1915C, 394; Davis v. First Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 258 S.W. 241, 242.

For "Extension of lease," see Extension.

LEASING, or LESING. Cleaning.

LEASING-MAKING. In old Scotch criminal law. An offense consisting in slanderous and untrue speeches, to the disdain, reproach, and contempt of the king, his council and proceedings, etc. Bell.

To allow or cause to remain; to let remain unmoved or undone; to refrain from or neglect taking, doing, or changing; to let stay or continue; to let be without interference; to suffer to remain subject to another's action, control, or the like; to suffer to be undisturbed in action. Collins v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 178 Va. 501, 17 S.E.2d 413, 418.

To give or dispose of by will; to bequeath or devise. Townsend v. Gordon, 308 Mich. 438, 14 N.W.2d 57, 60; Williams v. McPherson, 216 N.C. 565, 5 S.E.2d 830, 831. "The word 'leave,' as applied to the subject-matter, prima facie means a disposition by will." Thorley v. Thorley, 10 East, 438; Carr v. Ellinger, 78 Va. 203.

Willful departure with intent to remain away, and not temporary absence with intention of returning. Landreth v. Casey, 340 Ill. 519, 173 N.E. 84, 85.

LEAVE AND LICENSE. A defense to an action in trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of.

LEAVE NO ISSUE. Not survived by a child or children or their descendants. A spouse of a deceased child is not "issue" (q. v.). In re Vigil's Estate, 38 N.M. 383, 34 P.2d 667, 668, 93 A.L.R. 1506.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE. Temporary absence from duty with intention to return during which time remuneration is suspended, State ex rel. McGaughy v. Grayston, 349 Mo. 700, 163 S.W.2d 335, 341.

LEAVE OF COURT. Permission obtained from a court to take some action which, without such permission, would not be allowable; as, to sue a receiver, to file an amended pleading, to plead several pleas. See Copperthwait v. Dummer, 18 N.J. L. 258.

LEAVE TO DEFEND. The bills of exchange act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67) allowed actions on bills and notes commenced within six months after being due to be by writ of summons in a form provided by the act, and unless the defendant should within twelve days obtain leave to appear and defend the action, allowed the plaintiff to sign judgment on proof of service. This procedure was retained by the judicature act, but abolished in 1880. Whart. Lex.

LECCATOR. A debauched person. Cowell.

LECHERWITE, LAIRWITE, or LEGERWITE. A fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of certain manors. 4 Inst. 206.
LECTOR DE LETRA ANTIQUA. In Spanish law. A person appointed by competent authority to read and decipher ancient writings, to the end that they may be presented on the trial of causes as documents entitled to legal credit. Escriche.

LECTURER. An instructor; a reader of lectures; also a clergyman who assists rectors, etc., in preaching, etc.

LEDGE. In mining law. This term, as used in the mining laws of the United States (Rev.St. § 2322, 30 U.S.C.A. § 26) and in both legal and popular usage in the western American states, is synonymous with "lode," which see. Myers v. Lloyd, 4 Alaska, 263, 265.

LEDDER. A book of accounts in which a trader enters the names of all persons with whom he has dealings; there being two parallel columns in each account, one for the entries to the debit of the person charged, the other for his credits. Into this book are posted the items from the day-book or journal.

A "ledger" is the principal book of accounts of a business establishment in which all the transactions of each day are entered under appropriate heads so as to show at a glance the debits and credits of each account. Foothill Ditch Co. v. Wallace Ranch Water Co., 25 Cal.App.2d 555, 78 P.2d 215, 220.

LEDGER-BOOK. In ecclesiastical law. The name of a book kept in the prerogative courts in England. It is considered as a roll of the court, but, it seems, it cannot be read in evidence. Bac.Abr.

LEDGREVIUS. In old English law. A lathereeve, or chief officer of a lathe. Spelman.

LEDOWN. The rising water or increase of the sea.

LEEE3IAN’S ACTS. Acts 30 Vict. c. 29 and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 91, by which contracts for the sale of bank shares are void unless the number of the shares are set forth in the contract. 9 Q.B.D. 546; and by which are authorized the application of the funds of municipal corporations and other governing bodies under certain conditions towards promoting or opposing parliamentary and other proceedings for the benefit or protection of the inhabitants.

LEET. In English law. The name of a court of criminal jurisdiction, formerly of much importance, but latterly fallen into disuse. See Court-Leet.

LEETS. Meetings which were appointed for the nomination or election of ecclesiastical officers in Scotland. Cowell.

LEFT. To let remain or have remaining at death; to transmit, bequeath or give by will. Grimes v. Crouch, 175 Va. 126, 7 S.E.2d 115, 117.

LEGA, or LACTA. The alloy of money. Spelman.

LEGABILIS. In old English law. That which may be bequeathed. Cowell.

LEGACY. A disposition of personally by will. In re Johnson’s Estate, 220 Iowa 424, 262 N.W. 811; Hill v. Van Sant, 133 N.J.Eq. 133, 30 A.2d 904, 906; Stubbs v. Abel, 114 Or. 610, 233 P. 852, 858; State, for Use of Woodlands Cemetery Co. of Philadelphia v. Lodge, 2 Terry 125, 16 A.2d 250.

"Legacy" and "bequest" are equivalent terms. But in strict common-law terminology "legacy" and "devise" do not mean the same thing and are not interchangeable, the former being properly used only in relation to real estate. But by construction the word "legacy" may be so extended as to include realty or interests therein. See In re Ross's Estate, 140 Cal. 282, 73 P. 976; Bacon v. Bacon, 55 Vt. 247; Roth's Appeal, 94 Pa. 191; Williams v. McComb, 38 N.C. 455; In re Stuart's Will, 115 Wis. 294, 91 N.W. 688.

Absolute Legacy

One given without condition and intended to vest immediately.

Accumulative Legacy

A second, double, or additional legacy; a legacy given in addition to another given by the same instrument, or by another instrument.

Additional Legacy

One given to the same legatee in addition to (and not in lieu of) another legacy given before by the same will or in a codicil thereto.

Alternate Legacy

One by which the testator gives one of two or more things without designating which.

Conditional Legacy

One which is liable to take effect or to be defeated according to the occurrence or non-occurrence of some uncertain event. Harker v. Smith, 41 Ohio St. 238, 52 Am. Rep. 80; Markham v. Hufford, 123 Mich. 505, 82 N.W. 222, 48 L.R.A. 580, 81 Am.St.Rep. 222.

Contingent Legacy

A legacy given to a person at a future uncertain time, that may or may not arrive; as "at his age of twenty-one," or "if" or "when he attains twenty-one." 2 Bl. Comm. 513; 2 Steph.Comm. 259. A legacy made dependent upon some uncertain event. 1 Rep.Leg. 506. A legacy which has not vested. In re Engles' Estate, 166 Pa. 280, 31 A. 76; Andrews v. Russell, 127 Ala. 195, 28 So. 703; Rubencane v. McKee, 6 Del.Ch. 40, 6 A. 639.

Cumulative Legacies

These are legacies so called to distinguish them from legacies which are merely repeated. In the construction of testamentary instruments, the question often arises whether, where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to the same person, the legatee is entitled to both, or only to one of them; in other words, whether the second legacy must be considered as a mere repetition of the first, or as cumulative, i. e., additional. In determining this question, the intention of the testator, if it appears on the face of the instrument, prevails. Wharton.

Demonstrative Legacy

A bequest of a certain sum of money, with a direction that it shall be paid out of a particular fund. It differs from a specific legacy in this respect: that, if the fund out of which it is payable fails for any cause, it is nevertheless entitled to come on the estate as a general legacy. And it differs from a general legacy in this: that it does not abate in that class, but in the class of specific legacies.

 Legacy

General Legacy; but there are legacies of quantity in the nature of specific legacies, as of so much money, with reference to a particular fund for payment. This kind of legacy is called by the civilians a 'demonstrative legacy,' and it is so far general and differs so much in effect from one properly specific that, if the fund be called in or fail, the legatee will not be deprived of his legacy, but be permitted to receive it out of the general assets; yet the legacy is so far 'specific' that it would not be liable to abate with general legacies upon a deficiency of assets. 2 Williams, Exrs, 1078.

General Legacy

Indefinite Legacy

One which passes property by a general or collective term, without enumeration of number or quantity; as, a bequest of "all" the testator's "goods," or his "bank stock." Lown.Leg. 84.

Lapsed Legacy

Where the legatee dies before the testator, or before the legacy is payable, the bequest is said to lapse, as it then falls into the residuary fund of the estate.

Modal Legacy

A bequest accompanied by directions as to the mode or manner in which it shall be applied for the legatee's benefit, e.g., a legacy to A. to buy him a house or a commission in the army. See Lown.Leg. 151.

Pecuniary Legacy

A bequest of a sum of money, or of an annuity. It may or may not specify the fund from which it is to be drawn. It is not the less a pecuniary legacy if it comprises the specific pieces of money in a designated receptacle, as a purse or chest. See Humphrey v. Robinson, 52 Hun. 200, 5 N.Y.S. 164; Lang v. Ropke, 10 N.Y.Leg.Obs. 75; Mathis v. Mathis, 18 N.J.L. 66.

Residuary Legacy

A bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will; a bequest of "all the rest, residue, and remainder" of the personal property after payment of debts and satisfaction of the particular legacies. See In re Williams' Estate, 112 Cal. 521, 4 P. 808, 53 Am.St.Rep. 224; Stubbs v. Abel, 114 Or. 610, 233 P. 852, 857.

Special Legacy

A "specific legacy" (q.v.) is sometimes so called.

Specific Legacy

Trust Legacy

A bequest of personal property to trustees to be held upon trust; as, to pay the annual income to a beneficiary for life.

Universal Legacy

In the civil law. A testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole or property which he leaves at his decease. Civ.Code La., art. 1606.

Legacy Duty. A duty imposed in England upon personal property (other than leaseholds) devolving under any will or intestacy. Brown.

Legacy or Succession Tax. An excise, on privilege of taking property by will or inheritance or by succession on death of owner. In re Rossing's Estate, 337 Mo. 544, 85 S.W.2d 495, 496; State Tax Commission v. Backman, 88 Utah 424, 55 P. 2d 171, 174.

LEGAL. 1. Conforming to the law; according to law; required or permitted by law; not forbidden or disinclined by law; good and effectual in law. Freeman v. Fowler Packing Co., 135 Kan. 378, 11 P.2d 276, 277; General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Schwartz, 118 N.J.L. 25, 190 A. 625, 627.

2. Proper or sufficient to be recognized by the law; cognizable in the courts; competent or adequate to fulfill the requirements of the law.

3. Cognizable in courts of law, as distinguished from courts of equity; construed or governed by the rules and principles of law, in contradistinction to rules of equity.

4. Posited by the courts as the inference or imputation of the law, as a matter of construction, rather than established by actual proof; e.g., legal malice. See Lawful.

LEGAL ACUMEN. The doctrine of legal acumen is that if a defect in, or invalidity of, a claim to land is such as to require legal acumen to discover it, whether it appears upon the face of the record or proceedings, or is to be proved aliihue, the powers or jurisdiction of a court of equity may be invoked to remove the cloud created by such defect or invalidity. Schwab v. City of St. Louis, 310 Mo. 116, 274 S.W. 1058, 1060.

LEGAL AGE. The age at which the person acquires full capacity to make his own contracts and deeds and transact business generally (age of majority) or to enter into some particular contract or relation, as, the "legal age of consent" to marriage. See Capwell v. Capwell, 21 R.I. 101, 41 A. 1005; Perkins v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 138 Md. 299, 113 A. 877, 880.

Legal age may be full or partial. As respects the former, the common law fixes the beginning of such period on the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of birth, as respects the latter, a person may be of legal age for certain purposes before arriving at the age of 21 years both at the common law and under the statutes. Montoya de Antonio v. Miller, 7 N.M. 289, 34 P. 40, 21 L.R.A. 699. Legal age to consent to marriage means age of consent to marriage at common law, to wit, 14 years in case of males, and 12 years in case of females. Capwell v. Capwell, 21 R.I. 101, 41 A. 1005. That age, when under the law duties imposed on trustees which were practically those of guardians were no longer regarded as necessary and when the beneficiaries could by their releases duly acquit the trustees for payments made to them, which in the case of boys is upon their arrival at the age of 21 years, and in the case of girls at the age of 18 years. Perkins v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 138 Md. 299, 113 A. 877, 880. The expression "scholars of legal school age" includes all members of the schools under the age of 21 years. Needham v. Wellesley, 139 Mass. 372, 31 N.E. 732, 733.

LEGAL ASSETS. Such property of a testator in the hands of his executor as is liable to debts in temporal courts and to legacies in the spiritual, by course of law; equitable assets are such as are liable only by help of a court of equity. 2 Will. Ex. 1408-1431. The distinction is not important in the United States; In re Sperry's Estate, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 347. That portion of the assets of a deceased party which by law is directly liable, in the hands of his executor or administrator, to the payment of debts and legacies. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 551. Such assets as can be reached in the hands of an executor or administrator, by a suit at law against him.

LEGAL CRUELTY. Such as will warrant the granting of a divorce to the injured party; as distinguished from such kinds or degrees of cruelty as do not, under the statutes, constitute "cruelty," within the meaning of the law, to wit, where there is no personal violence, the misconduct must be such as will impair the health or create a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm. Humber v. Humber, 109 Miss. 216, 68 So. 161, 163. The term is broad enough to include outrages upon the feelings inflicting mental pain and an "dishonor" which the conduct has been studied, willful, and deliberate. McNabb v. McNabb, Tex.Civ.App., 207 S.W. 129, 130. See, also, as to "extreme cruelty" as a ground for divorce. Finnell v. Finnell, 113 Okl. 164, 240 P. 62, 63; Cavileer v. Cavileer, 94 N.J. Eq. 160, 119 A. 101, 103; Maloof v. Maloof, 137 Cal. 571, 166 P. 330, 331.

LEGAL DETERIMENT. "Legal detriment" to promisee means that promisee changes his legal position, or assumes duties or liabilities not theretofore imposed on him. State ex rel. Kansas City v. State Highway Commission, 349 Mo. 865, 163 S.W.2d 948, 953.

LEGAL DISCRETION, See Discretion.

LEGAL DISTRIBUTES, as used in will, is construed to mean persons who would be entitled to take under the law. Jackson v. Osborne, 108 W Va. 480, 151 S.E. 709, 710.

LEGAL ETHICS. Usages and customs among members of the legal profession, involving their moral and professional duties toward one another, Eccl. 281; Singewald v. Singewald, 165 Md. 136, 166 A. 441, 446; the willful infliction of pain, bodily or mental, upon the complaining party, such as reasonably justified the apprehension of danger to life, limb, or health; Skellie v. Skellie, 152 Ga. 707, 111 S.E. 22, 24.

If acts of violence are not of frequent repetition, they must endanger life, limb, or health to constitute "cruelty." McBain v. McBain, 515, 137 A. 288, 289. To constitute "cruelty," within the divorce law, where there is no personal violence, the misconduct must be such as will impair the health or create a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm. Humber v. Humber, 109 Miss. 216, 68 So. 161, 163. The term is broad enough to include outrages upon the feelings inflicting mental pain and an "dishonor" which the conduct has been studied, willful, and deliberate. Mc Nab v. McNabb, Tex.Civ.App., 207 S.W. 129, 130. See, also, as to "extreme cruelty" as a ground for divorce. Finnell v. Finnell, 113 Okl. 164, 240 P. 62, 63; Cavileer v. Cavileer, 94 N.J. Eq. 160, 119 A. 101, 103; Maloof v. Maloof, 137 Cal. 571, 166 P. 330, 331.

LEGAL DETERIMENT. "Legal detriment" to promisee means that promisee changes his legal position, or assumes duties or liabilities not theretofore imposed on him. State ex rel. Kansas City v. State Highway Commission, 349 Mo. 865, 163 S.W.2d 948, 953.

LEGAL DISCRETION, See Discretion.

LEGAL DISTRIBUTES, as used in will, is construed to mean persons who would be entitled to take under the law. Jackson v. Osborne, 108 W Va. 480, 151 S.E. 709, 710.

LEGAL ETHICS. Usages and customs among members of the legal profession, involving their moral and professional duties toward one another, toward clients, and toward the courts; that branch of moral science which treats of the duties which a member of the legal profession owes to the public, to the court, to his professional brethren, and to his client. Kraushaar v. La Vin, 42 N.Y.S.2d 857, 859, 181 Misc. 508.

LEGAL EVIDENCE. A broad general term meaning all admissible evidence, including both oral and documentary, but with a further implication that it must be of such a character as tends reasonably and substantially to prove the point, not to raise a mere suspicion or conjecture. Curtis v. Bradley, 65 Conn. 99, 31 A. 591, 594, 28 L.R.A. 143, 48 Am. St.Rep. 177.

LEGAL EXCUSE. The term "legal excuse," which will excuse observance of ordinance or statute concerning operating or equipping automobile, means anything that would make it impossible to comply with statute or ordinance; anything over which driver has no control in emergency not caused by driver; or excuse or exception specifically provided by statute. Edwards v. Perley, 223 Iowa 1119, 274 N.W. 910, 914; Herman v. Sladofsky, 301 Mass. 534, 17 N.E.2d 879, 881; Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., §§ 648 (care in general), and 752 (assured clear distance ahead).

LEGAL FRAUD. Contracts or acts as, though not originating in actual evil design to perpetrate fraud, yet by their tendency to mislead others or to violate confidence, are prohibited by law. Ruedy v. Toledo Factories Co., 61 Ohio App. 21, 22 N.E.2d 293, 297. Breach of duty which has tendency to deceive others and operates to injure, even though there be no vicious intent. Charleroi Lumber Co. v. School Dist. of Borough of Bentleyville, 334 Pa. 424, 6 A.2d 88, 91.

LEGAL HEIRS. As used in deed, "Legal heirs" and "nearest kin" mean same thing. Weatherford v. Hitt, 149 Ga. 667, 101 S.E. 795, 796; Dutton v. Dutton, 253 P. 553, 554, 122 Kan. 640; Boston Fish Market Corp. v. City of Boston, 224 Mass. 31, 112 N.E. 616, 617, one who has been given possession of land which is exclusive even of the landlord, except as the lease permits his entry, and except right to enter to demand rent or to make repairs. Seabloom v. Krier, 219 Minn. 362, 18 N.W.2d 88, 91.

LESSER OFFENSE. Though the term is used as synonymous with a “less serious offense” or a “minor offense” when one is considering quality of criminal act or severity of penalty imposed, such term as used in statute providing that defendant charged with one of offenses enumerated cannot be convicted or sentenced for lesser offense, means any offense necessarily included in offense charged, where offense charged is one of offenses defined in act. Witt v. State, 205 Ind. 499, 185 N.E. 643, 647.

One who has leased land for a definite or indefinite period, by a written or parol lease, irrespective of whether a statute of fraud requires the lease to be in writing. City of Tyler v. Ingram, 139 Tex. 600, 164 S.W.2d 516, 520. When a lessee subleases the res, he becomes “lessor” for purposes of sublease. Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Carter, La.App., 2 So.2d 680, 682.

LESSOR OF THE PLAINTIFF. In the action of ejectment, this was the party who really and in effect prosecuted the action and was interested in its result.

The reason of his having been so called arose from the circumstance of the action having been carried on in the name of a nominal plaintiff, [John Doe,] to whom the real plaintiff had granted a fictitious lease, and thus had become his lessor.

LESTAGE, LASTAGE. A custom for carrying things in fairs and markets. Fleta, 1. 1, c. 47; Termes de la Ley.

LESTAGEFRY. Lestage free, or exempt from the duty of paying ballast money. Cowell.

LESTAGIUM. Lastage or lestage; a duty laid on the cargo of a ship. Cowell.
The word appears in this generic sense in many compound phrases known to commercial law and jurisprudence; e. g., letter of attorney, letter missive, letter of credit, letters patent. The plural is frequently used.

Metaphorically, the verbal expression; the strict literal meaning.

The letter of a statute, as distinguished from its spirit, means the strict and exact force of the language employed, as distinguished from the general purpose and policy of the law.

He who, being the owner of a thing, lets it out to another for hire or compensation. Story, Balm. § 369.

LETTER-BOOK. A book in which a merchant or trader keeps copies of letters sent by him to his correspondents.

LETTER-CARRIER. An employe of the post-office, whose duty it is to carry letters from the post-office to the persons to whom they are addressed.

LETTER MISSIVE. In English law. A letter from the king or queen to a dean and chapter, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect as bishop. 1 Steph. Comm. 666. A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament against whom a bill has been filed desiring the defendant to appear and answer to the bill. In civil-law practice. The phrase "letters missive," or "letters dimissory," is sometimes used to denote the papers sent up on an appeal by the judge or court below to the superior tribunal, otherwise called the "apostles," (q. v.).

LETTER OF ADVOCATION. In Scotch law. The process or warrant by which, on appeal to the supreme court or court of session, that tribunal assumes to itself jurisdiction of the cause, and discharges the lower court from all further proceedings in the action. Ersk. Inst. 732.

LETTER OF EXCHANGE. A bill of exchange (q. v.).

LETTER OF LICENSE. In English law, a written instrument in the nature of an agreement, signed by all the creditors of a failing or embarrassed debtor in trade, granting him an extension of time for the payment of the debts, allowing him in the meantime to carry on the business in the hope of recuperation, and protecting him from arrest, suit, or other interference pending the agreement.

This form is not usual in America; but something similar to it is found in the "composition" or "extension agreement," by which all the creditors agree to fund their claims in the form of promissory notes, concurrent as to date and maturity, sometimes payable serially and sometimes extending over a term of years. Provision is often made for the supervision or partial control of the business, in the meantime, by a trustee or a committee of the creditors, in which case the agreement is sometimes called a "deed of inspectorship," though this term is more commonly used in England than in the United States.

LETTER OF MARQUE. A commission given to a private ship by a government to make reprisals on the ships of another state; hence, also, the ship thus commissioned. U. S. v. The Ambrose Light, D.C.N.Y., 25 F. 408; Gibbons v. Livingston, 6 N.J.Law, 255.

LETTER OF RECALL. A document addressed by the executive of one nation to that of another, informing the latter that a minister sent by the former has been recalled.

LETTER OF RECREDOENTS. A document embodying the formal action of a government upon a letter of recall of a foreign minister. It, in effect, accredits him back to his own government. It is addressed to the latter government, and is delivered to the minister by the diplomatic secretary of the state from which he is recalled.

LETTERS AD COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI. In Practice. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer to the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant to such person as he approves, letters to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrators; his only business being to collect the goods and keep them in his safe custody. 2 Bla.Com. 505.

LETTERS CLOSE. In English law. Close letters are grants of the king, and, being of private concern, they are thus distinguished from letters patent.

LETTERS OF ABSOLUTION. Absolvatory letters, used in former times, when an abbot released any of his brethren ab omnia sub jectione et obedientia, etc., and made them capable of entering into some other order of religion. Jacob.

LETTERS OF CORRESPONDENCE. In Scotch law. Letters are admissible in evidence against the panel, i. e., the prisoner at the bar, in criminal trials. A letter written by the panel is evidence against him; not so one from a third party found in his possession. Bell.

LETTERS OF FIRE AND SWORD. See Fire and Sword.

LETTERS OF REQUEST. A formal instrument by which an inferior judge of ecclesiastical jurisdiction requests the judge of a superior court to take and determine any matter which has come before him, thereby waiving or remitting his own jurisdiction. This is a mode of beginning a suit originally in the court of arches, instead of the consistory court.
LETTERS OF SAFE CONDUCT. No subject of a nation at war with England can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized, unless he has letters of safe conduct.

By divers old statutes these must be granted under the great seal, and enrolled in chancery, or else are of no effect; the sovereign being the best judge of such emergencies as may deserve exemption from the general law of arms. But passports or licenses from the ambassadors abroad are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity.

LETTERS OF SLAIN, OR SLANES. Letters subscribed by the relatives of a person who had been slain, declaring that they had received an assyment, and concurring in an application to the crown for a pardon to the offender. These or other evidences of their concurrence were necessary to found the application.

LETTERS ROGATORY. A request by one court of another court in an independent jurisdiction, that a witness be examined upon interrogatories sent with the request. Magdanz v. District Court in and for Woodbury County, 222 Iowa 456, 269 N.W. 498, 499, 108 A.L.R. 377. The medium whereby one country, speaking through one of its courts, requests another country, acting through its own courts and by methods of court procedure peculiar thereto and entirely within the latter's control, to assist the administration of justice in the former country. The Signe, D.C. La., 37 F.Supp. 819, 820.

A formal communication in writing, sent by a court in which an action is pending to a court or judge of a foreign country, requesting that the testimony of a witness resident within the jurisdiction of the latter court may be there formally taken under its direction and transmitted to the first court for use in the pending action.

This process was also in use, at an early period, between the several states of the Union. The request rests entirely upon the comity of courts towards each other. See Union Square Bank v. Reichmann, 41 N.Y.S. 602, 9 App.Div. 596.

LETTERS TESTAMENTARY. The formal instrument of authority and appointment given to an executor by the proper court, empowering him to enter upon the discharge of his office as executor. It corresponds to letters of administration granted to an administrator.

LETTING OUT. The act of awarding a contract; e.g., a construction contract, or contract for carrying the mails.

LETTRE. Fr. In French law. A letter. It is used, like our English “letter,” for a formal instrument giving authority.

LETTRES DE CACHET. Letters issued and signed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the imprisonment of a person.

Under them, persons were imprisoned for life or for a long period on the most frivolous pretexts, for the gratification of private pique or revenge, and without any reason being assigned for such punishment. They were also granted by the king for the purpose of shielding his favorites or their friends from the consequences of their crimes; and thus were as pernicious in their operation as the protection afforded by the church to criminals in a former age. Abolished during the Revolution of 1789. Wharton.

LEUCA. In old French law. A league, consisting of fifteen hundred paces. Spelman.

LEVANDIE NAVIS CAUSA. Lat. For the sake of lightening the ship; denotes a purpose of throwing overboard goods, which renders them subjects of general average.

LEVANT ET COUCHANT. L. Fr. Rising up and lying down.

A term applied to trespassing cattle which have remained long enough upon land to have lain down to rest and risen up to feed; generally the space of a night and a day, or, at least, one night.

LEVANTES ET CUBANTES. Rising up and lying down. A term applied to cattle. 3 Bl.Comm. 9. The Latin equivalent of “levant et couchant.”

LEVARI FACIAS. Lat. A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment. Pentland v. Kelly, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 484.

Also a writ to the bishop of the diocese, commanding him to enter into the benefit of a judgment debtor, and take and sequester the same into his possession, and hold the same until he shall have levied the amount of the judgment out of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof.

LEVARI FACIAS DAMNA DE DISSEISITORI-BUS. A writ formerly directed to the sheriff for the levying of damages, which a disseisor had been condemned to pay to the disseisee. Cowell.

LEVARI FACIAS QUANDO VICECOMES RE-, TURNAVIT QUOD NON HABUIT EMPTORES. An old writ commanding the sheriff to sell the goods of a debtor which he had already taken, and had returned that he could not sell them; and as much more of the debtor’s goods as would satisfy the whole debt.

LEVARI FACIAS RESIDUUM DEBITI. An old writ directed to the sheriff for levying the remnant of a partly-satisfied debt upon the lands and tene-ments or chattels of the debtor.

LEVATO VELO. Lat. An expression used in the Roman law, and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression; but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes shall be heard summarily.

The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door and officers employed to keep strangers from the tribunal. When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were heard immediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require dispatch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice. (See Cod. 11, 4, 5.) Bouvier.

LEVY. An embarkment or artificial mound of earth constructed along the margin of a river, to confine the stream to its natural channel or prevent inundation or overflow. State v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co., 7 So. 226, 42 La.Ann. 139; Royse v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co., 67 N.E. 446, 160 Ind. 592.

Also (probably by an extension of the foregoing meaning) a landing place on a river or lake; a place on a river or other navigable water for lading and unlading goods and for the reception and discharge of passengers to and from vessels lying in the contiguous waters, which may be either a wharf or pier or the natural bank. See Coffin v. Portland, C.C.Or., 27 F. 415; People v. Allen, 317 Ill. 92, 147 N.E. 479, 481.

LEVY DISTRICT. A municipal subdivision of a state (which may or may not be a public corporation) organized for the purpose, and charged with the duty, of constructing and maintaining such levees within its territorial limits as are to be built and kept up at public expense and for the general public benefit. See People v. Levee Dist. No. 6, 131 Cal. 30, 63 P. 676.

LEVEL RATE, LEGAL RESERVE POLICY. Insurance which seeks to build up a reserve which will equal face value of policy at the end of insured’s life. Helmer v. Equitable Reserve Ass’n, 214 Wis. 270, 252 N.W. 728.

LEVEL ROAD. Road with uniform grade, regardless of whether it is horizontal, up grade, or down grade. O’Rourke v. City of Washington, 304 Pa. 78, 155 A. 100, 102, 78 A.L.R. 811.

LEVY COURT. A court formerly existing in the District of Columbia.

As used in Uniform Conditional Sales Act, “levy of execution” means the setting aside of specific property from the general property of the debtor and placing it in the custody of the law until it can be sold and applied to the payment of the execution. Bent v. H. W. Weaver, Inc., 106 W.Va. 164, 145 S.E. 594, 595.

In reference to taxation, the word may mean the legislative function and declaration of the subject and rate or amount of taxation, People v. Mahoney, 13 Cal.2d 729, 91 P.2d 1029; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Amos, 94 Fla. 588, 115 So. 315, 320; City of Richmond v. Eubank, 179 Va. 70, 18 S.E.2d 397, 403; or the rate of taxation rather than the physical act of applying the rate to the property, Lowder v. Texas County Excise Board, 187 Okl. 365, 103 P.2d 98, 100; or the formal order, by proper authority declaring property subject to taxation at fixed rate at its assessed valuation, State v. Davis, 335 Mo. 159, 73 S.W.2d 406, 407; or the ministerial function of assessing, listing and extending taxes, City of plankinton v. Kieffer, 70 S.D. 329, 19 N.W.2d 494, 495, 496; or the extension of the tax, Syracuse Trust Co. v. Board of Sup’rs of Oneida County, 13 N.Y.S. 2d 390, 394; People ex rel. Oswego Falls Corporation v. Foster, 295 N.Y.S. 891, 895, 251 App.Div. 65; Day v. Inland Steel Co., 185 Minn. 53, 239 N.W. 776, 777; or the doing of whatever is necessary in order to authorize the collector to collect the tax, Syracuse Trust Co. v. Board of Sup’rs of Oneida County, 13 N.Y.S.2d 390, 394. The qualified electors “levy” a tax when they vote to impose it. Parker v. MacCue, 54 R.I. 270, 172 A. 725, 727.

LEVITIVE DEGREES. Degrees of kindred within which persons are prohibited to marry. They are set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus.

LEVYING and administration of jails, school districts, and various other matters of local concern. See Rev.St.Del. 1893, c. 8; Mealey v. Buckingham, 22 A. 357, 6 Del.Ch. 356.

LEVYING WAR. In criminal law. The assembling of a body of men for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable object; and all who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are considered as engaged in levying war, within the meaning of the constitution. Const. art. 3, § 3; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 75, 2 L.Ed. 554.

The words include forcible opposition, as the result of a combination of individuals, to the execution of any public law of the United States; and to constitute treason within the Federal Constitution, there must be a combination of individuals united for the common purpose of forcibly preventing the execution of some public law and the actual or threatened use of force by the combination to prevent its execution. Kegreis v. Van Zile, 167 N.Y.S. 874, 876, 180 App.Div. 414.

LEWD AND LASCIVIOUS COHABITATION. Within statutes, the living together of a man and woman not married to each other, in the same house or apartment, as husband and wife. State v. Bridgeman, 88 W.Va. 231, 106 S.E. 708, 711. Habitual acts .of illicit intercourse are necessary elements. State v. Tuttle, 129 Me. 125, 150 A. 490, 491; State v. Davenport, 225 N.C. 13, 33 S.E.2d 136, 139. See, also, Lewdness.

LEWD HOUSE. House may be a "lewd house," though chiefly devoted to carrying on business of boarded house or hotel, if lewd women are ac- customed to frequent house and carry on their practices therein. Smith v. State, 52 Ga.App. 88, 182 S.E. 816, 818.

LEWDLY AND LASCIVIOUSLY PLAYING WITH A FEMALE CHILD. Playing or dallying with or touching or handling such child in indecent and obscene manner calculated to excite passions. State v. Martin, Del., 7 W.W.Harr. 342, 183 A. 334.

Lewd or lascivious behavior practised without disguise, secrecy, or concealment. The adjective relates to the quality of the act, not to the place nor to the number of spectators. State v. Juneau, 88 Wis. 180, 59 N.W. 580, 24 L.R.A. 857, 43 Am.St.Rep. 877; Corn. v. Wardell, 128 Mass. 52, 35 Am.Rep. 357. There must be present elements making the act shameless, aggressive, and defiant, rather than furtive and hiding away in shame; lewdness being deemed open when committed in the presence of another person, or in a place open to public view. State v. Pedigo, 190 Mo.App. 293, 176 S.W. 556, 557.

LEX. Lat.

In medieval jurisprudence. A body or collection of various laws peculiar to a given nation or people; not a code in the modern sense, but an aggregation or collection of laws not codified or systematized. See Mackeld.Rom.Law, § 98.

Also, a similar collection of laws relating to a general subject, and not peculiar to any one people.

In modern American and English jurisprudence. A system or body of laws, written or unwritten, or so much thereof as may be applicable to a particular case or question, considered as being local or peculiar to a given state, country, or jurisdiction, or as being different from the laws or rules relating to the same subject-matter which prevail in some other place.

In old English law. A body or collection of laws, and particularly the Roman or civil law.

Also a form or mode of trial or process of law, as the ordeal or battle, or the oath of a party with compurgators, as in the phrases legem facere, legem vadiare, etc. Also in the sense of legal rights or civil rights or the protection of the law, in the phrase legem timitere.

In Roman law. Law; a law; the law.

This term was often used as the synonym of jus, in the sense of a rule of civil conduct authoritatively prescribed for the government of the actions of the members of an organized jural society.

Lex is used in a purely juridical sense, law, and not also right; while jus has an ethical as well as a juridical meaning, not only law, but right. 15 L.Q.R. 367 (by Salmond). Lex is usually concrete, while jus is abstract.

In English we have no term which combines the legal and

In a more limited and particular sense, it was a resolution adopted by the whole Roman "populus" (patricians and plebeians) in the comitia, on the motion of a magistrate of senatorial rank, as a consul, a praetor, or a dictator. Such a statute frequently took the name of the proposer; as the lex Falcidia, lex Cornelia, etc.

A rule of law which magistrates and people had agreed upon by means of a solemn declaration of consensus. Sohm, Inst.R.L. 28.

In a somewhat wider and more generic sense, a law (whatever its origin) or the aggregate of laws, relating to a particular subject-matter, thus corresponding to the meaning of the word "law" in some modern phrases, such as the "law of evidence," "law of wills," etc.

Other specific meanings of the word in Roman Jurisprudence were as follows: Positive law, as opposed to natural. That system of law which descended from the Twelve Tables, and formed the basis of all the Roman law. The terms of a private covenant; the condition of an obligation. A form of words prescribed to be used upon particular occasions.

LEX IEBUTIA. A statute which introduced and authorized new and more simple methods of instituting actions at law.

The law which, with the leges Julice, In part abolided the legis actiones. It provided that a judicium could be instituted in a city court without legis actio, merely by means of the formula or prwtorian decree of appointment, and placed the legis actio and the formula, so far as the civil law was concerned, on a footing of equality. Sohm, Rom. L. 173.

LEX "ELIA SENTIA. The 2Elian Sentian law, respecting wills, proposed by the consuls JElius and Sentius, and passed A. U. C. 756, restraining a master from manumitting his slaves in certain cases. Calvin.

LEX 1EMILIA. A law which reduced the official term of the censors at Rome from five years to a year and a half, and provided for the discharge of their peculiar functions by the consuls in the interim until the time for a new census. Mackeld. Rom.Law, § 29.

LEX A2EQUITATE GAUDET; APPETIT PERFECTUM; EST NORMA RECTI. The law delights in equity: it covets perfection; it is a rule of right. Jenk.Cent. 36.

LEX AGRARIA. The agrarian law. A law proposed by Tiberius Gracchus, A. U. C. 620, that no one should possess more than five hundred acres of land; and that three commissioners should be appointed to divide among the poorer people what any one had above that extent.

LEX ALAMANNORUM. The law of the Alemanni; first reduced to writing from the customs of the country by Theodoric, king of the Franks, A. D. 512. Amended and reenacted by Clotaire II. Spelman.

LEX ALIQUANDO SEQUITUR IEQUITATEM. Law sometimes follows equity. 3 Wils. 119.

LEX AMISSA. One who is an infamous, perjured, or outlawed person. Bract. lib. 4, c. 19.

LEX ANASTASIANA. The law admitting asagnati the children of emancipated brothers and sisters. Inst. 3, 5.

A law which provided that a third person who purchased a claim or debt for less than its true or nominal value should not be permitted to recover from the debtor more than the price paid with lawful interest. Mackeld.Rom. Law, § 369.

LEX ANGLIZE. The law of England. The common law. Or, the curtesy of England.

LEX ANPI1I1E EST LEX MISERICORDLE. 2 Inst. 315. The law of England is a law of mercy.

LEX ANGLIZE NON PATITUR ABSURDUM. 9 Coke, 22a. The law of England does not suffer an absurdity.

LEX ANGLIZE NUNQUAM MATRIS SED SEMPER PATRIS CONDITIONEM IMITARI PERTUM JUDICAT. The law of England rules that the offspring shall always follow the condition of the father, never that of the mother. Co.Litt. 123; Bart.Max. 59.

LEX ANGLIZE NUNQUAM SINE PARLIAMENTO MUTAUI POTEST. 2 Inst. 218. The law of England cannot be changed but by parliament.

LEX APOSTATA. A thing contrary to law. Jacob.

LEX APPARENS. In old English and Norman law. Apparent or manifest law.

A term used to denote the trial by battel or duel, and the trial by ordeal, "lex" having the sense of process of law. Called "apparent" because the plaintiff was obliged to make his right clear by the testimony of witnesses, before he could obtain an order from the court to summon the defendant. Spelman.

LEX APULEJA, or APULEIA. A law giving to one of several joint sureties or guarantors, who had paid more than his proportion of the debt secured, a right of action for reimbursement against his co-sureties as if a partnership existed between them. See Mackeld.Rom.Law, § 454, note 2; Inst. 3, 20.

LEX AQUILIA, The Aquilian law; a celebrated law passed on the proposition of the tribune C. Aquilius Gallus, A. U. C. 672, superseding the earlier portions of the Twelve Tables, and regulating the compensation to be made for that kind of damage called "injurious," in the cases of killing or wounding the slave or beast of another. Inst. 4, 3; Calvin.

LEX ATIILA. The Atilian law. A law of Rome proposed by the tribune L. Atilius Regulus, A. U. C. 443, which conferred upon the magistrate the right of appointing guardians. It applied only to the city of Rome; Sohm, Inst.Rom.L. 400.

LEX ATINIA. The Atinian law. A law declaring that the property in things stolen should not be acquired by prescription, (usuacipione.) Inst. 2, 6, 2; Adams, Rom.Ant. 207.

LEX BRETOISE. The law of the ancient Britons, or Marches of Wales. Cowell.

LEX BURGUNDIONUM. The law of the Burgundians, a barbarous nation of Europe, first compiled and published by Gundebald, one of the last of their kings, about A.D. 500. Spelman.

LEX CALPURNIA. A law relating to the form and prosecution of actions for the recovery of specific chattels other than money. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 203. The law which extended the scope of the action allowed by the lex Silia to all obligations for any certain definite thing.

LEX CANULEIA. The law which conferred upon the plebeians the connubium, or the right of intermarriage with Roman citizens. Morey, Rom. L. 48.

LEX CINCIA. A law which prohibited certain kinds of gifts and all gifts or donations of property beyond a certain measure, except in the case of near kinsmen.

LEX CITIUS TOLERARE VULT PRIVATUM DAMNUM QUAM PUBLICUM MALUM. The law will more readily tolerate a private loss than a public evil. Co. Litt. 152.

LEX CLAUDIA. A law which abolished the ancient guardianship of adult women by their male agnate relations. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 615.

LEX COMITATUS. The law of the county, or that administered in the county court before the earl or his deputy. Spelman.

LEX COMMISSORIA. See Commissoria Lex.

LEX COMMUNIS. The common law. See Jus Commune.

LEX CONTRA ID QUOD PRIESUMIT, PROBATIONEM NON RECIPIT. The law admits no proof against that which it presumes. Loftt, 573.

LEX CORNELIA. The Cornelian law; a law passed by the dictator L. Cornelius Sylla, providing remedies for certain injuries, as for battery, forcible entry of another’s house, etc. Calvin.

LEX CORNELIA DE FALSO (or FALSIS). The Cornelian law respecting forgery or counterfeiting.

Passed by the dictator Sylla. Dig. 48, 10; Calvin. The law which provided that the same penalty should attach to the forgery of a testament of a person dying in captivity as to that of a testament made by a person dying in his own country. Inst. 2, 12, 5.

LEX CORNELIA DE INJURIIS. The law providing a civil action for the recovery of a penalty in certain cases of bodily injury. Sohm, R.L. 329.

LEX CORNELIA DE SICARIIS ET VENEFICIS. The Cornelian law respecting assassins and poisoners, passed by the dictator Sylla, and containing provisions against other deeds of violence.

It made the killing of the slave of another person punishable by death or exile, and the provisions of this law were extended by the Emperor Antoninus Pius to the case of a master killing his own slave. Inst. 1, 8; Dig. 48, Calvin.

LEX CORNELIA DE SPONSU. A law prohibiting one from binding himself for the same debtor to the same creditor in the same year for more than a specified amount. Inst. 2, 20.

LEX DANORUM. The law of the Danes; Danelaw or Dane-lage. Spelman.

LEX DE FUTURO, JUDEX DE PRIETERITO. The law provides for the future, the judge for the past.

LEX DE RESPONSIS PRUDENTUM. The law of citations.

LEX DEFICERE NON POTEST IN JUSTITIA EXHIBENDA. Co. Litt. 197. The law cannot be defective [or ought not to fail] in dispensing justice.

LEX DERAISNIA. The proof of a thing which one denies to be done by him, where another affirms it; defeating the assertion of his adversary, and showing it to be against reason or probability. This was used among the old Romans, as well as the Normans. Cowell.

LEX DILATIONES SEMPER EXHORRET. 2 Inst. 240. The law always abhors delays.

LEX DOMICILII. The law of the domicile. 2 Kent, Comm. 112, 433.

LEX ET CONSUETUDO PARLIAMENTI. The law and custom (or usage) of parliament.

LEX ET CONSUETUDO REGNI. The la .w and custom of the realm. One of the names of the common law. Hale, Com.Law. 52.

LEX FORI. The law of the forum, or court; that is, the positive law of the state, country, or jurisdiction of whose judicial system the court where the suit is brought or remedy sought is an integral part. 2 Kent, Comm. 462.

"Remedies upon contracts and their incidents are regulated and pursued according to the law of the place where the action is instituted, and the lex loci has no application." 2 Kent, Comm. 462. 'The remedies are to be governed by the laws of the country where the suit is brought;
or, if it is concomitantly expressed, by the lex fori.'
974. "So far as the law affects the remedy, the lex fori, the law of the place where that remedy is sought, must govern. But, so far as the law of the construction, the legal operation and effect, of the contract, is concerned, it is governed by the law fori, or law of jurisdiction in which relief is sought controls as to all matters pertaining to remedial as distinguished from substantive rights. Shimonek v. Tillman, 150 Okl. 177, 1 P.2d 154, 156; Sullivan v. McFetridge, Sup.,
55 N.Y.S.2d 511, 516. See Lex Loci Contractus.

LEX FRANCORUM. The law of the Franks; promulgated by Theodoric I., son of Clovis I., at the same time with the law of the Alemanni and Bavarians. Spelman. This was a different collection from the Salic law.

LEX FRISONUM. The law of the Frisians, promulgated about the middle of the eighth century.
Spelman.

LEX FURIA CANINIA. The Furian Caninian
law.
A law passed in the consulship of P. Furius Camillus and C. Cninius Gallus, A.U.C. 752, prohibiting masters from manumitting by will more than a certain number or proportion of their slaves. This law was abrogated by

LEX FURIA DE SPONSU. The law limiting the liability of sponsors and fide-promissors to two years, and providing that as between several cosponsors or co-fide-promissors, the debt should be, ipso jure, divided according to the number of the sureties without taking the solvency of individual sureties into account. It applied only to Italy.

LEX FURIA TESTAMENTARIA. A law enacting that a testator might not bequeath as a legacy more than one thousand asses.

LEX GABINIA. A law introducing the ballot in elections.

LEX GENUCIA. A law which entirely forbade the charging or taking of interest for the use of money among Roman citizens, but which was usually and easily evaded, as it did not declare an agreement for interest to be a nullity. See Mack-eld. Rom.Law, § 382n.

LEX GOTHICA. The Gothic law, or law of the Goths. First promulgated in writing A.D. 466.
Spelman.

LEX HORATIA VALERIA. A law which assured the right to the plebeians of things which must necessarily be done as an integral part. 2 Kent, Comm. 462.

LEX IMPERATORIA. The Imperial or Roman
law. Quoted under this name, by Fleta, lib. 1, c.
38, § 15; Id. lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

LEX HORATAI. An important constitutional statute, taking its name from the consul who secured its enactment, to the effect that all decrees passed in the meetings of the plebeians should be laws for the whole people; formerly they were binding only on the plebeians. Mackeld. Rom.Law, § 32.

LEX HORTENSIA. The law giving the plebeians a full share in the jus publicum and the jus sac-rum. Sand. Just. Introd. § 9. -

LEX HOSTILIA DE FURTIS. A Roman law, which provided that a prosecution for theft might be carried on without the owner's intervention.
4 Steph.Comm. (7th Ed.) 118.

LEX IMPERATORIA. The Imperial or Roman
law. Quoted under this name, by Fleta, lib. 1, c.
38, § 15; Id. lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

LEX INTENDIT VICINUM VICINI FACTA SCI-
RE. The law intends [or presumes] that one neighbor knows what another neighbor does. Co.
Litt. 78b.

LEX JUDICAT DE REBUS NECESSARIO FACI-ENDIS QUASI RE IPSA FACTIS. The law judges of things which must necessarily be done as if actually done. Branch, Princ.

LEX JUDICIALIS. An ordeal.

LEX JULIA. Several statutes bore this name, being distinguished by the addition of words descriptive of their subject matter.

The "lex Julia de adulteris" related to marriage, dower, and kindred subjects. The lex Julia de ambitu was a law
LEX JULIA MAJESTATIS

A law promulgated by Julius Caesar, and again published with additions by Augustus, comprehending all the laws before enacted to punish transgressors against the state. Calvin.

LEX JUNIA NORBANA. The law conferring legal freedom on all such freedmen as were tuitione precitoris. See Latini Juniani.

Lex Junia Velleja conferred the same right on posthumous children born in the lifetime of the testator, but after the execution of the will, as were enjoyed by those born after the death of the testator. Sohm, Rom.L. 463.

LEX JUNIA VELLEJA. A law providing that descendants who became sui heredes of the testator otherwise than by birth, as by the death of their father, must be disinherited or instituted heirs in the same way as posthumous children. Campbell, Rom.L. 77.

LEX KANTIIE. The body of customs prevailing in Kent during the time of Edward I.

A written statement of these customs was sanctioned by the king's justices in Byre. They were mainly concerned with the maintenance of a form of land tenure known as gavelkind (q. v.). 1 Poll. & Maitl. 166.

LEX LOCI. The law of the place. This may be of several descriptions but, in general, lex loci is only used for lex loci contractus.

The "lex loci" furnishes the standard of conduct, Russ v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 220 N. C. 715, 18 S.E.2d 130, 131; it governs as to all matters going to the basis of the right of action itself, State of Maryland, for Use of Joynes, v. Coard, 175 Va. 571, 9 S.E.2d 454, 458.

The substantive rights of parties to action are governed by "lex loci" or law of place where rights were acquired or liabilities incurred. Sullivan v. McFetridge, Sup., 55 N. Y. S.2d 511, 516; Gray v. Blight, C.C.A.Colo., 112 F.2d 696, 699.

LEX LOCI ACTUS. The law of the place where the act was done.

LEX LOCI CELEBRATIONIS. The law of the place where a contract is made.

LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS. Used sometimes to denote the law of the place where the contract was made, and at other times to denote the law by which the contract is to be governed, which may or may not be the same as that of the place where it was made. The earlier cases do not regard this distinction. See Pritchard v. Norton, 1 S.Ct. 102, 106 U.S. 124, 27 L.Ed. 104; Pickering v. Fisk, 6 Vt. 102; Speed v. May, 17 Pa. 91, 55 Am.Dec. 540; Hayward v. Le Baron, 4 Fla. 404; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U.S. 406, 23 L.Ed. 245. See an elaborate collection of cases on conflict of laws, 5 Eng.Rul.Cas. 703-975. The phrase is used, in a double sense, to mean, sometimes, the law of the place where a contract is entered into; sometimes that of the place of its performance. Security Trust & Savings Bank of Charles City, Iowa v. Gleichmann, 50 Oki. 441, 150 P. 908, 911, L.R.A.1915F. 1203; Farm Mortgage & Loan Co. v. Beale, 113 Neb. 293, 202 N.W. 877, 878; Bullington v. Angel, 220 N.C. 18, 16 S.E.2d 411, 412, 136 A.L.R. 1054; it is the place of acceptance. Sterrett v. Stoddard Lumber Co., 150 Or. 491, 46 P.2d 1023, 1029.

LEX LOCI DELICTUS. The law of the place where the crime or wrong took place. More fully expressed by the words lex loci delicti commissi (law of the place where a tort is committed), usually written more briefly as lex loci delicti, or, sometimes, simply lex delicti.

LEX LOCI DOMICILI. The law of the place of domicile.

LEX LOCI REI SITIE. The law of the place where a thing or subject-matter is situated.

"It is equally settled in the law of all civilized countries that real property, as to its tenure, mode of enjoyment, transfer, and descent, is to be regulated by the lex loci rei sitiae." 2 Kent, Comm. 429. The title to realty or question of real estate law can be affected only by the law of the place where the reality is situated. Colden v. Alexander, 171 S.W.2d 328, 335, 141 Tex. 134; United States v. Becktold Co., C.C.A.Mo., 129 F.2d 473, 477.

LEX LOCI SOLUTIONIS. The law of the place of solution; the law of the place where payment or performance of a contract is to be made.

LEX LONGOBARDORUM. The law of the Lombards. The name of an ancient code of laws among that people, framed, probably, between the fifth and eighth centuries. It continued in force after the incorporation of Lombardy into the empire of Charlemagne, and traces of its laws and institutions are said to be still discoverable in some parts of Italy.

LEX MANIFESTA. Manifest or open law; the law which compels no one to do vain or useless things. Co.Litt. 197b; Broom,
LEX PRIETORIA

LEX NEMINEM COGIT OSTENDERE QUOD NESCIRE PRIESEMITUR. Lofft, 569. The law compels no one to show that which he is presumed not to know.

LEX NEMINI OPERATUR INIQUUM. The law works injustice to no one. Jenk.Cent. p. 18, case 33.

LEX NEMINI OPERATUR INIQUUM, NEMINI FACIT INJURIAM. The law never works an injury, or does a wrong. Jenk.Cent. 22.

LEX NIL FACIT FRUSTRA. The law does nothing in vain. Jenk.Cent. p. 12, case 19; Broom, Max. 252; 1 Ventn. 417.

LEX NIL FACIT FRUSTRA, NIL JUBET FRUSTRA. The law does nothing and commands nothing in vain. 3 Bulstr. 279; Jenk. Cent. 17.

LEX NIL FRUSTRA JUBET. The law commands nothing vainly. 3 Bulst. 280.

LEX NON A REGE EST VIOLANDA. Jenk. Cent. 7. The law is not to be violated by the king.

LEX NON COGIT AD IMPOSSIBILIA. The law does not compel the doing of impossibilities. Broom, Max. 242; Hob. 96; Co. Litt. 231b; 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 851; Wells v. Burbank, 17 N.H. 411.

LEX NON CURAT DE MINIM'S. Hob. 88. The law cares not about trifles. The law does not regard small matters.

LEX NON DEFICIT IN JUSTITIA EXHIBENDA. The law does not fail in showing justice. Jenk. Cent. p. 31, case 61.

LEX NON FAVET DELICATORUM VOTIS. The law favors not the wishes of the dainty. Broom, Max. 379; 9 Coke, 58.

LEX NON INTENDIT ALIQUID IMPOSSIBLE. The law does not intend anything impossible. 12 Coke, 89a. For otherwise the law should not be of any effect.

LEX NON PATITUR FRACTIONES ET DIVISIONES STATUUM. The law does not suffer fractions and divisions of estates. Branch, Princ.; 1 Coke, 87a.

LEX NON PRZECIPIT INUTILIA, QUIA INUTILIS LABOR STULTUS. The law commands not useless things, because useless labor is foolish. Co. Litt. 197; 5 Co. 89a; Mowry's Case, 112 Mass. 400.

LEX NON REQUIRIT VERIFICARI QUOD APPARET CURIAE. The law does not require that to be verified [or proved] which is apparent to the court. 9 Coke, 54b.

LEX NON SCRIPTA. The unwritten or common law, which includes general and particular customs, and particular local laws. 1 Steph.Com. 40-68.

LEX ORDINANDI. The same as lex fori, (q. v.).

LEX PAPIA. POPPIEA. The Papian law.

A law proposed by the consuls Papius and Popmmus at the desire of Augustus, A.U.C. 762, enlarging the Lex Prætoria (q. v.) Inst. 3, 8, 2. The law which exempted from tutelage women who had three children. It is usually considered with the Lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus as one law.

LEX PETRONIA. The law forbidding masters to expose their slaves to contests with wild beasts. Inst. 1, 8.

LEX PLAETORIA. A law designed for the protection of minors against frauds and allowing them in certain cases to apply for the appointment of a guardian. Inst. 1, 23.

LEX PLAUTIA. The law which conferred the full rights of citizenship on Italy below the Po. Sand. Just. Introd. § 11.

LEX PLUS LAUDATUR QUANDO RATIONE PROBATUR. The law is the more praised when it is approved by reason. Broom, Max. 159; 3 Term 146; 7 Term 252; 7 A. & E. 657.

LEX POETELIA. The law abolishing the right of a creditor to sell or kill his debtor. Sohm. Rom. L. 210.

LEX POMPEIA. DE PARRICIDILS. The law which inflicted a punishment on one who had caused the death of a parent or child.

The offender was by this law to be sewn up in a sack with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and thrown into the sea or a river, so that even in his lifetime he might begin to be deprived of the use of the elements; that the air might be denied him whilst he lived and the earth when he died. Inst. 4, 18, 6.

LEX POSTERIOR DEROGAT PRIORI. A later statute takes away the effect of a prior one. But the later statute must either expressly repeal, or be manifestly repugnant, to, the earlier one. Broom, Max. 29; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 7.

LEX PRZETORIA. The praetorian law. A law by which every freedman who made a will was commanded to leave a moiety to his patron. Inst. 3, 8, 1. The term has been applied to the rules that govern in a court of equity. Gilb.Ch. pt. 2.
LEX PROSPICIT, NON RESPICIT. Jenk.Cent. 284. The law looks forward, not backward.

LEX PUBLILLIA. The law providing that the plebiscita should bind the whole people. Inst. 1, 2.

The lex Publilia de sponsu allowed sponsors, unless reimbursed within six months, to recover from their principal by a special actio what they had paid.

LEX REGIA. The royal or imperial law. A law enacted (or supposed or claimed to have been enacted) by the Roman people, constituting the emperor a source of law, conferring the legislative power upon him, and according the force and obligation of law to the expression of his mere will or pleasure. See Inst. 1, 2, 6; Gaius, 1, 5; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 46; Heinecc. Rom. Ant. 1, 1, tit. 2, §§ 62-67; 1 Kent, Comm. 544, note.

LEX REI SITZE. The law of the place of situation of the thing. It is said to be an inexact mode of expression; lex situs, or lex loci rei situs are better. 29 L.Q.R. 2 (H. Gondy).

LEX REJECT SUPERFLUA, PUGNANTIA, INCONGRUA. Jenk.Cent. 133. The law rejects superfluous, contradictory, and incongruous things.

LEX REPROBAT MORMOR. Jenk.Cent. 35. The law dislikes delay.

LEX RESPICIT ZEQUITATEM. Co.Litt. 24b. The law regards to equity. See 14 Q.B. 504, 511, 512; Broom, Max. 151.

LEX RHODIA. See Rhodian Laws.

LEX ROMANA. See Civil Law; Roman Law.

LEX SACRAMENTALIS. Purgation by oath.

LEX SALICA. See Salic Law.

LEX SCRIBONIA. The law abolishing the usu capio servitutis. Sohm, Rom.L. 265.

LEX SCRIPTA. Written law; law deriving its force, not from usage, but from express legislative enactment; statute law. 1 Bl.Comm. 62, 85.

LEX SCRIPTA SI CESSET, ID CUSTODIRI OPORSET QUOD MORIBUS ET CONSUETU DINE INDUCTUM EST; ET, SI QUA IN RE HOC DEFCERET, TUNC ID QUOD PROXIMUM ET CONSEQUENS EI EST; ET, SI ID NON AP PAREAT, TUNC JUS QUO URBS ROMANA UTILITUR SERVARI OPORSET. 7 Coke, 19. If the written law be silent, that which is drawn from manners and custom ought to be observed; and, if that is in any manner defective, then that which is next and analogous to it; and, if that does not appear, then the law which Rome uses should be followed.

This maxim of Lord Coke is so far followed at the present day that, in cases where there is no precedent of the English courts, the civil law is always heard with respect, and often, though not necessarily, followed. Wharton.

LEX SEMPER DABIT REMEDIUM. The law will always give a remedy. Branch, Princ.; Broom, Max. 192; Bac.Abr. Actions in general (B); 12 A. & E. 266; 7 Q.B. 451.

LEX SEMPER INTENDIT QUOD CONVENIT RATIONI. Co.Litt. 78b. The law always intends what is agreeable to reason.

LEX SEMPRONIA. The law preventing senators from being judges and allowing the office to the knights. Sand. Just. Introd. § 12.

LEX SILLIA. A law concerning personal actions. Sohm, Rom.L. 155.

LEX SITUS. Modern law Latin for "the law of the place where property is situated." The general rule is that lands and other immovables are governed by the lex situs; e., by the law of the country in which they are situated. Westl.Priv.Int.Law, 62.

LEX SPECTAT NATURZE ORDINEM. The law regards the order of nature. Co.Litt. 197b; Broom, Max. 252.

LEX SUCCURRIT IGNORANTI. Jenk. Cent. 15. The law assists the ignorant.

LEX TALIONIS. The law of retaliation; which requires the infliction upon a wrongdoer of the same injury which he has caused to another.

Expressed in the Mosaic law by the formula, "an eye for an eye; a tooth for a tooth," etc. In modern international law, the term describes the rule by which one state may inflict upon the citizens of another state death, imprisonment, or other hardship, in retaliation for similar injuries imposed upon its own citizens.

LEX TERRIE. The law of the land. The common law, or the due course of the common law; the general law of the land. Bract. fol. 17b. Equivalent to "due process of law." In the strictest sense, trial by oath; the privilege of making oath.

Bracton uses the phrase to denote a freeman's privilege of being sworn in court as a juror or witness, which jurors convicted of perjury forfeited, (legem terse amitabant.) Bract. fol. 292b. The phrase means "the procedure of the old popular law." Thayer, Evid. 201, quoting Brunner, Schw. 254, and Fortesq. de Laud. c. 26 (Selden's notes).

LEX UNO ORE OMNES ALLOQUITUR. The law addresses all with one [the same] mouth or voice. 2 Inst. 184.

LEX VIGILANTIBUS, NON DORMIENTIBUS, SUBVENIT. Law assists the wakeful, not the sleeping. 1 Story, Cont. § 529.

LEX VOCONIA. A plebiscitum forbidding a legatee to receive more than each heir had. Inst. 2, 22.

LEX WALLENSICA. The Welsh law; the law of Wales. Blount.

LEX WISIGOTHORUM. The law of the Visigoths, or Western Goths who settled in Spain; first reduced to writing A. D. 466. A revision of these laws was made by Eggis. Spelman.

LEY. L. Fr. (A corruption of loi.) Law; the law. For example, Terms de la Ley, Terms of the Law.

In another, and an old technical, sense, ley signifies an oath, or the oath with compurgators; as, it tend sa ley ali pleynitke. Britton, c. 27.

In Spanish law. A law; law in the abstract.

LEY GAGER. Law wager; wager of law; the giving of gage or security by a defendant that he would make or perfect his law at a certain day. Litt. § 514; Co. Litt. 294b, 295a.

An offer to make an oath denying the cause of action of the plaintiff, confirmed by compurgators, which oath was allowed in certain cases. When it was accomplished, it was called the "doing of the law, "fessons de ley."

Terms de la Ley; 2 B. & C. 538; 3 B. & P. 297.

LEYES DE ESTILO (or ESTILLO). In Spanish law. Laws of the age.

A collection of laws usually published as an appendix to the Fuero Real; treating of the mode of conducting suits, prosecuting them to judgment, and entering appeals. Schm. Civil Law, Intro. 74. Formed under the authority of Alonzo X. and his son Sancho, and of Fernando el Emplazado, and published at the end of the 13th century or beginning of the 14th; some of them are inserted in the New Recopilacion. 1 New Recop. 354.

LEZE MAJESTY, or LESE MAJESTY. An offense against sovereign power; treason; rebellion.

LIABILITY. The word is a broad legal term. Mayfield v. First Nat. Bank of Chattanooga, Tenn., C.C.A.Tenn., 137 F.2d 1013, 1019. It has been referred to as of the most comprehensive significance, including almost every character of hazard or responsibility, absolute, contingent, or likely. Wentz v. State, 108 Neb. 597, 188 N.W. 467, 468.

The term is therefore broader than the word "debt," or "indebtedness," and includes all existing obligations, which may or may not in the future eventuate in an indebtedness. Daniels v. Goff, 192 Ky. 15, 232 S.W. 66, 67; Irving Bank-Columbia Trust Co. v. New York Rys. Co., D.C.N.Y., 292 F. 429, 433.

The word is not synonymous with "loss" or "damage," and under an automobile insurance policy insuring against "liabilities," there may be recovery without allegation or proof that insured has required to pay any sum, whereas under a policy covering "actual loss or damage," not to the occasion arises which has suffered some damage. Ducommun v. Strong, 193 Wis. 179, 214 N.W. 616; Stag Mining Co. v. Missouri Fidelity & Casualty Co., 103 Cal.App. 2, 249 S.W. 321, 323.

LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES. Liability for an amount to be ascertained by trial of the facts in particular cases. Hurt v. Pennsylvania Thresher-
LIABILITY

LIABLE. 1. Bound or obliged in law or equity; responsible; chargeable; answerable; compellable to make satisfaction, compensation, or restitution. Homan v. Employers Reinsurance Corporation, 345 Mo. 650, 136 S.W.2d 289, 298, 127 A.L.R. 163; State v. Albert, 125 Me. 325, 133 A. 693, 694. Obligated; accountable for or chargeable with. Wilhelm v. Rightmire, 196 N.Y.S. 539, 541, 119 Misc. 833.

2. Exposed or subject to a given contingency, risk, or casualty, which is more or less probable. Jennings v. National American, Mo.App., 179 S.W. 789; Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 193 Ark. 327, 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. Exposed, as to damage, penalty, expense, burden, or anything unpleasant or dangerous; justly or legally responsible or answerable. Breslaw v. Rightmire, 196 N.Y.S. 539, 541, 119 Misc. 833.

4. Future possible or probable happening which may not actually occur, and relates to an occurrence within the range of possibility. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Smith, 209 Ala. 301, 96 So. 239, 240; Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. Exposed to damage, penalty, expense, burden, or anything unpleasant or dangerous; justly or legally responsible or answerable. Breslaw v. Rightmire, 196 N.Y.S. 539, 541, 119 Misc. 833.

5. In all probability. Neely v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., Mo.App., 14 S.W.2d 972, 978.

LIABLE FOR SUCH TAX. Subject to a tax. Houston Street Corporation v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Tex., 84 F.2d 821, 822.

LIABLE TO ACTION. Liable to judgment in given action. Haas v. New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital, 226 N.Y.S. 617, 620, 131 Misc. 395.

LIABLE TO PENALTY. Subject to penalty. The Motorboat, D.C.N.J., 53 F.2d 239, 241.

LIARD. An old French coin, of silver or copper, formerly current to a limited extent in England, and there computed as equivalent to a farthing.

LIBEL, v. Admalty Practice. To proceed against, by filing a libel; to seize under admalty process, at the commencement of a suit.

Torts. To defame or injure a person's reputation by a published writing.

LIBEL, n. In Practice. The initiatory pleading on the part of the plaintiff or complainant in an admiralty or ecclesiastical cause, corresponding to the declaration, bill, or complaint.

A written statement by a plaintiff of his cause of action, and of the relief he seeks to obtain in a suit. Ayliffe, Par. 346; Shelf.Marr. & D. 506; Dunl.Adm.Pr. in.

In Scotch Law. The form of the complaint or ground of the charge on which either a civil action or criminal prosecution takes place. Bell. A libel of accusation is the instrument which contains the charge against a person accused of a crime. Libels are of two kinds, namely, indictments and criminal letters.

Accusatian in writing or printing against the character of a person which affects his reputation, in that it tends to hold him up to ridicule, contempt, shame, disgrace, or oblivion; to degrade him in the estimation of the community, to induce an evil opinion of him in the minds of right-thinking persons, to make him an object of reproach, to diminish his respectability or abridge his comforts, to cause him to be shunned or avoided, or where it is charged that one has violated his public duty as a public officer. Stevens v. Wright, 107 Va. 337, 179 A. 213, 217.

Almost any language which upon its face has a natural tendency to injure a man's reputation, either generally or with respect to his occupation. Washer v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 21 Cal.2d 822, 136 P.2d 297, 300, 155 A.L.R. 1338.

False accusation which dishonors or discredits a man in estimate of public or his friends and acquaintances or has a reasonable tendency to do so. Stoll v. Long Islander Pub. Co., Sup., 40 N.Y.S.2d 412, 413.

False and malicious publication, which charges an offense punishable by indictment, or which tends to bring Individual into public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or charges an act odious and disgraceful in society. White v. Birmingham Post Co., 233 Ala. 547, 172 So. 649, 651.

Publication by any means other than words orally spoken of any false and scandalous matter with intent to injure or defame another. L.O.L. Or. § 1930 (Code 1930, § 14-238).

Publication which falsely charges or imputes dishonesty, or engagement in fraudulent enterprises of such a nature as reflects on the character and integrity of a person, and to subject him to the loss of public confidence and respect. Smith v. Pure Oil Co., 278 Ky. 430, 128 S.W.2d 931, 932.

Writing that discloses in plaintiff in minds of any considerable and respectable class in the community. Streeter v. Eldridge, 311 Mass. 180, 40 N.E.2d 254, 255.

Libels have been classified according to their objects: (1) Libels which impute to a person the commission of a crime; (2) libels which have a tendency to injure him in his office, profession, calling, or trade; (3) libels which hold him up to scorn and ridicule and to feelings of contempt or execution, impair him in the enjoyment of general society, and injure those imperfect rights of friendly intercourse and mutual confidence by which man has with respect to man. Newell, Sian. & L. 67.

Criminal libel. See Criminal.

Seditious libel. See Seditious Libel.

LIBEL OF REVIEW. New proceeding instituted to attack final decree after expiration of term and right to appeal. The Astorian, C.C.A.Cal., 57 F.2d 85, 87.

LIBELANT. The complainant or party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions at law.

LIBEELEE. A party against whom a libel has been filed in an ecclesiastical court or in admiralty, corresponding to the defendant in a common-law action.

LIBELLUS. Lat.

In civil law. A little book. Libellus supplex, a petition, especially to the emperor, all petitions to whom must be in writing. Libellum rescribere, to mark on such petition the answer to it. Libellum divortii, a message by which emperors laid matters before the senate. Calvin. Libellus appellatorius, an appeal. Calvin.

A writing in which are contained the names of the plaintiff (actus) and defendant, (reus,) the thing sought, or relied upon, and placed on the tribunal before which the action is brought. Calvin. Libellus apppellatorius, an appeal. Calvin.

In Feudal law. An instrument of alienation or conveyance, as of a fief, or a part of it.
LIBBEUS

Also, a bill. Bracton, fol. 112. Sometimes called libellus conventionis (q. v.).

LIBELLUS CONVENTIONIS. In the civil law. The statement of a plaintiff's claim in a petition presented to the magistrate, who directed an officer to deliver it to the defendant.

LIBELLUS FAMOSUS. In the civil law. A defamatory publication; a publication injuriously affecting character; a libel. Inst. 4, 4, 1; Dig. 47, 10; Cod. 9, 36.

LIBELOUS. Defamatory; of the nature of a libel; constituting or involving libel. See, also, Libel.

LIBELOUS PER QUOD. Expressions "libelous per quod" are such as require that their injurious character or effect be established by allegation and proof. Talbot v. Mack, 41 Nev. 245, 169 P. 25, 32. They are those expressions which are not actionable upon their face, but which become so by reason of the peculiar situation or occasion upon which the words are written. Oliveros v. Henderson, 116 S.C. 77, 106 S.E. 855, 857; Norton v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 184 S.C. 525, 193 S.E. 126, 128. Publications which are susceptible of two reasonable interpretations, one of which is defamatory and the other is not, or publications which are not obviously defamatory, but which become so when considered in connection with innuendo, colloquium, and explanatory circumstances, Flake v. Greensboro News Co., 212 N.C. 780, 195 S.E. 55, 59.

LIBELOUS PER SE. A publication is libelous per se when the words are of such a character that an action may be brought upon them without the necessity of showing any special damage, the presumption being such that the law will presume that any one so slandered must have suffered damage. See Mayrant v. Richardson, 1 Nott. & McC. (S.C.) 349, 9 Am.Dec. 707; Woolworth v. Star Co., 97 App.Div. 525, 90 N.Y.S. 147; Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co., 124 Iowa 707, 100 N.W. 867. To render words "libelous per se," the words must be of such character that a presumption of law will arise therefrom that the plaintiff has been degraded in the estimation of his friends or of the public or has suffered some other loss either in his property, character, reputation, or business or in his domestic or social relations. Whitaker v. Sherbrooke Distributing Co., 189 S.C. 243, 200 S.E. 848, 849. See, also, Actionable Words.

Publications or words have been held libelous per se when charge a public officer with a crime or misdemeanor in office, Sweeney v. LIBER NIGER SCACCARIL. The black book of the exchequer, attributed to Gervase of Tilbury.

LIBERA AMittere liberam legem. To lose one’s free law, (called the villainous judgment,) to be disgraced or discredited as juror and witness, to forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, to have those lands wasted, houses razed, trees rooted up, and one’s body committed to prison. It was anciently pronounced against conspirators, but is now disused, the punishment substituted being fine and imprisonment. Hawk. P. C. 61, c. lxxii., s. 9; 3 Inst. 221; Jones v. Brinkley, 174 N.C. 23, 93 S.E. 372, 374.

LIBERARE. Lat.

In old English law. To deliver, transfer, or hand over. Applied to writs, panels of jurors, etc. Bract. fols. 116; 176b.

In the civil law. To free or set free; to liberate; to give one his liberty. Calvin.

LIBERATA PECUNIA NON LIBERAT OFFER
tem. Money being restored does not set free the party offering.

LIBERATE. In old English practice. An original writ issuing out of chancery to the treasurer, chamberlains, and barons of the exchequer, for the payment of any annual pension, or other sum. Reg. Orig. 193; Cowell.

A writ issued to a sheriff, for the delivery of any lands or goods taken upon forfeits of recognizance. 4 Coke, 64b.

A writ issued to a gaoler for the delivery of a prisoner that had put in bail for his appearance. Cowell.

A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent on a statute stand, commanding the sheriff to deliver them to the plaintiff, by the extent and appraisement mentioned in the writ of extent and in the sheriff’s return thereto. See Com.Dig. Statute Staple (D 6).

LIBERI. In Saxon law. Freemen; the possessors of alodial lands. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 5.

In the Civil law. Children. The term included “grandchildren.”

LIBERTAS. Lat. Liberty; freedom; a privilege; a franchise.

LIBERTAS ECCLESIASTICA. Church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

LIBERTAS EST NATURALIS FACULTAS EJUS QUOD CUIQUE FACER.D LIBET, NISI QUOD DE JURE AUT VI PROHIBETUR. Co. Litt. 116. Liberty is that natural faculty which permits every one to do [or the natural power of doing] anything he pleases except that which is restrained by law or force.
LIBERTAS

LIBERTAS INESTIMABILIS RES EST. Liberty is an inestimable thing; a thing above price. Dig. 50, 17, 106; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51, § 13.

LIBERTAS OMNIBUS REBUS FAVORABILIOR EST. Liberty is more favored than all things, (anything) Dig. 50, 17, 122.

LIBERTATES REGALES AD CORONAM SPECINTANTES EX CONCESSIONE REGUM A CORONA EXERRUNT. 2 Inst. 496. Royal franchises relating to the crown have emanated from the crown by grant of kings.

LIBERTATIBUS ALLOCANDIS. A writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impounded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed. Reg. Orig. 262.

LIBERTATIBUS EXIGENDIS IN ITINERE. An ancient writ whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit of an attorney for the defense of another’s liberty. Reg. Orig. 19.

LIBERTI, LIBERTINI. Lat. In Roman law. Freedmen. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. 1 Brown, Civ. Law 99.

There seems to have been some difference in the use of these two words; the former denoting the manumitted slaves considered in their relations with their former master, who was now called their “patron;” the latter term applying to them in their status in the general social economy of Rome subsequent to manumission. Lee, Ed. Dr. Rom. § 93. See Morey, Rom.L. 236.

LIBERTICIDE. A destroyer of liberty.

LIBERTIES. Privileged districts exempt from the sheriff’s jurisdiction; as, “gaol liberties.” See Gaol.

In colonial times, laws, or legal rights resting upon them. The early colonial ordinances in Massachusetts were termed laws and liberties, and the code of 1641 the “Body of Liberties.” Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 70.

Formerly, political subdivisions of Philadelphia; as, Northern Liberties.

“Liberties” referred to in statute concerning indenent liberties with female child are such as common sense of society would regard as indecent and improper. People v. Lakin, 286 Mich. 282, 282 N.W. 149, 150.

LIBERTINUM INGRATUM LEGES CIVILES IN PRISTINAM SERVITUTEM REDIGUNT; SED LEGES ANGLIZE SEMEL MANUMISSUM SEMPER LIBERUM JUDICANT. Co. Litt. 137. The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedom to his original slavery; but the laws of England regard a man once manumitted as ever after free.

LIBERTY. Freedom; exemption from extraneous control.

Freedom from all restraints except such as are justly imposed by law. Ex parte Kreutzer, 187 Wis. 463, 204 N.W. 595, 604. Freedom from restraint, under conditions essential to the equal enjoyment of the same right by others; freedom regulated by law. Kelly v. James, 37 S.D. 272, 157 N.W. 990, 991. The absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community. Southern Union Bank v. City of Palatka, 86 Fla. 583, 99 So. 236, 240; Nelsen v. Tilley, 137 Neb. 327, 289 N.W. 388, 392, 126 A.L.R. 729; American Board of Barber Examiners, 45 N.M. 57, 109 P.2d 779, 785.

The power of the will to follow the dictates of its unrestricted choice, and to direct the external acts of the individual without restraint, coercion, or control from other persons. See Booth v. Illinois, 22 S.Ct. 425, 184 U.S. 425, 46 L.Ed. 423; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 142, 24 L.Ed. 77; People v. Warden of City Prison, 51 N.E. 1006, 157 N.Y. 116, 43 L.R.A. 264, 68 Am.St.Rep. 763.

will, State Bank & Trust Co. v. Village of Wilmette, 358 Ill. 311, 93 N.E. 131, 133, 96 A.L.R. 1327.

Liberty, on its positive side, denotes the fullness of individual existence; on its negative side it denotes the necessary restraint on all, which is needed to promote the greatest possible amount of liberty for each. Amos, Science of Law, p. 90.

The word "liberty" as used in the state and federal Constitutions means, in a negative sense, freedom from restraint, but in a positive sense, it involves the idea of freedom secured by the imposition of restraint, and it is in this positive sense that the state, in the exercise of its police powers, promotes the freedom of all by the imposition upon particular persons of restraints which are deemed necessary for the general welfare. Fitzsimmons v. New York State Athletic Commission, Sup., 146 N.Y.S. 117, 121.

"Liberty," in so far as it is noticed by government, is restraint, rather than license. It is a yielding of the individual will to that of the many, subject to such constitutional guarantees or limitations as will preserve those rights and privileges which are admitted of all men to be fundamental. "Liberty" in the civil state is a giving up of natural right in consideration of equal protection and opportunity. Weber v. Doust, 84 Wash. 330, 146 P. 623, 625.

The "personal liberty" guaranteed by Const. U. S. Amend. 13 consists in the power of locomotion without imposition of restraint, except those restraints imposed to prevent commission of threatened crime or in punishment of crime committed, those in punishment of contempt of courts or legislative bodies, those necessary to enforce the duty citizens owe in defense of the state to protect community against acts of those who by reason of mental infirmity are incapable of self-control. Esplin v. Huddins, 86 W.Va. 326, 103 S.E. 327, 329, 9 A.L.R. 136.

The "liberty" safeguarded by Fourteenth Amendment is liberty in a social organization which requires the protection of law against the evils which menace the health, safety, morals, and welfare of the people. West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, Wash., 57 S.Ct. 578, 581, 582, 300 U.S. 379, 81 L.Ed. 703, 108 A.L.R. 1330.

Also, a franchise or personal privilege, being some part of the sovereign power, vested in an individual, either by grant or prescription.

The term is used in the expression, rights, liberties, and franchises, as a word of the same general class and meaning with those words and privileges. This use of the term is said to have been stringently conclusive to its use as defined in Magna Charta and in English declarations of rights, statutes, grants, etc.; Corn. v. Alger, 7 Cush. [Mass.] 70.

In a derivative sense, the place, district, or boundaries within which a special franchise is enjoyed, an immunity claimed, or a jurisdiction exercised, in this sense, the term is commonly used in the plural; as the "liberties of the city."

Civil Liberty

The liberty of a member of society, being a man's natural liberty, so far restrained by human laws (and no further) as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public. 1 El. Comm. 125; 2 Steph. 487.

The power of doing whatever the laws permit. 1 Bl. Comm. 785. See Denno. Massey, 18 Wash. 337, 52 P. 333, 40 L.R.A. 302. The greatest amount of absolute liberty which can, in the nature of things, be equally possessed by every citizen in a state. Guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection. Lieber, Civ.Lib. 24.

LIBERTY

Liberty of a Port

In marine insurance. A license or permission incorporated in a marine policy allowing the vessel to touch and trade at a designated port other than the principal port of destination. See Allege v. Maryland Ins. Co., 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 200, 29 Am.Dec. 536.

Liberty of Conscience

Liberty for each individual to decide for himself what is to him religious. Gobitis v. Minersville School Dist., D.C.Pa., 21 F.Supp. 581, 584. See also, Religious Liberty, as defined below.

Liberty of Contract

The ability at will, to make or abstain from making, a binding obligation enforced by the sanctions at the law. Judson, Liberty of Contract, Rep. Am. Bar Ass'n (1891) 233.

The right to contract about one's affairs, including the right to make contracts of employment, etc. to obtain the best terms one can as the result of private bargaining. Jenkins v. Children's Hospital of District of Columbia, 43 S. Ct. 394, 396, 261 U.S. 525, 67 L.Ed. 785, 24 A.L.R. 1238. It includes the corresponding right to accept a contract proposed. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Griffin, 106 Tex. 477, 171 S.W. 703, 704, L.R.A.1917B, 1108. There is, however, no absolute freedom of contract. The government may regulate or forbid any contract reasonably calculated to affect injuriously public interest. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 31 S.Ct. 164, 219 U.S. 186, 55 L.Ed. 167, 167 L.R.A., N.S., 7; Carleton Screw Products Co. v. Fleming, C.C.A.Minn., 126 F.2d 537, 541. It means freedom from arbitrary or unreasonable restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulation to safeguard public interest, Saucier v. Life & Casualty Ins. Co. of Tennessee, 189 Miss. 693, 198 So. 625, 631; or the right to make contracts with competent persons on a plane of relative parity or freedom of choice and within the limits allowed or not forbidden by law. McGrew v. Industrial Commission, 96 Utah 203, 85 P.2d 608, 612.

Liberty of Speech

Freedom accorded by the constitution or laws of a state to express opinions and facts by word of mouth, uncontrolled by any censorship or restrictions of government.

But language tending to the violation of the rights of personal security and safety, of state or federal, and toward breaches of the public peace, is an abuse of the right. State v. Boyd, 86 N.J.L. 75, 91 A. 866, 878; which is not license, nor lawlessness, but rather the right to fairly criticize and comment, State v. Pape, 90 Conn. 96 A. 313, 315. Liberty never has meant the unrestricted right to say what one pleases at all times and under all circumstances. Fraina v. U. S., 255 F. 28, 35. It is not an absolute right. State v. Chaplinisky, 91 N.H. 310, 18 A.2d 754, 760. It has been thought that the liberty to speak includes the corresponding right to be silent, and that this right is infringed by a statute compelling a corporation to give a discharged employee a statement of the cause of discharge. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Griffin, 106 Tex. 477, 171 S.W. 703, 705, L.R.A.1917B, 1108. As used in Constitution, "freedom of speech" means freedom of speech as it was understood by the common law when the Constitution was adopted. State v. Boloff, 138 Or. 568, 7 P.2d 775, 781.

Liberty of the Globe

In marine insurance. A license or permission incorporated in a marine policy authorizing the vessel to go to any part of the world, instead of being confined to a particular port of destination. See Eyre v. Marine Ins. Co., 6 Whart. (Pa.) 254.
LIBERTY

Liberty of the Press

The right to print without any previous license, subject to the consequences of the law. 3 Term 431; Respublica v. Dennie, 4 Yeates, Pa., 267, 2 Am.Dec. 402; Williams Printing Co. v. Saunders, 113 Va. 156, 73 S.E. 472, Ann.Cas. 1913E, 693. The right to publish whatever one may please. Knapp v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 111 Colo. 492, 144 P.2d 981, 985; Howard Sports Daily v. Weller, 179 Md. 355, 18 A.2d 210, 215; and to be protected against any malice they may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interests of individuals, Cooley, Const. Pl. p. 422. It is said to consist in this: “That neither courts of justice, nor any judges whatever, are authorized to take notice of writings intended for the press, but are confined to those which are actually printed.” De Lolme, Eng.Const. 254. Immunity from previous restraints or [from] censorship. Grosjean v. American Press Co., La., 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 449, 80 L.Ed. 660.

Liberty of the Rules

A privilege to go out of the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons within certain limits, and there reside. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

Liberty to Hold Pleas

The liberty of having a court of one’s own. Thus certain lords had the privilege of holding pleas within their own manors.

Natural Liberty

The power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature. 1 Bl. Comm. 125.

The right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consistent with their happiness, on condition of their making and administration of the laws. 1 Bl. Comm. 134. Civil Rights Cases, 3 S.Ct. 42, 109 U.S. 3, 27 L.Ed. 835; Pinkerton v. Verberg, 78 Mich. 573, 44 N.W. 579, 7 L.R.A. 507, 18 Am.St.Rep. 473.

Political Liberty

Liberty of the citizen to participate in the operations of government, and particularly in the making and administration of the laws.

Religious Liberty

Freedom from dictation, constraint, or control in matters affecting the conscience, religious beliefs, and the practice of religion; freedom to entertain and express any or no system of religious opinions, and to engage in or refrain from any form of religious observance or public or private religious worship, not inconsistent with the peace and good order of society and the general welfare. See Frazee’s Case, 63 Mich, 396, 30 N.W. 72, 6 Am.St.Rep. 310; State v. White, 64 N.H. 48, 5 A. 828.

LIBERUM CORPUS NULLAM RECIPIT; ESTIMATIONEM. Dig. 9, 3, 7. The body of a free-man does not admit of valuation.

LIBERUM EST CUIQUE APUD SE EXPLORARE AN EXPEDIAT SIBI CONSILIUM. Every one is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to his interest. Up-ton v. Vail, 6 Johns. (N.Y.) 181, 184, 5 Am.Dec. 210.

LIBERUM MARITAGIUM. In old English law. Frank-marriage. Bract. fol. 21; Littleton, § 17.

LIBERUM SERVITIUM. Free service. Service of a warlike sort by a feudatory tenant; sometimes called “servitium liberum armorum.” Jacob. See, also, Servitium Liberum.

Service not unbecoming the character of a freeman and a soldier to perform; as to serve under the lord in his wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 60.

The tenure of free service does not make a villein a freeman, unless homage or manumission precede, any more than a tenure by villein services makes a freeman a villein. Bract. fol. 24.

LIBERUM TENEMENTUM. A plea of freehold. A plea by the defendant in an action of trespass to real property that the locus in quo is his freehold, or that of a third person, under whom he acted. 1 Tidd, Pr. 645; 2 Salk. 453; 7 Term 355; 1 Wms. Saund. 299b.

In Realty Law. Freehold. Frank-tenement.

LIBLAC. In Saxon law. Witchcraft, particularly that kind which consisted in the compounding and administering of drugs and philters. Sometimes occurring in the Latinized form liblacum.

LIBRA. In old English law. A pound; also a sum of money equal to a pound sterling.

LIBRA ARSA. A pound burned; that is, melted, or assayed by melting, to test its purity. A frequent expression in Domesday, to denote the sum of money equal to a pound sterling.

LIBRA NUMERATA. A pound of money counted instead of being weighed. Spelman; Cowell.

LIBRA Pensa. A pound of money by weight.

It was usual in former days not only to sell the money, but to weigh it; because many cities, lords, and bishops, having their mints, coined money, and often very bad money, too, for which reason, though the pound consisted of 20 shillings, they weighed it. Enc.Lond.
LIBRARIUS. In Roman law. A writer or amendent, it is also used as meaning a collection of books not kept for sale. In re Mead’s Estate, 227 Wis. 311, 277 N.W. 694, 701.

LIBRATA TERRIE. A portion of ground containing four oxgangs, and every oxgang fourteen acres. Cowell. This is the same with what in Scotland was called “pound-land” of old extent. Wharton. See Oxgang; Pound of Land.

LIBRIPENS. In Roman law. A weigher or balance-holder. The person who held a brazen balance in the ceremony of emancipation a piece of bronze as a sign of the completion of the conveyance. The bronze was then transferred to the seller as a sign of the purchase money. Morey, Rom. L. 21, 80.

LIBRORUM APPELLATIONE CONTINENTUR IN MEMBRANA SINT, SIVE IN QUAVIS ALIA MATERIA. Under the name of books are contained all volumes, whether upon paper, or parchment, or any other material. Dig. 32, 52, pr.

LICENCIADO. In Spanish law. An attorney or advocate; particularly, a person admitted to the degree of “Licentiate in Jurisprudence” by any of the literary universities of Spain and who is, thereby authorized to practice in all the courts. Escriche.

LICENSE

International Law

Permission granted by a belligerent state to its own subjects, or to the subjects of the enemy, to carry on a trade interdicted by war. Wheat. Int. Law, 447.

Letter of License

See Letter of License.

Liquor

A license is a permission to do something which otherwise would be unlawful to do and is not property. Collier v. State, 54 Ga. App. 346, 187 S.E. 843, 845.

A license to sell liquor is merely permit to do that which otherwise would be unlawful to do and is not property. Oval Bar & Restaurant v. Buckman, 30 N.Y.S.2d 594, 395, 177 Misc. 244; State Board of Equalization of California v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, 5 Cal.App.2d 374, 42 P.2d 1076, 1077. Such license is a mere privilege. State v. Wipke, 343 Mo. 283, 133 S.W.2d 354, 357. Permits to carry on liquor business are mere "licenses" revocable as provided in such act and do not create a property right. State ex rel. Gutter v. Hawley, Ohio App., 44 N.E.2d 815, 820.

Marriage License

See Marriage License.

Motor Carriers

A grant by state commerce commission of petition for certificate of convenience and necessity to operate as motor carrier is the grant of a license. Railway Express Agency v. Illinois Commerce Commission, 374 El. 151, 28 N.E.2d 116, 118.

City having right to regulate use of its streets by motor vehicles for hire may issue licenses, a license being permission. Ex parte Schutte, 118 Tex.Cr.R. 182, 42 S.W.2d 252, 255.

Motor Vehicles

Patent Law

A written authority granted by the owner of a patent to another person empowering the latter to make or use the patented article for a limited period or in a limited territory.

Executory license. That which exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

Express license. One which is granted in direct terms.

Implied license. One which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

A license is distinguished from an "easement," which implies an interest in the land, and a "lease," or right to take the profits of land. It may be, however, and often is, coupled with a grant of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *398; Davis v. Tway, 16 Ariz. 566, 147 P. 750, L.R.A.1915E, 604; National Memorial Park v. C. I. R., C.C.A.4, 145 F.2d 1008, 1015.

A license is an authority to enter on land which is generally granted by parole and may be revoked by the licensor at pleasure and is not assignable, being a personal privilege, while an easement confers an interest in the land and may not be terminated at the pleasure of the servient owner. Louisville Coal & Furniture Co. v. Otter, 219 Ky. 757, 294 S.W. 483, 485.

The distinction between an easement and a license is often so metaphysical, subtle, and shadowy as to elude analysis. But there are certain fundamental principles underlying most cases which enable courts to distinguish an easement from a license when construed in the light of surrounding circumstances. East Jersey Iron Co. v. Wright, 32 N.J. Eq. 254; Nunnely v. Iron Co., 94 Tenn. 397, 29 S.W. 361, 28 L.R.A. 421.

A "tenancy" implies some interest in the land leased, while a "license" conveys only a temporary privilege in the use of property usually revocable at the will of the licensor. Klein v. City of Portland, 106 Or. 686, 213 P. 147, 50 Vicks. Syne., 155 W. 281, 143 N. 186, 188. But see Mitchell v. E. R. Bart, 52 Okd. 10, 152 P. 597, 598.

An "invitation" is inferred where there is a common interest or mutual advantage, or where an owner or occupant of premises, by acts or conduct, leads another to believe the premises or something thereon were intended to be used by such other person, that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupant, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way, place, or thing was adapted or prepared or allowed to be used; while a "license" is implied where the object is the mere use of property usually revocable at the will of the purported owner's goods have not become known and identified by his use of mark is a naked "license". E. F. Prichard Co. v. Consumers Brewing Co., C.C.A.Ky., 136 F.2d 512, 521.

LICENSE IN AMORTIZATION. A license authorizing a conveyance of property which, without it, would be invalid under the statutes of mortmain.

Trade-Mark

Permission to use a trade-mark in an area where the purported owner's goods have not become known and identified by his use of mark is a naked "license". E. F. Prichard Co. v. Consumers Brewing Co., C.C.A.Ky., 136 F.2d 512, 521.

LICENSE CASES. The name given to the group of cases including Peirce v. New Hampshire, 5 How. 504, 12 L.Ed. 256, decided by the United States supreme court in 1847, to the effect that state laws requiring a license or the payment of a tax for the privilege of selling intoxicating liquors were not in conflict with the constitutional provision giving to congress the power to regulate interstate commerce, even as applied to liquors imported from another state and remaining in the original and unbroken packages. This decision was overruled in Leisy v. Hardin, 10 Sup.Ct. 681, 135 U.S. 100, 34 L.Ed. 128, which in turn was counteracted by the act of congress of August 8, 1890, commonly called the "Wilson law."

Charge or fee imposed primarily for the discouragement of danger is employment, the protection of the safety of the public, or the regulation of relative rights, privileges, or duties as between individuals, Conrad v. State, Del. Super., 2 Terry 107, 16 A.2d 121, 125. Price paid to governmental or municipal authority for a license to engage in and pursue a particular calling or occupation. See Home Ins. Co. v. Augusta, 50 Ga. 537; Levi v. Louisville, 97 Ky. 394, 30 S.W. 973, 28 L.R.A. 480. Tax on privilege of exercising corporate franchise. City Investments v. Johnson, 6 Cal.2d 150, 56 P.2d 939, 940. The term "license tax" includes both charge imposed under police power for privilege of obtaining license to conduct particular business, and tax imposed upon business for sole purpose of raising revenue; "license tax" being defined as sum exacted for privilege of carrying on particular occupation. City of Waycross v. Bell, 169 Ga. 57, 149 S.E. 641, 642. Where a fee is exacted and something is required or permitted in addition to the payment of the sum, either to be done by the licensee, or by some regulation or restriction imposed on him, then the fee is a "license fee". Conrad v. State, Del. Super., 2 Terry 107, 16 A.2d 121, 125.

LICENSE IN AMORTIZATION. A license authorizing a conveyance of property which, without it, would be invalid under the statutes of mortmain.

LICENSE IN AMORTIZATION. A license authorizing a conveyance of property which, without it, would be invalid under the statutes of mortmain.
LICENSE TAX

LICENSE TAX. A license, strictly so-called, imposed in exercise of the ordinary police power of the state, or a tax, laid in the exercise of the power of taxation. State v. Commercial Loan Co., 251 Ala. 672, 38 So.2d 571, 573.

See License Fee or Tax, supra.

LICENSED VICTUALLER. A term applied, in England, to all persons selling any kind of intoxicating liquor under a license from the justices of the peace. Wharton.

LICENSEE. A person licensed; one who holds a license. Texas-Louisiana Power Co. v. Webster, 127 Tex. 126, 91 S.W.2d 302. A social guest. Biggs v. Bear, 320 Ill.App. 597, 51 N.E.2d 799, 800; Kalinowski v. Young Women's Christian Ass'n, 17 Wash.2d 380, 135 P.2d 852, 857; Gregory v. Loder, 116 N.J.L. 451, 185 A. 360; an invitee stepping beyond limits of his invitation, Wilson v. Goodrich, 252 N.W. 142, 218 Iowa 462; McGentry v. John A. Stephenson & Co., 218 Minn. 311, 15 N.W.2d 874, 875; person entering or using premises by permission or by operation of law but without express or implied invitation. Boneau v. Swift & Co., Mo.App., 66 S.W.2d 172, 175; Texas-Louisiana Power Co. v. Webster, 127 Tex. 126, 91 S.W.2d 302; Texas Co. v. Haggard, 23 Tenn. App. 475, 134 S.W.2d 880, 884, 885; person entering premises by permission only, without invitation, enticement, or allurement. Brody v. Cudahy Packing Co., 233 Mo.App. 973, 127 S.W.2d 7, 10. Person entering premises either without invitation, or for purpose not connected with business conducted on premises, but with permission or toleration. Kalinowski v. Young Women's Christian Ass'n, 17 Wash.2d 380, 135 P.2d 852, 857; Person granted express permission to use premises of another, Dye v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 175 Okl. 567, 54 P.2d 182, 183; person on another's premises only through acquiescence or sufferance. Karns v. Trostel, 44 Ohio App. 498, 186 N.E. 405; Foley v. H. F. Farnham Co., 135 Me. 29, 188 A. 708, 712; person on another's premises solely in pursuit or furtherance of his own interest, or for that of a third person. Keesee v. G. M. McKelvey Co., 141 Ohio St. 162, 47 N.E.2d 211, 214; Fraters v. Keeling, 20 Cal. App.2d 490, 67 P.2d 118; person privileged to enter or remain on land by virtue of possessor's consent, whether given by invitation or permission. Smith v. Southwest Missouri R. Co., 333 Mo. 314, 62 S.W.2d 761; Manley v. Haus, 113 Vt. 217, 32 A.2d 668, 671; Hashim v. Chimiklis, 91 N.H. 456, 21 A.2d 166, 167; person using premises through owner's sufferance only, without any enticement, allurement, or inducement and for his own personal benefit, convenience, and pleasure. Boneau v. Swift & Co., Mo.App., 66 S.W.2d 172, 175; person who has mere permission to use land, dominion over it remaining in owner, and no interest in nor exclusive possession of it being given to occupant. Seabloom v. Krier, 219 Minn. 362, 18 N. W.2d 88, 91; person who is neither passenger, servant, nor trespasser and does not stand in any contractual relation with owner, and is permitted to come upon premises for his own interest, convenience, and gratification, Hyde v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co., 47 Ga.App. 139, 169 S.E. 854, 855; Buss v. Wachsmith, 190 Wash. 673, 70 P.2d 417, 421; Platt v. Exclusive Licensee
See Exclusive Licensee.

Patent Law
One who has had transferred to him, either in writing or orally, a less or different interest than either the interest in the whole patent, or an undivided part of such whole interest, or an exclusive sectional interest. Potter v. Holland, 4 Blatchf. 211, Fed.Cas.No.11,329.

LICENSEE BY INVITATION. A person who goes upon the lands of another with express or implied invitation to transact business with the owner or occupant or do some act to his advantage or to the mutual advantage of both the licensee and the owner or occupant. Samuel E. Pentecost Const. Co. v. O'Donnell, 112 Ind.App. 47, 39 N.E.2d 812.

A licensee by express invitation is one who is directly invited by the owner of the land to enter upon it. Mann v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 232 Iowa 1049, 7 N.W.2d 45, 51.

A licensee by implied invitation is one who has been invited to enter upon the land either by the owner or occupier of the same by some affirmative act done by such owner or occupier or by appearances which justify persons generally in believing that such owner or occupier had given his consent to the public generally to enter upon or to cross over his premises. Mann v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 232 Iowa 1049, 7 N.W.2d 45, 51.

LICENSEE BY PERMISSION. One who, for his own convenience, curiosity, or entertainment, goes upon the premises of another by the owner's or occupant's permission or sufferance. Samuel E. Pentecost Const. Co. v. O'Donnell, 112 Ind.App. 47, 39 N.E.2d 812, 817.

LICENSING ACTS. This expression is applied by Hallam (Const. Hist. c. 13) to acts of parliament for the restraint of printing, except by license.

It may also be applied to any act of parliament passed for the purpose of requiring a license for doing any act whatever. But, generally, when we speak of the licensing acts, we mean the acts regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors. Mozley & Whiteley.
LICENSOR. The person who gives or grants a license.

LICENTIA. Lat. License; leave; permission.

LICENTIA CONCORDANDI. In old practice and conveyancing. License or leave to agree; one of the proceedings on levying a fine of lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

LICENTIA LOQUENDI. In old practice. Leave to speak, (i.e., with the plaintiff;) an imparlance; or rather leave to imparl. 3 Bl. Comm. 299.

LICENTIA SURGENDI. In old English practice. License to arise; permission given by the court to a tenant in a real action, who had cast an essoin de malo lecti, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon.

If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default. Bract. lib. 5; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10.

LICENTIAS TRANSFRETANDI. A writ or warrant directed to the keeper of the port of Dover, or other seaport, commanding him to let such persons pass over sea as have obtained the royal license thereunto. Reg. Orig. 193.

LICENTIATE. One who has license to practice any art or faculty.

LICENTIOUSNESS. The indulgence of the arbitrary will of the individual, without regard to ethics or law, or respect for the rights of others.

In this it differs from "liberty;" for the latter term may properly be used only of the exercise of the will in its moral freedom, with justice to all men and obedience to the laws, Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 184; 4 Am. Rep. 35; State v. Brigman, 94 N.C. 889; liberty is restrained by natural or positive law, and consists in doing whatever we please not inconsistent with the rights of others, whereas licentiousness does not respect those rights. Wolff, Inst. § 84.

LIE. n. An untruth deliberately told; the uttering or acting of that which is false for the purpose of deceiving; intentional misstatement. Brothers v. Brothers, 208 Ala. 258, 94 So. 175, 177.

LICITARE. Lat. To offer for a thing; to bid; to bid often; to make several bids, one above another. Calvin.

LICITATION. In the civil law. An offering for sale to the highest bidder, or to him who will give most for a thing.

An act by which co-heirs or other co-proprietors of a thing in common and undivided between them put it to bid between them, to be adjudged and to belong to the highest and last bidder, upon condition that he pay to each of his co-proprietors a part in the price equal to the undivided part which each of the said co-proprietors had in the estate licited, before the adjudication. Poth. Cont. Sale, nn. 516, 638. See Barbarich v. Meyer, 154 La. 325, 97 So. 459, 460.

LICITATOR. In Roman law. A bidder at a sale.

LICKING OF THUMB. An ancient formality by which bargains were completed.

LIDFORD LAW. A sort of lynch law, whereby a person was first punished and then tried. Wharton.

LIE DETECTOR. A machine which records by a needle on a graph varying emotional disturbances when answering questions truly or falsely, as indicated by fluctuations in blood pressure, respiration or perspiration. State v. Cole, 354 Mo. 181, 188 S.W.2d 43, 51. A pathometer. People v. Forte, 4 N.Y.S.2d 913, 919, 167 Misc, 868.

LIE IN FRANCHISE. Property is said to "lie in franchise" when it is of such a nature that the persons entitled thereto may seize it without the aid of a court; e.g., wrecks, waifs, estrays.
LIE

LIE IN GRANT. Incorporeal hereditaments are said to "lie in grant"; that is, they pass by force of the grant (deed or charter) without livery.

LIE IN LIVERY. A term applied to incorporeal hereditaments, freeholds, etc., signifying that they pass by livery, not by the mere force of the grant.

LIE IN WAIT. See Lying in Wait.

LIE TO. To adjoin. A cottage must have had four acres of land laid to it. See 2 Show. 279.

LIEFTENANT. An old form of "lieutenant," and still retained as the vulgar pronunciation of the word.

LIEGE. In feudal law. Bound by a feudal tenure; bound in allegiance to the lord paramount, who owned no superior.

The term was applied to the lord, or liege lord, to whom allegiance was due, since he was bound to protection and a just government, and also to the feudatory, liegeman, or subject bound to allegiance, for he was bound to tribute and due subjection. 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. So lieges are the king’s subjects. Stat. 8 Hen. VI. c. 10; 14 Hen. VIII. c. 2. So in Scotland. Bell. Dict.

In old records. Full; absolute; perfect; pure. Liege widowhood was pure widowhood. Cowell. Ligius was also used; e. g. ligia potestas, full and free power of disposal. Paroch. Antiq. 280.

LIEGE HOMAGE. Homage which, when performed by one sovereign prince to another, included fealty and services, as opposed to simple homage, which was a mere acknowledgment of tenure. (1 Bl. Comm. 367; 2 Steph, Comm. 400.) Mozley & Whiteley.

LIEGE LORD. A sovereign; a superior lord.

LIEGE POUSTIE. In Scotch law. That state of health which gives a person full power, to dispose, of, mortis causal or' otherwise, his heritable property. Bell. A deed executed at the time of such a state of health, as opposed to a death-bed conveyance. The term seems to be derived from the Latin "legitima potestas."

LIEGEMAN. He that oweth allegiance. Cowell.

LIEGER, or Leger. A resident ambassador.

LIEGES, or LIEGE PEOPLE. Subjects.

A "claim" is generally a liability in personam but capable of embracing both a personal liability and a lien on property, while a lien is a liability in rem. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Cape Charles, 144 Va., 131 S.E. 437, 439.

A lien is a charge imposed upon specific property, whereas an assignment, in some way qualified, is properly the transfer of one’s whole Interest in al, estate, or chattel, or other thing. Guaranteed State Bank of Dur- Dresden, 164 Iowa, 169 P. 639, 641; Millsap v. Sparks, 21 Ariz. 317, 185 P. 135, 136.

A "lien" is not a property in or right to the thing itself, but constitutes a charge or security thereon. Koenig v. Leppert-Roos Fur Co., Mo.App., 260 S.W. 756, 758; Steagall-Choirs Fertilizer Co. v. Bethune Mule Co., 181 Ala. 250, 61 So. 274, 275; Powers v. Fidelity & Deposito Co. of Maryland, 180 S.C. 501, 186 S.E. 523, 530.

An "estate" in land is the right to the possession and enjoyment of it, while a "lien" on land is the right to have it sold or otherwise applied in satisfaction of a debt. State Bank of Decatur v. Sanders, 114 Ark. 440, 170 S.W. 86, 89.

Liens are "property rights". In re Pennsylvania Central Brewing Co., C.C.A.Pa., 114 F.2d 1010, 1013; Smith v. Russel, 223 Iowa 123, 272 N.W. 121, 125.

The word "lien" is a generic term and, standing alone, includes liens acquired by contract or by operation of law. Egyptian Supply Co. v. Boyd, C.C.A.Ky., 117 F.2d 608, 612.

Lien by operation of law. Where the law itself, without the stipulation of the parties, raises.
a lien, as an implication or legal consequence from the relation of the parties or the circumstances of their dealings. Liens of this species may arise either under the rules of common law or of equity or under a statute. In the first case they are called "common-law liens;" in the second, "equitable liens;" in the third, "statutory liens."

Roman or Civil Law

The peculiar securities which, in the common and maritime law and equity, are termed "liens," are embraced under the head of "mortgage and privilege."

Scotch Law

The doctrine of lien is known by the name of "retention," and that of set-off by the name of "compensation"; though certain rights of retention are also called liens. Hanenkamp v. Hagedorn, Mo.App., 110 S.W.2d 826, 829.

LIEN ACCOUNT. Such statement of claim as fairly apprises property owner and public of nature and amount of demand asserted as lien. Hantenkamp v. Hagedorn, Mo.App., 110 S.W.2d 826, 829.

LIEN CREDITOR. One whose debt or claim is secured by a lien on particular property, as distinguished from a "general" creditor, who has no such security.

LIEN OF A COVENANT. The commencement of a covenant stating the names of the covenantors and covenantees, and the character of the covenant, whether joint or several. Wharton.

LIEN OF FACTOR AT COMMON LAW. Lien not created through statutory enactment, but lien of ordinary factor as known to common law. Irving Trust Co. v. B. Lindner & Bro., Inc., 264 N.Y. 165, 190 N.E. 332, 336.

LIENE. One whose property is subject to a lien. Webster.

It was held that "lienece" as used in statute providing that failure to have required notice of suit affecting realty entered in lis pendens records shall not affect rights of a bona fide purchaser-mortgagee or other lienee in absence of actual notice means the person having or owning a lien; one who has a right of lien on property of another. Lee v. Macon County Bank, 233 Ala. 522, 172 So. 662, 670.

LIENOR. The person having or owning a lien; one who has a right of lien upon property of another.

LIEU. Fr. Place; room. It is only used with "in;" in lieu, instead of. Enc. Lond.

LIEU CONUS. L. Fr. In old pleading. A known place; a place well known and generally taken notice of by those who dwell about it, as a castle, a manor, etc. Whishaw; 1 Ld. Raym. 259.

LIEU LANDS. A term used to indicate public lands within the indemnity limits granted in lieu of those lost within place limits. See Weyerhaeuser v. Hoyt, 31 S.Ct. 300, 219 U.S. 380, 55 L.Ed. 258.

LIEU TAX. A lieu tax means instead of or a substitute for, and it is not an additional tax. Lebeck v. State, 62 Ariz. 171, 156 P.2d 720, 721.

LIEUTENANCY, COMMISSION OF. See Commission of Array.

LIEUTENANT. L. A deputy; substitute; an officer who supplies the place of another; one acting by vicarious authority. Etymologically, one who holds the post or office of another, in the place and stead of the latter.

2. The word is used in composition as part of the title of several civil and military officers, who are subordinate to others, and especially where the duties and powers of the higher officer may, in certain contingencies, devolve upon the lower; as lieutenant governor, lieutenant colonel, etc. See infra.

3. In the army, a lieutenant is a commissioned officer, ranking next below a captain. In the United States navy, he is an officer whose rank is intermediate between that of an ensign and that of a lieutenant commander. It the British navy, his rank is next below that of a commander.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL. An officer of the army whose rank is above that of a major and below that of a colonel.

LIEUTENANT COMMANDER. A commissioned officer of the United States navy, whose rank is above that of lieutenant and below that of commander.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL. An officer in the army, whose rank is above that of major general and below that of "general of the army." In the United States, this rank is not permanent, being usually created for special persons or in times of war.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR. In English law. A deputy-governor, acting as the chief civil officer of one of several colonies under a governor general. Webster. In American law. An officer of a state, sometimes charged with special duties, but chiefly important as the deputy or substitute of the governor, acting in the place of the governor upon the latter's death, resignation, or disability.

LIFE. That state of animals and plants or of an organized being, in which its natural functions and motions are performed, or in which its organs are capable of performing their functions. Webster. The sum of the forces by which death is resisted. Bichat.

"Life" begins in contemplation of law as soon as an infant is able to stir in the mother's womb. State v. Forte, 222 N. C. 537, 23 S.E.2d 842, 843.
"Life" protected by the Federal Constitution includes all personal rights and their enjoyment embracing the use and enjoyment of the faculties, acquiring useful knowledge, the right to marry, establish a home, and bring up children, freedom of worship, conscience, contract, occupation, speech, assembly and press. Rosenblum v. Rosenblum, 42 N.Y.S.2d 626, 630, 181 Misc. 78.

Natural life. See Natural Life.

LIFE ANNUITY. An engagement to pay an income yearly during the life of some person; also the sum thus promised.

An annuity contract which contemplated monthly payments until death of annuitant or surrender of policy by him was a life annuity. Bodine v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.3, 103 F.2d 982, 985. An annuity, depending on the continuance of an assigned life or lives, is sometimes called a life annuity. Bodine v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.3, 103 F.2d 982, 985.

LIFE ESTATE. An estate whose duration is limited to the life of the party holding it, or of some other person. Williams v. Ratcliff, 42 Miss. 154; Civ.Code Ga. 1895, § 3087 (Civ.Code 1910, § 3663).

Estates for life may be created by act of law or by act of the parties: in the former case they are called legal, in the latter conventional. The legal life estates are estates-tail after possession of issue extinct, estates by dower, estates by curtesy, jointures; Mitch.R.P. 118, 133; Dejarnatte v. Allen, 5 (d.rat., Va., 499; Irwin v. Covode, 24 Pa. 162; 3 E.L. & Eq.R. 345; Gourley v. Woodbury, 51 Vt. 37; Brooks v. Brooks, 12 S.C. 422; Rountree v. Talbot, 89 Ill. 246.

A freehold estate, not of inheritance, but which is held by the tenant for his own life or the life or lives of one or more other persons, or for an indefinite period, which may endure for the life or lives of persons in being, and not beyond the period of a life. 1 Washb.Real Prop. 88; Civ.Code Ga. 1895, § 3087 (Civ.Code 1910, § 3663).

LIFE ANNUITY. An engagement to pay an income yearly during the life of some person; also the sum thus promised.

LIFE POLICY. A policy of life insurance; a policy of insurance upon the life of an individual.

Insurance policy including a death benefit and a health or accident disability benefit constituted a "life insurance policy", it being immaterial that in some policy forms the health and disability feature was more valuable absent a showing that death provision was inserted to avoid the higher tax. Universal Life Ins. Co. v. State, 155 Miss. 358, 121 So. 849, 850.

LIFE-RENT. In Scotch law. An estate for life; a right to the use and enjoyment of an estate or thing for one's life, but without destruction of its substance. They are either legal, such as terce and curtesy, (q. v.), or conventional, i. e., created by act of the parties. Conventional life-rents are either simple, where the owner of an estate grants a life-interest to another, or by reservation, where the owner, in conveying away the fee, reserves a life-estate to himself.
LIFT. To raise; to take up.

To "lift" a promissory note is to discharge its obligation by paying its amount or substituting another evidence of debt. To "lift the bar" of the statute of limitations, or of an estoppel, is to remove the obstruction which it interposes, by some sufficient act or acknowledgment.

LIGA. In old European law. A league or confederation. Spelman.

LIGAN, LAGAN. Goods cast into the sea tied to a buoy, so that they may be found again by the owners, are so denominated.

When goods are cast into the sea in storms or shipwrecks, and remain there, without coming to land, they are distinguished by the barbarous names of "jetsam," "flotsam," and "ligan." 5 Coke, 108; Harg. State Tr. 48; 1 Bl. Comm. 292.

LIGARE. To tie or bind. Bract. fol. 369b. To enter into a league or treaty. Spelman.

LIGEA. In old English law. A liege-woman; a female subject. Reg. Orig. 312b.

LIGEANCE. Allegiance; the faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. Also, derivatively, the territory of a state or sovereignty.

LIGEANTIA. Lat. Ligeance; allegiance.

LIGEANTIA EST QUASI LEGIS ESSENTIA; EST VINCULUM FIDEI, Co. Litt. 129. Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of law; it is the chain of faith.

LIGEANTIA NATURALIS NULLIS CLAUSTRIS COERCETUR, NULLIS METIS REFRIENATUR, NULLIS FINIBUS PREMITUR. 7 Coke, 10. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, reined by no bounds, compressed by no limits.

LIGEAS. In old records. A liege.

LIGEAS. In old English law. A liege-woman; a female subject. Reg. Orig. 312b.

LIGEANCE. Allegiance; the faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. Also, derivatively, the territory of a state or sovereignty.

LIGEANTIA. Lat. Ligeance; allegiance.

LIGEANTIA EST QUASI LEGIS ESSENTIA; EST VINCULUM FIDEI, Co. Litt. 129. Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of law; it is the chain of faith.

LIGEANTIA NATURALIS NULLIS CLAUSTRIS COERCETUR, NULLIS METIS REFRIENATUR, NULLIS FINIBUS PREMITUR. 7 Coke, 10. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, reined by no bounds, compressed by no limits.

LIGEAS. In old records. A liege.

LIGEAS. In old English law. A liege-woman; a female subject. Reg. Orig. 312b.

LIGEANCE. Allegiance; the faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. Also, derivatively, the territory of a state or sovereignty.

LIGIUS. A person bound to another by a solemn tie or engagement. Now used to express the relation of a subject to his sovereign.

See, also, Liege.

LIGNA ET LAPIDES SUB "ARMORUM" APPELLATIONE NON CONTINENTUR. Sticks and stones are not contained under the name of "arms." Bract. fol. 144b.

LIGNAGIUM. A right of cutting fuel in woods; also a tribute or payment due for the same. Jacob.

LIGNAMINA. Timber fit for building. Du Fresne.

LIGULA. In old English law. A copy, exemplification, or transcript of a court roll or deed. Cowell.

LIMB. A member of the human body. In the phrase "life and limb," the latter term appears to denote bodily integrity in general; but in the definition of "mayhem" it refers only to those members or parts of the body which may be useful to a man in fighting. 1 Bl.Comm. 130.

LIMENARCHA. In Roman law. An officer who had charge of a harbor or port. Dig. 50, 4, 18, 10; Cod. 7, 16, 38.

Thus, to limit an estate means to mark out or to define the period of its duration, and the words employed in deeds for this purpose are hence termed "words of limitation," and the act itself is termed "limiting the estate." Brown.

Within act giving injured party right of direct action against automobile liability insurer within terms and limits of policy, word "limits" refers not only to amount of policy, but to time in which notice of accident must be given. Duncan v. Pedare, La.App., 161 So. 221, 228.

LIMITATION. Restriction or circumspection; setting an estate or property; a certain time allowed by a statute for litigation.

The provisions of State Constitution are not a "grant" but a "limitation" of legislative power. Ellerbe v. David, 193 S.C. 332, 8 S.E.2d 518, 520; Mulholland v. Ayers, 109 Mont. 558, 99 P.2d 234, 239.

Corporations

Under the statute providing that all corporations expiring by their own "limitation" shall for certain purposes be continued as bodies corporate for a term of three years, the word "limitation" is an act of limiting, a restriction of power, a qualification. Porter v. Tempa Min. & Mill. Co., 59 Nev. 332, 93 P.2d 741, 743

Estates

The restriction or circumscription of an estate, in the conveyance by which it is granted, in respect to the interest of the grantee or its duration; the specific curtailment or confinement of an estate, by the terms of the grant, so that it cannot endure beyond a certain period or a designated contingency.

A "limitation" on a grant determines an estate upon the happening of the event itself without the necessity of doing any act to regain the estate, such as re-entry. Gulf Production Co. v. Continental Oil Co., Tex., 132 S.W.2d 553, 556.

A limitation, whether made by the express words of the party or existing in indendment of law, circumscribes the continuance of time for which the property is to be enjoyed, and by positive and certain terms, or by reference to some event which possibly may happen, marks the period at which the time of enjoyment shall end. Smith v. Smith, 23 Wis. 181, 99 Am.Dec. 153; Hoselton v. Hoselton, 166 Mo. 152, 65 S.W. 1005; Stearns v. Godfrey, 16 Me. 160.

The "unless" provisions of oil and gas lease which provide that if no well should be commenced within one year, lease should terminate unless privilege of commencement should be deferred by payment of rental, were a "limitation" on the grant. Gulf Production Co. v. Continental Oil Co., 139 Tex. 183, 132 S.W.2d 553, 563.

The word "limitation" defines the extent or quality of an estate conveyed or devised. Richardson v. Roney, 382 Ill. 528, 47 N.E.2d 714.

Conditional limitation. One which gives an interest in an estate for a specified period or for such period as may be found to depend on some collateral event, as an estate to A. till B. shall go to Rome. Templeman v. Gibbs, 86 Tex. 358, 24 S.W. 792; 4 Kent, Comm. 128.

Conditional limitation. A condition followed by a limitation refers to a thing which in case the condition be not fulfilled or there be a breach of it. Stearns v. Godfrey, 16 Me. 158; Hess v. Kernen Bros., 169 Iowa 646, 149 N.W. 847, 851; Yarbrough v. Yarbrough, 151 Tenn. 221, 209 S.W. 36, 38; Board of Education of Borough of West Paterson v. Brophy, 90 N.J.Eq. 57, 106 A. 32, 34. A conditional limitation is where an estate is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail. 1 Steph.Comm. 309. Between conditional limitations and estates depending on conditions subsequent there is this difference: that in the former the estate determines and the contingency happens; but in the latter it endures until the grantor or his heirs take advantage of the breach. 1 Steph.Comm. 310.

Contingent limitation. When a remainder in fee is limited upon any estate which would by the common law be adjudged a fee tail, such a remainder is valid as a contingent limitation upon a fee, and vests in possession on the death of the first taker without issue living at the time of his death. Rev.Codes N.D.1899, 1 3328 (Comp.Laws 1913, § 5307).

Limitation in law. A limitation in law, or an estate limited, is an estate to be holden only during the continuance of the condition under which it was granted, upon the determination of which the estate vests immediately in him in expectancy. 2 Bl.Comm. 135.

Limitation over. This term includes any estate in the same property created or contemplated by the conveyance, to be enjoyed after the first estate granted expires or is exhausted. Lane v. Citizens & Southern Nat. Bank, 195 Ga. 528, 25 S.E.2d 800, 802, 803. Thus, in a gift to A. for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, the remainder is a "limitation over" to such heirs. Ewing v. Shropshire, 80 Ga. 374, 7 S.E. 554.

Special limitation. A qualification serving to mark out the bounds of an estate, so as to determine it ipso facto in a given event, without action, entry, or claim, before it would, or might, otherwise expire by force of, or according Title by limitation. A prescriptive title; one which is indefeasible because of the expiration of the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for the bringing of actions to test or defeat it. See Dalton v. Rentaria, 2 Ariz. 275, 15 P. 37.

Words of limitation. In a conveyance or will, words which have the effect of marking the duration of an estate are termed "words of limitation." Thus, in a grant to A. and his heirs, the words "and his heirs" are words of limitation, because they show that A. is to take an estate in fee-simple and do not give his heirs anything. Pearne, Rem. 78. And see Ball v. Payne, 6 Rand., Va., 75; Summit v. Yount, 109 Ind. 506, 9 N.E. 582.

Limitation of Actions

The restriction by statute of the right of action to certain periods of time, after the accruing of the cause of action, beyond which, except in certain specified cases, it will not be allowed. Also the period of time so limited by law for the bringing of actions. See Keyser v. Lowell, 117 P. 404, 54 C.C.A. 574; Battle v. Shivers, 39 Ga. 409; Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 493 (Gil. 358); Riddelsbarger v. Hartford Ins. Co., 7 Wall. 390, 19 L.Ed. 257.

Limitation of Assize

In old practice. A certain time prescribed by statute, within which a man was required to allege himself or his ancestor to have been seised of lands sued for by a writ of assize. Cowell.

Statute of Limitations

A statute prescribing limitations to the right of action on certain described causes of action; that is, declaring that no suit shall be maintained on such causes of action unless brought within a specified period after the right accrued. Statutes of limitation are statutes of repose. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Quakers City Flour Mills Co., 282 Pa. 362, 127 A. 845, 846, and are such legislative enactments as prescribe the periods within which actions may be brought upon certain claims or within which certain rights may be enforced. People v. Kings County Development Co., 48 Cal. App. 72, 191 P. 1004, 1005. In criminal cases, however, a statute of limitation is an act of grace, a surrendering by sovereign of its right to prosecute. People v. Ross, 325 Ill. 417, 156 N.E. 303, 304.

LIMITED. Restricted; bounded; prescribed. Confined within positive bounds; restricted in duration, extent, or scope.

As to limited "Company," "Divorce," "Fee," and "Partnership," see those titles.

LIMITED ADMINISTRATION. An administration of a temporary character, granted for a particular period, or for a special or particular purpose. Holthouse.

LIMITED APPEAL. An appeal from only adverse portions of a decree; it is limited to the particular portions of the decree appealed from. Fox v. River Heights, 22 Tenn.App. 166, 118 S.W.2d 1104, 1114.

LIMITED COURT. Where special authority, in derogation of common law, is conferred by statute on a court of general jurisdiction, it becomes an "inferior or limited court". Partlow v. Partlow, 246 Ala. 259, 20 So.2d 517, 518.

LIMITED EXECUTOR. An executor whose appointment is qualified by limitations as to the time or place wherein, or the subject-matter wherein, the office is to be exercised; as distinguished from one whose appointment is absolute. I. e., certain and immediate, without any restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time. 1 Williams, Ex'r's, 249, et seq.

LIMITED GUARANTY. A limited guaranty is ordinarily one restricted in its application to a single transaction. Cooling v. Springer, 3 Terry 228, 30 A.2d 466, 469.

LIMITED JURISDICTION. This term is ambiguous, and the books sometimes use it without due precision. It is sometimes carelessly employed instead of "special." The true distinction between courts is between such as possess a general and such as have only a special jurisdiction for a particular purpose, or are clothed with special powers for the performance. Obert v. Hammel, 18 N.J.Law, 73.

LIMITED LIABILITY. The liability of the members of a joint-stock company may be either unlimited or limited; and, if the latter, then the limitation of liability is either the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares, (in which case the limit is said to be "by shares,") or such an amount as the members guaranty in the event of the company being wound up, (in which case the limit is said to be "by guaranty.") Brown.

LIMITED OR SPECIAL JURISDICTION. Jurisdiction which is confined to particular causes, or which can be exercised only under the limitations and circumstances prescribed by the statute. Midwest Piping & Supply Co. v. Thomas Spacing Mach. Co., 109 Pa.Super. 571, 167 A. 636, 638.

LIMITED OWNER. A tenant for life, in toil, or by the curtesy, or other person not having a fee-simple in his absolute disposition.

LIMITED PAYMENT PLAN. A policy upon a "limited payment plan" is a paid-up policy, and insurance upon which no further premium is to be paid. Bankers Life & Loan Ass'n v. Chase, Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 374, 376.

LIMITED PERIOD. As used in statutes authorizing assignment in actions for divorce and separate maintenance, of homestead selected from separate property of either, to innocent party for limited period, means period of natural life of such innocent party. Greenlee v. Greenlee, 7 Cal. 2d 579, 61 P.2d 1157, 1159.

LIMITED POWER OF APPOINTMENT. Power of appointment is limited when it is exercisable only in favor of persons or a class of persons designated in the instrument creating the power. Johnstone v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 76 F.2d 55, 57.

LIMITED PUBLICATION. Communication to a select number on condition, express or implied, that it is not intended to be thereafter common property. Berry v. Hoffman, 125 Pa.Super. 261, 189 A. 516, 519. Waring v. WDAS Broadcasting Station, 327 Pa. 433, 194 A. 631, 636.

LIMOGIA. Enamel. Du Cange.

LINARIUM. In old English law. A flax plat, were flax is grown. Du Cange.

LINCOLN'S INN. An inn of court. See Inns of Court.

LINE. Lineal measure, containing the one-twelfth part of an inch.

The boundary or line of division between two estates.

When a particular type of silver plate has gone through several patterns and has gained recognition, it is often called in the trade a "line". Oneida, Limited, v. National Silver Co., Sup., 25 N.Y.S.2d 271, 277.

Line of an Intersection. A straight line substantially at right angles to bounds of highway at a point where, to the reasonable perception of a driver, the highway starts to widen as the result of the outcurving of its bounds to form the junction. Beck v. Sosnowitz, 125 Conn. 553, 7 A.2d 389, 391.

Line of credit. A margin or fixed limit of credit granted by one to another, to the full extent of which the latter may avail himself in his dealings with the former, but which he must not exceed; usually intended to cover a series of transactions, in which case, when the customer's line of credit is nearly or quite exhausted, he is expected to reduce his indebtedness by payments before drawing upon it further. Pittinger v. Southwestern Paper Co. of Fort Worth, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 922, 925.

Line of duty. In military law and usage, an act is said to be done, or an injury sustained, "in the line of duty," when one is harmed in the performance of discharge of duty incumbent upon the individual in his character as a member of the military or naval forces. See Rhodes v. U. S., 79 F. 743, 25 C.C.A. 186. An injury suffered or disease contracted by a sailor is considered to have been in "line of duty" unless actually caused by something for which sailor is responsible which intervenes between his performance of duty and the injury or disease. Meyer v. Dollar S. S. Line, C.C.A.Wash., 49 F.2d 1002, 1003.

Line of ordinary high tide. Ordinary high tide may, for practical purposes, within a restricted area, be conceived as a level plane; the "line of ordinary high tide" is the intersection of said plane with the surface of the land. Swarzwald v. Cooley, 39 Cal.App.2d 306, 103 P.2d 580, 584.

Building line. Sees Building Line.

Collateral line. See Descent.

Descent. See Descent.

Direct line. See Descent.

Maternal line. See Maternal Line.

Paternal line. See Paternal Line.

Public utilities. See Public Utility.

LINEA. Lat. A line; line of descent. See Descent.

LINEA OBLIQUA. In the civil law. The oblique line. More commonly termed "linea transversalis."

LINEA RECTA. The direct line; the vertical line.

In computing degrees of kindred and the succession to estates, this term denotes the direct line of ascendants and descendants. Where a person springs from another immediately, or mediately through a third person, they are said to be in the direct line. (linea recta,) and are called "ancestors" and "descendants." Mackeld.Rom.Law, § 129.

LINEA RECTA EST INDEX SUI ET OBLIQUI; LEX EST LINEA RECTI. Co. Litt. 158. A right line is a test of itself, and of an oblique; law is a line of right.

LINEA RECTA SEMPER PRIEFERTUR TRANSVERSALI. The right line is always preferred to the collateral. Co. Litt. 10; Broom, Max. 529.

LINEA TRANSVERSALIS. A collateral, transverse, or oblique line. Where two persons are descended from a third, they are called "collaterals," and are said to be related in the collateral line, (linea transversa or obliqua.)

LINEAL. That which comes in a line; especially a direct line, as from father to son. Collateral relationship is not called "lineal," though the expression "collateral line," is not unusual. Proceeding in direct or unbroken line, hereditary, unbroken in course, distinguished from collateral, as lineal descent, lineal succession, having an ancestral basis or right. In re Herrick's Estate, 273 N. Y.S. 803, 152 Misc. 9.

LINEAL CONSANGUINITY. That kind of consanguinity which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other; as between a particular person and his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upward, in the direct ascending line; or between the same person and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. 2 Bl.Comm. 203; Willis Coal & Min. Co. v. Grizzell, 198 Ill. 313, 65 N.E. 74.

LINEAL DESCENT. See Descent.
LINEAL HEIR. One who inherits in a line either as ascending or descending from the common source, as distinguished from a collateral heir. Rocky Mountain Fuel Co. v. Kovaics, 26 Colo.App. 554, 144 P. 863, 865.

The words “lineal heirs” like “heirs of the body” mean all lineal descendants to the remotest posterity and are words of “inheritance” and not of “purchase,” unless the instrument clearly shows that they were used in a restricted sense to denote “children.” Sims v. Clayton, 193 S.C. 98, 7 S.E.2d 724, 727.

LINEAL WARRANTY. A warranty by an ancestor from whom the title did or might have come to the heir. 2 Bl.Comm. 301; Rawle, Co. Y. 30.

LINES AND CORNERS. In deeds and surveys. Boundary-lines and their angles with each other. Nolin v. Parmer, 21 Ala. 66.

LINK. A unit in a connected series; anything which binds together, or connects, separate things; a part of a connected series; a tie, a bond. City of Independence v. Board of Com’rs of Montgomery County, 140 Kan. 661, 38 P.2d 105, 106.

LIQUERE. Lat. In the civil law. To be clear, evident, or satisfactory.

When a judek was in doubt how to decide a case, he represented to the prwtor, under oath, sibi non liquere, (that it was not clear to him,) and was thereupon discharged. Calvin.

LIQUET. It is clear or apparent; it appears. Satis liquet, it sufficiently appears. 1 Strange, 412.

LIQUID DEBT. A debt immediately and unconventionally due. In re Brock, 312 Pa. 7, 166 A. 778, 780.

LIQUIDATED ACCOUNT. An account whereof the amount is certain and fixed, either by the act and agreement of the parties or by operation of law; a sum which cannot be changed by the proof; it is so much or nothing; but the term does not necessarily refer to a writing. Gasper v. Mayer, 171 Okl. 457, 45 F.2d 467, 471; Electrical Products Corporation of Oregon v. Ziegler Drug Stores, 157 Or. 267, 71 P.2d 583, 584.

LIQUIDATED CLAIM. Claim, amount of which has been agreed on by parties to action or is fixed by operation of law. Tapp v. Tapp’s Trustee, 299 Ky. 345, 185 S.W.2d 534, 535; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. American Bldg. Maintenance Co. of Los Angeles, 7 Cal.App.2d 683, 46 P.2d 984, 988.

A claim which can be determined with exactness from parties’ agreement or by arithmetical process or application of definite rules of law. Huc Chin Yin v. Amino Products Co., 141 Ohio St. 21, 46 N.E.2d 610, 614; Petersen v. Graham, 7 Wash.2d 464, 110 P.2d 149, 154.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES. See Damages.

LIQUIDATED DEBT. A debt is liquidated when it is certain what is due and how much is due.
LIQUIDATOR. A person appointed to carry out the winding up of a company.

LIQUIDATED. A joint-stock company is being wound up to bring and defend suits and actions in the name of the company, and generally to do all things necessary for winding up the affairs of the company, and distributing its assets. 3 Steph.Comm. 24.

LIQUIDATED DEMAND. A demand the amount of which has been ascertained or settled by agreement of the parties, or otherwise. Williamson v. City of Eastland, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 774, 775; Mitchell v. Addison, 20 Ga. 53.

Amount claimed is a "liquidated demand" if it is susceptible of being made certain in amount by mathematical calculations from factors which are or ought to be in possession or knowledge of party to be charged. Rifkin v. Safenovitz, 131 Conn. 411, 40 A.2d 188, 189.

LIQUIDATING PARTNER. The partner who upon the dissolution or insolvency of the firm, is appointed to settle its accounts, collect assets, adjust claims, and pay debts. Garretson v. Brown, 185 Pa. 447, 40 A. 300.

LIQUIDATION. The act or process of settling or making clear, fixed, and determinate that which before was uncertain or unascertained.

LIQUIDATION DIVIDEND. Act or operation in winding up affairs of firm or corporation, a settling with its debtors and creditors, and an appropriation and distribution to its stockholders ratably of the amount of profit and loss. Hellman v. Helvering, App.D.C., 68 F.2d 763, 765.

LIQUIDATION TAXABLE. Distribution to their own stockholders of cash and stock received by selling corporations for their assets. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Sussman, C.C.A.2, 102 F.2d 919, 921.

LIQUIDATOR. A person appointed to carry out the winding up of a company. Official Liquidator. In English law. A person appointed by the judge in chancery, in whose court

Notice of lis pendens. A notice filed for the purpose of warning all persons that the title to certain property is in litigation, and that, if they purchase the defendant's claim to the same, they are in danger of being bound by an adverse judgment. See Empire Land & Canal Co. v. Engley, 18 Colo. 388, 33 P. 153.

The notice is for the purpose of preserving rights pending litigation. Mitchell v. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis, 206 Ark. 253, 174 S.W.2d 671, 674.

LIST. A docket or calendar of causes ready for trial or argument, or of motions ready for hearing.

Entering or enrolling in a list; to enter in an official list or schedule; as, to list property for taxation; to put into a list or catalogue; register; enroll. Baldrige v. Flothow, 123 Neb. 218, 242 N.W. 414, 417.

LISTED. Included in a list; put on a list, particularly on a list of taxable persons or property.

LISTERS. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxables. See Rev. St. Vt. 538.

LISTING. An alleged oral agreement to sell to any purchaser procured by broker for certain amount was a "listing" of the property. Zeligson v. Hartman-Blair, Inc., C.C.A.Kan., 135 F.2d 874, 876.

"Listing property for taxation" is the making of a schedule or inventory of such property, whereby owner makes statement of property in response to assessor's inquiries, Templing v. Bennett, 156 Kan. 68, 131 P.2d 904, 907. The word listing ordinarily implies an official listing of the persons and property to be taxed, and a valuation of the property of each person as a basis of apportionment. Buser v. Kriechbaum, 229 Iowa 888, 295 N.W. 455, 460.

LITE PENDENTE. Lat. Pending the suit. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 23.

LITEM DENUNCIARE. Lat. In the civil law. To cast the burden of a suit upon another; particularly used with reference to a purchaser of property who, being sued in respect to it by a third person, gives notice to his vendor and demands his aid in its defense. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 403.

LITEM SUAM FACERE. Lat. To make a suit his own. Where a judex, from partiality or enmity, evidently favored either of the parties, he was said litteram suam facere. Calvin.

LITER. Lat. A letter. The letter of a law, as distinguished from its spirit. See Letter.

LITERA PISANA. The Pisan letter. A term applied in old English law to various instruments in writing, public and private.

LITERIE DIMISSORLE. Dimissory letters (q. v.).

LITERIE HUMANIORES. A term including Greek, Latin, general philology, logic, moral philosophy, metaphysics; the name of the principal course of study in the University of Oxford. Wharton.

LITERIE MORTUAZE. Dead letters; fulfilling words of a statute.

Lord Bacon observes that "there are in every statute certain words which are as veins, where the life and blood of the statute cometh, and where all doubts do arise, and the rest are litterce mortuce, fulfilling words." Bac.St.Uses, (Works, iv. 189).

LITERZE PATENTES. Letters patent; literally, open letters.

LITERZE PATENTES REGIS NON ERUNT VA-

CUE. 1 Bulst. 6. The king's letters patent shall not be void.

LITERZE PROCURATORLE. In old English law. Letters procuratory; letters of procurement; letters of attorney. Bract. fols. 40, 43.

LITERZE SCRIPTIE MANENT. Written words last.

LITERIE SIGILLATIE. In old English law. Sealed letters. The return of a sheriff was so called. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 19.

LITERAL. According to language; following expression in words.

A literal construction of a document adheres closely to its words, without making differences for extrinsic circum-

stices; a literal performance of a condition is one which complies exactly with its terms.

LITERAL CONTRACT. In Roman law. A species of written contract, in which the formal act by which an obligation was superinduced on the convention was an entry of the sum due, where it should be specifically ascertained, on the debit side of a ledger. Maine, Anc. Law, 3n. A contract, the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration. Lec. El. Dr. Rom. § 887.

LITERAL PROOF. In the civil law. Written evidence.

LITERARY. Pertaining to polite learning; connected with the study or use of books and writings.

The word “literary,” having no legal signification, is to be taken in its ordinary and usual meaning. We speak of literary persons as learned, erudite; of literary property, the productions of ripe scholars, or, at least, of professional writers; of literary institutions, as those where the positive sciences are taught, or persons eminent for learning associate, for purposes connected with their professions. This we think the popular meaning of the word; and that it would not be properly used as descriptive of a school for the instruction of youth. Indianapolis v. McLean, 8 Ind. 332.

LITERARY COMPOSITION. In copyright law. An original result of mental production, developed in a series of written or printed words, arranged for an intelligent purpose, in an orderly succession of expressive combinations. Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed.Cas. 192; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 396.

LITERARY PROPERTY. May be described as the right which entitles an author and his assigns to all the use and profit of his composition, to which no independent right is, through any act or omission on his or their part, vested in another person. 9 Amer. Law Reg. 44. And see Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed.Cas. 192; Palmer v. De Witt, 32 Ind. 332.

LITERATE. In English ecclesiastical law. One who qualifies himself for holy orders by presenting himself as a person accomplished in classical learning, etc., not as a graduate of Oxford, Cambridge, etc.

LITERATURA. Ad litteratum ponere means to put children to school.

This liberty was formerly denied to those parents who were servile tenants, without the lord’s consent. The prohibition against the education of sons arose from the fear that the son, being bred to letters, might enter into holy orders, and so stop or divert the services which he might otherwise do as heir to his father. Paroch.Antiq. 401.

LITERIS OBLIGATIO. In Roman law. The contract of nomen, which was constituted by writing, (scripture,)

It was of two kinds, viz.: (1) A re in personam, when a transaction was transferred from the daybook (adversaria) into the ledger (codex) in the form of a debt under the name or heading of the purchaser or debtor, (nomen;) and (2) a persona in personam, where a debt already standing under one nomen or heading was transferred in the usual course of novatio from that nomen to another and substituted nomen. By reason of this transferring, these obligations were called nomina transcripta. No money was, in fact, paid to constitute the contract. If ever money was paid, then the nomen was arcarium, (i. e., a real contract, re contractus, and not a nomen proprium. Brown.

LITIGANT. A party to a lawsuit; one engaged in litigation; usually spoken of active parties, not of nominal ones.

LITIGARE. Lat. To litigate; to carry on a suit, (litem agere, either as plaintiff or defendant; to claim or dispute by action; to test or try the validity of a claim by action.

LITIGATE. To dispute or contend in form of law; to carry on a suit.

To bring into or engage in litigation, the act of carrying on a suit in a law court, a judicial contest; hence, any controversy that must be decided upon evidence. In re Loudenslager’s Estate, N.J.Prerog., 13 N.J.Eq. 418, 167 A. 194, 195.

LITIGIOSO. Span. Litigious; the subject of litigation; a term applied to property which is the subject of dispute in a pending suit. White v. Gay, 1 Tex. 388.

LITIGIOUS. That which is the subject of a suit or action; that which is contested in a court of justice. In another sense, “litigious” signifies fond of litigation: prone to engage in suits.

LITIGIOUS CHURCH. In ecclesiastical law, a church is said to be litigious where two presentations are offered to the bishop upon the same subject. The effect of it is analogous to that of inhibition. Bell.

LITIGIOUS. That which is the subject of a suit or action; that which is contested in a court of justice. In another sense, “litigious” signifies fond of litigation: prone to engage in suits.
LITIS CONTESTATIO. Lat.
Admiralty Practice. The general issue. 2 Browne, Civil & Adm. Law, 358, and note.

Civil and Canon Law. Contestation of suit; the process of contesting a suit by the opposing statements of the respective parties; the process of coming to an issue; the attainment of an issue; the issue itself.

Ecclesiastical Courts. The general answer made by the defendant, in which he denies the matter charged against him in the libel. Hallifax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 11, no. 9.

LITIS DENUNCIATIO. Lat. In the civil law. The process by which a purchaser of property, who is sued for its possession or recovery by a third person, falls back upon his vendor's covenant of warranty, by giving the latter notice of the action and demanding his aid in defending it. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 403.

LITIS DOMINIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Ownership, control, or direction of a suit. A fiction of law by which the employment of an attorney or proctor (procurator) in a suit was authorized or justified, he being supposed to become, by the appointment of his principal (dominus) or client, the dominus litis. Heinecc. Elem. lib. 4, tit. 10, §§ 1246, 1247.

LITIS NOMEN OMNEM ACTIONEM SIGNIFICAT, SIVE IN REM, SIVE IN PERSONAM SIT. Co. Litt. 292. A lawsuit signifies every action, whether it be in rem or in personam.

LITISPENDENCE. An obsolete term for the time during which a lawsuit is going on.

LITISPENDENCIA. In Spanish law. Litispendency. The condition of a suit pending in a court of justice.

LITRE. Fr. A measure of capacity in the metric system, being a cubic decimetre, equal to 61.022 cubic inches, or 2.113 American pints, or 1.76 English pints. Webster.

LITTORAL. Belonging to the shore, as of seas and great lakes. Webster.

Corresponding to riparian propietors on a stream or small pond are littoral proprietors on a sea or lake. But "riparian" is also used coextensively with "littoral." Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush., Mass., 94. See Boston v. Lecraw, 17 How. 426, 15 L.Ed. 118. One whose lands abuts on lake is a "littoral owner". Darling v. Christensen, 166 Or. 17, 100 P.2d 585, 592; Peck v. Alfred Olsen Const. Co., 216 Iowa 519, 245 N.W. 131, 137, 89 A.L.R. 1147.

LITURA. Lat. In the civil law. An obliteration or blot in a will or other instrument. Dig. 28, 4, 1, 1.

LITUS. In Civil law. The bank of a stream or shore of the sea; the coast.

In old European law.- A kind of servant; one who surrendered himself into another's power. Spelman.

LITUS EST QUOUSQUE MAXIMUS FLUCTUS A MARI PERVENIT. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached. Dig. 50, 16, 96. Ang. Tide-Waters, 67.

LITUS MARIS. The sea-shore.

"It is certain that that which the sea overflows, either at high spring tides or at extraordinary tides, comes not, as to this purpose, under the denomination of 'litus maris,' and consequently the king's title is not of that large extent, but only to land that is usually overflowed at ordinary tides. That, therefore, I call the 'shore' that is between the common high-water and low-water mark, and no more." Hale de Jure Mar. c. 4.

LITVINOV ASSIGNMENT. An assignment to the United States as an incident to its recognition of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics as the de jure government of Russia, of the Soviet government's claims against American nationals, as clarified by subsequent correspondence between officials of the two countries. United States v. Pink, N.Y., 62 S.Ct. 552, 562, 315 U.S. 203, 86 L.Ed. 796.

LIVE. In possession of all those limbs and faculties by which life is enjoyed and not mere animal existence. In re Healy's Will, 8 N.Y.S.2d 394, 399, 255 App.Div. 361. To live in a place, is to reside there, to abide there, to have one's home. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626.

LIVE AND COHABIT TOGETHER AS HUSBAND AND WIFE. As applied to common-law marriages, means a living together, claiming to be married, in the relationship of husband and wife. Drummond v. Benson, Tex.Civ.App., 133 S.W.2d 154, 159.

LIVE OIL. Oil that has gas in it. Crow v. Continental Oil Co., C.C.A.Tex., 100 F.2d 292, 293.

LIVE STOCK. Domestic animals used or raised on a farm. Boland v. Cecil, 65 Cal.App. 832, 150 P.2d 819, 822.

The term in its generic sense includes all domestic animals. Meader v. Unemployment Compensation Division of Industrial Accident Board, 64 Idaho 984, 987. It includes fur bearing animals raised in captivity. Fromm Bros. v. United States, D.C.Wis., 35 F.Sup. 145, 147.

LIVE-STOCK INSURANCE. See Insurance.

LIVE STORAGE. As applied to storage of automobiles in garages, "dead storage" is where cars not in use are deposited or put away, sometimes for the season, and "live storage" is the storage of cars in active daily use. Hogan v. O'Brien, 108 N.Y. S. 61, 832, 123 Misc. 865, affirmed 208 N.Y. S. 477, 212 App.Div. 193.

"The extent of responsibility of a garage keeper for cars put in his garage sometimes depends on whether they are in 'dead storage' or 'live storage.' In some jurisdictions where, according to the general custom of the patrons of a garage, their cars kept at the garage can be taken out and returned at will, day or night, the garage keeper will be liable for a loss caused by a failure to exercise ordinary care for the protection of such cars, notwithstanding he may not know that the specific car has been returned." Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., § 5023.

LIVELODE. Maintenance; support.
LIVERY. 1. In English law. Delivery of possession of their lands to the king's tenants in capite or tenants by knight's service.

2. A writ which may be sued out by a ward in chivalry, on reaching his majority, to obtain delivery of the possession of his lands out of the hands of the guardian. 2 Bl.Comm. 68.

3. A particular dress or garb appropriate or peculiar to certain persons, as the members of a guild, or, more particularly, the servants of a nobleman or gentleman.

4. The privilege of a particular guild or company of persons, the members thereof being called "livery-men."

5. A contract of hiring of work-beasts, particularly horses, to the use of the hirer. It is seldom used alone in this sense, but appears in the compound, "livery-stable."

6. Feeding, stabling, and care of horses for pay; boarding; as, to keep one's horses at livery, the keeping of horses, and hence of vehicles, boats, etc., in readiness to be hired; the state of being so kept. Biehler v. Great American Indemnity Co., 127 N.J.L. 114, 21 A.2d 225, 226.

LIVERY CONVEYANCE. A vehicle used indiscriminately in conveying the public, without limitation to certain persons or particular occasions or without being governed by special terms. Elliott v. Behner, 150 Kan. 876, 96 P.2d 852, 857.

LIVERY IN CHIVALRY. In feudal law. The delivery of the lands of a ward in chivalry out of the guardian's hands, upon the heir's attaining the requisite age,—twenty-one for males, sixteen for females. 2 Bl.Comm. 68.

LIVERY OF SEISIN. The appropriate ceremony, at common law, for transferring the corporeal possession of lands or tenements by a grantor to his grantee.

It was livery in deed where the parties went together upon the land, and there a twig, clad, key, or other symbol was delivered in the name of the whole. Livery in aequo was where the same ceremony was performed, not upon the land itself, but in sight of it. 2 Bl.Comm. 315, 316; Micheau v. Crawford, 8 N.J.Law, 108; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Cannon, C.C.Mont., 46 F. 232.

LIVERY OFFICE. An office appointed for the delivery of lands.

LIVERY STABLE KEEPER. One whose business it is to keep horses for hire or to let, or to keep, feed, or board horses for others. Kittanning Borough v. Montgomery, 5 Pa.Super. 198.

LIVERYMAN. A member of some company in the city of London; also called a "freeman."

LIVES IN BEING. As used in rule against perpetuities, means any lives in being at any time future interest is created, regardless of personal interest therein. In re Friday's Estate, 313 Pa. 328, 170 A. 123, 125, 91 A.L.R. 766.

LIVING. Existing, surviving, or continuing in operation. In re Lydig's Estate, 260 N.Y.S. 147, 145 Misc. 321.

Also means to abide, to dwell, to reside and literally signifies the pecuniary resources by means of which one exists. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626.

LIVING APART. To live in a separate abode. McDaniel v. McDaniel, 292 Ky. 56, 165 S.W.2d 966, 967.

LIVING AT TIME OF ANOTHER'S DEATH. Remaining in life after such other person's death. Sabit v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 184 Md. 24, 40 A.2d 231, 238.

LIVING IN ADULTERY. An act of intercourse between parties and a continuation of such relation or an intention or agreement that it be continued. Brown v. State, 31 Ala.App. 233, 14 So.2d 596, 597.

LIVING IN OPEN AND NOTORIOUS ADULTERY. To constitute, parties must dwell together openly and notoriously as if conjugal relation existed between them. People v. Potter, 319 Ill.App. 409, 49 N.E.2d 307, 309.

The parties must reside together in face of society as if conjugal relations existed between them, and fact of their living and that they are not husband and wife must be known in community in which they reside. Mathis v. State, 60 Okl.Cr. 58, 61 P.2d 261, 267.

LIVING SEPARATE AND APART. Exists where the spouses have come to a parting of the ways and have no present intention of resuming marital relations and taking up life together under the same roof, not where they are residing temporarily in different places for economic or social reasons. Woodall v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 105 F.2d 474, 477.

LIVING TOGETHER. As respects court's right to allow suit money to wife in divorce action, means dwelling together in same house, eating at same table, the two parties holding themselves out to world and conducting themselves toward each other as husband and wife. Lipp v. Lipp, Mo.App., 117 S.W.2d 364, 365, 366.

As used in adultery, statute means that parties must dwell or reside together in same habitation as a common or joint residing place. Polous v. State, 117 Tex.Cr.R. 1, 36 S.W.2d 754, 755.

As used in compensation law the words were intended to cover cases where no break in marriage relation existed, and therefore physical dwelling together is not necessary. Harris v. Louisiana Oil Refining Corporation, 127 So. 40, 42, 13 La.App. 416; Berg v. Industrial Commission, 236 Wis. 172, 294 N.W. 506, 509.
LIVING WITH HUSBAND. Means to dwell, to reside, to make one's abiding place or home with him, and may also mean to cohabit, and means living together as husband and wife in ordinary acceptance of words in common understanding, maintaining a home and living together in same household or actually cohabiting under conditions which would be regarded as constituting a family relation. McPadden v. Morris, 126 Conn. 654, 13 A.2d 679, 680.

LIVRE TOURNOIS. A coin used in France before the Revolution. It is to be computed in the ad valorem duty on goods, etc., at eighteen and a half cents. Act Cong. March 2, 1798, § 61; 1 Story, Laws, 629.

LLOYD'S. An association in the city of London, originally for the transaction of marine insurance, the members of which underwrite one another's policies. See Durbrown v. Eppins, 65 N.J.L. 10, 46 A. 585.

LLOYD'S BONDS. The name of a class of evidences of debt, used in England; being acknowledgments, by a borrowing company made under its seal, of a debt incurred and actually due by the company to a contractor or other person for work done, goods supplied, or otherwise, as the case may be, with a covenant for payment of the principal and interest at a future time. Brown.

LLOYD'S INSURANCE. Insurers are such as individuals and not as a corporate insurance company and the liability for loss is several and not joint. Jones v. Hollywood Style Shop, Tex.Civ.App. 12th Dist. 167. The 'Lloyd's Plan,' contemplated individual liability of the several underwriters. Harris v. Prince, 132 Tex. 231, 121 S.W. 2d 983, 986.

LOAD LINE. The depth to which a ship will sink in salt water when loaded.

A design, painted on each side of vessel, intended as a guide to determine safe loading depth under various conditions. The Indien, C.C.A.Cal., 71 F.2d 752, 759.

Every British ship must be marked on each side amidships with a loadline indicating the maximum loadline in salt water, to which it is lawful to load the ship. Sailing ships under eighty tons, fishing ships, and pleasure yachts, also ships employed exclusively in trading in any river or inland water wholly or partly in any British possession, and tugs and passenger steamers plying in smooth water or in excursion limits are excepted. This mark is called Plimsoll's Mark or Line, from Samuel Plimsoll, by whose efforts the passage of an act of parliament to prevent over loading was procured. The law applies to foreign ships in bunker coal. There must also be a mark on each side amidships indicating the position of each deck above water.

LOADING. The act of putting a load on or in; as to load a beast of burden, a car or a vessel; hence, to charge as with a load or burden. American Oil & Supply Co. v. United States Casualty Co., 19 N.J.Misc. 7, 18 A.2d 257, 259.

LOADMANAGE. The pay to loadsmen; that is, persons who sail or row before ships, in barges or small vessels, with instruments for towing the ship and directing her course, in order that she may escape the dangers in her way. Poth. Des Avaries, no. 137.

LOA.F. To spend time in idleness, to lounge or loiter about or along. City of Olathe v. Lauck, 156 Kan. 637, 135 P.2d 549, 55L.

LOAD. A lending. In re Lalla's Estate, 362 Ill. 621, 1 N.E.2d 50, 53.

Also means advance of money with an absolute promise to repay, Bankers Mortgage Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Tex., 142 F.2d 130, 131. Bailment without reward, consisting of the delivery of an article by the one owning it to another person, to be used by the latter gratuitously, and returned either in specie or in kind. A sum of money confided to another. Nichols v. Pearson, 7 Pet. 109, 8 L. Ed. 623; Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 20, 25; a borrowing of money or other personal property by a person who promises to return it, State v. Moltzner, 144 Or. 355, 17 P.2d 555, 556; contract whereby one delivers money to another who agrees to return equivalent sum. Easter Oil Corporation v. Parissi, 132 Cal. App. 518, 295 P. 1088, 1092; deposit of money by a customer with banker, Gimbel Bros. v. White, 10 N.Y.S.2d 666, 667, 256 App. Div. 439; deposit on time certificates, Carroll v. Ebben, 178 Tenn. 146, 156 S.W.2d 412, 415; payment of money by one to another to be repaid some future day. In re Arbuckle's Estate, 324 Pa. 501, 188 A. 758, 761; that which one lends or borrows, In re Lalla's Estate, 362 Ill. 621, 1 N.E.2d 50, 53; transaction creating customary relation of borrower and lender, Bannock County v. Citizens Bank & Trust Co., 53 Idaho 159, 22 P.2d 674; contract therein wherein one party transfers to the other a sum of money which that other agrees to repay absolutely. Yezeck v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 28 N.Y.S.2d 35, 36, 176 Misc. 355.

The four elements of a "loan" are, a principal sum, a placing of the sum with a safe borrower, an agreement that interest is to be paid, and a recognition by receiver of money of his liability for return of the principal amount with accrued interest. McLendon v. Johnson, 71 Ga.App. 424, 31 S.E.2d 89, 92.

LOAD ASSOCIATION. See Building and Loan Association.

LOAD CERTIFICATES. Certificates issued by a clearing-house to the associated banks to the amount of seventy-five per cent. of the value of the collaterals deposited by the borrowing banks with the loan committee of the clearing-house. Anderson.

LOAD FOR CONSUMPTION. A loan for consumption is where the article is not to be returned in specie, but in kind. This is a sale and not a

The loan for consumption is an agreement by which one person delivers to another a certain quantity of things which are consumed by the use, under the obligation, by the borrower, to return to him as much of the same kind and quality. Civ. Code La. art. 2910.

LOAN FOR EXCHANGE. A loan for exchange is a contract by which one delivers personal property to another, and the latter agrees to return to the lender a similar thing at a future time, without reward for its use. Civ. Code Cal. § 1902.

LOAN FOR USE. Occurs where a chattel is to be used by bailee without reward and then specifically returned to bailor. Slack v. Bryan, 299 Ky. 132, 184 S.W.2d 873, 876.

The loan for use is an agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another, to use it according to its natural destination, or according to the agreement, under the obligation on the part of the borrower, to return it after he shall have done using it. Civ. Code La. art. 2893. A loan for use is a contract by which one gives another the temporary possession and use of personal property, and the latter agrees to return the same thing to him at a future time, without reward for its use. Civ. Code Cal. § 1884. A loan for use is the gratuitous grant of an article to the borrower, to return it after use has been made of it, in specie, and may be either for a certain time or indefinitely, and at the will of the grantor. Code Ga. 1882, § 2126 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3517). Loan for use (called "commodatum" in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption, (called "mutuum" in the civil law,) in this: that the commodatum must be specifically returned; the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower. Bouvier.

LOAN, GRATUITOUS, (or COMMODATE.) A class of bailment which is called "commodatum" in the Roman law, and is denominated by Sir William Jones a "loan for use," (prêt-a-usage,) to distinguish it from "mutuum," a loan for consumption. It is the gratuitous lending of an article to the borrower for his own use. Wharton.

LOAN SOCIETIES. In English law. A kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes.

LOANED EMPLOYEE. Whether an employee should be regarded as a "loaned employee" in the service of a special employer, or whether he should be regarded as remaining in the service of his general employer, depends upon in whose work the employee was engaged at the time of injury. Owen v. St. Louis Spring Co., 175 Tenn. 543, 136 S. W.2d 498, 499, 500.

Under the "loaned servant doctrine," when one lends his servant to another for a particular employment, servant, for anything done in that employment, must be dealt with as servant of one to whom he is lent. Blair v. Durham, C.C.A.Tenn., 134 F.2d 729, 732.

Under the "loaned servant" rule, a loaned servant does not become the servant of the borrower unless the borrower has exclusive control over him for the period covered. Walter v. Everett School Dist. No. 24, 195 Wash. 45, 79 P.2d 689.

LOBBYING. "Lobbying" is defined to be any personal solicitation of a member of a legislative body during a session thereof, by private interview, or letter or message, or other means and appliances not addressed solely to the judgment, to favor or oppose, or to vote for or against, any bill, resolution, report, or claim pending, or to be introduced by either branch thereof, by any person who misrepresents the nature of his interest in the matter to such member, or who is employed for a consideration by a person or corporation interested in the passage or defeat of such bill, resolution, report, or claim, for the purpose of procuring the passage or defeat thereof. But this does not include such services as drafting petitions, bills, or resolutions, attending to the taking of testimony, collecting facts, preparing arguments and memorials, and submitting them orally or in writing, to a committee or member of the legislature, and other services of like character, intended to reach the reason of legislators. Code Ga. 1882, § 4486. And see Colusa County v. Welch, 122 Cal. 428, 55 P. 248; Houlton v. Nichol, 93 Wis. 393, 67 N.W. 715, 33 L.R.A. 166, 57 Am.St.Rep. 928.

LOBBY CONTRACT. A contract to secure the passage of legislation by any other means than the use of reason and presentation of facts, making arguments and submitting them orally or in writing. Ewing v. National Airport Corporation, C.C.A.Va., 115 F.2d 859, 860, 861.

LOBBYIST. One who makes it a business to procure the passage of bills pending before a legislative body.

One "who makes it a business to 'see' members and procure, by persuasion, importunity, or the use of inducements, the passing of bills, public as well as private, which involve gain to the promoters." 1 Bryce, Am. Corn. 156.

LOBBYING CONTRACT. A contract to secure the passage of legislation by any other means than the use of reason and presentation of facts, making arguments and submitting them orally or in writing. Ewing v. National Airport Corporation, C.C.A.Va., 115 F.2d 859, 860, 861.
Actions are "local" when the transactions on which they are based could not occur except in some particular place. Burnett v. Henderson, 220 N.C. 194, 16 S.E.2d 836, 837. "Local," within statute providing where suits of local nature must be brought, is fixed place or determinate zone identified with given region. Hills v. F. S. Harmon & Co., D.C.Wash., 56 F.2d 662, 663.

One wherein all principal facts on which it is founded are of a local nature; as where possession of land is to be recovered, or damages for an actual trespass, or for waste affecting land, because in such case the cause of action relates to some particular locality, which usually also constitutes the venue of the action. Miller & Lux v. Rickey, C.C.Nev., 127 F. 577; Crook v. Potter, 61 Md. 513. Where subject-matter is situated in a county other than one in which suit is filed, the primary and principal relief sought relates to such subject-matter; such action must be brought and tried in the county where such subject-matter is situated. State v. District Court of Blue Earth County, 150 Minn. 512, 185 N.W. 953. And where the cause in its nature could only have arisen in one place. Taylor v. Sommers Bros. Match Co., 35 Idaho, 30, 204 P. 472, 474. See transitory actions, post, in this note.

LOCAL AFFAIRS. The "local affairs" over which regulation, management and control are delegated to cities are affairs within the jurisdiction of the city by the law of its being. Robia Holding Corporation v. Walker, 239 N.Y.S. 659, 662, 136 Misc. 358.

LOCAL AGENT. An agent at a given place or within a definite district. Sharp & Dohme v. Wayburne, Tex.Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 413.

Stems or trunks of trees cut into convenient lengths for the purpose of being afterwards manufactured into lumber of various kinds; not including manufactured lumber of any sort, nor timber which is squared or otherwise shaped for use without further change in form. Kolloch v. Parcher, 52 Wis. 393, 9 N.W. 67. And see Haynes v. Hayward, 40 Me. 148; State v. Additiong, 121 N.C. 538, 27 S.E. 988; Brasher v. Industrial Lumber Co., La.App., 165 So. 524, 526.

As used in subcontract for clearing and grubbing highway right of way, meant merchantable logs, that is, logs not less than nine inches by thirty-two feet. McBride v. Callahan, 173 Wash. 609, 24 P.2d 105.

LOITER. To be dilatory; to be slow in movement; to stand around or move slowly about; to stand idly around; to spend time idly; to saunter; to delay; to idle; to linger; to lag behind.

LONG. In various compound legal terms (see infra) this word carries a meaning not essentially different from its signification in the vernacular.

In the language of the stock exchange, a broker or speculator is said to be "long" on stock, or as to a particular security, when he has in his possession or control an abundant supply of it, or a supply exceeding the amount which he has contracted to deliver, or, more particularly, when he has bought a supply of such stock or other security for future delivery, speculating on a considerable future advance in the market price. See Kent v. Miltenberger, 13 Mo.App. 506; Corner. A trader is said to be "long" on the market when he takes the full price risk, gains if the market price goes up, and loses if it goes down. Valley Waste Mills v. Page, C.C.A.Ga., 115 F.2d 466, 467.

As applied to an antenna, means a wire which is long in relation to the wave length used. Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co. v. Radio Corporation of America, N.Y., 306 U.S. 86, 618, 59 S.Ct. 427, 430, 83 L.Ed. 506.

LONG ACCOUNT. An account involving numerous separate items or charges, on one side or both, or the statement of various complex transactions, such as a court of equity will refer to a master or commissioner or a court of law to a referee under the codes of procedure. Druse v. Horter, 57 Wis. 644, 16 N.W. 14. Reed v. Young, 248 Mo. 606, 154 S.W. 766, 768, Fry v. Pomona Mills Inc., 206 N.C. 768, 175 S.E. 156.

For "Examination of a long account," see Examination.

LONG PARLIAMENT. The name usually given to the parliament which met in November, 1640, under Charles I., and was dissolved by Cromwell on the 10th of April, 1653.

The name "Long Parliament" is, however, also given to the parliament which met in 1661, after the restoration of the monarchy, and was dissolved on the 30th of December, 1678. This latter parliament is sometimes called, by way of distinction, the "long parliament of Charles II." Mozley & Whiteley.

LONG QUINTO, THE. An expression used to denote part second of the year-book which gives reports of cases in 5 Edw. IV.

LONG ROBE. A metaphorical expression designating the practice of profession of the law; as, in the phrase "gentlemen of the long robe."

LONG TON. A measure of weight equivalent to 20 hundred-weight of 112 pounds each, or 2,240 pounds, as distinguished from the "short" ton of 2,000 pounds. See Rev.St.U.S. § 2951 (19 U.S.C.A. § 420). But see Jones v. Giles, 10 Exch. 119, as to an English custom of reckoning a ton of iron "long weight" as 2,400 pounds.

LONG VACATION. The recess of the English courts from August 10th to October 24th.

LONGA PATIENTIA TRAHITUR AD CONSEN.
LONGA POSSESSIO EST PACIS JUS. Long possession is the law of peace. Branch, Princ.; Co. Litt. 6.

LONGA POSSESSIO PARIT JUS POSSIDENDI, ET TOLLIT ACTIONEM VERO DOMINO. Long possession produces the right of possession, and takes away from the true owner his action. Co. Litt. 110b.

LONGSHOREMAN. A laborer, such as a stevedore or loader, who works about wharves of a seaport. Duke v. Helena-GLendale Ferry Co., 203 Ark. 865, 159 S.W.2d 74, 77, 139 A.L.R. 1404.

LONGUM TEMPUS ET LONGUS USUS QUI EXCEDIT MEMORIA HOMINUM SUFFICIT PRO JURE. Co. Litt. 115a. Long time and long use, exceeding the memory of men, suffices for right.

LOOK AND LISTEN. The requirement that a man shall "look and listen" before crossing street railroad track means only that he shall observe and estimate with reasonable accuracy his distance from the car and the speed of its oncoming, and then make calculation and comparison of the time it will take the car to come and the time it will take to cross the track. Kansas City Public Service Co. v. Knight, C.C.A.Kan., 116 F.2d 233, 234.

LOOKOUT. A person who is specially charged with the duty of observing the lights, sounds, echoes, or any obstruction to navigation, with the thoroughness which the circumstances admit. The Tillicum (D.C.) 217 F. 976, 978; The Wilbert L. Smith (D.C.) 217 F. 981, 984.

A proper lookout on a vessel is some one in a favorable position to see, stationed near enough to the helmsman to communicate with him, and to receive communications from him, and exclusively employed in watching the movements of vessels which they are meeting or about to pass. The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 462, 13 L.Ed. 1058. Proper "lookouts" are competent persons other than the master and helmsman, properly stationed to look out, on the forward part of the vessel. The Catalina, C.C.A.Cal., 95 F.2d 283, 285.

LOPWOOD. A right in the inhabitants of a parish within a manor, in England, to hop for fuel, at certain periods of the year, the branches of trees growing upon the waste lands of the manor. Sweet.

LOQUELATA. Lat. A colloquy; talk.

In old English law, this term denoted the oral alterations of the parties to a suit, which led to the issue, now called the "pleadings." It also designated an "imprudence," i.e., both names evidently referring to the talking together of the parties. Loqueleta sine die, a postponement to an indefinite time.

LOQUENDUM UT VULGUS; SENTIENDUM UT DOCTI. We must speak as the common people; we must think as the learned. 7 Coke, 11b.

This maxim expresses the rule that, when words are used in a technical sense, they must be understood technically; otherwise, when they may be supposed to be used in their ordinary acceptation.

LORD. A feudal superior or proprietor; 'one of whom a fee or estate is held.

A title of honor or nobility belonging properly to the degree of baron, but applied also to the whole peerage, as in the expression "the house of lords." 1 Bl. Comm. 396-400.

A title of office, as lord mayor, lord commissioner, etc.

See Law.

Lord advocate

The chief public prosecutor of Scotland. 2 Alis.Crim. Pr. 84.

Lord and vassal

In the feudal system, the grantor, who retained the dominion or ultimate property, was called the "lord," and the grantee, who had only the use or possession, was called the "vassal" or "feudatory."

Lord chief baron

The chief judge of the English court of exchequer, prior to the judicature acts.

See Justice.

Law lords

Lord high chancellor

See Chancellor.

Lord high justice

In England, when a person is impeached, or when a peer is tried on, indictment for treason or felony before the house of lords, one of the lords, is appointed lord high steward, and acts as speaker pro tempore. Sweet.

Lord high treasurer

An officer formerly existing in England, who had the charge of the royal revenues and customs duties, and of leasing the crown lands. His functions are now vested in the lords commissioners of the treasury. Mozley & Whitley.

Lord in gross

In feudal law. He who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. "Very lord" is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and "very tenant," he who holds immediately of that lord. So that, where there is lord paramount, lord mesne, and tenant, the lord paramount is not very lord to the tenant. Wharton.

Lord justice clerk

The second judicial officer in Scotland.

Lord keeper

Originally another name for the lord chancellor. After Henry II.'s reign they were sometimes divided, but now there cannot be a lord chancellor and lord keeper at the same time, for by St. 5 Eliz. c. 18, they are declared to be the same office. Com.Dig. "Chancery," B. 1.

Lord lieutenant

In English law. The viceroy of the crown in Ireland. The principal military officer of a county, originally appointed for the purpose of mustering the inhabitants for the defense of the country.

Lord mayor

The chief officer of the corporation of the city of London is so called. The origin of the appellation of "lord," which the mayor of London enjoys, is attributed to the fourth charter of Edward III., which conferred on that officer the honor of having names, the same as royal, carried before him by the sergeants. Pull.Laws & Cust.Lond.

Lord mayor's court

In English law. This is a court of record, of law and equity, and is the chief court of the corporation of London. Theoretically the lord mayor and aldermen are supposed to preside, but the recorder is in fact the acting judge. It has jurisdiction of all personal and mixed actions arising within the city and liberties without regard to the amount in controversy. See 3 Steph.Comm. 449, note l.

Lord of a manor

The grantee or owner of a manor.

Lord ordinary

The judge of the court of session in Scotland, who officiates for the time being as the judge of first instance. Dari.Pr.Ct.Sess.

Lord paramount

A term. applied to the King of England as the chief feudal proprietor, the theory of the feudal system being that all lands in the realm were held mediately or immediately from him. See De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N.Y. 495, 57 Am.Dec. 470; Opinion of Justices, 66 N.H. 629, 33 A. 1076.

Lord privy seal

Before the 30 Hen. VIII., was generally an ecclesiastic. The office has since been usually conferred on temporal peers above the degree of barons. He is appointed by letters patent. The lord privy seal, receiving a warrant from the secret office, issues the privy seal, which is an authority to the lord chancellor to pass the great seal where the nature of the grant requires it. But the privy seals for money begin in the treasury, whence the first warrant issues, countersigned by the lord treasurer. The lord privy seal is a member of the cabinet council. Enc.Lond.

Lord warden of Cinque Ports

See Cinque Ports.

Lords appellant

Five. peers who for a time superseded Richard II. in his government, and whom, after a brief control of the government, he in turn superseded in 1397, and put the survivors of them to death. Richard II.'s eighteen commissioners (twelve peers and six commoners) took their place, as an embryo privy council acting with full powers, during the parliamentary recess. Brown.

Lords commissioners

In English law. When a high public office in the state, formerly executed by an individual is put into commission, the persons charged with the commission are called "lords, commissioners," or sometimes "lords" or "commissioners" simply. Thus, we have, in lieu of the lord treasurer and lord high admiral of former times, the lords commissioners of the treasury, and the lords commissioners of the admiralty; and, whenever the great seal is put into commission, the persons charged with it are called "commissioners" or "lords commissioners" of the great seal. Mozley & Whiteley.

Lord's day

A name sometimes given to Sunday. Co.Litt. 135.

Lords justices of appeal

In English law. The title of the ordinary judges of the court of appeal, by Jud.Act 1877, § 4. Prior to the judicature acts, there were two "lords justices of appeal in chancery," to whom an appeal lay from a vice-chancellor, by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 53.

Lords marchers

Those noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland, who in times past had their laws and power of life and death, like petty kings. Abolished by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, and 6 Edw. VI. c. 10. Wharton.

Lords of appeal

Those members of the house of lords of whom at least three must be present for the hearing and determination of appeals. They are the lord chancellor, the lords of appeal in ordinary, and the peers of parliament as held, or have held, high judicial offices, such as ex-chancellors and judges of the superior courts in Great Britain and Ireland. App.Jur. Act 1876, §§ 5, 25.

Lords of appeal in ordinary

These are appointed, with a salary of £6,000 a year, to aid the house of lords in the hearing of appeals. They rank as barons for life, but sit and vote in the house of lords during the tenure of their office only. App.Jur. Act 1876, § 6.

Lords of election

On the Reformation in Scotland, the king, as proprietor of benefices formerly held by abbots and priors, gave them the title of lords of election.” Wharton.

Lords of parliament

Those who have seats in the house of lords. During bankruptcy, peers are disqualified from sitting or voting in the house of lords. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 50.

Lords of regality

In Scotch law. Persons to whom rights of civil and criminal jurisdiction were given by the crown.

Lords ordinaries

Lords appointed in 1312, in the reign of Edward n., for the control of the sovereign and the court party, and for the general reform and better government of the country. Brown.

Lords spiritual

The archbishops and bishops who have seats in the house of lords.

Lords temporal

Those lay peers who have seats in the house of lords.

LORD CAMPBELL ACT. An act which fixes the maximum amount recoverable for wrongful death.

LORDSHIP. In English law. Dominion, manor, seigniory, domain; also a title of honor used to a nobleman not being a duke.

It is also the customary titulary appellation of the judges, and some other persons in authority and office.

LOSE. To bring to destruction; to ruin; to destroy; to suffer the loss of; to be deprived of; to part with, especially in an accidental or unforeseen manner; as to lose an eye. Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655.

LOSS. To bring to destruction; to ruin; to destroy; to suffer the loss of; to be deprived of; to part with, especially in an accidental or unforeseen manner; as to lose an eye. Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655.

LOSS is a generic and relative term; it is not a word of limited, hard and fast meaning. Boney v. Central Mut. Ins. Co. of Chicago, 213 N.C. 470, 196 S.E. 837, 841; United Service Automobile Ass'n v. Miles, 139 Tex. 138, 161 S.W.2d 1048, 1050.

Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., 226 N.Y.S. 243, 244, 222 App. Div. 302.
LOST OR NOT LOST. A phrase sometimes inserted in policies of marine insurance. It signifies that the contract is meant to relate back to the beginning of a voyage now in progress, or to some other antecedent time, and to be valid and effectual even if, at the moment of executing the policy, the vessel should have already perished by some of the perils insured against, provided that neither party has knowledge of that fact or any advantage over the other in the way of superior means of information. See Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U.S. 537, 25 L.Ed. 219; Insurance Co. v. Folsom, 18 Wall. 251, 21 L.Ed. 827.

LOST PAPERS. Papers which have been so misplaced that they cannot be found after diligent search.

Goods are "lost" only when possession has been casually and involuntarily parted with, so that mind has no impress of, and can have no recourse to, the event, Automobile Ins. LUCID

A full return of mind to sanity as placed the party in possession of the powers of his mind enabling him to understand and transact his affairs as usual, Succession of Tyler, 193 La. 480, 190 So. 651, 656; an interval in which the mind, having thrown off the disease, has recovered from its general habit, Melody v. Hamblin, 21 Tenn. App. 687, 115 S.W.2d 237, 245; Intervals occurring in the mental life of an insane person during which he is completely restored to his reason, or so far restored that he has sufficient intelligence, judgment, and will to enter into contractual relations, or perform other legal acts, without disqualification by reason of his disease, Roberts v. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., 93 Wash. 274, 160 P. 965, 970; Oklahoma Natural Gas Corporation v. Lay, 175 Okl. 75, 51 P.2d 580, 583; period of time during which person had sufficient mental capacity to know and understand nature and consequence of marriage relation, and the reciprocal duties and obligations thereof, Carter v. Bacle, Tex.Civ.App., 94 S.W.2d 817, 819.

LUCRA NUPTIALIA. Lat. In Roman law. A term including everything which a husband or wife, as such, acquires from the estate of the other, either before the marriage, or on agreeing to it, or during its continuance, or after its dissolution, and whether the acquisition is by pure gift, or by virtue of the marriage contract, or against the will of the other party by law or statute. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 580.

LUCRATIVA CAUSA. Lat. In Roman law. A consideration which is voluntary; that is to say, a gratuitous gift, or such like.

It was opposed to onerosa causa, which denoted a valuable consideration. It was a principle of the Roman law that two lucrative causes could not concur in the same person as regarded the same thing; that is to say, that, when the same thing was bequeathed to a person by two different testators, he could not have the thing (or its value) twice over. Brown.

LUCRATIVA USUCAPIO. Lat. This species of usucapio was permitted in Roman law only in the case of persons taking possession of property upon the decease of its late owner, and in exclusion or defeasance of the heir, whence it was called "usucapio pro herede."

The adjective "lucrativa" denoted that property was acquired by this usucapio without any consideration or payment for it by way of purchase; and, as the possessor who so acquired the property was a maid fide possessor, his acquisition, or usucapio, was called also "improba," (i.e., dishonest,) but this dishonesty was tolerated (until abolished by Hadrian) as an incentive to force the heredes to take possession, in order that the debts might be paid and the sacrifices performed; and, as a further incentive to the heredes, this usucapio was complete in one year. Brown.

LUCRATIVE. Yielding gain or profit; profitable; bearing or yielding a revenue or salary.

LUCRATIVE BAILMENT. See Bailment.

LUCRATIVE OFFICE. One which yields a revenue (in the form of fees or otherwise) or a fixed salary to the incumbent; according to some authorities, one which yields a compensation supposed to be adequate to the services rendered and in excess of the expenses incidental to the office. See State v. Kirk, 44 Ind. 405, 15 Am.Rep. 239; Crawford v. Dunbar, 52 Cal. 39; Hodge v. State, 135 Tenn. 525, 188 S.W. 203, 206. One the pay of which is affixed to performance of duties of office. Holman v. Lutz, 132 Or. 185, 284 P. 825, 827.

LUCRATIVE SUCCESSION. In Scotch law. A kind of passive title by which a person accepting from another, without any onerous cause, (or without paying value,) a disposition of any part of his heritage, to which the receiver would have succeeded as heir, is liable to all the grantor's debts contracted before the said disposition. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 3, p. 102.

LUCRATUS. In Scotch law. A gainer.

LUcre. Gain in money or goods; profit; usually in an ill sense, or with the sense of something base or unworthy. Webster.

LUCRI CAUSA. Lat. In criminal law. A term descriptive of the intent with which property is taken in cases of larceny, the phrase meaning "for the sake of lucre" or gain. State v. Ryan, 12 Nev. 403, 28 Am.Rep. 802; State v. Slingerland, 19 Nev. 135, 7 P. 280; Groover v. State, 82 Fla. 427, 90 So. 473, 475, 26 A.L.R. 375.

A kind of passive title by which a person accepting from another, without any onerous cause, (or without paying value,) a disposition of any part of his heritage, to which the receiver would have succeeded as heir, is liable to all the grantor's debts contracted before the said disposition. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 3, p. 102.

LUCRUM FACERE EX PUPILLI TUTELA TUTOR NON DEBET. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward. Manning v. Manning's Ex'r's, 1 Johns. Ch. (N.Y.) 527, 535.

LUCTUOSA IлерEDITAS. A mournful inheritance. See Hreditas Luctuosa.

LUCTUS, In Roman law. Mourning. See Annus Luctus.

LUGGAGE. Luggage may consist of any articles intended for the use of a passenger while traveling, or for his personal equipment. Civ.Code Cal. § 2181.

This term is synonymous with "baggage," but is more commonly used in England than in America. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Zwertz, 13 Okl. 411, 73 P. 941.

If a bus company or other motor carrier, "to suit its own convenience, takes possession of the luggage of a passenger for hire, to care for it on the trip, and becomes a bailee under a special contract, its liability as special bailee is broader than that of a common carrier and includes liability for articles that might not be classed as ordinary baggage." Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perin. Ed., § 2195.

LUMBER. Used to describe both trees suitable to saw and products into which they are sawed. Brasher v. Industrial Lumber Co., La.App., 165 So. 524, 526.

LUMBER PORTS. Openings in the bow of the barge which are used when long pieces of lumber are put on board are lumber ports. The Chehaw, D.C.N.Y., 54 F.2d 645, 648.

LUMEN. Lat. In the civil law. Light; the light of the sun or sky; the privilege of receiving light into a house.

A light or window.
LUMINA. Lat. In the civil law. Lights; windows; openings to obtain light for one’s building.

LUMINARE. A lamp or candle set burning on the altar of any church or chapel, for the maintenance whereof lands and rent-charges were frequently given to parish churches, etc. Kennett, Gloss.

LUMP SUM PAYMENT within compensation act is a payment before it becomes due under monthly payments. Verban v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 169 Or. 394, 123 P.2d 988, 996.

LUMP-SUM SETTLEMENT within compensation act means that the entire amount of compensation due the employee is paid at one and the same time. Puchner v. Employers’ Liability Assur. Corporation, 198 La. 921, 5 So.2d 288, 296.

LUMPING SALE. As applied to judicial sales, this term means a sale in mass, as where several distinct parcels of real estate, or several articles of personal property, are sold together for a ”lump” or single gross sum. Anniston Pipeworks v. Williams, 106 Ala. 324, 18 So. 111, 54 Am.St. Rep. 51.

LUNACY. Lunacy is that condition or habit in which the mind is directed by the will, but is wholly or partially misguided or erroneously governed by it; or it is the impairment of any one or more of the faculties of the mind, accompanied with or inducing a defect in the comparing faculty. Owings’ Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 386, 17 Am.Dec. 311. The term includes every kind of unsoundness of mind except idiocy. De Nardo v. De Nardo, 293 N.Y. 550, 59 N. E.2d 241. See Insanity.

For “Commission of Lunacy,” and “Inquisition (or Inquest) of Lunacy,” see those titles.

LUNAR. Belonging to or measured by the revolutions of the moon.

LUNATIC. A person of deranged or unsound mind; a person whose mental faculties are in the condition called ”lunacy”; one who possessed reason, but through disease, grief, or other cause has lost it. May mean all insane persons or persons of unsound mind, sometimes including and sometimes excluding idiots. Oklahoma Natural Gas Corporation v. Lay, 175 Okl. 75, 51 P.2d 580, 582.

A “lunatic” is distinguished from an ”Idiot” in that the lunatic has lucid intervals, while the idiot has no power of mind whatever. Weinberg v. Weinberg, 8 N.Y.S.2d 341, 344, 255 App.Div. 366.

LUNATICUS, QUI GAUDET IN LUCIDIS INTERNVALLIS. He is a lunatic who enjoys lucid intervals. 1 Story, Cont. § 73.

LUNDRESS. In old English law. A silver penny, so called because it was to be coined only at London, (a Londres,) and not at the country mints. Lown. Essay Coins, 17; Cowell.

LUPANATRIX. A bawd or strumpet. 3 Inst. 206.

LUPINUM CAPUT GERERE. Lat. To be outlawed, and have one’s head exposed, like a wolf’s, with a reward to him who should take it. Cowell.

LURCH, See Jerk.

LURGULARY. Casting any corrupt or poisonous thing into the water. Wharton.

LUSHBOROW. In old English law. A base sort of money, coined beyond sea in the likeness of English coin, and introduced into England in the reign of Edward III. Prohibited by St. 25 Edw. III. c. 4. Spelman; Cowell.

LUXURY. Excess and extravagance which was formerly an offense against the public economy, but is not now punishable. Wharton.

LYCH-GATE. The gate into a church-yard, with a roof or awning hung on posts over it to cover the body brought for burial, when it rests under-neath. Wharton.

LYEF-GELD. Sax. In old records. Lief silver or money; a small fine paid by the customary tenant to the lord for leave to plow or sow, etc. Somn. Gavelkind, 27.

LYING BY. A person who, by his presence and silence at a transaction which affects his interests, may be fairly supposed to acquiesce in it, if he afterwards propose to disturb the arrangement, is said to be prevented from doing so by reason that he has been lying by.

LYING IN FRANCHISE. A term descriptive of waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action.

LYING IN GRANT. A phrase applied to incorporeal rights, incapable of manual tradition, and which must pass by mere delivery of a deed.

LYING IN WAIT. Lying in ambush; lying hid or concealed for the purpose of making a sudden and unexpected attack upon a person when he shall arrive at the scene.

In some jurisdictions, where there are several degrees of murder, lying in wait is made evidence of that deliberation and premeditated intent which is necessary to characterize murder in the first degree. Commonwealth v. Mondolfo, 247 Pa. 526, 93 A. 612.

This term is not synonymous with ”concealed.” If a person conceals himself for the purpose of shooting another unwares, he is lying in wait; but a person may, while concealed, shoot another without committing the crime of murder. People v. Miles, 55 Cal. 207.

LYNCH LAW. A term descriptive of the action of unofficial persons, organized bands, or mobs, who seize persons charged with or suspected of crimes, or take them out of the custody of the law, and inflict summary punishment upon them, without legal trial, and without the warrant or authority of law. See State v. Aler, 39 W.Va. 549, 20 S.E. 585; Bates' Ann.St.Ohio, 1904, 4426 (Gen. Code, § 6278).
LYNDHURST'S (LORD) ACT. This statute (5 ' & 6 Wm. IV. c. 54) renders marriages within the prohibited degrees absolutely null and void. Theretofore such marriages were voidable merely.

LYON KING OF ARMS. In Scotch law. The ancient duty of this officer was to carry public messages to foreign states, and it is still the practice of the heralds to make all royal proclamations at the Cross of Edinburgh. The officers serving under him are heralds, pursuivants, and messengers. Bell. See Kings—at—Arms.

LYLE. In old Roman law. A name given to students of the civil law in the fourth year of their course, from their being supposed capable of solving any difficulty in law. Tayl. Civil Law, 39.
M’NAGHTEN RULE. The right-wrong test of understanding when he committed criminal act to criminal responsibility. The rule states essentially that if accused was possessed of sufficient understanding when he was doing and to know that it was wrong, he is responsible therefor, but if he did not know the nature and quality of the act or did know what he was doing but did not know that it was wrong, he is not responsible. Hixon v. State, 368 S.W.2d 299, 301, 212 Tenn. 132; Dunn v. State, 174 A.2d 185, 188, 226 Md. 463.

McNABB DOCTRINE. Evidence obtained during an illegal detention; that is, one in which the prisoner has not been promptly taken before a committing magistrate as required by law, is inadmissible in a criminal trial. McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608, 87 L.Ed. 819; Mullican v. U. S., C.A.Tex., 252 F.2d 398.

M. This letter, used as a Roman numeral, stands for one thousand.

It was also, in old English law, a brand or stigma impressed upon the brawn of the thumb of a person convicted of manslaughter and admitted to the benefit of clergy.

This letter was sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signifies that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per centum, and not one per centum interest. U. S. v. Hardyman, 13 Pet. 176, 10 L.Ed. 113.

M. D. An abbreviation for "Middle District," in reference to the division of the United States into judicial districts. Also an abbreviation for "Doctor of Medicine."

M. F. B. M. An abbreviation meaning 1,000 feet board measure. T. L. James & Co. v. Galveston County, Tex., C.C.A.Tex., 74 F.2d 313.

MACULARE. In old European law. To wound. Spelman.

MAD PARLIAMENT. Henry III, in 1258, at the desire of the Great Council in Parliament, consented to the appointment of a committee of twenty-four, of whom twelve were appointed by the Barons and twelve by the King, in a parliament which was stigmatized as the "Mad Parliament." Unlimited power was given to it to carry out all necessary reforms. It drew up the Provisions of Oxford.

MAD POINT. A term used to designate the idea or subject to which is confined the derangement of the mental faculties of one suffering from monomania. Owing’s Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 388, 17 Am. Dec. 311. See Insanity.

MADE KNOWN. Where a writ of scire fascias has been actually served upon a defendant, the proper return is that its contents have been "made known" to him.

A crime is "made known" to an officer when facts which come to knowledge of the officer are such as to indicate to him that it is his official duty to act or to see that an investigation of the alleged crime is instituted within his jurisdiction. State v. Young, 194 La. 1061, 195 So. 539, 540.

MADMAN. An insane person, particularly one suffering from mania in any of its forms. Said to be inapplicable to idiots (Com. v. Haskell, 2 Brewst. [Pa.] 497); Bensberg v. Washington University, 251 Mo. 641, 158 S.W. 330, 336, but it is not a technical term either of medicine or the law, and is incapable of being applied with scientific precision. See Insanity.

MADNESS. See Insanity.

MADRAS REGULATIONS. Certain regulations prescribed for the government of the Madras presidency. Mozley & Whiteley.

MIEC-BURGH. In Saxon law. Kindred; family.

MIEG. A kinsman. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 241.

MIEGBOTE. In Saxon law. A recompense or satisfaction for the slaying or murder of a kinsman. Spelman.

WERE. Famous; great; noted; as iElmere, all famous. Gibs, Camd.

MIEREMIIUM. Timber; wood suitable for building purposes.

MAGIC. In English statutes. Witch-craft and sorcery.

MAGIS. Lat. More; more fully; more in number; rather.

MAGIS DE BONO QUAM DE MALO LEXTENDIT. Co. Litt. 78b. The law favors a good rather than a bad construction.

Where the words used in an agreement are susceptible of two meanings, the one agreeable to, the other against, the law, the former is adopted. Thus, a bond conditioned "to assign all offices" will be construed to apply to such offices only as are assignable. Chit. Cont. 78.

MAGIS DIGNUM TRAHIT AD SE MINUS DIGNUM. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy. Yearb. 20 Hen. VI. 2, arg.

MAGISTER. Lat.

Civil law. A title of several offices under the Roman Empire.

English law. A master or ruler; a person who has attained to some eminent degree in science. Cowell.

MAGISTER BONORUM VENDENDORUM. In Roman law, a person appointed by judicial authority to inventory, collect, and sell the property of an absent or absconding debtor for the benefit of his creditors.

He was generally one of the creditors, and his functions corresponded generally to those of a receiver or an assignee for the benefit of creditors under modern practice. See Mackeld.Rom. Law § 521.

MAGISTER CANCELARIZE. In old English law. Master of the chancery; master in chancery. These officers were said to be called "magistri," because they were priests. Latch. 133.

MAGISTER EQUITUM. Master of the horse. A title of office under the Roman Empire.

MAGISTER LITIS. Master of the suit; the person who controls the suit or its prosecution, or has the right so to do.

MAGISTER NAVIS. In the civil law. Master of a ship or vessel. He to whom the care of the whole vessel is committed. Dig. 14, 1, 1, 1, 5.

MAGISTER PALATII. Master of the palace or of the offices. An officer under the Roman Empire bearing some resemblance to the modern lord chamberlain. Tayl. Civil Law, 37.

MAGISTER RERUM USUS. Use is the master of things. Co. Litt. 229b. Usage is a principal guide in practice.
MAGISTER RERUM USUS; MAGISTRA RERUM EXPERIENCIA. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things. Co. Litt. 69, 229; Wing. Max. 752.

MAGISTER SOCIETATIS. In the civil law. The master or manager of a partnership; a managing officer exercising any judicial functions, and might very well be held to embrace notaries and commissioners of acts, such as justices of the peace and police justices. A public officer belonging to the civil organization of the state, and invested with powers and functions which may be either judicial, legislative, or executive. The name of a charter (or constitutional enactment) granted by King John of England to the barons, at Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, and afterwards, with some alterations, confirmed in parliament by Henry III. and Edward I. This charter is justly regarded as the foundation of English constitutional liberty. Among its thirty-eight chapters are found provisions for regulating the administration of justice, defining the temporal and ecclesiastical jurisdictions, securing the personal liberty of the subject and his rights of property, and the limits of taxation, and for preserving the liberties and privileges of the church. Magna Charta is so called, partly to distinguish it from the Charta de Foresta, which was granted about the same time, and partly by reason of its own transcendent importance.

MAGISTRATE. Person clothed with power as a public civil officer. State ex rel. Miller v. Leod, 142 Fla. 254, 194 So. 628, 630.

A public officer belonging to the civil organization of the state, and invested with powers and functions which may be either judicial, legislative, or executive. But the term is commonly used in a narrower sense, designating, in England, a person intrusted with the commission of the peace, and, in America, one of the class of inferior judicial officers, such as justices of the peace and police justices. Martin v. State, 32 Ark. 124; Ex parte White, 15 Nev. 146, 194 So. 628, 630; also called magisterial district. State v. Mingo County Court, 97 W.Va. 615, 125 S.E. 576, 577.

MAGISTRACY. This term may have a more or less extensive signification according to the use and connection in which it occurs. In its widest sense it includes the whole body of public functionaries, whether their offices be legislative, judicial, executive, or administrative. In a more restricted (and more usual) meaning, it denotes the class of officers who are charged with the application and execution of the laws. In a still more confined use, it designates the body of judicial officers of the lowest rank, and more especially those who have jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of petty misdemeanors or the preliminary steps of a criminal prosecution, such as police judges and justices of the peace. The term also denotes the office of a magistrate. Golden v. Golden, 41 N.M. 356, 68 P.2d 928, 930.

MAGISTRALIA BREVIA. In old English practice. Magisterial writs; writs adapted to special cases, and so called from being framed by the masters or principal clerks of the chancery. Bract. fol. 413b; Crabb, Corn. Law, 547, 548.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT. In American law. Courts in the state of South Carolina, having exclusive jurisdiction in matters of contract of and under twenty dollars.

A local court in the city of Philadelphia, possessing the criminal jurisdiction of a police court and civil jurisdiction in actions involving not more than one hundred dollars. It is not a court of record. See Const. Pa. art. 4, 12.

MAGISTRATUS. Lat. In the civil law. A magistrate. Calvin.

A judicial officer who had the power of hearing and determining causes, but whose office properly was to inquire into matters of law, as distinguished from fact. Hallifax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 8.

MAGNA ASSISA. In old English law. The grand assize. Glanv. lib. 2, cc. 11, 12.

MAGNA ASSISA ELIGENDA. An ancient writ to summon four lawful knights before the justices of assize, there to choose twelve others, with themselves to constitute the grand assize or great jury, to try the matter of right. The trial by grand assize was instituted by Henry II. in parliament, as an alternative to the duel in a writ of right. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. Wharton.

MAGNA AVERIA. In old pleading. Great beasts, as horses, oxen, etc. Cro. Jac. 580.

MAGNA CENTUM. The great hundred, or six score. Wharton.

MAGNA CHARTA. The great charter.

The name of a charter (or constitutional enactment) granted by King John of England to the barons, at Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, and afterwards, with some alterations, confirmed in parliament by Henry III. and Edward I. This charter is justly regarded as the foundation of English constitutional liberty. Among its thirty-eight chapters are found provisions for regulating the administration of justice, defining the temporal and ecclesiastical jurisdictions, securing the personal liberty of the subject and his rights of property, and the limits of taxation, and for preserving the liberties and privileges of the church. Magna Charta is so called, partly to distinguish it from the Charta de Foresta, which was granted about the same time, and partly by reason of its own transcendent importance.

MAGNA CHARTA ET CHARTA DE FORESTA SONT APPELES LES "DEUX GRANDES CHARTERS." 2 Inst. 570. Magna Charta and the Charter of the Forest are called the "two great charters."

MAGNA COMONEREPARVIS. To compare great things with small things.

MAGNA CULPA. Great fault; gross negligence.

MAGNA NEGLIGENTIA. In the civil law. Great or gross negligence.

MAGNA NEGLIGENTIA CULPA EST; MAGNA CULPA DOLUS EST. Gross negligence is fault; gross fault is fraud. Dig. 50, 16, 226.

MAGNA PRECARIO. In old English law. A great or general reap-day. Cowell; Blount.

MAGNUM

MAGNUM CAPE. In old Practice. Great or grand cape. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 418. See Grand Cape.

MAGNUM CON CILIUM. In old English law. The great council; the general council of the realm; afterwards called "parliament." 1 Bl. Comm. 148; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 62; Spelman.

The king's great council of barons and prelates. Spelman; Crabb, Com. Law 228.

MAGNUM ROTULUS STATUTORUM. The great statute roll. The first of the English statute rolls, beginning with Magna Charta, and ending with Edward III. Hale, Com. Law, 16, 17.

MAIHEM. In old English law. Mayhem.

MAIHEMATUS. Maimed or wounded.

MAJUM—GEN. In Hindu law. A banker or any great shop-keeper.

MAHAL. In Hindu law. Any land or public fund producing a revenue to the government of Hindostan. "Mahalaat" is the plural.

MAHLBRIEF. In maritime law. The German name for the contract for the building of a vessel.

This contract contains a specification of the kind of vessel intended, her dimensions, the time within which she is to be completed, the price and times of payment, etc., with reservation generally that the contractor or his agent (usually the master of a vessel) may reject uncontract-worthy materials, and oblige the builder to supply others. Jac. Sea Laws 2-8.

In Scotch law. An instrument formerly used in beheading criminals. It resembled the French guillotine, of which it is said to have been the prototype. Wharton.

MAIDEN ASSIZE. In English law. Originally an assize at which no person was condemned to die. Now a session of a criminal court at which there are no prisoners to be tried.

MAIDEN RENTS. In old English law. A fine paid to lords of some manors, on the marriage of tenants, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant. Cowell.

MAIGNAGIUM. A brasier's shop, or, perhaps, a tenancy, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant. Cowell.

MAIL. As applied to the post-office, the carriage of letters, whether applied to the bag into which they are put, the coach or vehicle by means of which they are transported, or any other means employed for their carriage and delivery by public authority. Wynen v. Schappert, 6 Daly (N.Y.) 560. It may also denote the letters or other matter so carried.

The term "mail," as used in Rev. Stat. U. S. § 5469, 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1702, 1703, relative to robbing the mails, may mean either the whole body of matter transported by the postal agents, or any letter or package forming a component part of it. U. S. v. Inabnet, D.C.S.C., 41 F. 130.

Mail also denotes armor, as in the phrase a "coat of mail."

Scotch law. Rent; a rent or tribute. A tenant who pays a rent is called a "mail-payer," "mailier," or "mail-man." Skene.

MAIL MATTER. This term includes letters, packets, etc., received for transmission, and to be transmitted by post to the person to whom such matter is directed. U. S. v. Huggett, C.C. Ohio, 40 F. 641; U. S. v. Rapp, C.C.Ga., 30 F. 820.

Mail and mail matter are used interchangeably in statute, and both stani and money can be mail matter. Kelly v. Johnston, C.C.A.Cal., 128 F.2d 793, 794.

MAILABLE. Suitable or admissible for transmission by the mail; belonging to the classes of articles which, by the laws and postal regulations, may be sent by post.

MAILE. In old English law. A kind of ancient money, or silver half-pence; a small rent.

MAIL L AND DUTIES. In Scotch law. The rents and dues of an estate. Bell.

MAILS AND DUTIES. In Scotch law. The rents of an estate. Bell.

MAIL. As now used signifies to cripple or mutilate in any way, to inflict upon a person any injury which deprives him of the use of any limb or member of the body, or renders him lame or defective in bodily vigor; to inflict bodily injury; to seriously wound or disfigure; disable. See Shackelford v. Com., 183 Va. 423, 32 S.E.2d 682, 684; State v. Thomas, 157 Kan. 526, 142 P.2d 692, 693; State v. Deso, 1 A.2d 710, 715; Phillips v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 84, 143 S.W.2d 591, 592.

At common law, to deprive a person of a member or part of the body, the loss of which renders him less capable of fighting; or of defending himself; to commit mayhem (q. v.). State v. Johnson, 58 Ohio St. 417, 51 N.E. 40, 65 Am. St. Rep. 769.

To “main” an animal permanent injury must have been inflicted. State v. Benson, 91 Mont. 21, 5 P.2d 223, 224; Williams v. State, 51 Ga.App. 53, 179 S.E. 600.

MAIN. L. Fr. A hand. More commonly written “meyn.”

MAINAD. In old English law. A false oath; perjury. Cowell. Probably from Sax. “manath” or “mainath” a false or deceitful oath.

MAIN-PORr. A small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small tithes. Cowell.

MAINOUR. In criminal law. An article stolen, when found in the hands of the thief.

A thief caught with the stolen goods in his possession is said to be taken “with the mainour,” that is, with the property in manu, in his hands. 4 Bl.Comm. 307.

The word seems to have corresponded with the Saxon “handhabend,” (q. v.). In modern law it has sometimes been written as an English word “manner,” and the expression “taken in the manner” occurs in the books. Crabbe, Eng. Law, 154.

MAINPERNOR. In old practice. A surety for a person under arrest, who is delivered out of custody into the hands of his bail.

MAINPERNORS. The delivery of a person into the custody of mainpernors (q. v.). Also the name of a writ (now obsolete) commanding the sheriff to take the security of mainpernors and set the party at liberty.

“Mainpernors” differ from “bail” in that a man’s bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are barely sureties for his appearance at the day. Bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 3 Bl. Comm. 128. Other distinctions are made in the old books. See Cowell.

MAIN-RENT, Vassallage.

MAINTAIN, as its structure indicates, signifies literally to hold by the hand.

It is variously defined as acts of repairs and other acts to prevent a decline, lapse or cessation from existing state or condition; bear the expense of; carry on; continue; furnish means for subsistence or existence of; hold; hold or keep in an existing state or condition; hold or preserve in any particular state or condition; keep; keep from change; keep from falling, declining, or vanishing; keep in existence or continuance; keep in force; keep in good order; keep in proper condition; keep in existence; keep in good order; keep in proper condition; keep in repair; keep up; preserve from lapse, decline, failure, or cessation; provide for; rebuild; repair; replace; supply with means of support; supply with what is needed; support; sustain; uphold. Negatively stated, it is defined as not to lose or surrender; Rot to suffer or fail or decline. Tennessee Electric Power Co. v. White County, C.C.A.Tenn., 52 F.2d 1065, 1066; Maryland Casualty Co. v. City of Seattle, 11 Wash.2d 69, 118 P.2d 416, 418; State ex rel. Rose Bros. Lumber & Supply Co. v. Clousing, 198 Minn. 35, 268 N.W. 844; City of New York v. Long Island R. Co., 289 N.Y.S. 217, 219, 248 App.Div. 820; Owens v. Greenville News-Piedmont, D.C.S.C., 43 F.Supp. 785, 789; In re Klein, D.C.Minn., 9 F.Supp. 57, 58; Ponsler v. Union Traction Co. of Indiana, 76 Ind.App. 616, 132 N.E. 708, 709.

To “maintain” a suit is to uphold, continue on foot, and keep from collapse a suit already begun, or to prosecute a suit with effect. George Moore Ice Cream Co. v. Rose, Ga., 53 S.Ct. 620, 289 U.S. 373, 77 L.Ed. 1265. To maintain an action or suit may mean to commence or institute it; the term imports the existence of a cause of action. Boutilier v. The Milwaukee, 8 Minn. 105, (Gil. 80, 81). Maintain, already broad in meaning, but not yet reduced to judgment, Bruenn v. North Yakima School Dist, No. 7, Yakima County, 101 Wash. 374, 172 P. 569, 571; Smallwood v. Gallardo, 48 S.Ct. 23, 275 U.S. 56, 73 L.Ed. 152. In the context for which it means to continue or preserve in or with; to carry on. In re Charles Nelson Co., D.C.Cal., 294 F. 926, 928; Roullard v. Gray, 38 Cal. App. 79, 175 P. 479, 480.

The words “maintains” and “maintaining” in statutes denoting maintenance of a liquor nuisance denote continuous or recurrent acts approaching permanence. Keeth v. State, 193 Ind. 549, 139 N.E. 589, 590; the term “maintaining government” means providing money to enable government to perform duties which it is required by law to perform. Winebrenner v. Salmon, 155 Md. 563, 142 A. 723, 725.

To “maintain an airport” is to keep it in state of efficiency for the furnishing of those facilities and the rendition of those services which air transportation and communication demand. Concordia-Arrow Flying Service Corporation v. City of Concordia, 131 Kan. 247, 289 P. 953, 957.

MAINTAINED. Carried on, kept possession of, those services which air transportation and communication MAINTENANCE. Act of maintaining, keeping up, supporting; livelihood; means of sustenance. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis v. Miller, 184 Ark. 415, 42 S.W.2d 564, 566.

The upkeep, or preserving the condition of property to be operated. Orleans Parish School Board v. Murphy, 156 La. 925, 101 So. 268, 269.

Sustenance; support; assistance; aid. The furnishing by one person to another, for his support, of the means of living, or food, clothing, shelter, etc., particularly where the relationship of the parties is such that one is bound to support the other, as between father and child, or husband and wife. State ex rel. Blume v. State Board of Education of Montana, 97 Mont. 371, 34 P.2d 515, 519.

The upholding of the necessities of life. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis v. Miller, 184 Ark. 415, 42 S.W.2d 564, 566.

Criminal law. An unauthorized and officious interference in a suit in which the offender has no interest, to assist one of the parties to it, against the other, with money or advice to prosecute or defend the action. Hawk.P.C. 393; Wickham v. Conklin, 8 Johns. (N.Y.) 220.

Roads. "Maintenance" of public roads and highways includes all necessary powers to provide and keep up a system of highways. Handy v. Johnson, D.C.Tex., 51 F.2d 890, 893.

Suits. A layman’s furnishing money to permit a lawyer to provide, in part, costs and expenses in carrying on litigation for a third party, Kane v. Sesac, Inc., D.C.N.Y., 54 F.Supp. 853, 859; aid a party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend his suit without expectation of personal profit. Sampiner v. Motion Picture Patents Co., C.C.A., 255 F. 242, 247; Whisman v. Wells, 206 Ky. 59, 266 S.W. 897, 899; contract must tend or be intended to stir up litigation, multiply contentions, unsettle peace and quiet of a community or set one neighbor against another or give one litigant advantage over another. Fordson Coal Co. v. Garrard, 277 Ky. 218, 125 S.W.2d 977, 981, 121 A.L.R. 841; maintenance, supporting or assisting in the litigation of another, Draper v. Zebec, Ind., 219 Ind. 362, 37 N.E.2d 952, 956; Wheichel v. Stennett, 192 Miss. 241, 5 So.2d 418, 420. Malicious or officious intermeddling with a suit that does not belong to one, by assisting either party with money or otherwise to prosecute or defend. M Irkarian v. Barts, 89 N.H. 370, 199 A. 573, 575; Merrell v. Stuart, 220 N.C. 326, 17 S.E.2d 458, 460; Bavyard v. McLane, 3 Har. (Del.) 208; something which tends or amounting to the litigation of another, General Seafoods Corporation v. J. S. Packard Dredging Co., C.C.A.Mass., 120 F.2d 117, 119, 120. Where fault on part of one vessel is established by uncontradicted testimony and such fault is, of itself, sufficient to account for the disaster, it is not enough for such vessel to raise a doubt with regard to management of the other vessels and any reasonable doubt with regard to propriety of conduct of such other vessel should be resolved in its favor. Intagliata v. Shipowners & Merchants T vboat Co., 26 Cal.2d 365, 159 P.2d 1, 10; General Seafoods Corporation v. J. S. Packard Dredging Co., C.C.A.Mass., 120 F.2d 117, 119, 120.
MAJOR ANNUS. The greater year; the bissextile year, consisting of 366 days. Bract. fol. 359b.

MAJOR CONTINET IN SE MINUS. The greater includes the less. 19 Vin.Abr. 379.

MAJOR GENERAL. In military law. An officer next in rank above a brigadier general, and next below a lieutenant general, and who usually commands a division or an army corps.

MAJOR ILEREDITAS VENIT UNICUIQUE NOS- TRUM A JURE ET LEGIBUS QUAM A PAREN- TIBUS. 2 Inst. 56. A greater inheritance comes from parents.

MAJORES. Old English law. Greater persons; persons of higher condition or estate.

MAJUS DIGNUM TRAHIT AD SE MINUS DIG- NUM. The more worthy draws to itself the less. Bract. fol. 31.

MAJUS EST DELICTUM SEIPSUM OCCIDERE QUAM ALIUM. It is a greater crime to kill one's self than another. Bart.Max. 108. See Suicide.

MAJUS EST DELICTUM SEIPSUM OCCIDERE QUAM ALIUM. It is a greater crime to kill one's self than another. Bart.Max. 108. See Suicide.

MAJUS JUS. In old practice, greater right or mere right. A plea in the old real actions. 1 Reeve, Eng.Law, 476. Majus jus merum, more mere right. Bract. fol. 31.

MAJUS LATIUM. See Jus Latium.

MAKE. To cause to exist. United States v. Giles, Tex., 57 S.Ct. 340, 344, 300 U.S. 41, 81 L.Ed. 493. To form, fashion, or produce; to do, perform, or execute; as to make an issue, to make oath, to make a presentment.

To do in form of law; to perform with due formalities; to execute in legal form; as to make answer, to make a return or report. Ex parte Lockhart, 72 Mont. 136, 232 P. 183, 185.

To execute as one's act or obligation; to prepare and sign; to issue; to sign, execute, and deliver; as to make a conveyance, to make a note. Heine- bach v. Heinbach, 274 Mo. 301, 202 S.W. 1123, 1130; Spaulding v. First Nat. Bank, 205 N.Y.S. 492, 493, 210 App.Div. 216.

MAJORITY. Full age; the age at which, by law, a person is entitled to the management of his own affairs 'and to the enjoyment of civic rights. The opposite of minority. Also the status of a person who is a major in age.

The greater number.

The number greater than half of any total. Application of McGovern, 44 N.Y.S.2d 132, 137, 180 Misc. 508.

Elections. Majority signifies the greater number of votes. In re Todd, 208 Ind. 168, 193 N.E. 865.

When there are only two candidates, he who receives the greater number of the votes cast is said to have a majority; when there are more than two competitors for the same office, the person who receives the greatest number of votes has a plurality, but he has not a majority unless he receives a greater number of votes than those cast for all his competitors combined.

It relates to voters voting at election, not those qualified and not voting. Hevelone v. City of Beatrice, 120 Neb. 648, 234 N.W. 791, 795.

Military affairs. Majority denotes the rank and commission of a major.

MAJORITY OF QUALIFIED ELECTORS. Refers to those who actually vote on election day. Harris v. Baden, 154 Fla. 373, 17 So.2d 608, 609.

MAJORITY OF STOCKHOLDERS. A majority in interest of the stockholders, and not a majority in number only. Bank of Los Banos v. Jordan, 139 P. 691, 167 Cal. 327. "Majority of stockholders" means majority per capita when the right to vote is per capita, and a majority of stock when each share of stock is entitled to a vote, each particular case being determined by provisions of charter regulating voting. Simon Borg & Co. v. New Orleans City R. Co., D.C.La., 244 F. 617, 619.

MAJORITY VOTE. Where question is required to be submitted at certain regular election and is made to depend on "majority of votes" cast at "such election," a majority of all votes cast at election is meant, and not merely majority of votes cast on that particular question. In re Todd, 208 Ind. 168, 193 N.E. 865.

Where legislative body provides that proposition shall be submitted to voters and those in favor of proposition shall cast affirmative vote, while those opposed shall cast negative vote, and that "majority of votes" given shall be requisite to adoption of measure, only votes to be counted in determining whether measure was adopted are those given on particular question involved. In re Todd, 208 Ind. 168, 193 N.E. 865.
To conclude, determine upon, agree to, or execute; as to make a contract. MacIntyre v. McLean, 162 Ga. 280, 133 S.E. 471, 475. Tourlott v. West Bangor & Hermon Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 126 Me. 118, 136 A. 481, 482.

To cause to happen by one's neglect or omission; as to make default.

To make acquisition of; to procure; to collect; as to make the money on an execution or to make a loan. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Fowler, Tex.Civ.App., 217 S.W. 953, 954.

To have authority or influence; to support or sustain; as in the phrase, "This precedent makes for the plaintiff."

MAKE AN ASSIGNMENT. To transfer one’s property to an assignee for the benefit of one’s creditors.

MAKE AN AWARD. To form and publish a judgment on the facts. Hoff v. Taylor, 5 N.J.Law, 833.

MAKE A CONTRACT. To agree upon, and conclude or adopt, a contract. In case of a written contract, to reduce it to writing, execute it in due form, and deliver it as binding.

MAKE DEFAULT. To fail or be wanting in some legal duty; particularly to omit the entering of an appearance when duly summoned in an action at law or other judicial proceeding, to neglect to obey the command of a subpoena, etc.

MAKE ONE’S FAITH. A Scotch phrase, equivalent to the old English phrase, "to make one’s law."

MAKER. One who makes, frames, or ordains; as a "law-maker." One who makes or executes; as the maker of a promissory note. See Aud v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 290; Sawyers v. Campbell, 107 Iowa 397, 78 N.W. 56.

Accommodation maker. See Accommodation.

MAKING LAW. In old practice, the formality of denying a plaintiff's charge under oath, in open court, with compurgators. One of the ancient methods of trial, frequently, though inaccurately, termed "waging law," or "wager of law." 3 Bl. Comm. 341.

MAL. A prefix meaning bad, wrong, fraudulent; as maladministration, malpractice, malversation, etc.

MAL GREE. L. Fr. Against the will; without the consent. Hence the single word "maugre," and more modern "malgre," (q. v.).

MAL-TOLTE. Fr. In old French law, a term said to have arisen from the usurious gains of the Jews and Lombards in their management of the public revenue. Steph.Lect. 372.

MALA. Lat. Bad; evil; wrongful.

MALA GRAMMATICA NON VITIAT CHARTAM. SED IN EXPOSITIONE INSTRUMENTORUM MALA GRAMMATICA QUOD Fieri POSSIT EVITANDA EST. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed. But in the exposition of instruments, bad grammar, as far as it can be done, is to be avoided. 6 Coke, 39; Broom, Max. 686.

MALA PRAXIS. Malpractice; unskillful management or treatment. Particularly applied to the neglect or unskillful management of a physician, surgeon, or apothecary. 3 Bl.Comm. 122.

MALA PROHIBITA. Prohibited wrongs or offenses; acts which are made offenses by positive laws, and prohibited as such. 1 Bl.Comm. 57, 58; 4 Bl. Comm. 8.

MALADMINISTRATION. This term is used, in the law-books, interchangeably with misadministration, and both words mean "wrong administration." Minkler v. State, 14 Neb. 183, 15 N.W. 331.

MALANDRINUS. In old English law, a thief or pirate. Wals. 338.

MALARY. In Hindu law, judicial; belonging to a judge or magistrate.

MALBERGE. A hill where the people assembled at a court, like the English assizes; which by the Scotch and Irish were called "parley hills." Du Cange.

MALCONDUCT. Ill conduct, especially dishonest conduct, maladministration, or, as applied to officers, official misconduct. Sausbier v. Wheeler, 299 N.Y.S. 466, 473, 252 App.Div. 267.

MALCONNA. In Hindu law, a treasury or storehouse.

MALE. Of the masculine sex; of the sex that begets young.

MALE CREDITUS. In old English law, unfavorably thought of; in bad repute or credit. Bract. folis. 116, 154.

MALEDICTA EST EXPOSITIO QUIE CORRUPT TEXTUM. That is a cursed interpretation which corrupts the text. 4 Coke, 35a; Broom, Max. 622.

MALEDICTION. A curse, which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches or religious houses, against those who should violate their rights. Cowell.

MALEFACTION. A crime; an offense.

MALEFACTOR. He who is guilty, or has been convicted, of some crime or offense.
MALEFICIA NON DEBENT REMANERE IMPUNITA; ET IMPUNITAS CONTINUAM AFECTUM TRIBUIT DELINQUENTI. 4 Coke, 45. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished; and impunity affords continual incitement to the delinquent.

MALEFICIA PROPOSITUS DISTINGUUNTUR. Jenk.Cent. 290. Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes, or by their purposes.

MALEFICUM. In the civil law, waste; damage; tort; injury. Dig. 5, 18, 1.

MALESON, or MALISON. A curse.

MALESWORN, or MALSWORN. Forsworn.

MALESON, or MALISON. A curse.

MALEFEANCE. Evil doing; ill conduct; the commission of some act which is positively unlawful; the doing of an act which is wholly wrongful and unlawful; the doing of an act which person ought not to do at all or the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right or which he had contracted not to do. Comprehensive term including any wrongful conduct that affects, interrupts or interferes with the performance of official duties. State ex rel. Knabb v. Frater, 198 Wash. 675, 89 P.2d 1046, 1048.

It differs from "misfeasance" and "non-feasance," (which titles see.) See 1 Chit.Pr. 9; 1 Chit. Pl. 134; Dudley v. Flemingsburg, 72 S.W. 327, 115 Ky. 5, 60 L.R.A. 575, 103 Am.St.Rep. 253.

MALFETRIA. In Spanish law, offense. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 19, c. 1, § 1.

MALICE. The intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse, with an intent to inflict an injury or under circumstances that the law will imply an evil intent. Luikart v. Miller, Mo., 48 S.W.2d 867, 871. Cottle v. Johnson, 179 N.C. 426, 102 S.E. 769, 770.

A conscious violation of the law (or the prompting of the mind to commit it) which operates to the prejudice of another person. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Glenn, 213 Ala. 284, 104 So. 548, 549. A condition of the mind showing a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Cockrell v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 218, 117 S.W. 2d 1105, 1109, 1110.

In murder, that condition of mind which prompts one to take the life of another without just cause or provocation. State v. Smith, 26 N.M. 482, 194 P. 869, 870; State v. Moynihan, 93 N.J.L. 253, 106 A. 817, 818; a willful or corrupt intention of the mind. Pembrock v. State, 117 Neb. 759, 222 N.W. 956. It includes not only anger, hatred and revenge, but also every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. State v. Scherr, 243 Wis. 65, 9 N.W.2d 117, 119.

"Malice," in its common acceptation, means ill will towards some person. In its legal sense, it applies to a wrongful act done intentionally, without legal justification.

It includes intent and will. State v. Robbins, 66 Me. 328.

"Malice" in law is not necessarily personal hate or ill will, but it is that state of mind which is reckless of law and of the legal rights of the citizen. Evers-Jordan Furniture Co. v. Hartzog, 237 Ala. 407, 187 So. 491, 493.

"Malice," in legal sense, characterizes all acts done with an evil disposition, a wrong and unlawful motive or pur-pose, or the willful doing of an injurious act without a lawful excuse. Giguere v. Rosselot, 110 Vt. 173, 3 A.2d 538, 542.

In libel and slander, as to privileged communications, "malice" involves an evil intent or motive arising from spite or ill will; personal hatred or ill will; or culpable recklessness or a willful and wanton disregard of the rights and interests of the person defamed. McDonald v. Brown, 23 R.I. 546, 51 A. 213, 58 L.R.A. 768, 91 Am.St.Rep. 659; Cherry v. Des Moines Leader, 86 N.W. 323, 114 Iowa 298, 54 L.R.A. 855, 89 Am.St.Rep. 365.

In a libel case it consists in intentionally publishing, without justifiable cause, any written or printed matter which is injurious to the character of another. Becker v. Brinkop, 230 Mo.App. 871, 78 S.W.2d 538, 541. And in a legal sense, as an ingredient of actions for slander or libel, it signifies nothing more than a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. Ambruster v. National Bank of Westfield, 116 N.J.L. 122, 182 A. 613, 614.

In the law of malicious prosecution, it means that the prosecution was instituted primarily because of a purpose other than that of bringing an offender to justice. Brown v. Kinsner, 192 Miss. 746, 6 So.2d 611, 617.

Constructive malice. Implied malice; malice inferred from acts; malice imputed by law; malice which is not shown by direct proof of an intention to do injury, (express malice,) but which is inferentially established by the necessarily injurious results of the acts shown to have been committed. State v. Harrigan, 31 Atl. 1052, 9 Houst. (Del.) 369; Caldwell v. Raymond, 2 Abb.Prac. (N.Y.) 196.

Implied malice. Malice inferred by legal reasonings and necessary deduction from the res gestae or the conduct of the party. Malice inferred from any deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another, however sudden. Whart.Hom. 38. What is called "general malice" is often thus inferred. Sparf v. U. S., 15 S.Ct. 273, 156 U.S. 51, 39 L.Ed. 343.

Legal malice. See Legal Malice.

Particular malice. Malice directed against a particular individual; ill will; a grudge; a desire to be revenged on a particular person. Brooks v. Jones, 33 N.C. 261; State v. Long, 117 N.C. 791, 23 S.E. 431.
MALICE

Premeditated malice. An intention to kill unlawfully, deliberately formed in the mind as the result of a determination mediated upon and fixed before the act. State v. Gin Pon, 16 Wash. 425, 47 P. 961; State v. Rutten, 13 Wash. 211, 43 P. 30.

Special malice. Particular or personal malice; that is, hatred, ill will, or a vindictive disposition against a particular individual.

Universal malice. By this term is not meant a malicious purpose to take the life of all persons, but it is that depravity of the human heart which determines to take life upon slight or insufficient provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim. Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 30.

In the definition of “murder,” malice aforethought exists where the person doing the act which causes death has an intention, whether the person is actually killed or not, or to commit an felony whatever, or has the knowledge that the act will probably cause the death of or grievous bodily harm to some person, although he does not desire it, or even wishes that it may not be caused. Steph.Crim.Dig. 145 (1) Russ.Crimes. 641. The words “malice aforethought” long ago acquired in law a settled meaning, somewhat different from the popular one. In their legal sense they do not import an actual intention to kill the deceased. The idea is not spite or malevolence to the deceased in particular, but evil design in general, the dictate of a wicked, depraved, and malignant heart; not premeditated personal hatred or revenge towards the person killed, but that kind of unlawful purpose which, if persevered in, must produce mischief. State v. Pike, 49 N.H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 533.

It implies desire or intent to injure, while “malice in law,” or “implied malice,” means wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse, and jury may infer it as a deduction from want of probable cause. Glieberman v. Fine, 248 Mich. 8, 226 N.W. 669, 670.

As distinguished from malice in fact, it is presumed from tortious acts, deliberately done without just cause, excuse, or justification, which are reasonably calculated to injure another or others. Betts v. Jones, 208 N.C. 410, 181 S.E. 394.

MALICE PREPENSE. Malice aforethought; deliberate, predetermed malice. 2 Rolle, 461.

MALICIOUS. Characterized by, or involving, malice; having, or done with, wicked or mischievous intentions or motives; wrongful and done intentionally without just cause or excuse. People v. Knapp, 274 N.Y.S. 85, 152 Misc. 368.

In its broad sense it does not necessarily mean ill will or hatred. In a legal sense, any act done willfully and purposely to the prejudice and injury of another, which is unlawful, is, as against that person, “malicious.” Pollard v. Phelps, 56 Ga.App. 408, 193 S.E. 102, 108.

MALICIOUS ABANDONMENT. In criminal law, the desertion of a wife or husband without just cause.

The willful misuse or misapplication of process to accomplish a purpose not warranted or commanded by the writ; the malicious perversion of a regularly issued process, whereby a result not lawfully or properly obtained on a writ is secured; not including cases where the process was procured maliciously but not abused or misused after its issuance. King v. Yarbray, 136 Ga. 212 (1), 71 S.E. 131.

MALICIOUS ACCUSATION. Procuring accusation or prosecution of another from improper motive and without probable cause. McKenzie v. State, 113 Neb. 576, 204 N.W. 60, 63.

MALICIOUS ACT. A wrongful act intentionally done without legal justification or excuse; an unlawful act done willfully or purposely to injure another. La Plante v. Johnson, 297 N.Y.S. 318, 321, 163 Misc. 96.

MALICIOUS ARREST. An arrest made willfully and without probable cause, but in the course of a regular proceeding.

MALICIOUS INJURY. An injury committed against a person at the prompting of malice or hatred towards him, or done spitefully or wantonly. State v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 189, 85 N.W. 1046, 62 L.R.A. 700; Wing v. Wing, 66 Me. 62, 22 Am. Rep. 548.

The willful doing of an act with knowledge it is liable to injure another and regardless of consequences. In re Kalk, D.C.N.Y., 270 F. 627, 629.

Injury involving element of fraud, violence, wantonness and willfulness, or criminality. Braxton v. Matthews, 199 N.C. 484, 154 S.E. 735.

An injury that is intentional, wrongful and without just cause or excuse, even in the absence of hatred, spite or ill will. Panchula v. Kaya, 59 Ohio App. 556, 18 N.E.2d 1003, 1005.

MALICIOUS KILLING. Any intentional killing without a legal justification or excuse and not within the realm of voluntary manslaughter. State v. Cope, 78 Ohio App. 429, 67 N.E.2d 912, 920.

Though only a trespass at the common law, it is now, by several statutes, made severely penal. Jacob.
MALICIOUS MOTIVE. Any motive for instituting a prosecution, other than a desire to bring an offender to justice. Lounder v. Jacobs, 119 Colo. 511, 205 P.2d 236, 238.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. One begun in malice without probable cause to believe the charges can be sustained. Eustace v. Dechter, 28 Cal.App. 2d 706, 83 P.2d 523, 525. Instituted with intention of injuring defendant and without probable cause, and which terminates in favor of the person prosecuted. For this injury an action on the case lies, called the “action of malicious prosecution.” Hicks v. Brantley, 29 S.E. 459, 102 Ga. 264; Eggett v. Allen, 96 N.W. 803, 119 Wis. 625.

MALICIOUSLY. Imports a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another, or an intent to do a wrongful act, and may consist in direct intention to injure, or in reckless disregard of another’s rights. Briggs v. Coykendall, 57 N.D. 785, 224 N.W. 202, 205.

MALICIOUSNESS. “Maliciousness” does not necessarily mean actual malice or ill will, but intentional doing of a wrongful act, and may consist in direct intention to injure, or in reckless disregard of another’s rights. Briggs v. Coykendall, 57 N.D. 785, 224 N.W. 202, 205.

MALINGERING. To feign sickness or any physical disablement or mental lapse or derangement, especially for the purpose of escaping the performance of a task, duty, or work.

MALITIA. Lat. Actual evil design; express malice.

MALITIA EST ACIDA; EST MALI ANIMI AFFECTUS. Malice is sour; it is the quality of a bad mind. 2 Bulst. 49.

MALITIA PR/ECOGITATA. Malice aforesaid.

MALITIA SUPPLET ZETATEM. Malice supplies [the want of] age. Dyer, 104b; Broom Max. 316.

MALITHS HOMINUM EST OBIVIANDUM. The wicked or malicious designs of men must be thwarted. 4 Coke, 15b.

MALLEABLE. Capable of being drawn out and extended by beating; capable of extension by hammering; reducible to laminated form by beating. Farris v. Magone, C.C.N.Y., 46 F. 845.

MALLUM. In old European law, a court of the higher kind in which the more important business of the county was dispatched by the count or earl. Spelman. A public national assembly.

MALO ANIMO. Lat. With an evil mind; with a bad purpose or wrongful intention; with malice.

MALO GRATO. Lat. In spite; unwillingly.

MALO SENSU. Lat. In, an evil sense or meaning; with an evil signification.

MALPRACTICE. Any professional misconduct, unreasonable lack of skill or fidelity in professional or fiduciary duties, evil practice, or illegal or immoral conduct. Gregory v. McInnis, 140 S.C. 52, 134 S.E. 527, 529.

As applied to physicians and surgeons, this term means generally, professional misconduct towards a patient which is considered reprehensible either because immoral in itself or because contrary to law or expressly forbidden by law.

In a more specific sense, it means bad, wrong, or injudicious treatment of a patient, professionally and in respect to the particular disease or injury, resulting in injury, unnecessary suffering, or death to the patient, and proceeding from ignorance, carelessness, want of proper professional skill, disregard of established rules or principles, neglect, or a malicious or criminal intent. Rodgers v. Kline, 56 Miss. 816, 31 Am.Rep. 389; Hibbard v. Thompson, 109 Mass. 288; Napier v. Greenzweig, C.C.A.N.Y., 256 F. 196, 197.

The term is occasionally applied to lawyers, and then means generally any evil practice in a professional capacity, not merely with reference to the court and its practice and process than to the client. In re Baum, 8 N.Y.S. 771, 55 Hun, 611; Cowley v. O’Connell, 54 N.E. 558, 174 Mass. 253.

MALT. A substance produced from barley or other grain by a process of steeping in water until germination begins and then drying in a kiln, thus converting the starch into saccharine matter. Holunder v. Magone, C.C.N.Y., 38 F. 915; U. S. v. Cohn, 52 S.W. 38, 2 Ind.T. 474.

MALT LIQUOR. A general term including all alcoholic beverages, or fermented juices from grapes, fruits, and berries. McCaffrey v. State, 183 Ga. 827, 189 S.E. 825, 826.

MALT LIQUOR. A general term including all alcoholic beverages prepared essentially by the fermentation of an infusion of malt (as distinguished from such liquors as are produced by the process of distillation), and particularly such beverages as are made from malt and hops, like beer, ale, and porter. Allred v. State, 89 Ala. 112, 8 So. 56; State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 502, 95 N.W. 449; Claunch v. State, 82 Tex.Cr. 355, 199 S.W. 483, 484.

MALT MULNA. A quern or malt-mill.

MALT-SHOT, or MALT-SCOT. A certain payment for making malt. Somner.

MALTOTE. In French history, an oppressive tax levied in 1292 and later. Cassell’s New Fr. Dict.

MALTREATMENT. In reference to the treatment of his patient by a surgeon, this term signifies improper or unskillful treatment; it may result either from ignorance, neglect, or willfulness; but the word does not necessarily imply that the conduct of the surgeon, in his treatment of the patient, is either willfully or grossly careless. Com. v.
Hackett, 2 Allen (Mass.) 142.

MALUM, n. Lat. In Roman law, a mast; the mast of a ship. Dig. 50, 17, 242, pr. Held to be part of the ship. Id.

MALUM, adj. Lat. Wrong; evil; wicked; repreensible.

MALUM IN SE. A wrong in itself; an act or case involving illegality from the very nature of the transaction, upon principles of natural, moral, and public law. Story, Ag. § 346. State v. Shedoudy, 45 N.M. 516, 118 P.2d 280, 287.
An act is said to be ma/um in se when it is inherently and essentially evil, that is, immoral in its nature and injurious in its consequences, without any regard to the fact of its being noticed or punished by the law of the state.
Such are most or all of the offenses cognizable at common law, (without the denouncement of a statute;) as murder, larceny, etc.

MALUM NON HABET EFFICIENTEM, SED DE-FICIENTEM, CAUSAM. 3 Inst.Proem. Evil has not an efficient, but a deficient, cause.

MALUM NON PRZESUMITUR. Wickedness is not presumed. Branch, Princ.; 4 Coke, 72a.

MALUM PROBIBITUM. A wrong prohibited; a thing which is wrong because prohibited; an act which is not inherently immoral, but becomes so because its commission is expressly forbidden by positive law; an act involving an illegality resulting from positive law. Contrasted with malum in se. Story, Ag. § 346; People v. Pavlic, 227 Mich.
562, 199 N.W. 373, 374, 35 A.L.R. 741.

MALUM QUO COMMUNIUS EO PEJUS. The more common an evil is, the worse it is. Branch, Princ.

MALUS USUS ABOLENDUS EST. A bad or invail custom is [ought] to be abolished. Litt. §
212; Co.Litt. 141; 1 Bl.Comm. 76; Broom, Max.
921.

MALVEILLES. In old English law, ill will;
crimes and misdemeanors; malicious practices.
Cowell.

MALVEIS PROCURORS. L. Fr. Such as used to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice. Cowell.

MALVEISA. A warlike engine to batter and beat down walls.

MALVERSATION. In French law, this word is applied to all grave and punishable faults committed in the exercise of a charge or commission, (ofice,) such as corruption, exaction, concussion,

MAN. A human being. A person of the male sex.
A male of the human species above the age of puberty.

In its most extended sense the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children.

In feudal law, a vassal; a tenant or feudatory.
The Anglo-Saxon relation of lord and man was originally purely personal, and founded on mutual contract. 1 Spence, Ch. 37.

MAN OF STRAW. See Men of Straw.

MANACLES. Chain for the hands; shackles.

MANAGE. To control and direct, to administer, to take charge of. Fluet v. McCabe (1938), 299 Mass.
173, 12 N.E.2d 89, 93. To conduct; to carry on the concerns of a business or establishment. Generally applied to affairs that are somewhat complicated and that involve skill and judgment.

MANAGEMENT. Government, control, superintendence, physical or manual handling or guidance; act of managing by direction or regulation, or administration, as management of family, or of household, or of servants, or of great enterprises, or of great affairs. Branch v. Veterans’ Administration, 189 Ark. 662, 74 S.W.2d 800, 804. Discretionary power of direction; J. T. Camp Transfer
Co. v. Davenport, 15 Ala.App. 507, 74 So. 156, 159;
Browne v. City of New York, 210 N.Y.S. 786, 795, 125 Misc. 1.

MANAGER. One who has charge of corporation and control of its business or branch establishment, and who is vested with a certain amount of discretion and independent judgment. Braniff v.
McPherren, 177 Okl. 292, 58 P.2d 871, 872. A person chosen or appointed to manage, direct, or administer the affairs of another person or of a corporation or company. Com. v. Johnson, 144 Pa.
377, 22 A. 703. Also one of the persons appointed on the part of the house of representatives to prosecute impeachments before the senate.

MANAGERS OF A CONFERENCE. Members of the houses of parliament appointed to represent each house at a conference between the two houses. It is an ancient rule that the number of commons named for a conference should be double those of the lords. May, Parl.Pr. c. 16.

MANAGING AGENT. See Agent.

MANAGING OWNER OF SHIP. The managing owner of a ship is one of several co-owners, to whom the others, or those of them who join in the adventure, have delegated the management of the ship. He has authority to do all things usual and necessary in the management of the ship and the delivery of the cargo, to enable her to prosecute her voyage and earn freight, with the right to appoint an agent for the purpose. 6 Q.B.Div. 93; Sweet.

MANAGIUM. A mansion-house or dwelling-place.
Cowell.

MANAS MEDIAE. Men of a mean condition, or of the lowest degree.
MANBOTE. In Saxon law, a compensation or recompense for homicide, particularly due to the lord for killing his man or vassal, the amount of which was regulated by that of the were.

MANCA, MANCUS, or MANCUSA. A square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence. Cowell.

MANCEPS. Lat. In Roman law, a purchaser; one who took the article sold in his hand; a formality observed in certain sales. Calvin. A farmer of the public taxes.

MANCHE-PRESENT. A present from the donor's own hand.

MANCIPARE. Lat. In Roman law, to sell, alienate, or make over to another; to sell with certain formalities; to sell a person; one of the forms observed in the process of emancipation.

MANCIPATE. To enslave; to bind; to tie.

MANCIPATIO. Lat. In Roman law, a certain ceremony or formal process anciently required to be performed, to perfect the sale or conveyance of res mancipi, (land, houses, slaves, horses, or cattle.)

The parties were present, (vendor and vendee,) with five witnesses and a person called "libripens," who held a balance or scales. A set form of words was repeated on either side, indicative of transfer of ownership, and certain prescribed gestures made, and the vendee then struck the scales with a piece of copper, thereby symbolizing the payment, or weighing out, of the stipulated price.

The ceremony of mancipatio was used, in later times, in one of the forms of making a will. The testator acted as vendor, and the heir (or familice emptor) as purchaser, the latter symbolically buying the whole estate or succession, of the former. The ceremony was also used by a father in making a fictitious sale of his son, which sale, when three times repeated, effectuated the emancipation of the son.

MANCIPATIO. Lat. In Roman law, certain classes of things which could not be alienated or transferred except by means of a certain formal ceremony of conveyance called "mancipatio" (q. v.). These included land, houses, slaves, horses, and cattle. All other things were called "res nec mancipi,"

The distinction was abolished by Justinian. The distinction corresponded as nearly as may be to the early distinction of English law into real and personal property; res mancipi being objects of a military or agricultural character, and res nec mancipi being all other subjects of property. Like personal estate, res nec mancipi were not originally either valuable in se or valued. Brown.

MANCIPI RES. Lat. In Roman law, certain articles of personal estate, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is, that on the emancipation from the mancipium he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater familias. St pater filium ter venum dat, filius a patre liber esto. Gaius speaks of the mancipium quaedam vendita, because in his times it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation. See 1 Ortolan 112; Morey, Rom. L. 23, 32; Sohm, Inst. R. L. 124, 390.

MANCIPLE. A clerk of the kitchen, or caterer, especially in colleges. Cowell.

MANCOMUNAL. In Spanish law, an obligation whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What was resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation.

MANDANS. Lat. In the civil law, an obligation is said to be mancomunal when one person assumes the contract or debt of another, and makes himself liable to pay or fulfill it. Schm.Civil Law, 120.

MANDUS. See Manca.

MANDAMIENTO. In Spanish law, commission, authority or power of attorney. A contract of good faith, by which one person commits to the gratuitous charge of another his affairs, and the latter accepts the charge. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 12, c. 1.

MANDAMUS. Lat. We command. This is the name of a writ (formerly a high prerogative writ) which issues from a court of superior jurisdiction, and is directed to a private or municipal corporation, or any of its officers, or to an executive, administrative or judicial officer, or to an inferior court, commanding the performance of a particular act therein specified, and belonging to his or their public, official, or ministerial duty, or directing the restoration of the complainant to rights or privileges of which he has been illegally deprived. Lahiff v. St. Joseph, etc., Soc., 76 Conn. 648, 57 A. 692, 65 L.R.A. 92, 100 Am.St.Rep. 1012.

The action of mandamus is one, brought in a court of competent jurisdiction, to obtain an order of such court commanding an inferior tribunal, board, corporation, or person to do or not to do a certain act, the performance or omission of which the law enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. Where discretion is left to the inferior tribunal or person, the mandamus, can only compel it to act, but cannot control such discretion. Rev.Code Iowa, 1880, §§ 3373 (Code 1931, § 12440).

Writ of "mandamus" is summary writ issued from court of competent jurisdiction to command performance of specific duty which relator is entitled to have performed. People v. Nelson, 346 Ill. 247, 178 N.E. 485, 487.

It is legal, not equitable, remedy, and, when issued, is an inflexible peremptory command to do a particular thing. State ex rel. Onion v. Supreme Temple Pythian Sisters, 227 Mo.App. 557, 54 S.W.2d 468, 469.

The writ of mandamus is either peremptory or alternative, according as it requires the defendant absolutely to obey its behest, or gives him an opportunity to show cause to the contrary. It is the usual practice to issue the alternative writ first. This commands the defendant to do the particular act, or else to appear and show cause against it at a day named. If he neglects to obey the writ, and either makes default in his appearance or fails to show good cause against the application, the peremptory mandamus issues, which commands him absolutely and without qualification to do the act.

MANDANS. Lat. In the civil law, the employing party in a contract of mandate. One who gives a thing in charge to another; one who requires, requests, or employs another to do some act for him. Inst. 3. 27. 1, et seq.

MANDANT. In French and Scotch law, the employing party in the contract of mandatum, or mandate. Story, Bailm. § 138.

MANDATA LICITI RECIPIUNT STRICTAM INTERPRETATIONEM. SED ILLICITA LATAM EX EXTENSAM. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful commands a broad and extended one. Bac.Max. reg. 16.

MANDATAIRE. Fr. In French law, a person employed by another to do some act for him; a mandatary.

MANDATORY. He to whom a mandate, charge, or commandment is given; also, he that obtains a benefit by mandamus. Briggs v. Spaulding, 11 S.Ct. 924, 141 U.S. 132, 35 L.Ed. 662.

MANDATE. A command, order, or direction, written or oral, which court is authorized to give and person is bound to obey. Silverman v. Seneca Realty Co., 276 N.Y.S. 466, 154 Misc. 35. A judicial command or precept proceeding from a court or judicial officer, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree. Seaman v. Clarke, 69 N.Y.S. 1002, 60 'App.Div. 416; Horton v. State, 63 Neb. 34, 88 N.W. 146.

A precept or order issued upon the decision of an appeal or writ of error, directing action to be taken, or disposition to be made of case, by inferior court. Egbert v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 50 Okl. 623, 151 P. 228, 230.

In some of the state jurisdictions, the name "mandate" has been substituted for "mandamus" as the formal title of that writ. Chrisman v. Superior Court in and for Fresno County, 63 Cal. App. 477, 219 P. 85, 86; Davies v. Board of Com’rs of Nez Perce County, 26 Idaho, 450, 143 P. 945, 946.

A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without reward. Story, Bailm. § 137; Maddock v. Riggs, 106 Kan. 808, 190 P. 12, 16, 12 A.L.R. 216.

Mandates and deposits closely resemble each other; the distinction being that in mandates the care and service are the principal, and the custody the accessory, while in deposits the custody is the principal thing, and the care and service are merely accessory. Story, Bailm. § 140.

A contract by which a lawful business is committed to the management of another, and by him undertaken to be performed gratuitously. The mandatory is bound to the exercise of slight diligence, and is responsible for gross neglect. Richardson v. Futrell, 42 Miss. 525; Williams v. Conger, 8 S.Ct. 933, 125 U.S. 397, 31 L.Ed. 778. A mandate, procurement, or letter of attorney is an act by which one person gives power to another to transact for him and in his name one or several affairs.

The mandate may take place in five different manners, for the interest of the person granting it only; for the joint interest of both parties; for the interest of a third person; for the interest of a third person and that of the party granting it; and, finally, for the interest of the mandatory and a third person. Civ.Code La. arts. 2985, 2986.

The word may also denote a request or direction. Thus, a check is a mandate by the drawer to his banker to pay the amount to the transferee or holder of the check. 1 Q.B.Div. 33.

Civil Law. The instructions which the emperor or addressed to a public functionary, and which were rules for his conduct. These mandates resembled those of the proconsuls, the mandata jurisdictio, and were ordinarily binding on the legates or lieutenants of the emperor in the imperial provinces and there they had the authority of the principal edicts. Sa* Dr.Rom. c. 3, § 24, no. 4.

MANDATO. In Spanish law, the contract of mandate. Escriche.

MANDATO, PANES DE. Loaves of bread given to the poor upon Maundy Thursday.

MANDATOR. The person employing another to perform a mandate.

MANDATORY, adj. Containing a command; preceptive; imperative; peremptory.

A "mandatory" provision in the statute is one the omission to follow which renders the proceedings to which it relates void, while a "directory" provision is one the observance of which is not necessary to validity of the proceeding. Siedschlag v. May, 363 Ill. 538, 2 N.E.2d 836, 838. So the mandatory part of a writ is that which commands the person to do the act specified. State v. Barnell, 109 Ohio St. 246, 142 N.E. 611, 613; Williams v. Sherwood, 51 N.D. 520, 200 N.W. 782, 784.

It is also said that when the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing required to be done, it is mandatory. Kavanaugh v. Fash, C.C.A.Okl., 74 F.2d 435, 437; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner; and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely. Davis v. Smith, 58 N.H. 17.

"Mandatory" s’atutory provision is one which must be observed, as distinguished from "directory" provision, which leaves it optional with department or officer to which addressed to obey it or not. State ex rel. Dworken v. Court of Common Pleas of Cuyahoga County, 131 Ohio St. 23, 1 N.E.2d 138, 139.

MANDATORY, n. One to whom a mandate is given; one who undertakes without compensation to perform certain duties. Swords v. Simineo, 1114

MANDATORY INJUNCTION. See Injunction.

MANDATUM. Lat. In the civil law, the contract of mandate (q. v.).

MANDATUM NISI GRATUITUM NULLUM EST. Unless a mandate is gratuitous, it is not a mandate. Dig. 17. 1. 1. 4; Inst. 3, 27; 1 Bouv.Inst. n. 1070.

MANDAVI BALLIVO. (I have commanded or made my mandate to the bailiff.) In English practice, the return made by a sheriff, where the bailiff of a liberty has the execution of a writ, that he has commanded the bailiff to execute it. 1 Tidd, Pr. 309; 2 Tidd, Pr. 1025.

MANERA. In Spanish law, manner or mode. Las Partidas, pt. 4, tit. 4, 1. 2.

MANERIUM. In old English law, a manor.

MANERIUM DICITUR A MANENDO, SECUNDUM EXCELLENTIAM, SEDES MAGNA, FIXA, ET STABILIS. Co.Litt. 58. A manor is so called from manendo, according to its excellence, a seat, great, fixed, and firm.

MANGONELLUS. A warlike instrument for casting stones against the walls of a castle. Cowell.

MANIA A POTU. Insanity resulting as a secondary effect produced by excessive and protracted indulgence in intoxicating liquors in which the patient becomes a madman fully deprived of reason while the fit is upon him. State v. Wallace, 170 Or. 60, 131 P.2d 222, 233.

MANHOOD. In feudal law, a term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was, “Devenio vester homo,” I become your man. 2 Bl.Comm. 54.

To arrive at manhood means to arrive at twenty-one years of age. Felton v. Billups, 21 N.C. 585.

MANIA. See Insanity.

MANIFEST. Evident to the senses, especially to the sight, obvious to the understanding, evident to the mind, not obscure or hidden, and is synonymous with open, clear, visible, unmistakable, indubitable, indisputable, evident, and self-evident. London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Coffeen, 96 Colo. 375, 42 P.2d 998, 1001.

In evidence, that which is clear and requires no proof; that which is notorious.

In maritime law. A sea-letter; a written document required to be carried by merchant vessels, containing an account of the cargo, with other particulars, for the facility of the customs officers. The Sylvia II, D.C.Mass., 28 F.2d 215, 216.

MANIFEST LAW. See Lex manifesta, s. v. Lex.

MANIFESTA PROBATONE NON INDIGENT. 7 Coke, 40. Things manifest do not require proof.

MANIFESTO. A formal written declaration, promulgated by a prince, or by the executive authority of a state or nation, proclaiming its reasons and motives for declaring a war, or for any other important international action.

MANIPULUS. In canon law, a handkerchief, which the priest always had in his left hand. Blount.

MANKIND. The race or species of human beings. In law, females, as well as males, may be included under this term. Fortesc. 91.

MANNER. A way, mode, method of doing anything, or mode of proceeding in any case or situation. Ducre v. Milner, La.App., 146 So. 734, 736.

Also a thing stolen, in the hand of the thief; a corruption of “mainour” (q. v.).

MANNER AND FORM; MODO ET FORMA. Formal words introduced at the conclusion of a traverse.

Their object is to put the party whose pleading is traversed not only to the proof that the matter of fact denied is, in its general effect, true as alleged, but also that the manner and form in which the fact or facts are set forth are also capable of proof. • Brown.

MANNIRE. To cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there. It is different from bannire; for, though both of them are citations, this is by the adverse party, and that is by the judge. Du Cange.

MANNOPUS. In old English law, goods taken from the “court-baron.” The lands comprised in the manor were divided into terres tenementales (tenemental lands or bocland) and terres dominicales, or demesne lands. The former were given by the lord of the manor to his followers or retainers in freehold. The latter were such as he reserved for his own use; but of these part were held by tenants in copyhold, e., those holding by a copy of the record in the lord’s court; and part, under the name of the “lord’s waste,” served for public roads and commons of pasture for the lord and tenants. The tenants, considered in their relation to the court-baron and to each other, were called “pares curiae.” The word also signified the franchise of having a manor, with jurisdiction for a court-baron and the right to the rents and services of copyholders.

In American law, a manor is a tract held of a proprietor by a fee-farm rent in money or in kind, and descending to the oldest son of the proprietor, who in New York is called a “patroon.” People v. Van Rensselaer, 9 N.Y. 291.

Reputed Manor. Whenever the demesne lands and the services become absolutely separated, the manor ceases to be a manor in reality, although it may (and usually does) continue to be a manor in reputation, and is then called a “reputed manor,” and it is also sometimes called a “seigniory in gross.” Brown.

MANORIAL EXTENT. A survey of a manor made by a jury of tenants, often of unfree men sworn to sit for the particulars of each tenancy, and containing the smallest details as to the nature of the service due. These manorial extents "were made in the interest of the lords, who were anxious that all due services should be done; but they imply that other and greater services are not due, that the customary tenants, even though..."
they be unfree men, owe these services for their tenements, no less and no more. Statements that the tenants are not bound to do services of a particular kind are not very uncommon"; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 343. The "extents" of manors are descriptions which run from one boundary to another. The size of the holdings, the legal kind of their tenure and the kind and amount of their service; Maitland, Material for Hist. E. L. in 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 87.

MANQUIRLIER. In Saxon law, a murderer.

MANRENT. In Scotch law, the service of a man or vassal. A bond of manrent was an instrument by which a person, in order to secure the protection of some powerful lord, bound himself to such lord for the performance of certain services.

MANSE. In old English law, a habitation or dwelling, generally with land attached. Spelman.

A residence or dwelling-house for the parish priest; a parsonage or vicarage house. Cowell.

Still used in Scotch law in this sense.

MANSER. A bastard. Cowell.

MANSIO. In Anglo-Saxon times the amount of land which would support a man and his family, called by various names: Mansio, familia, hide. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E.L. 54.

MANSION. A dwelling-house or place of residence, including its appurtenant outbuildings. 2 East, P.C. 492; Thompson v. People, 3 Parker, Cr. R. (N.Y.) 214; Armour v. State, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 385.

In old English law, residence; dwelling.

MANSION-HOUSE. In the law of burglary, etc., any species of dwelling-house. 3 Inst. 64.

MANSLAUGHTER. The unlawful killing of another without malice, either express or implied; which may be either voluntarily, upon a sudden heat or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act. 1 Hale, P.C. 466; 4 Bl.Comm. 191.

The distinction between "manslaughter" and "murder" consists in the following: In the former, though the act which occasions the death be unlawful or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice, either express or implied, which is the very essence of murder, is presumed to be wanting in manslaughter. 1 East, P.C. 218; Comm. v. Webster, 5 Cush., Mass., 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711. No time for premeditation. 1 Hale, P.C. 437; 1 Russ. Crimes, 485; 1 Blah. Crim. Law, 678; People v. Crenshaw, 298 Ill. 412, 131 N.E. 576, 577, 15 A.L.R. 671.

Voluntary manslaughter. Manslaughter committed voluntarily upon a sudden heat of the passions; as if, upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight, and one of them kills the other. 4 Bl.Comm. 190, 191; State v. Disalvo, 121 A. 661, 663, 2 W.W. Harr. (Del.) 232; Wiley v. State, 19 Ariz. 346, 170 P. 869, 873, L.R.A. 1918D, 373. It is the unlawful taking of human life under circumstances falling short of willful or deliberate intent to kill and approaching too near thereto to be justifiable homicide. State v. McVay, 47 R.I. 292, 132 A. 436, 438, 44 A.L.R. 572.

Involuntary manslaughter. It exists where a person in committing an unlawful act not felonious or tending to great bodily harm, or in committing a lawful act without proper caution or requisite skill, unGuardedly or undesignedly kills another. State v. Disalvo, 2 W.W. Harr. (Del.) 232, 121 A. 661, 663; State v. McVay, 47 R.I. 292, 132 A. 436, 437, 44 A.L.R. 572.

The absence of intention to kill or to commit any unlawful act which might reasonably produce death or great bodily harm is the distinguishing feature between voluntary and involuntary homicide. State v. Weissengoff, 85 W.Va. 271, 101 S.E. 450, 455; State v. Pond, 125 Me. 453, 134 A. 572, 573.

MANSO, or MANSUM. In old English law, a mansion or house. Spelman.

MANSTEALING. A word sometimes used synonymously with "kidnapping." (q. v.).

MANSUETUS. Lat. Tame; as though accustomed.

MANTILE CHILDREN. See Pallio Cooperire.

MAN-TRAPS. Engines to catch trespassers, now unlawful unless set in a dwelling-house for defense between sunset and sunrise. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 31.

MANU BREVLO. With a short hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying shortly; directly; by the shortest course; without circuity.

MANU LONGA. Lat. With a long hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying indirectly or circuituously. Calvin.

MANU OPERA. Lat. Cattle or implements of husbandry; also stolen goods taken from a thief caught in the fact. Cowell.
MANUAL. Of, or pertaining to, the hand or hands; done, made, or operated by or used with the hand or hands; or as manual labor. McErlain v. Taylor, 207 Ind. 240, 192 N.E. 260, 262, 94 A.L.R. 1284. Performed by the hand; used or employed by the hand; held in the hand.

MANUAL DELIVERY. Delivery of personal property sold, donated, mortgaged, etc., by passing it into the "hand" of the purchaser or transferee, that is, by an actual and corporeal change of possession.

MANUAL GIFT. The manual gift, that is, the giving of corporeal movable effects, accompanied by a real delivery, is not subject to any formality. Civil Code La. art. 1539.

MANUAL LABOR. Work done with the hand. State v. Ash, 53 Ariz. 197, 87 P.2d 270, 272. Labor performed by hand or by the exercise of physical force, with or without the aid of tools and of hands or other beast of burden, but depending for its effectiveness chiefly upon personal muscular exertion rather than upon skill, intelligence or adroitness. Lew Jim v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 66 F. 954, 14 C.C.A. 281; Martin v. Wakefield, 42 Minn. 176, 43 N.W. 966, 6 L.R.A. 362.

MANUAL RATES. The Oklahoma Inspection Bureau is a private enterprise maintained by the insurance companies and its function is to compile the general basis schedule which sets out the rates for the risks insured. These rates are commonly referred to as "manual rates." Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Remer, C.C.A.Okl., 119 F. 2d 66, 67.

MANUALIA BENEFICIA. The daily distributions of meat and drink to the canons and other members of cathedral churches for their present subsistence. Cowell.

MANUALIS OBEDIENTIA. Sworn obedience or submission upon oath. Cowell.

MANUCAPIO. In old English practice, a writ which lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, and the like, who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff, or others having power to let to mainprise. Fitzh. Nat. Brev., 140.

MANUCAPTORS. Same as mainporners (q. v.).

MANUFACTORY. A physical plant, or a place or building where manufacturing is carried on. (Plant wherein electric power was generated.) Duke Power Co. v. Bell, 156 S.C. 299, 152 S.E. 865, 868. What in common understanding is known as a "factory." Halpin v. Insurance Co., 23 N.E. 989, 120 N.Y. 73, 8 L.R.A. 79; In re I. Rheinstrom & Sons Co., D.C.Ky., 207 F. 119, 134.

The primary meaning of this word is "making with the hand," but this definition is too narrow for its present use.

Meaning of word "manufacture," which is defined as the making of goods or wares by manual labor or by machinery, especially on a large scale, has expanded as workmanship and art have advanced, so that now nearly all artificial products of human industry, nearly all such materials as have acquired changed conditions or new and specific combinations, whether from the direct action of the human hand, from chemical processes devised and directed by human skill, or by the employment of machinery, are now commonly designated as "manufactured." Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Price, 168 Md. 174, 177 A. 160, 163.

Ordinarily does not include building or construction of outdoor structures. Morrison-Knudso Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 58 Wyo. 500, 135 P.2d 927, 931, 932.

MANUFACTURE, n. The process or operation of making wares or any material produced by hand, by machinery or by other agency; anything made from raw materials by the hand, by machinery, or by art. Jones Bros. Co. v. Underkoffler, D.C.Pa., 16 F.Supp. 729, 730. The production of articles for use from raw or prepared materials by giving such materials new forms, qualities, properties or combinations, whether by hand labor or machine. Cain's Coffee Co. v. City of Muskogee, 171 Okl. 635, 44 P.2d 50, 52.

In patent law, any useful product made directly by human labor, or by the aid of machinery directed and controlled by human power, and either from raw materials, or from materials worked up into a new form. Also the process by which such products are made or fashioned. Turner v. Quincy Market Cold Storage & Warehouse Co., C.C.A.Mass., 225 F. 41; International Mausoleum Co. v. Sievert, C.C.A.Ohio, 213 F. 225, 227; Riter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Aiken, C.C.A.Pa., 203 F. 699, 702.

An instrument created by the exercise of mechanical forces and designed for the production of mechanical effects, but not capable, when set in motion, of attaining, by its own operation, to any predetermined results. If receives its rule of action from the external source which furnishes its motive power.

A manufacture requires the constant guidance and control of some separate intelligent agent; a machine operates under the direction of that intelligence with which it was endowed by its inventor when he imposed on it its structural law. The parts of a machine, considered separately from the machine itself, all kinds of tools and fabrics, and every other vendible substance, which is neither a complete machine nor produced by the mere union of ingredients, is included under the title "manufacture." Rob.Pat. § 182.

MANUFACTURER. One who by labor, art, or skill transforms raw material into some kind of a finished product or article of trade. Henry v. Markesan State Bank, C.C.A.Minn., 68 F.2d 554, 557.

MANUFACTURERS LIABILITY DOCTRINE. The foundation for the liability is knowledge of the danger attending use of manufactured or assembled product and negligence in failing to give appropriate warning, or negligence in failing to discover and appreciate the danger, and the probable consequences that injury will proximately result from the use of such product for the purposes for which it was intended. Crane Co. v. Davies, 242 Ala. 570, 8 So.2d 196, 199.

MANUFACTURING CORPORATION. A corporation engaged in the production of some article, thing, or object, by skill or labor, out of raw material, or from matter which has already been subjected to artificial forces, or to which something has been added to change its natural condition. People v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 99 N.Y. 181, 1 N.E. 669. The term does not include a mining corporation. Byers v. Franklin Coal Co., 106 Mass. 135. But includes a corporation engaged in generation and distribution of electricity. Curry v. Alabama Power Co., 8 So.2d 521, 526, 243 Ala. 53.

MANUFACTURING ESTABLISHMENT. Any place where machinery is used for manufacturing purposes. Lilley v. Eberhardt, Mo., 37 S.W.2d 599, 601.

MANUMISSION. The act of liberating a slave from bondage and giving him freedom. In a wider sense, releasing or delivering one person from the power or control of another. See Fenwick v. Chapman, 9 Pet. 472, 9 L.Ed. 193; State v. Prall, 1 N.J.Law, 4.

MANUMITTERE IDEM EST QUOD EXTRA MANUM VEL POTESTATEM PONERE. Co.Litt. 137. To manumit is the same as to place beyond hand and power.

MANUNG, or MONUNG. In old English law, the district within the jurisdiction of a reeve, apparently so called from his power to exercise therein one of his chief functions, viz., to exact (amanian) all fines.

MANUPES. In old English law, a foot of full and legal measure.

MANUPRETIUM. Lat. In Roman law, the hire or wages of labor; compensation for labor or services performed. See Mackeld.Rom.Law, § 413.

MANURABLE. In old English law, capable of being had or held in hand; capable of manual occupation; capable of being cultivated; capable of being touched; tangible; corporeal. Hale, Anal. § 24.

MANURE. In old English law, to occupy; to use or cultivate; to have in manual occupation; to bestow manual labor upon. Cowell.

MANUS. Lat. A hand.

In the civil law, this word signified power, control, authority, the right of physical coercion, and was often used as synonymous with "potestas."

In old English law, it signified an oath or the person taking an oath; a compurgator.

MANUS MORTUA. A dead hand; mortmain. Spelman.

MANUSCRIPT. A writing; a paper written with the hand; a writing that has not been printed. Parton v. Prang, 18 Fed.Cas. 1275; Leon Loan & Abstract Co. v. Equalization Board, 86 Iowa 127, 53 N.W. 94, 17 L.R.A. 199, 41 Am.St.Rep. 486.

MANUTENENTIA. The old writ of maintenance. Reg.Orig. 182.

IVIANWORTH. In old English law, the price or value of a man's life or head. Cowell.

MANY. The word "many" is defined as consisting of a great number, numerous, not few. Many is a word of very indefinite meaning, and, though it is defined to be numerous and multitudinous, it is also recognized as synonymous with "several", "sundry", "various" and "divers". Goslin v. Kurn, 351 Mo. 395, 173 S.W.2d 79, 87.

MANZIE. In old Scotch law, mayhem; mutilation of the body of a person. Skene.

MAP. A representation of the earth's surface, or of some portion of it, showing the relative position of the parts represented, usually on a flat surface. Webster. "A map is but a transcript of the region which it portrays, narrowed in compass so as to facilitate an understanding of the original." Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 103 (Gil. 55).

MAR. To make defective; to do serious injury to; to damage greatly; to impair, spoil, ruin; to do physical injury to, especially by cutting off or defacing a part; to mutilate; mangle, disfigure; deface. Maxwell v. City of Buhl, 236 P. 122, 123, 40 Idaho 644; Borden v. Hirsh, 249 Mass. 205, 143 N.E. 912, 914, 33 A.L.R. 526.

MARA. In old records, a mere or moor; a lake, pool, or pond; a bog or marsh that cannot be drained. Cowell; Blount; Spelman.

MARAJUANA PLANT. The plant scientifically known as cannabis indica or cannabis americana, though there possibly may be some slight and unimportant botanical difference between the two, but apparently none in its effect upon the human system. See Mariguana.

MARATHON. Modern meaning is any race or physical endurance contest. Sportatorium, Inc., v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 912, 916.

MARAUDER. "A marauder is defined in the law to be 'one who, while employed in the army as a soldier, commits larceny or robbery in the neighborhood of the camp, or while wandering away from the army.' But in the modern and metaphorical sense of the word, as now sometimes used in common speech, it seems to be applied to a class of persons who are not a part of any regular army, and are not answerable to any military discipline, but who are mere lawless banditti, engaged in plundering, robbery, murder, and all conceivable crimes." Curry v. Collins, 37 Mo. 328.

MARC-BANCO. The name of a piece of money formerly coined at Hamburg. Its value was thirty-five cents.

MARCA. A mark; a coin of the value of 13s. 4d. Spelman.

MARCATUS. The rent of a mark by the year anciently reserved in leases, etc.

MARCH. In Scotch law, a boundary line or border. Bell. The word is also used in composition; as march-dike, march-stone.
MARCHANDISES AVARIEES. In French mercantile law, damaged goods.

MARCHERS. In old English law, noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland, and who, according to Camden, had their private laws, as if they had been petty kings; which were abolished by the statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26. Called also "lords marchers." Cowell.

MARCHES. An old English term for boundaries or frontiers, particularly the boundaries and limits between England and Wales, or between England and Scotland, or the borders of the domains of the crown, or the boundaries of properties in Scotland. Mozley & Whitley.

MARCHES, COURT OF. An abolished tribunal in Wales, where pleas of debt or damages, not above the value of £50, were tried and determined. Cro.Car. 384.

MARCHETA.

In old Scotch law, a custom for the lord of a fee to lie the first night with the bride of his tenant. Abolished by Malcolm III. Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 83. A fine paid by the tenant for the remission of such right, originally a mark or half a mark of silver. Spelman.

In old English law, a fine paid for leave to marry, or to bestow a daughter in marriage. Cowell.

MARCHIONESS. A dignity in a woman answerable to that of marquis in a man, conferred either by creation or by marriage with a marquis. Wharton.

MARE. Lat. The sea.

MARE CLAUSUM. The sea closed; that is, not open or free. The title of Selden's great work, intended as an answer to the Mare Liberum of Grotius; in which he undertakes to prove the sea to be capable of private dominion. 1 Kent, Comm. 27.

MARE LIBERUM. The sea free. The title of a work written by Grotius against the Portuguese claim to an exclusive trade to the Indies, through the South Atlantic and Indian oceans; showing that the sea was not capable of private dominion. 1 Kent, Comm. 27.

MARESCALLUS. In old English law, a marshal; a master of the stables; an officer of the exchequer; a military officer of high rank, having powers and duties similar to those of a constable. Du Cange. See Marshal.

MARESCHAL. L. Fr. Marshal; a high officer of the royal household, Britt. fol. 1b.

MARETTUM. Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers. Co.Litt. 5.

MARGIN. The edge or border; the edge of a body of water where it meets the land. As applied to a boundary line of land, the "margin" of a river, creek, or other watercourse means the center of the stream. Varick v. Smith, 9 Paige, N.Y., 551. But in the case of a lake, bay, or natural pond, the "margin" means the line where land and water meet. Fowler v. Vreeland, 44 N.J.Eq. 268, 14 A. 116; Lembeck v. Andrews, 47 Ohio St. 336, 24 N.E. 686, 8 L.R.A. 578.

A sum of money, or its equivalent, placed in the hands of a stockbroker by the principal or person on whose account a purchase or sale is to be made, as a security to the former against losses to which he may be exposed by subsequent fluctuations in the market value of the stock. Scheby v. Shinn, 103 Cal. 325, 37 P. 393; Memphis Brokerage Ass'n v. Cullen, 11 Lea, Tenn., 77.

MARGINAL NOTE. In Scotch law, a note inserted on the margin of a deed, embodying either some clause which was omitted in transcribing or some change in the agreement of the parties. Bell.

An abstract of a reported case, a summary of the facts, or brief statement of the principle decided, which is prefixed to the report of the case, sometimes in the margin, is also spoken of by this name.

MARGINAL STREET. Dock or wharf used in conjunction with and in furtherance of commerce and navigation. In re Triborough Br'd d'6e Approach, City of New York, 159 Misc. 617, 288 N.Y.S. 697, 711, 716.

MARIQUANA, MARIHUANA, MARIJUANA. "Marijuana" is an annual herb, cannabis sativa, having angular rough stem and deeply lobed leaves. The bast fibres of cannabis are the hemp of commerce. A drug prepared from "cannabis sativa," designated in technical dictionaries as "cannabis" and commonly known as marijuana, marihuana, marajuana, maraguana, or marihuana, in Southern and Western states. State v. Navaro, 83 Utah 6, 26 P.2d 955; People v. Savage, 148 P.2d 654, 64 Cal.App.2d 314. For the history of cannabis, see Simpson v. State, 176 So. 515, 129 Fla. 127.

"Marihuana" is referred to by Brundage's Toxicology as a drug, the use of which results in a "sense of exhilaration; pleasurable intoxication; peculiar prolongation of time; sense of double consciousness followed by drowsiness; anesthesia; loss of power, particularly of the lower extremities; pupils dilated; pulse rapid; respiration slow; may cause increased sexual desires; catalepsy; sometimes convulsions." It is known most generally in the United States by the Mexican name, "Marihuana," because it was introduced into this country by Mexicans. State v. Navaro, 83 Utah 6, 26 P.2d 955.

"Marihuana" is the Mexican term for cannabis indica. The plant or drug known as cannabis indica, or marihuana, has as its parent the plant known as cannabis sativa. It is popularly known in India as cannabis indica; in America, as Cannabis americana; in Mexico, as cannabis mexicana, or marihuana. It is the same drug, and is known in different countries by different names. It is scientifically known as cannabis sativa, and is popularly called cannabis americana, cannabis indica, or cannabis mexicana, in accordance with the geographical origin of the particular plant. In the East, it is known as charras, as gunga, hasheesh, as bhang, or siddi, and goes by a variety of names in the countries of Continental Europe. In Americ particularly in the South and Southwestern portions of the United States, it is called marihuana. It is popularly known among the criminal element as "muggles," or "mooter," and addicts are commonly termed "muggle heads." State v. Navaro, 83 Utah 6, 26 P.2d 955.

MARINARIUS. An ancient word which signified a mariner or seaman. In England, marinarius capitaneus was the admiral or warden of the ports.

MARINE. Naval; relating or pertaining to the sea; transacted at sea; doing duty or service on the sea.

This is also a general name for the navy of a kingdom or state; as also the whole economy of naval affairs, or whatever respects the building, rigging, arming, equipping, navigating, and fighting ships. It comprehends also the government of naval armaments, and the state of all the persons employed therein, whether civil or military. Also one of the marines. Wharton. Doughten v. Vandever, 5 Del.Ch. 73.

MARINE BELT. That portion of the main or open sea, adjacent to the shores of a given country, over which the jurisdiction of its municipal laws and local authorities extends; defined by international law as extending out three miles from the shore. The Alexander, D.C.Alaska, 60 F. 918.

MARINE CARRIER. By statutes of several states this term is applied to carriers plying upon the ocean, arms of the sea, the Great Lakes, and other navigable waters within the jurisdiction of the United States. Civ.Code Cal. § 2087; Rev. Codes N.D.1899, § 4176, Comp.Laws 1913, § 6187.

MARINE CONTRACT. One relating to maritime affairs, shipping, navigation, marine insurance, affreightment, maritime loans, or other business to be done upon the sea or in connection with navigation.

MARISCHAL. An officer in Scotland, who, with the lord high constable, possessed a supreme itinerant jurisdiction in all crimes committed within a certain space of the court, wherever it might happen to be. Wharton.

MARISCUS. A marshy or fenny ground. Co. Litt. 5a.

MARITAGIO AMISSO PER DEFALTAM. An obsolete writ for the tenant in frank-marriage to recover lands, etc., of which he was deforced.

MARITAGIUM. The portion which is given with a daughter in marriage. Also the power which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony.

MARITAGIUM EST AUT LIBERUM AUT SERVITIO OBLIGATUM; LIBERUM MARITAGIUM DICITUR UBI DONATOR VULT QUOD TERRA SIC DATA QUIETA SIT ET LIBERA AB OMNI SECULAR' SERVITIO. Co.Litt. 21. A marriage portion is either free or bound to service; it is called "frank-marriage" when the giver wills that land thus given be exempt from all secular service.

MARITAGIUM HABERE. To have the free disposal of an heiress in marriage.

MARITAL. Relating to, or connected with, the status of marriage; pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.

MARITAL COERCION. Coercion of the wife by the husband.

MARITAL FOURTH. A gift or bounty bestowed by law in favor of surviving spouse left in penurious circumstances. Maddox v. Butchee, 203 La. 299, 14 So.2d 4, 8.

MARITAL PORTION. In Louisiana, the name given to that part of a deceased husband's estate to which the widow is entitled. Abercrombie v. Caffray, 3 Mart.N.S., La., 1.

MARITAL RIGHTS AND DUTIES. Those arising from marriage contract and constituting its object, and therefore embracing what the parties agree to perform towards each other and to society. Alexander v. Alexander, 107 Conn. 101, 139
A. 685, 688. Rights of husband and wife to a specified share of other's personal estate upon death of other. In re Dean's Estate, 350 Mo. 494, 166 S.W.2d 529, 534, 535.

MARITIMA ANGLIIE. In old English law, the emolument or revenue coming to the king from the sea, which the sheriffs anciently collected, but which was afterwards granted to the admiral. Spelman.

MARITIME. Pertaining to the sea or ocean or the navigation thereof; or to commerce conducted by navigation of the sea or (in America) of the great lakes and rivers.

It is nearly equivalent to "marine" in many connections and uses; in others, the two words are used as quite distinct.

MARITIME BELT. That part of the sea which, in contradistinction to the open sea, is under the sway of the riparian states. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U.S. 1, 26 S.Ct. 408, 571, 50 L.Ed. 913.

MARITIME CAUSE. A cause of action originating on the high seas, or growing out of a maritime contract. 1Kent, Comm. 367, et seq.

MARITIME COURT. A court exercising jurisdiction in maritime causes; one which possesses the powers and jurisdiction of a court of admiralty.

MARITIME INTEREST. An expression equivalent to marine interest (q. v.).

MARITIME JURISDICTION. Jurisdiction in maritime causes; such jurisdiction as belongs to a court of admiralty on the instance side.

MARITIME LAW. The traditional body of rules, precepts, and practices known as the "maritime law". O’Donnell v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co., 318 U.S. 36, 63 S.Ct. 488, 490, 87 L.Ed. 596. That system of law which particularly relates to commerce and navigation, to business transacted at sea or relating to navigation, to ships and shipping, to seamen, to the transportation of persons and property by sea, and to marine affairs generally. The law relating to harbors, ships, and seamen, divided into a variety of departments, such as those about harbors, property of ships, duties and rights of masters and seamen, contracts of affreightment, average, salvage, etc. Wharton; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 572, 22 L.Ed. 654; The Unadilla, D.C.III., 73 F. 351.

MARITIME LIEN. A privileged claim on a vessel for some service rendered to it to facilitate its use in navigation, or an injury caused by it in navigable waters, to be carried into effect by legal process in the admiralty court. The Westmoor, D.C.Or., 27 F.2d 886, 887.

It attaches to the vessel and freight, and is to be enforced by an action in rem. Paxson v. Cunningham, C.C.A.1, 63 F. 134, 11 C.C.A. 111.

The word "lien" is used in maritime law not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive, but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession. 22 Eng.Law & Eq. 62. A distinction is sometimes made, however, between qualified maritime liens, which depend upon possession, and absolute maritime liens, which do not require nor depend upon possession. Cutler v. Rae, 7 How. 729, 12 L.Ed. 890; 21 Am.Law Reg. 1. A "maritime lien" is a special property right in a ship given to a creditor by law as security for a debt or claim subsisting from the moment the debt arises with right to have the ship sold and debt paid out of proceeds. The Poznan, C.C.A.N.Y., 9 F.2d 838, 842. Such a lien is a proprietary interest or right of property in the vessel itself, and not a cause of action or demand for personal judgment against the owner. The Thresher, The Roosevelt, C.Ohio, 291 F. 453, 461; The River Queen, D.C.Va., 8 F.2d 426, 427.

MARITIME LOAN. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the sea, or vis major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred. Emerig. Mar. Loans, c. 1, s. 2. The Draco, 7 Fed.Cas. 1,042.

MARITIME PROFIT. A term used by French writers to signify any profit derived from a maritime loan.

MARITIME SERVICE. In admiralty law, a service rendered upon the high seas or a navigable river, and which has some relation to commerce or navigation,—some connection with a vessel employed in trade, with her equipment, her preservation, or the preservation of her cargo or crew. Thackarey v. The Farmer, 23 F.Cas. 877; The Atlantic, D.C.S.C., 53 F. 609; Newham v. Chile Exploration Co., 133 N.E. 120, 232 N.Y. 37, 25 A.L.R. 1018.

MARITIME STATE. In English law, consists of the officers and mariners of the British navy, who are governed by express and permanent laws, or the articles of the navy, established by act of parliament.

MARITIME TORT. Civil wrongs committed on navigable waters. Berwind-White Coal Mining Co. v. City of New York, C.C.A.N.Y., 135 F.2d 443, 446. The term is never applied to a tort committed upon MARKET. A character, usually in the form of a cross, made as a substitute for his signature by a person who cannot write, in executing a conveyance or other legal document.

It is commonly made as follows: A third person writes the name of the marksman, leaving a blank space between the Christian name and surname; in this space the latter traces the mark, or crossed lines, and above the mark is written "his," (or "her,"") and below it, "mark."

The sign, writing, or ticket put upon manufactured goods to distinguish them from others, appearing thus in the compound, "trade-mark."

A token, evidence, or proof; as in the phrase "a mark of fraud."

A weight used in several parts of Europe, and for several commodities, especially gold and silver. When gold and silver are sold by the mark, it is divided into twenty-four carats.

A money of accounts in England, and in some other countries a coin. The English mark is two-thirds of a pound sterling, or 13s. 4d.; and the Scotch mark is of equal value in Scotch money of account. Enc.Amer.

The word is sometimes used as another form of "marque," a license of reprisals.

In early Teutonic and English law, a species of village community, being the lowest unit in the political system; one of the forms of the gens or clan, variously known as the "mark," "gemeinde," "commune," or "parish." Also the land held in common by such a community. The union of several such village communities and their marks, or common lands, forms the next higher political union, the hundred. Freem. Compar. Politics, 116, 117.

Demi-mark. Half a mark; a sum of money which was anciently required to be tendered in a writ of right, the effect of such tender being to put the demandant, in the first instance, upon proof of the seisin as stated in his count; that is, to prove that the seisin was in the king's reign there stated. Rosc. Real Act. 216.

High and low water-mark. See Water-Mark.

Mark banco. See Marc-Banco.

MARKEPENNY. A penny anciently paid at the town of Maldon by those who had gutters laid or made out of their houses into the streets. Wharton.

MARKET. Place of commercial activity in which articles are bought and sold. Zemel v. Commercial Warehouses, 132 N.J.L. 341, 40 A.2d 642, 643. The region in which any commodity can be sold; the geographical or economic extent of commercial de-95 Wash. 412, 163 P. 928, 929, Ann.Cas.1918A, 572. The term also means, when price at the place of exportation is in view, the price at which articles are sold and purchased, clear of every charge but portation is in view, the price at which articles may have quiet and peaceful enjoyment of the property; one that is free from material defects, but one which readily can be sold or mortgaged to a reasonably prudent purchaser or mortgagee; one under which a purchaser who makes his mark; a person who cannot write, and only makes his mark in executing instruments. Arch.N.Pr. 13; 2 Chit. 92.

MARKUSH DOCTRINE. The Doctrine permits an applicant for a patent where there is no known subgeneric term which would include elements which applicant found useful and exclude those which are not, to employ a generic term limited to the elements found to be operative and recognizes as unobjectionable as to form, claims containing a coined subgeneric expression. In re Swenson, C.C.P.A., 132 F.2d 336.

MARLBROIDGE, STATUTE OF. An English statute enacted in 1267 (52 Hen. III.) at Marlbridge, (now called "Marlborough," ) where parliament was then sitting. It related to land tenures, and to procedure, and to unlawful and excessive distresses.

MARQUE AND REPRISAL, LETTERS OF. These words, "marque" and "reprisal," are frequently used as synonymous, but, taken in their strict etymological sense, the latter signifies a "taking in return;" the former, the passing the frontiers (marches) in order to such taking. Letters of marque and reprisal are grantable, by the law of nations, whenever the subjects of one state are oppressed and injured by those of another, and justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs; and the party to whom these letters are granted may then seize the bodies or the goods of the subjects of the state to which the offender belongs, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found. Reprisals are to be granted only in case of a clear and open denial of justice. At the present day, in consequence partly of treaties and partly of the practice of nations, the making of reprisals is confined to the seizure of commercial property on the high seas by public cruisers, or by private cruisers specially authorized thereto. Brown.

MARQUE, LAW OF. A sort of law of reprisal, which entitles him who has received any wrong from another and cannot get ordinary justice to take the shipping or goods of the wrong-doer, where he can find them within his own bounds or precincts, in satisfaction of the wrong. Cowell; Brown.

MARQUIS, or MARQUESS. In English law, one of the second order of nobility; next in order to a duke.

MARQUISATE. The seigniory of a marquis.

MARRIAGE. Marriage, as distinguished from the agreement to marry and from the act of becoming married, is the civil status, condition, or relation of one man and one woman united in law for life, for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on those whose association is founded on the distinction of sex. 1 Bish.Mar. & Div. § 3; Collins v. Hoag & Rolls, 121 Neb. 716, 238 N.W. 351, 355; Allen v. Allen, 73 Conn. 54, 46 A. 242, 49 L.R.A. 142.
A contract, according to the form prescribed by law, by which a man and woman, capable of entering into such contract, mutually engage with each other to live their whole lives together in the state of union which ought to exist between a husband and wife. Shelf. Mar. & Div. 1; Seuss v. Schukat, 358 III. 27, 192 N.E. 668, 671, 95 A.L.R. 1461.

The word also signifies the act, ceremony, or formal proceeding by which persons take each other for husband and wife. Davis v. Davis, 119 Conn. 194, 175 A. 574, 575.

In old English law, marriage is used in the sense of "maritagium," (q. v.,) or the feudal right enjoyed by the lord or guardian in chivalry of disposing of his ward in marriage.

Avail of marriage. See that title.

Consensual marriage. See that title.

Common-law marriage. See Common Law.

Fleet marriages. There were in the neighborhood of the Fleet prison about sixty marriage houses, some of which were public houses and others not. They were known by having a sign-board, with joined hands, in addition to the public house sign. At the doors of these houses persons called Pliers solicited the passers-by to come in and be married, and in these houses persons who were, or pretended to be, clergymen performed the marriage ceremony and made entries in registers that were kept at the respective houses. There is little doubt that many entries had false dates, that persons who were married personated others, and that women who wished to plead a plea of coverture or hide their shame were married to men who, for a trifling gratuity, married any woman who would pay them, though they had previously married others. Such marriages also took place in the neighborhood of the King's Bench prison, at the Savoy, in the Mint, in the Borough, and at the Mayfair Chapel.

It is said in 1 Peake N.P.C. 303, that a marriage in the Fleet was considered at that time good and legal. In 13 Carr. & P. 581 (34 E.C.L.R.), Patteson, J., said: "I shall not receive the Fleet Registry in evidence for any purpose whatever." They were refused in 1 Peake N.P.C. 303. A collection of over a thousand Fleet registers have been deposited in the Registry of the Bishop of London.

See Extracts from these registers and a historical note in 34 E.C.L.R. 534; Burns, Fleet Registers, Jactitation of marriage. See Jactitation.

Manus marriage. A form of marriage in early Rome; it formed a relation called manus (hand) and brought the wife into the husband's power, placing her as to legal rights in the position of a daughter. Bryce, Marr. & Divorce, in 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer.L.H. 787.

Mixed marriage. A marriage between persons of different nationalities; or, more particularly, between persons of different racial origin; as between a white person and a negro or an Indian.

Morganatic marriage. The lawful and inseparable conjunction of a man, of noble or Illustrious birth, with a woman of inferior station, upon condition that neither the wife nor her children shall partake of the titles, arms, or dignity of the husband, or succeed to his inheritance, but be contented with a certain allowed rank assigned to them by the morganatic contract. But since these restrictions relate only to the rank of the parties and succession to property, without affecting the nature of a matrimonial engagement, it must be considered as a just marriage. The marriage ceremony was regularly performed; the union was indissoluble; the children legitimate. Wharton.

Plural marriage. In general, any bigamous or polygamous union, but particularly, a second or subsequent marriage of a man who already has one wife living under system of polygamy. See Freil v. Wood, 1 Utah 165.

Scotch marriage. A marriage contracted without any formal solemnization or religious ceremony, by the mere mutual agreement of the parties per verba de preresenti in the presence of witnesses, recognized as valid by the Scottish law.

MARRIAGE ACT, ROYAL. An act of 12 Geo. III, c. 1 (1772), by which members of the royal family are forbidden to marry without the king's consent, or except on certain onerous conditions.

MARRIAGE ARTICLES. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, intended as preliminary to a formal marriage settlement, to be drawn after marriage. Ath.Mar.Sett. 92.

MARRIAGE BROKERAGE. The act by which a third person, for a consideration, negotiates a marriage between a man and woman. The money paid for such services is also known by this name. Hellen v. Anderson, 83 Ill.App. 509; White v. Equitable Nuptial Ben. Union, 76 Ala. 251, 52 Am. Rep. 325.

MARRIAGE CEREMONY. The form, religious or civil, for the solemnization of a marriage.

MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE. An instrument which certifies a marriage, and is executed by the person officiating at the marriage; it is not intended to be signed by the parties. Spencer v. Spencer, 84 Misc.Rep. 264, 147 N.Y.S. 111, 113.

MARRIAGE CONSIDERATION. The consideration furnished by an intended marriage of two persons. It is the highest consideration known to the law.

MARRIAGE LICENSE. A license or permission to intermarry, usually addressed to the minister or magistrate who is to perform the ceremony, or, in general terms, to any one authorized to solemnize marriages. By statute in some jurisdictions, it is made an essential prerequisite to the lawful solemnization of the marriage.

MARRIAGE—NOTICE BOOK. A book kept, in England, by the registrar, in which applications for and issue of registrar's licenses to marry are recorded.
MARRIAGE PER VERBA DE PRAESENTI. To constitute such a marriage, there must be an agreement to become husband and wife immediately from the time when the mutual consent is given. Pitney v. Pitney, 151 Kan. 848, 101 P.2d 933, 935.

MARRIAGE PORTION. Dowry; a sum of money or other property which is given to or settled on a woman on her marriage. In re Croft, 162 Mass. 22, 37 N.E. 784.

MARRIAGE PROMISE. Betrothal; engagement to intermarry with another. Perry v. Orr, 35 N. J.L. 296.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. A written agreement in the nature of a conveyance, called a "settlement," which is made in contemplation of a proposed marriage and in consideration thereof, either by the parties about to intermarry, or one of them, or by a parent or relation on their behalf, by which the title to certain property is settled, i.e., fixed or limited to a prescribed course of succession; the object being, usually, to provide for the wife and children. Thus, the estate might be limited to the husband and issue, or to the wife and issue, or to husband and wife for their joint lives, remainder to the survivor for life, remainder over to the issue, or otherwise. Such settlements may also be made after marriage, in which case they are called "postnuptial."

MARRIED WOMAN. A woman who has a husband living and not divorced; a feme covert.

MARSHAL. In old English law, the title borne by several officers of state and of the law, of whom the most important were the following: (1) The earl-marshall, who presided in the court of chivalry; (2) the marshal of the king's house, or knight-marshall, whose special authority was in the king's palace, to hear causes between members of the household, and punish faults committed within the verge; (3) the marshal of the king's bench prison, who had the custody of that jail; (4) the marshal of the exchequer, who had the custody of the king's debtors; (5) the marshal of the judge of assize, whose duty was to swear the grand jury.

In American law, an officer pertaining to the organization of the federal judicial system, whose duties are similar to those of a sheriff. He is to execute the process of the United States courts within the district for which he is appointed, etc.

Also, in some of the states, this is the name of an officer of police, in a city or borough, having powers and duties corresponding generally to those of a constable or sheriff.

MARSHAL OF THE QUEEN'S BENCH. An officer who had the custody of the queen's bench prison. The St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, abolished this office, and substituted an officer called "keeper of the queen's prison."

MARSHALING. Arranging, ranking, or disposing in order; particularly, in the case of a group or series of conflicting claims or interests, arranging them in such an order of sequence, or so directing the manner of their satisfaction, as shall secure justice to all persons concerned and the largest possible measure of satisfaction to each. See sub-titles infra.

MARSHALING ASSETS. In equity, the arranging or ranking of assets in the due order of administration. Such an arrangement of the different funds under administration as shall enable all the parties having equities therein to receive their due proportions, notwithstanding any intervening interests, liens, or other claims of particular persons to prior satisfaction out of a portion of these funds. In re Van Zandt's Estate, 142 Misc. 663, 255 N.Y.S. 359, 366. The arrangement or ranking of assets in a certain order towards the payment of debts. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 558; 4 Kent, Comm. 421. The arrangement of assets or claims so as to secure the proper application of the assets to the various claims; especially when there are two classes of assets, and some creditors can enforce their claims against both, and others against only one, and the creditors of the former class are compelled to exhaust the assets against which they alone have a claim before having recourse to other assets, thus providing for the settlement of as many claims as possible. Pub.St.Mass. p. 1292.

MARSHALING LIENS. The ranking or ordering of several estates or parcels of land, for the satisfaction of a judgment or mortgage to which they are all liable, though successively conveyed away by the debtor. The rule is that, where lands subject to the lien of a judgment or mortgage have been sold or incumbered by the owner at different times to different purchasers, the various tracts are liable to the satisfaction of the lien in the inverse order of their alienation or incumbrance, the land last sold being first chargeable. 1 Black, Judgm. § 440.

MARSHALING REMEDIES. The basis for "marshaling of remedies" is that where one creditor has security on two funds of common debtor and another creditor has security on only one of such funds, second creditor has right in equity to compel first creditor to resort to the other fund, if it is necessary for satisfaction of both creditors and will not prejudice rights or interests of party entitled to double fund, do injustice to debtor, or operate inequitably on other persons' interests. Greenwich Trust Co. v. Tyson, 129 Conn. 211, 27 A.2d 166, 174.

MARSHALING SECURITIES. An equitable practice, which consists in so ranking or arranging classes of creditors, with respect to the assets of the common debtor, as to provide for satisfaction of the greatest number of claims. The process is this: Where one class of creditors have liens or securities on two funds, while another class of creditors can resort to only one of those funds, equity will compel the doubly-secured creditors to first exhaust that fund which will leave the single security of the other creditors intact. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 633; Dilworth v. Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, 170 Miss. 373, 154 So. 535, 540, 92 A. L.R. 1076.
MARSHALSEA

MARSHALSEA. In English law, a prison belonging to the king’s bench. It has now been consolidated with others, under the name of “King’s Prison.”

MARSHALSEA, COURT OF. In English law, the court or seat of the marshal. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the king’s house, instituted to administer justice between the king’s domestic servants. It had jurisdiction of all trespasses committed within the verge of the king’s court, where one of the parties was of the royal household; and of all debts and contracts, when both parties were of that establishment. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13. Mozley & Whitley.

MART. A place of public traffic or sale.

MARTE SUO DECURRERE. Lat. To run by its own force. A term applied in the civil law to a suit when it ran its course to the end without any impediment. Calvin.

MARTIAL LAW. Exists when military authorities carry on government or exercise various degrees of control over civilians or civilian authorities in domestic territory. Ochikubo v. Bonesteel, D.C.Cal., 60 F.Supp. 916, 928, 929, 930. A system of law, obtaining only in time of actual war and growing out of the exigencies thereof, arbitrary in its character, and depending only on the will of the commander of an army, which is established and administered in a place or district of hostile territory held in belligerent possession, or, sometimes, in places occupied or pervaded by insurgents or mobs, and which suspends all existing civil laws, as well as the civil authority and the ordinary administration of justice. In re Ezeta, D.C.Cal., 62 F. 972; Corn. v. Shortall, 206 Pa. 165, 55 A. 952, 65 L.R.A. 193. See, also, Military Law.

‘Martial law, which is built upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in its decisions, is in truth and reality no law, but something indulged rather than allowed as a law. The necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance, and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the king’s courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land.’ 1 Bl. Comm. 413.

Martial law is neither more nor less than the will of the general who commands the army. It overrides and supersedes all existing civil laws, civil officers, and civil authorities, by the arbitrary exercise of military power; and every citizen or subject—in other words, the entire population of the country, within the confines of its power—is subjected to the mere will or caprice of the commander. He holds the lives, liberty, and property of all in the palm of his hand. Martial law is regulated by no known or established system or code of laws, as it is over and above all of them. The commander is the legislator, judge, and executioner. In re Egan, 5 Blatchf. 321, F.Cas. No.4,303.

MARTINMAS. The feast of St. Martin of Tours, on the 11th of November; sometimes corrupted into “Martilmas” or “Martlemas.” It is the third of the four cross quarter-days of the year. Wharton.

MARUS. In old Scotch law, a maire; an officer or executor of summons. Otherwise called “priceo regis.” Skene.

MASAGIUM. L. Lat. A messuage.

MASH. “Mash” means crushed malt, meal, rye, and the like steeped and mixed in hot water to form wort; a mixture of grain, meal, or the like, and hot water fed to animals; to subject crushed malt to action of hot water by heating and stirring to prepare extract known as wort; to convert into a mass; to reduce to soft pulpy state by heating or pressure; to bruise; to crush. Whisnant v. State, 39 Okl.Cr. 214, 264 P. 837, 839.

MASHGIACH. A qualified supervisor designated by rabbinical authority to supervise the receipt and handling of kosher meat. People on Complaint of Waller v. Jacob Branman & Son, 147 Misc. 290, 263 N.Y.S. 629.

MASOCHISM. [From Leopold von Sacher-Masocho, a nineteenth-century Austrian novelist and historian.] A form of perversion in which sexual pleasure is heightened when one is beaten and maltreated at the hands of the other party; the opposite of sadism. Stedman’s Med.Dict. (11th Ed.1930). Sexual perversion, in which a member of one sex takes delight in being dominated, even to the extent of violence or cruelty, by one of the other sex. Dunglison’s Med.Dict. (1893), quoted in Murray’s (Oxford) New English Dict.

MASON AND DIXON’S LINE. The boundary line between Pennsylvania on the north and Maryland on the south, celebrated before the extinction of slavery as the line of demarcation between the slave and the free states. It was run by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, commissioners in a dispute between the Penn Proprietors and Lord Baltimore. The line was carried 244 miles from the Delaware river where it was stopped by Indians. A resurvey was made in 1849, and in 1900 a new survey was authorized by the two states.

MASS PICKETING. The use of a large number of pickets. Lilly Dache, Inc., v. Rose, Sup., 28 N.Y.S.2d 303, 305.

MASS STRIKE. The striking or ceasing to work by concerted action of all working classes, thus paralyzing and bringing to an end government and its functions. People v. Gitlow, 234 N.Y. 132, 136 N.E. 317, 320.

MASSA. In civil law, a mass; an unwrought substance, such as gold or silver, before it is wrought into cups or other articles. Dig. 47, 2, 52, 14; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, §§ 17, 22.

MASSACHUSIS. See Masochism.

MASSACHUSETTS RULE. As regards sending out checks through banks for collection, the “Massachusetts rule” is that each bank that receives the item acts as an agent for the depositor; but in some other states, the “New York rule” prevails, under which only the bank first receiving the item is responsible to, or is the agent of, the depositor, the other banks being the agent of the bank, in the process of the collection. People’s Gin Co. v. Canal Bank & Trust Co., 168 Miss. 630, 144 So. 858, 860.
MASSACHUSETTS TRUST. A business organization wherein property is conveyed to trustees and managed for benefit of holders of certificates like corporate stock certificates. Enochs & Flow- ers v. Rolle, 170 Miss. 44, 154 So. 299.

MASSES. Religious ceremonials or observances of the Roman Catholic Church.

MAST. To fatten with mast (acorns, etc.). 1

MAST-SELLING. In old English law, the practice of selling the goods of dead seamen at the mast. Held void. 7 Mod. 141.

MASTER. A principal who employs another to perform service in his affairs and who controls or has right to control physical conduct of other in performance of the service. King v. Ransburg, 111 Ind.App. 523, 39 N.E.2d 822, 829.

One having authority; one who rules, directs, instructs, or superintends; a head or chief; an instructor; an employer. Applied to several judicial officers. See infra.

In Scotland, the title of the eldest son of a viscount or baron. Cent. Dict.

Special master. A master in chancery appointed to act as the representative of the court in some particular act or transaction, as, to make a sale of property under a decree. Guaranty Trust, etc., Co. v. Delta & Pine Land Co., C.C.A.Miss., 104 F. 5, 43 C.C.A. 396; Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U.S. 349, 12 S.Ct. 887, 36 L.Ed. 732.

Taxing masters. Officers of the English supreme court, who examine and allow or disallow items in bills of costs.

MASTER AND SERVANT. The relation of master and servant exists where one person, for pay or other valuable consideration, enters into the service of another and devotes to him his personal labor for an agreed period. Sweet.

It usually contemplates employer’s right to prescribe end and direct means and methods of doing work. Holleman v. Taylor, 200 N.C. 618, 158 S.E. 88, 89.

MASTER AT COMMON LAW. The title of officers of the English superior courts of common law appointed to record the proceedings of the court to which they belong; to superintend the issue of writs and the formal proceedings in an action; to receive and account for the fees charged on legal proceedings, and moneys paid into court. There are five to each court. They are appointed under St. 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 30, passed in 1837. Mozley & Whitley.

MASTER IN CHANCERY. An officer of a court of chancery who acts as an assistant to the judge or chancellor. His office is to inquire into such matters as may be referred to him by the court, examine causes, take testimony, take accounts, compute damages, etc., reporting his findings to the court in such shape that a decree may be made; also to take oaths and affidavits and acknowledgments of deeds. In modern practice, many of the functions of a master are performed by clerks, commissioners, auditors, and referees, and in some jurisdictions the office has been superseded. Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U.S. 512, 9 S.Ct. 355, 32 L.Ed. 764; Schuchardt v. People, 99 Ill. 501, 39 Am.Rep. 34.

MASTER IN LUNACY. In English law, the masters in lunacy are judicial officers appointed by the lord chancellor for the purpose of conducting inquiries into the state of mind of persons alleged to be lunatics. Such inquiries usually take place before a jury. 2 Steph.Comm. 511-513.

MASTER OF A SHIP. In maritime law, the commander of a merchant vessel, who has the chief charge of her government and navigation and the command of the crew, as well as the general care and control of the vessel and cargo, as the representative and confidential agent of the owner. He is commonly called the "captain." Martin v. Farnsworth, 33 N.Y.Super.Ct. 260; Hubbell v. Denison, 20 Wend., N.Y., 181.

MASTER OF THE CROWN OFFICE. The king’s coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of king's bench, who prosecutes at the relation of some private person or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. St. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20; Wharton.

MASTER OF THE FACULTIES. In English law, an officer under the archbishop, who grants licenses and dispensations, etc.

MASTER OF THE HORSE. In English law, the third great officer of the royal household, being next to the lord steward and lord chamberlain. He has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the royal stables.

MASTER OF THE MINT. In English law, an officer who receives bullion for coinage, and pays for it, and superintends everything belonging to the mint. He is usually called the "warden of the mint." It is provided by St. 33 Vict. c. 10, § 14, that the chancellor of the exchequer for the time being shall be the master of the mint.

MASTER OF THE ORDNANCE. In English law, a great officer, to whose care all the royal ordnance and artillery were committed.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS. In English law, an assistant judge of the court of chancery, who holds a separate court ranking next to that of the lord chancellor, and has the keeping of the rolls and grants which pass the great seal, and the records of the chancery.

He was originally appointed only for the superintendence of the writs and records appertaining to the common-law department of the court, and is still properly the chief of the masters in chancery. 3 Steph.Comm. 417. Under the act constituting the supreme court of judicature, the master of the rolls becomes a judge of the high court of justice and ex officio a member of the court of appeal. The same act, however, provides for the abolition of this office, under certain conditions, when the next vacancy occurs. See 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, §§ 5, 31, 32.
MATERIAL ALTERATION. Alteration of instrument is "material" if legal effect thereof is changed notwithstanding triviality of change or whether it may be beneficial or detrimental to party to be charged on contract. Cook v. Parks, 46 Ga.App. 749, 169 S.E. 208, 210.

MATERIAL EVIDENCE. Such as is relevant and goes to the substantial matters in dispute, or has a legitimate and effective influence or bearing on the decision of the case. Porter v. Valentine, 18 Misc. 213, 41 N.Y.S. 507; Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., v. George, 52 Okt. 432, 153 P. 116, 119. "Materiality," with reference to evidence does not have the same signification as "relevancy." Pangburn v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 56 S.W. 72, 73.

MATERIAL FACT. (In contracts.) One which constitutes substantially the consideration of the contract, or without which it would not have been made. Lyons v. Stephens, 45 Ga. 143.

(In pleading and practice.) One which is essential to the case, defense, application, etc., and without which it could not be supported. Sandheger v. Hosey, 26 W.Va. 223; Davidson v. Hackett, 49 Wis. 186, 5 N.W. 459; Hansen v. Sandvik, 128 Wash. 60, 222 P. 205, 207.

One which tends to establish any of issues raised. Sherwood Bros. v. Yellow Cab Co. of Philadelphia, 283 Pa. 488, 129 A. 563, 564. The "material facts" of an issue of fact are such as are necessary to determine the issue. Woolman Const. Co. v. Sampson, 219 Mich. 125, 188 N.W. 420, 422.

(In insurance.) A fact which, if communicated to the agent or insurer, would induce him either to decline the insurance altogether, or not accept it unless a higher premium is paid. Berry v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Mo.App., 263 S.W. 884, 886; Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Dossset, Tex.Civ.App., 265 S.W. 259, 262. One which necessarily has some bearing on the subject-matter. Wittels Loan & Mercantile Co. v. American Cent. Ins. Co., Mo.App., 273 S.W. 1084, 1086. A fact which increases the risk, or which, if disclosed, would have been a fair reason for demanding a higher premium; any fact the knowledge or ignorance of which would naturally influence the insurer in making or refusing the contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate. Boggs v. Insurance Co., 30 Mo. 68; Clark v. Insurance Co., 44 N.H. 338, 77 Am.Dec. 420, 44 A.L.R. 33.

In English law, matter; substance; subject-matter. 3 B1.Com. 322.

Material. Important; more or less necessary; having influence or effect; going to the merits; having to do with matter, as distinguished from form.

Representation relating to matter which is so substantial and important as to influence party to whom made is "material." McGuire v. Gunn, 133 Kan. 422, 300 P. 654, 656. Any misrepresentation bringing about issuance of policy on reduced premium rate is "material." Brooks Transp. Co. v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Mo.App., 263 S.W. 884, 886; Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Dosssett, Tex.Civ.App., 265 S.W. 259, 262. One which necessarily has some bearing on the subject-matter. Wittels Loan & Mercantile Co. v. American Cent. Ins. Co., Mo.App., 273 S.W. 1084, 1086. A fact which increases the risk, or which, if disclosed, would have been a fair reason for demanding a higher premium; any fact the knowledge or ignorance of which would naturally influence the insurer in making or refusing the contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate. Boggs v. Insurance Co., 30 Mo. 68; Clark v. Insurance Co., 44 N.H. 338, 77 Am.Dec. 420, 44 A.L.R. 33.

Material Allegation. An allegation is said to be material when it forms a substantive part of the case presented by the pleading. A material allegation in a pleading is one essential to the claim or defense, and which could not be stricken from the pleading without leaving it insufficient. Lusk v. Perkins, 48 Ark. 247, 2 S.W. 847; Wheeler v. Hurley, 49 Nev. 70, 236 P. 559, 560. A material alteration in any written instrument is one which changes its tenor, or its legal meaning and effect; one which causes it to speak a language different in effect from that which it originally spoke. White v. Harris, 69 S.C. 65, 48 S.E. 41, 104 Am.St.Rep. 791; Foxworthy v. Colby, 64 Neb. 216, 89 N.W. 800, 62 L.R.A. 393.

MATERTERA MAJOR. A greater aunt; a great-grandmother's sister, (proavice soror;) a father's or mother's greater-aunt, (patris vel matris matertera magna.) Dig. 38, 10, 10, 16.

MATERTERA MAXIMA. A greatest aunt; a great-great-grandmother's sister, (abavice soror;) a father's or mother's greater-aunt, (patris vel matris matertera major.) Dig. 38, 10, 10, 17.

MATHEMATICAL EVIDENCE. Demonstrative evidence; such as establishes its conclusions with absolute necessity and certainty. It is used in contradistinction to moral evidence.

MATIMA. A godmother.

MATRICIDE. The murder of a mother; or one who has slain his mother.

MATRICIJLA. In civil and old English law, a register of the admission of officers and persons entered into any body or society, whereof a list was made. Hence those who are admitted to a college or university are said to be "matriculated." Also a kind of almshouse, which had revenues appropriated to it, and was usually built near the church, whence the name was given to the church itself. Wharton.

MATRICULATE. To enroll; to enter in a register; specifically, to enter or admit to membership in a body or society, particularly in a college or university, by enrolling the name in a register; to go through the process of admission to membership, as by examination and enrollment, in a society or college. State v. Regents of University System of Georgia, 179 Ga. 210, 175 S.E. 567.

MATRIMONIAL. Of or pertaining to matrimony or the estate of marriage.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In English ecclesiastical law, causes of action or injuries respecting the rights of marriage. One of the three divisions of causes or injuries cognizable by the ecclesiastical courts, comprising suits for jactitation of marriage, and for restitution of conjugal rights, divorces, and suits for alimony. 3 Bl.Comm. 92-94; 3 Steph.Comm. 712-714.

MATRIMONIAL DOMICILE. Place where parties live together as husband and wife either actually or constructively. Ex parte Allan, 220 Ala. 482, 125 So. 612, 614.

MATRIMONIUM. Lat. In Roman law, a legal marriage, contracted in strict accordance with the forms of the older Roman law, i. e., either with the farreum, the coemptio, or by usus.

This was allowed only to Roman citizens and to those neighboring peoples to whom the right of connubium had been conceded. The effect of such a marriage was to bring the wife into the manus, or marital power, of the husband, and to create the patria potestas over the children.

MATRIMONIUM SUBSEQUENS TOLLIT PECUTUM PRIECEDENS. Subsequent marriage cures preceding criminality.

MATRIMONY. Marriage, (q. v.,) in the sense of the relation or status, not of the ceremony.

MATRIX. In civil law, the protocol or first draft of a legal instrument, from which all copies must be taken. Downing v. Diaz, 80 Tex. 436, 16 S.W. 53.

MATRIX ECCLESA. Lat. A mother church. This term was anciently applied to a cathedral, in relation to the other churches in the same see, or to a parochial church, in relation to the chapels or minor churches attached to it or depending on it. Blount.

MATRON. A married woman; an elderly woman. The female superintendent of an establishment or institution, such as a hospital, an orphan asylum, etc., is often so called. Fisher v. Gardner, 183 Mich. 660, 150 N.W. 358.
MATRONS

MATRONS, JURY OF. In common-law practice, a jury of twelve matrons or discreet women, impaneled upon a writ de ventre ins piciendo, or where a female prisoner, being under sentence of death, pleaded her pregnancy as a ground for staying execution. In the latter case, such jury inquired into the truth of the plea.

MATTER IN CONTROVERSY, or IN DISPUTE. Subject of litigation, matter on which action is brought and issue is joined and in relation to which, if issue be one of fact, testimony is taken. Golden v. Sixth Judicial Dist. Ct. in and for Pershing County, 57 Nev. 114, 58 P.2d 1042, 1044. Rights which plaintiffs assert and seek to have protected and enforced. Gavica v. Donaugh, C.C.A.Or., 93 F.2d 173, 175.

MATTER IN DEED. Such matter as may be proved or established by a deed or specialty. Matter of fact, in contradistinction to matter of law. Co.Litt. 320; Steph.Pl. 197.

MATTER IN LEY NE SERRA MISE IN BOUTCHE DEL JURORS. Jenk.Cent. 180. Matter of law shall not be put into the mouth of the juries.

MATTER IN PAIS. Matter of fact that is not in writing; thus distinguished from matter in deed and matter of record; matter that must be proved by parol evidence.

MATTER OF COURSE. Anything done or taken in the course of routine or usual procedure, which is permissible and valid without being specially applied for and allowed.

MATTER OF FACT. That which is to be ascertained by the senses, or by the testimony of witnesses describing what they have perceived. Distinguished from matter of law and matter of opinion. Moses v. United States, C.C.A.Vt., 221 F. 863, 871.

MATTER OF FORM. See Form.

MATTER OF LAW. Whatever is to be ascertained or decided by the application of statutory rules or the principles and determinations of the law, as distinguished from the investigation of particular facts, is called "matter of law."

MATTER OF RECORD. Any judicial matter or proceeding entered on the records of a court, and to be proved by the production of such record. It differs from matter in deed, which consists of facts which may be proved by specialty.

MATTER OF RECORD, ESTOPPEL BY. See Record, Estoppel By.

MATTER OF SUBSTANCE. That which goes to the merits. The opposite of matter of form.

MATTERS OF SUBSISTENCE FOR MAN. This phrase comprehends all articles or things, whether animal or vegetable, living or dead, which are used for food, and whether they are consumed in the form in which they are bought from the producer or are only consumed after undergoing a process of preparation, which is greater or less, according to the character of the article. Sledd v. Com., 19 Grat., Va., 813.

MATURE; MATURED. A claim is "matured" for receivership purposes if it has become absolutely due without contingency, although not necessarily liquidated nor presently payable. In re L. P. Hollander Co., 301 Mass. 278, 16 N.E.2d 35, 36.

MATURIORA SUNT VOTA MULIERUM QUAM VIRORUM. 6 Coke, 71. The desires of women are more mature than those of men; e., women arrive at maturity earlier than men.

MAUGRE. L. Fr. In spite of; against the will of. Litt. § 672.

MAUNDY THURSDAY. The day preceding Good Friday, on which princes gave alms.

See Mandato, Panes De.

MAXIM. "Maxims" are but attempted general statements of rules of law and are law only to extent of application in adjudicated cases. Swetland v. Curtiss Airports Corporation, D.C. Ohio, 41 F. 2d 929, 936. An established principle or proposition. A principle of law universally admitted, as being a correct statement of the law, or as agreeable to reason.

Coke defines a maxim to be "conclusion of reason," and says that it is so called "quia maxima ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, et quod maxime omnibus probetur." Co.Litt. 11a. He says in another place: "A maxime is a proposition to be of all men confessed and granted without proofe, argument, or discourse." Id. 67a.
The maxims of the law, in Latin, French, and English, will be found distributed through this book in their proper alphabetical order.

MAXIME PACI SUNT CONTRARIA VIS ET INJURIA. The greatest enemies to peace are force and wrong. Co.Litt. 161b.

MAXIMUM. The highest or greatest amount, quality, value, or degree. Moweaqua Coal Corporation v. Industrial Commission, 360 Ill. 194, 195 N.E. 607.

MAXIMUS ERRORIS POPULUS MAGISTER. Bacon. The people is the greatest master of error.

MAY. An auxiliary verb qualifying the meaning of another verb by expressing ability, competency, liberty, permission, possibility, probability or contingency. U. S. v. Lexington Mill & E. Co., 232 U.S. 399, 34 S.Ct. 337, 340, 58 L.Ed. 658, L.R.A. 1915B, 774; Carson v. Turrish, 140 Minn. 445, 168 N.W. 349, 352, L.R.A.1918F, 164. Regardless of the instrument, however, whether constitution, statute, deed, contract or whatnot, courts not infrequently construe "may" as "shall" or "must" to the end that justice may not be the slave of grammar. Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. 46, 64, 7 L.Ed. 47; Appeal of Burnap, 94 Conn. 286, 108 A. 802, 804; Stapler v. El Dora Oil Co., 27 Cal.App. 714, 150 P. 643, 645.

MAYHEM. Unlawfully and violently depriving another of the use of such members as may render him the less able in fighting, either to defend himself, or to annoy his adversary. 4 Bl.Comm. 205. State v. Deso, 110 Vt. 1, 1 A.2d 710, 714.

Every person who unlawfully and maliciously deprives a human being of a member of his body, or disables, disfigures, or renders it useless, or cuts or disables the tongue, or puts out an eye, or slits the nose, ear, or lip, is guilty of mayhem. Pen.Code Cal. § 203.

MAYHEMavit. Maimed. This was a term of art which could not be supplied in pleading by any other word, as mutilavit, truncavit, etc. 3 Thorn Co. Litt. 548; Corn. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 247.

MAYN. L. Fr. A hand; handwriting. Britt. c. 28.

MAYOR. The executive head of a municipal corporation; the governor or chief magistrate of a city. Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 577; People v. New York, 25 Wend., N.Y., 36.

MAYOR'S COURT. A court established in some cities, in which the mayor sits with the powers of a police judge or committing magistrate in respect to offenses committed within the city, and sometimes with civil jurisdiction in small causes, or other special statutory powers.

MAYOR'S COURT OF LONDON. An inferior court having jurisdiction in civil cases where the whole cause of action arises within the city of London.

MAYORALTY. The office or dignity of a mayor.

MAYORAZGO. In Spanish law, the right to the enjoyment of certain aggregate property, left with the condition thereon imposed that they are to pass in their integrity, perpetually, successively to the eldest son. Schm. Civil Law, 62.

MAYORESS. The wife of a mayor.

MEAD. Ground somewhat watery, not plowed, but covered with grass and flowers. Enc. Lond.

MEADOW. A tract of low or level land producing grass which is mown for hay. Webster.

MEAN. or MESNE. A middle between two extremes, whether applied to persons, things, or time.

Average, having an intermediate value between two extremes or between the several successive values of variable quantity during one cycle of variation. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Huwe, C.C.A.Ohio, 116 F.2d 1008, 1009.

MEAN LOW TIDE. The average of all low tides both low and lower low over a fixed period of time. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

As applied to Puget Sound, the "Harmonic plane" is the zero adopted by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey of the Department of Commerce upon which its tidal tables, charts, and maps are based. It is an arbitrary plane, and is the lowest plane of the tide in the Sound recognized by that department, being approximately two feet lower than mean lower low tide, and approximately four feet lower than mean low tide. State v. Scott, 89 Wash. 63, 154 P. 165, 168.

MEAN LOWER LOW TIDE. The average of lower low tides over a fixed period of time. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

MEAN RESERVE. The mean of the reserve at the beginning of the policy year, after the premium for such year is paid, and the terminal reserve at end of such policy year. Kentucky Home Life Ins. Co. v. Leisman, 268 Ky. 825, 105 S.W.2d 1046, 1047.

MEANDER. To meander means to follow a winding or flexuous course; and when it is said, in a description of land, "thence with the meander of the river," it must mean a meandered line,—a line which follows the sinuosities of the river,—or, in other words, that the river is the boundary between the points indicated. Turner v. Parker, 14 Or. 341, 12 P. 495; Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co., 10 Minn. 100, Gil. 75, 88 Am.Dec. 59.
MEANDER

This term is used in some jurisdictions with the meaning of surveying and mapping a stream according to its meanderings, or windings and turnings. See Jones v. Pettibone, 2 Wis. 317.

MEANDER LINES. Lines run in surveying particular portions of the public lands which border on navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as the means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction subject to sale, and which is to be paid for by the purchaser. In preparing the official plat from the field notes, the meander line is represented as the border line of the stream, and shows that the watercourse, and not the meander line as naturally run on the ground, is the boundary. St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 7 Wall. 286, 19 L.Ed. 74; Niles v. Cedar Point Club, 175 U.S. 300, 20 S.Ct. 124, 44 L.Ed. 171; Producers' Oil Co. v. Hanszen, 61 So. 754, 132 La. 691.

MEANING. That which is, or is intended to be, signified or denoted by act or language; signification; sense; import. Webster, Dict. Secondary Meaning. While generic names, geographical names, and names composed of words which are merely descriptive are incapable of exclusive appropriation, words or names, which have a primary meaning of their own, such as words descriptive of the goods, service, or place where they are made, or the name of the maker, may nevertheless, by long use in connection with the business of the particular trade, come to be understood by the public as designating the goods, service, or business of a particular trader. This is what is known as the doctrine of "secondary meaning"; and is the origin of the law of unfair competition, as distinguished from technical trademarks or trade-names. Saunders System Atlantic Co. v. Drive It Yourself Co., 158 Ga. 1, 123 S.E. 132, 135; Richmond Remedies Co. v. Dr. Miles Medical Co., C.C.A.Mo., 16 F.2d 598, 602.

MEANS. That through which, or by the help of which, an end is attained; something tending to an object desired; intermediate agency or measure; necessary condition or co-agent; instrument. Pope v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 235 Mo.App. 263, 131 S.W.2d 887, 892; Under insurance policy, equivalent to cause. Pope v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 235 Mo.App. 263, 131 S.W.2d 887, 892.

Resources; available property; money or property, as an. available instrumentality _or_ effecting a purpose, furnishing a livelihood, paying a debt, or the like.

MEASURE. That by which extent or dimension is ascertained, either length, breadth, thickness, capacity, or amount. Webster. The rule by which anything is adjusted or proportioned.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. The rule, or rather the system of rules, governing the adjustment or apportionment of damages as a compensation for injuries in actions at law.

MEASURE OF VALUE. In the ordinary sense of the word, "measure" would mean something by comparison with which we may ascertain what is the value of anything. When we consider, further, that value itself is relative, and that two things are necessary to constitute it, independently of the third thing, which is to measure it, we may define a "measure of value" to be something by comparing with which any two other things we may infer their value in relation to one another. 2 Mill, Pol. Econ. 101.

MEASURER, or METER. An officer in the city of London, who measured woolen clothes, coals, etc.

MEASURING MONEY. In old English law, a duty which some persons exacted, by letters patent, for every piece of cloth made, besides alnage. Now abolished.

MEAT. Specifically, animal flesh, though in one sense, the word includes other foods. Gardner v. State, 183 Ind. 101, 108 N.E. 230. Food in general; anything eaten for nourishment, either by man or beast; especially, solid food; hence, the edible part of anything. Webster, Dict.

MECHANIC'S LIEN. A claim created by law for the purpose of securing priority of payment of the price or value of work performed and materials furnished in erecting or repairing a building or other structure, and as such attaches to the land as well as buildings and improvements erected thereon. In re Louisville Daily News & Enquirer, D.C.Ky., 20 F.Supp. 465, 466.

MECHANICAL. Having relation to, or produced by, the use of mechanism or machinery. Used chiefly in patent law. Of, pertaining to, or concerned with, manual labor; engaged in manual labor; of the artisan class; of, pertaining to, or concerned with, machinery or mechanism; made or formed by a machine or with tools. State v. Crounse, 105 Neb. 672, 181 N.W. 562, 563, 16 A.L.R. 533.

MECHANICAL ARM. In the artificial limb trade. An arm provided with fingers which can be moved by some mechanical contrivance, together with mechanism for rotating the wrist, simulating, as nearly as possible the motion of the human wrist, hand, and fingers. Carnes Artificial Limb Co. v. Dilworth Arm Co., D.C.Conn., 273 F. 838, 839.

MECHANICAL EQUIVALENT. If two devices do the same work in substantially the same way, and accomplish substantially the same result, they are "mechanical equivalents." Wire Tie Machinery Co. v. Pacific Box Corporation, C.C.A.Cal., 107 F.2d 54, 56. A device which may be substituted or adopted, instead of another, by any person skilled in the particular art from his knowledge of the art, and which is competent to perform the same functions or produce the same result, without introducing an original idea or changing the general idea of means. Smith v. Marshall, 22 F.Cas. 595; Alaska Packers' Ass'n v. Letson, C.C.Wash., 119 F. 611. The test of equivalency is whether the substituted element operates in substantially the same way to produce substantially the same result. Palmer v. Mach. Co., C.C.N.Y., 186 F. 496.

MECHANICAL MOVEMENT. A mechanism transmitting power or motion from a driving part to a part to be driven; a combination and arrangement of mechanical parts intended for the translation or transformation of motion. Campbell Printing Press Co. v. Miehle Printing Press Co., 42 C.C.A. 235, 102 F. 159.

MECHANICAL PROCESS. See Process.

MECHANICAL SKILL. As distinguished from invention or inventive capacity, this term means such skill, intelligence, ingenuity, or constructive ability in the adaptation of means to ends as would be possessed and exhibited by an ordinarily clever mechanic in the practice of his particular art or trade. Hollister v. Benedict & B. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901; Johnson Co. v. Pennsylvania Steel Co., C.C.Pa., 67 F. 942.

MENERIA. In old records, a house or place where meathelin, or mead, was made.

MEDFEE. In old English law, a bribe or reward; a compensation given in exchange, where the things exchanged were not of equal value. Cowell.

MEDIA ANNATA. In Spanish law, half-yearly profits of land. McMullen v. Hodge, 5 Tex. 34, 79.

MEDIA CONCLUDENDI. The steps of an argument. Thus “a judgment is conclusive as to all the media concludendi.” Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, 52 L.Ed. 1039. The theory or basis of facts upon which a legal conclusion is reached, per Holmes, C. J., in Hoseason v. Keegen, 178 Mass. 250, 59 N.E. 627. Grounds for asserting the right known when the suit was brought. Mendez v. Baetjer, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 106 F.2d 163, 166.

MEDIA NOX. In old English law, midnight. Ad mediam noctem, at midnight. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 31.

MEDLE ET INFIRMIE MANUS HOMINES. Men of a middle and base condition. Blount.

MEDIANUS HOMO. A man of middle fortune.

MEDIATE DATUM. A fact from whose existence may be rationally inferred the existence of ultimate facts. The Evergreens v. Nunan, C.C.A. 2, 141 F.2d 927, 928.

MEDIATE DESCENT. See Descent.

Forensic Medicine. Another name for medical jurisprudence. See Forensic Medicine.

Schools of Medicine. See Osteopathy; Psychotherapy.

MEDICINE-CHEST. A box containing an assortment of medicines, required by statute to be carried by all vessels above a certain tonnage.

MEDICO-LEGAL. Relating to the law concerning medical questions.

MEDIETAS LINGUAE. In old practice, moiety of tongue; half-tongue. Applied to a jury impaneled in a cause consisting the one half of natives, and the other half of foreigners. See De Medietate MEDIO ACQUIETANDO. A judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mesne lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him. Reg. Jur. 129.

MEDITATIO FUGZE. In Scotch law, contemplation of flight; intention to abscond. 2 Kames, Eq. 14, 15.

MEDITERRANEAN PASSPORT. A pass issued by the admiralty of Great Britain under various treaties with the Barbary States in the eighteenth century. They were granted to British built ships and were respected by the Barbary pirates. See 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 100. They were also issued by the United States. The term is still retained in R. S. § 4191, 46 U.S.C.A. § 62.

MEDIUM TEMPUS. In old English law, meantime; mesne profits. Cowell.

MEDLETUM. In old English law, a mixing together; a medley or melee; an affray or sudden encounter. An offense suddenly committed in an affray. The English word “medley” is preserved in the term “chance-medley.” An intermeddling, without violence, in any matter of business. Spelman.

MEDLEY. An affray; a sudden or casual fighting; a hand to hand battle; a melee. See Chance-Medley; Chaud-Medley.

MEDSCEAT. In old English law, a bribe; hush money.

MEDSYPP. A harvest supper or entertainment given to laborers at harvest-home. Cowell.

MEETING. A coming together of persons; an assembly. Particularly, in law, an assembling of a number of persons for the purpose of discussing and acting upon some matter or matters in which they have a common interest. People v. Mintz, 106 Cal.App. 725, 290 P. 93, 100.

Called meeting. In the law of corporations, a meeting not held at a time specially appointed for it by the charter or by-laws, but assembled in pursuance of a “call” or summons proceeding from some officer, committee or group of stockholders, or other persons having authority in that behalf.

Family meeting. See Family.

General meeting. A meeting of all the stockholders of a corporation, all the creditors of a bankrupt, etc. In re Bonnaffe, 23 N.Y. 177; Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Farquhar, 86 Md. 668, 39 A. 527.

Regular meeting. In the law of public and private corporations, a meeting (of directors, trustees, stockholders, etc.) held at the time and place appointed for it by statute, by-law, charter or other positive direction. State v. Wilkesville Tp., 20 Ohio St. 293.

Special meeting. In the law of corporations. A meeting called for special purposes; one limited to particular business; a meeting for those purposes of which the parties have had special notice. Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Farquhar, 86 Md. 668, 39 A. 527; Warren v. Mower, 11 Vt. 385.

Stated meeting. A meeting held at a stated or duly appointed time and place; a regular meeting, (q. v.).

Town meeting. See Town.

MEETING OF MINDS. The “meeting of the minds” required to make a contract is not based on secret purpose or intention on the part of one of the parties, stored away in his mind and not brought to the attention of the other party, but must be based on purpose and intention which has been made known or which from all the circumstances should be known. McClintock v. Skelly Oil Co., 232 Mo.App. 1204, 114 S.W.2d 181, 189.

MEGALOMANIA. See Insanity.

MEIGNE, or MAISNADER. In old English law, a household; staff or suite of attendants; a retinue; particularly, the royal household.

MEILICKE SYSTEM. Consists of computing fractions on the basis of a 30-day month, and does not charge interest for the 31st day of any month. Swistak v. Personal Finance Co., 175 Misc. 791, 24 N.Y.S.2d 80, 81.

MEINDRE AGE. L. Fr. Minority; lesser age. Kelham.

MEINY, MEINE, or MEINIE. In old English law, a household; staff or suite of attendants; a retinue; particularly, the royal household.

MELANCHOLIA. In medical jurisprudence, a kind of mental unsoundness characterized by extreme depression of spirits, ill-grounded fears, delusions, and brooding over one particular subject or train of ideas. Webster. See Insanity.
MEMORANDUM

MELDFOEH. In Saxon law, the recompense due and given to him who made discovery of any breach of penal laws committed by another person, called the "promoter's [i.e., informer's] fee." Wharton.

MELIOR. Lat. Better; the better. Melior res, the better (best) thing or chattel. Bract. fol. 60.

MELIOR EST CAUSA POSSIDENTIS. The cause of the possessor is preferable. Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO DEFENDENTIS. The condition of the party in possession is the better one, i.e., where the right of the parties is equal. Broom, Max. 715, 719.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS, ET REI QUAM ACTORIS. The condition of the possessor is the better, and the condition of the defendant is better than that of the plaintiff. 4 Inst. 180; Broom, Max. 714, 719.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS IUBI NEUTER JUS HABET. Jenk. Cent. 118. The condition of the possessor is the better where neither of the two has a right.

MELIOR EST JUSTITIA VERE PRZEVENIENS QUAM SEVERE PUNIENS. That justice which absolutely prevents [a crime] is better than that which severely punishes it. 3 Inst. Epil.

MELIORS. In Scotch law, improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. 1 Bell, Comm. 73. Occasionally used in English and American law in the sense of valuable and lasting improvements or betterments. See Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 84, 5 L.Ed. 547.

MELIORS. In Scotch law, improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. 1 Bell, Comm. 73. Occasionally used in English and American law in the sense of valuable and lasting improvements or betterments. See Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 84, 5 L.Ed. 547.

MELIUS EST RECURRERE QUAM MALE CURRERE. It is better to run back than to run badly; it is better to retrace one's steps than to proceed improperly. 4 Inst. 176.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM. To be better inquired into.

In old English law, the name of a writ commanding a further inquiry respecting a matter; as, after an imperfect inquisition in proceedings in outlawry, to have a new inquest as to the value of lands.

MEMBER. One of the persons constituting a family, Grant v. Louisiana Sawmill Co., 6 La.App. 673, 675; a partnership, association, corporation, guild, etc. In re Sixth Ward Building & Loan Ass'n of Newark, 134 N.J.Eq. 98, 34 A.2d 292, 294.

One of the persons constituting a court, a legislative assembly, etc. In re Heafy, 247 App.Div. 277, 285 N.Y.S. 188, 193.

A part or organ of the animal body; especially a limb or other separate part. California Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, Cal.App., 82 P.2d 1115, 1116.

MEMBERS. In English law, places where a customs-house has been kept of old time, with officers or deputies in attendance; and they are lawful places of exportation or importation. 1 Chit. Corn. Law, 726.

MEMBRANA. Lat.

In Civil law, parchment. Dig. 32, 52.

In old English law, a skin of parchment. The ancient rolls usually consist of several of these skins, and the word "membrana" is used, in citations to them, in the same way as "page" or "folio," to distinguish the particular skin referred to.

MEMBRUM. A slip or small piece of land.

MEMOIRE. In French law, a document in the form of a petition, by which appeals to the court of cassation are initiated.

MEMORANDUM. Lat. To be remembered; be it remembered. A formal word with which the body of a record in the court of king's bench anciently commenced. Townsh. PL 486; 2 Tidd, Pr. 719.

Also an informal note or instrument embodying something that the parties desire to fix in memory by the aid of written evidence, or that is to serve as the basis of a future formal contract.
MEMORANDUM

or deed. Plott v. Kittelson, 58 N.D. 881, 228 N.W. 217, 221.

This word is used in the statute of frauds as the designation of the written agreement, or note or evidence thereof, which must exist in order to bind the parties in the cases provided. The memorandum must be such as to disclose the parties, the nature and substance of the contract, the consideration and promise, and be signed by the party to be bound or his authorized agent. See 2 Kent, Comm. 510; Des Brisay v. Foss, 264 Mass. 102, 162 N.E. 4, 6.

The whole clause is now, in practice, termed, from this initial word, the "memorandum," and its use is supposed to have originated from the circumstance that proceedings "by bill" (in which alone it has been employed) were formerly considered as the by-business of the court. Gilb. Com.Pl. 47, 48.

MEMORANDUM ARTICLES. In the law of marine insurance, this phrase designates the articles of merchandise which are usually mentioned in the memorandum clause, (q. v.,) and for which the underwriter's liability is thereby limited. See Waln v. Thompson, 9 Serg. & R., Pa., 120, 11 Am. Dec. 675.

MEMORANDUM CHECK. See Check.

MEMORANDUM CLAUSE. In a policy of marine insurance the memorandum clause is a clause inserted to prevent the underwriters from being liable for injury to goods of a peculiarly perishable nature, and for minor damages. It begins as follows: "N. B. Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed are warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded,"—meaning that the underwriters are not to be liable for damage to these articles caused by seawater or the like. Maude & P. Shipp. 371; Sweet.

MEMORANDUM IN ERROR. A document alleging error in fact, accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact.

MEMORANDUM OF ALTERATION. Formerly, in England, where a patent was granted for two inventions, one of which was not new or not useful, the whole patent was bad, and the same rule applied when a material part of a patent for a single invention had either of those defects. To remedy this the statute 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 83, empowers a patentee (with the fiat of the attorney general) to enter a disclaimer (q. v.) or a memorandum of an alteration in the title or specification of the patent, not being of such a nature as to extend the exclusive right granted by the patent, and thereupon the memorandum is deemed to be part of the letters patent or the specification. Sweet.

MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION. A document to be subscribed by seven or more persons associated for a lawful purpose, by subscribing which, and otherwise complying with the requisitions of the companies' acts in respect of registration, they may form themselves into an incorporated company, with or without limited liability. 3 Steph Comm. 20.

MEMORANDUM SALE. See Sale.

MEMORIAL. A document presented to a legislative body, or to the executive, by one or more individuals, containing a petition or a representation of facts.

In English law, that which contains the particulars of a deed, etc., and is the instrument registered, as in the case of an annuity which must be registered. Wharton.

In practice, a short note, abstract, memorandum, or rough draft of the orders of the court, from which the records thereof may at any time be fully made up. State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 A. 863.

MEMORITER. Lat. From memory; by or from recollection. Thus, memoriter proof of a written instrument is such as is furnished by the recollection of a witness who had seen and known it.

MEMORIZATION. Committing anything to memory. Used to describe the act of one who listens to a public representation of a play or drama, and then, from his recollection of its scenes, incidents, or language, reproduces it, substantially or in part, in derogation of the rights of the author. 5 Term R. 245; 14 A.L.R., N.S. 207.

MEMORY. The word as used in Blackstone and other ancient authorities, appeared to be synonymous with "mind", whereas the word "memory" in modern times is used in a more restricted sense of recollection of past events rather than the general state of one's mental power. United States v. Boylen, D.C. Or., 41 F.Supp. 724, 725.

Mental capacity; the mental power to review and recognize the successive states of consciousness in their consecutive order.

This word, as used in jurisprudence to denote one of the psychological elements necessary in the making of a valid will or contract or the commission of a crime, implies the mental power to conduct a consecutive train of thought, or an orderly planning of affairs, by recalling correctly the past states of the mind and past events, and arranging them in their due order of sequence and in their logical relations with the events and mental states of the present.

The phrase "sound and disposing mind and memory" means not merely distinct recollection of the items of one's property and the persons among whom it may be given, but entire power of mind to dispose of property by will. Abbott.

The reputation and name, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

Legal memory. An ancient usage, custom, supposed grant (as a foundation for prescription) and the like, are said to be immemorial when they are really or fictitiously of such an ancient date that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," or, in other words, "beyond legal memory." And legal memory or "time out of mind," according to the rule of the common law, commenced from the reign of Richard I., A. D. 1189. But under the statute of limitation of 32 Hen. VIII. this was reduced to 60 years, and again by that of 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, to 20 years. In the American states, by statute, the time of legal memory is generally fixed at a period corresponding to that prescribed for actions for the recovery of real property, usually about 20 years. See 2 Bl.Comm. 31; Miller v. Garlock, 8 Barb., N.Y. 153.

MEN OF STRAW. Men who used in former days to ply about courts of law, so called from their manner of making known their occupation, (i. e., by a straw in one of their shoes,) recognized by the name of "straw-shoes." An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness knew by these signs where to meet with one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. "Don't you remember?" said the advocate; to which the ready answer was, "To be sure I do." "Then come into court and swear it?" And straw-shoes went into court and swore. Athens abounded in straw-shoes.

MERETRICIOUS. Of the nature of unlawful sexual connection. The term is descriptive of the relation sustained by persons who contract a marriage that is void by reason of legal incapacity. Bl. Comm. 436.

MERGER. The fusion or absorption of one thing or right into another; generally spoken of a case where one of the subjects is of less dignity or importance than the other. Here the less important ceases to have an independent existence. Marfield v. Cincinnati, D. & T. Traction Co., 111 Ohio St. 139, 144 N.E. 689, 696, 40 A.L.R. 357.

Conglomerate merger. Merger of corporations which are neither competitors nor potential or actual customers or suppliers of each other. U. S. v. General Dynamics Corp., D.C.N.Y., 258 F.Supp. 36, 56.

Corporations. The union of two or more corporations by the transfer of property of all to one of them, which continues in existence, the others being swallowed up or merged therein. Metropolitan Edison Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.3, 98 F.2d 807, 810, 811. It differs from a consolidation wherein all the corporations terminate their existence and become parties to a new one. Murphy v. Niehus, 50 Ohio App. 299, 198 N.E. 197.

Criminal Law. When a man commits a great crime which includes a lesser, or commits a felony which includes a tort against a private person, the latter is merged in the former. 1 East, P. C. 411.

Divorce law. Substitution of rights and duties under judgment or decree for those under property settlement agreement. Roesberry v. Roesberry, 401 P.2d 805, 807, 88 Idaho 514.

Real-Property Law. It is a general principle of law that where a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately annihilated, or, in the law phrase, is said to be merged, that is, sunk or drowned, in the greater. Thus, if there be tenant for years, and the reversion in fee-simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and shall never exist any more. 2 Bl. Comm. 177; 1 Steph. Comm. 293; 4 Kent, Comm. 99. Duncan v. Smith, 31 N.J.L. 327.

Rights. This term, as applied to rights, is equivalent to "confusio" in the Roman law, and indicates that where the qualities of debtor and creditor become united in the same individual, there arises a confusion of rights which extinguishes both qualities; whence, also, merger is often called "extinguishment." Brown.

Rights of Action. In the law relating to rights of action, when a person takes or acquires a remedy or security of a higher nature, in legal estimation, than the one which he already possesses for the same right, then his remedies in respect of the minor right or security merge in those attaching to the higher one. Leake, Cont. 506; 10 C.B. 561. As where a claim is merged in the judgment recovered upon it. Frost v. Thompson, 219 Mass. 360, 106 N.E. 1009, 1010.

MERIDIES. In old English law, noon. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 31.

MERIT SYSTEM. A system of appointing employees to office in the civil service, and of promoting them for competency only; opposed, in the United States, to the spoils system. Heck v. Hall, 238 Ala. 274, 190 So. 280, 285.

MERITORIOUS. Possessing or characterized by "merit" in the legal sense of the word. See Merits.

MERITORIOUS CAUSE OF ACTION. This description is sometimes applied to a person with whom the ground of action, or the consideration, originated or from whom it moved. For example, where a cause of action accrues to a woman while sole, and is sued for, after her marriage, by her husband and herself jointly, she is called the "meritorious cause of action."

MERITORIOUS CONSIDERATION. One founded upon some moral obligation; a valuable consideration in the second degree.

MERITORIOUS DEFENSE. See Defense.

MERITS. The word "merit" as a legal term is to be regarded as referring to the strict legal rights of the parties. Mink v. Keim, 266 App.Div. 184, 41 N.Y.S.2d 769, 771.

MESE. A house and its appurtenance. Cowell.

MESPINALITY, or MESPINALITY. A manor held under a superior lord. The estate of a mesne.

MESNE. Intermediate; intervening; the middle between two extremes, especially of rank or time.

An intermediate lord; a lord who stood between a tenant and the chief lord; a lord who was also a tenant. "Lord, mesne, and tenant; the tenant holdeth by four pence, and the mesne by twelve pence." Co. Litt 23a.

MESNE ASSIGNMENT. If A. grant a lease of land to B., and B. assign his interest to C., and C. in his turn assign his interest therein to D., in this case the assignments so made by B. and C. would be termed "mesne assignments;" that is, they would be assignments intervening between A.'s original grant and the vesting of D.'s interest in the land under the last assignment. Brown.

MESNE ENCUMBRANCE. An intermediate charge, burden, or liability; an incumbrance which has been created or has attached to property between two given periods.

MESNE LORD. In old English law, a middle or intermediate lord; a lord who held of a superior lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 59. More commonly termed a "mesne" (q. v.).

MESNE, WRIT OF. An ancient and abolished writ, which lay when the lord paramount distrained on the tenant paravail. The latter had a writ of mesne against the mesne lord.

MESS BRIEF. In Danish sea law, one of a ship's papers; a certificate of admeasurement granted at the home port of a vessel by the government or by some other competent authority. Hall v. Philadelphia Co., 72 W.Va. 573, 78 S.E. 755, 757.

MESSAGE. Any notice, word, or communication, written or oral, sent from one person to another. Webster, Dict.

President's message. An annual communication from the president of the United States to congress, made at or near the beginning of each session, embodying his views on the state and exigencies of national affairs, suggestions and recommendations for legislation, and other matters. Const. U. S. art. 2, § 3.

Repeated message. Within the meaning of restricted liability clauses printed on the back of blank telegraph forms, one telegraphed back to the sending office for comparison; the object being to guard against mistakes in transmission. Dettis v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 141 Minn. 361, 170 N.W. 334, 338.

MESSAGE FROM THE CROWN. In English law, the method of communicating between the sovereign and the house of parliament. A written message under the royal sign-manual is brought by a member of the house, being a minister of the crown or one of the royal household. Verbal messages are also sometimes delivered. May, Part Pr. c. 17.

MESSE THANE. One who said mass; a priest. Cowell.

MESSINGER. One who bears messages or errands; a ministerial officer employed by executive officers, legislative bodies, and courts of justice, whose service consists principally in carrying verbal or written communications or executing other orders. In Scotland there are officers attached to the courts, called "messengers at arms."

An officer attached to a bankruptcy court, whose duty consists, among other things, in seizing and taking possession of the bankrupt's estate during the proceedings in bankruptcy.

The messenger of the English court of chancery has the duty of attending on the great seal, either in person or by deputy, and must be ready to execute all such orders as he shall receive from the lord chancellor, lord keeper, or lords commissioners. Brown.

MESSIS SEMENTEM SEQUITUR. The crop belongs to [follows] the sower. A maxim in Scotch law. Where a person is in possession of land which he has reason to believe is his own, and sows that land, he will have a right to the crops, although before it is cut down it should be discovered that another has a preferable title to the land. Bell.

Although the word "messuage" may, there is no necessity that it must, import more than the word "dwelling-house," with which word it is frequently put in apposition and used synonymously. 2 Bing.N.C. 617.

In Scotland, the principal dwelling-house within a barony. Bell.

MESTIZO. A mongrel or person of mixed blood; sometimes used as equivalent to "octoroon," that is, the child of a white person and a quadroon, sometimes as denoting a person one of whose parents was a Spaniard and the other an American Indian.

META. Lat. A goal, bound, or turning-point. In old English law, the term was used to denote a bound or boundary line of land; a landmark; a material object, as a tree or a pillar, marking the position or beginning of a boundary line.

MINERAL, n. Any valuable inert or lifeless substance formed or deposited in its present position through natural agencies alone, and which is found either in or upon the soil of the earth or in the rocks beneath the soil. Barringer & Adams, Mines, p. lxvi.

Any natural constituent of the crust of the earth, inorganic or fossil, homogeneous in structure, having a definite chemical composition and known crystallization. See Webster, Cent. Diet.

The term includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug, such as beds of stone which may be quarried. Earl of Rosse v. Wainman, 14 Mees. & W. 872.

The word is not a definite term and is susceptible of limitations or extensions according to intention with which it is used. Standing alone it might by itself embrace the soil, hence include sand and gravel, or, under a strict definition, it might be limited to metallic substances. Puget Mill Co. v. Duecy, 1 Wash.2d 421, 96 P.2d 571, 573, 574.

MINERAL DEED. A realty conveyance involving a severance from fee of present title to minerals in place, either effecting such severance in first instance or conveying part of such mineral owner-ship previously severed from the fee. Hickey v. Dirks, 156 Kan. 326, 133 P.2d 107, 109, 110.

MINERAL DISTRICT. A term occasionally used in acts of congress, designating in a general way those portions or regions of the country where valuable minerals are mostly found, or where the business of mining is chiefly carried on, but carrying no very precise meaning and not a known term of the law. See U. S. v. Smith, C.C.Or., 11 F. 490.

MINERAL LAND ENTRY. See Entry.

MINERAL LANDS. Lands containing deposits of valuable, useful, or precious minerals in such quantities as to justify expenditures in the effort to extract them, and which are more valuable for the minerals they contain than for agricultural or other uses. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U.S. 526, 23 S.Ct. 365, 47 L.Ed. 575; Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U.S. 392, 6 S.Ct. 95, 29 L.Ed. 423.

Land on which metals or minerals have been discovered in place. State v. Field, 31 N.M. 120, 241 P. 1027, 1042. "Mineral lands" include not merely metaliferous lands, but all such as are chiefly valuable for their deposits of mineral character, which are useful in arts or valuable for purposes of manufacture. Dunbar Limestone Co. v. Utah-Ipico Sugar Co., C.C.A.Utah, 17 F.2d 351, 354; and embrace not only those which the lexicon defines as "mineral", but, in addition, such as are valuable for deposits of marble, slate, petroleum, asphaltum, and even guano. United States v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 311 U.S. 317, 61 S.Ct. 284, 285, 85 L.Ed. 210.

MINERAL LEASE. An agreement permitting use of land to explore, and then, if mineral is discovered, giving right to take mineral either for definite term or so long as it can be produced in paying quantities upon reserved royalty. Gordon v. Empire Gas & Fuel Co., C.C.A.Tex., 63 F.2d 487, 488.

MINERAL LODE. A mineral bed of rock with definite boundaries in a general mass of the mountain and also any zone or belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries clearly separating it from the neighboring rock. Duffield v. San Francisco Chemical Co., C.C.A.Idaho, 205 F. 480, 484.

"Mineral rights" is much a broader term and is more inclusive than the term "oil and gas". Federal Gas, Oil & Coal Co. v. Moore, 290 Ky. 284, 151 S.W.2d 46, 49.

MINERAL SERVITUDE. The right to exploit or develop. Frost Lumber Industries v. Republic Production Co., C.C.A.La., 112 F.2d 462, 466.

MINERATOR. In old records, a miner.

MINIMA P(ENA) CORPORALIS EST MAJOR QUALIBET PECUNIARIA. The smallest corporal punishment is greater than any pecuniary one. 2 Inst. 220.
MINIME MUTANDA SUNT QUZE CERTAM HABUERUNT INTERPRETATIONEM. Things which have had a certain interpretation [whose interpretation has been settled, as by common opinion] are not to be altered. Co. Litt. 365; Wing. Max. p. 748, max. 202.

MINIMENT. An old form of muniment (q. v.). Blount.

MINIMUM CHARGE. A "minimum charge" in connection with public utilities rate-fixing means the minimum monthly bill which will be rendered regardless of whether or not a customer has used sufficient of the commodity to make up that sum at the agreed rate. Ashtabula Gas Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 102 Ohio St. 678, 133 N.E. 915, 916, 20 A.L.R. 217.

MINIMUM EST NIHILO PROXIMUM. The smallest is next to nothing.

MINIMUM WAGE. Such an amount as will maintain a normal standard of living, including the preservation of the health and efficiency of the worker.

The least wage on which an ordinary individual can be self-sustaining and obtain the ordinary requirements of life. Associated Industries of Oklahoma v. Industrial Welfare Commission, 185 Okl. 177, 90 P.2d 899, 913.

MINING. The process or business of extracting from the earth the precious or valuable metals, either in their native state or in their ores. In re Rollins Gold Min. Co., D.C.N.Y., 102 F. 985.

As ordinarily used, the term does not include the extraction from the earth of rock, marble, or slate, which is commonly described as "quarrying," although coal and salt are "mined:" nor does it include sinking wells or shafts for petroleum or natural gas, unless expressly so declared by statute, as is the case in Indiana. State v. Indians, etc., Min. Co., 120 Ind. 575, 22 N.E. 778, 6 L.R.A. 579; Williams v. Citizens' Enterprise Co., 153 Ind. 496, 55 N.E. 425.

MINING CLAIM. A parcel of land, containing precious metal in its soil or rock, and appropriated by an individual, according to established rules, by the process of "location." St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 649, 26 L.Ed. 875; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Sanders, C.C.A. Mont., 49 F. 135, 1 C.C.A. 192.

MINING COMPANIES. This designation was formerly applied in England to the associations formed in London in 1825 for working mines in Mexico and South America; but at present it comprises, both in England and America, all mining projects carried on by joint-stock associations or corporations. Rapalje & Lawrence.

MINING DISTRICT. A section of country usually designated by name and described or understood as being confined within certain natural boundaries, in which the precious metals (or their ores) are found in paying quantities, and which is worked thereon, under rules and regulations prescribed or agreed upon by the miners therein. U. S. v. Smith, C.C.Or., 11 F. 490.

MINING LEASE. A lease of a mine or mining claim or a portion thereof, to be worked by the lessee, usually under conditions as to the amount and character of work to be done, and reserving compensation to the lessor either in the form of a fixed rent or a royalty on the tonnage of ore mined, and which (as distinguished from a license) conveys to the lessee an interest or estate in the land, and (as distinguished from an ordinary lease) conveys not merely the temporary use and occupation of the land, but a portion of the land itself, that is, the ore in place and unsevered and to be extracted by the lessee. Austin v. Huntsville Min. Co., 72 Mo. 541, 37 Am.Rep. 446; Knight v. Indiana Coal Co., 47 Ind. 113, 17 Am.Rep. 692.

MINING LOCATION. The act of appropriating and claiming, according to certain established rules and local customs, a parcel of land of defined area, upon or upon which one or more of the precious metals or their ores have been discovered, and which constitutes a portion of the public domain, with the declared intention to occupy and work it for mining purposes under the implied license of the United States. Also the parcel of land so occupied and appropriated. Poire v. Wells, 6 Colo. 412; St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 649, 26 L.Ed. 875; Golden Fleece, etc., Min. Co. v. Cable, etc., Min. Co., 12 Nev. 328.

MINING PARTNERSHIP. A special type of partnership different in many respects from ordinary or trading partnerships. Meister v. Farrow, 109 Mont. 1, 92 P.2d 753, 757, 758, 760, 761.

Generally, where the parties co-operate in developing a lease for oil and gas, each agreeing to pay his part of the expenses and to share in the profits or losses, a "mining partnership" exists. Continental Supply Co. v. Dickson Oil Co., 94 Okl. 660, 153 P.2d 1017, 1019.

MINING RENT. In practice, the term is used to designate consideration given for a mining lease, whether such lease creates a tenancy, conveys a fee, or grants an incorporeal right or a mere license. Miller v. Carr, 137 Fla. 114, 188 So. 103, 107.

MINISTER. Ecclesiastical law. A person ordained according to the usages of some church or associated body of Christians for the preaching of the gospel and filling the pastoral office.

International law. An officer appointed by the government of one nation as a mediator or arbitrator between two other nations who are engaged in a controversy, with their consent, with a view to effecting an amicable adjustment of the dispute.

A general name given to the diplomatic representatives sent by one state to another, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.
MINISTER

Practice. An officer of justice, charged with the execution of the law, and hence termed a "ministerial officer;" such as a sheriff, bailiff, coroner, sheriff's officer. Britt. c. 21.

An agent; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.

Public law. One of the highest functionaries in the organization of civil government, standing next to the sovereign or executive head, acting as his immediate auxiliary, and being generally charged with the administration of one of the great bureaus or departments of the executive branch of government. Otherwise called a "cabinet minister," "secretary of state," or "secretary of a department."

Public minister. A general term comprehending all the higher classes of diplomatic representatives,—as ambassadors, envoys, residents,—but not including the commercial representatives, such as consuls.

MINISTERIAL ACT. One which a person performs in a given state of facts in a prescribed manner in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to or the exercise of his own judgment upon the propriety of the act being done. State Tax Commission of Utah v. Katsis, 90 Utah 406, 62 P.2d 120, 123, 107 A.L.R. 1477.

MINISTERIAL ACT OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. See Corporate Act of Municipal Corporation.

MINISTERIAL DUTY. One regarding which nothing is left to discretion—a simple and definite duty, imposed by law, and arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist. City of Tacoma v. Peterson, 165 Wash. 461, 5 P.2d 1022, 1024. Mott v. Hull, 51 Okl. 602, 152 P. 92, L.R.A.1916B, 1184. It arises when an individual has such a legal interest in its performance that neglect of performance becomes a wrong to such individual. Morton v. Comptroller General, 4 S.C. 473.

MINISTERIAL OFFICE. See Office.

MINISTERIAL OFFICER. One whose duties are purely ministerial, as distinguished from executive, legislative, or judicial functions, requiring obedience to the mandates of superiors and not involving the exercise of judgment or discretion. U. S. to Use of Kinney v. Bell, C.C.Pa., 127 F. 1002; State v. Loechner, 65 Neb. 814, 91 N.W. 874, 59 L.R.A. 915; Reid v. Hood, 2 Nott & McC., S.C., 169, 10 Am.Dec. 582.

MINISTERIAL POWER. See Power.

MINISTERIAL TRUST. See Trust.

MINISTERS PLENIPOTENTIARY. Ministers plenipotentiary possess full powers, and are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary; Vattel, liv. 4, c. 5, § 74; 1 Kent 48; Merlin, RÔpért.

MINISTRANT. The party cross-examining a witness was so called, under the old system of the ecclesiastical courts.

MINISTRI REGIS. Lat. In old English law, ministers of the king, applied to the judges of the realm, and to all those who hold ministerial offices in the government. 2 Inst. 208.

MINISTRY. The term as used in England is wider than Cabinet and includes all the holders of public office who come in and go out with the Prime Minister. In this respect it may be contrasted with the Permanent Civil Service, whose tenure is independent of public changes. The first English Ministry as now understood was formed after the general election of 1696. Macaulay, Hist. Engl., ch. 24.

MINOR. An infant or person who is under the age of legal competence. One under twenty-one. A term derived from the civil law, which described a person under a certain age as less than so many years. Minor viginti quinque annis, one less than twenty-five years of age. Inst. 1, 14, 2; Audsley v. Hale, 303 Mo. 451, 261 S.W. 117, 123.

Also, less; of less consideration; lower; a person of inferior condition. Fleta, 2, 47, 13, 15; Calvin.

MINOR ANTE TEMPUS AGERE NON POTEST IN CASU PROPRIETATIS NEC ETIAM CONVENIRE; DIFFERETUR USQUE IETATEM; SED NON CADIT BREVE. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree; it should be deferred until majority; but the writ does not fail.

MINOR FACT. In the law of evidence, a relative, collateral, or subordinate fact; a circumstance. Wills, Circ.Ev. 27; Burrill, Circ.Ev. p. 121, note, 582.

MINOR MINOREM CUSTODIRE. A minor ought not to be guardian to a minor, for he who... knows not how to govern himself is presumed to be unfit to govern others. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 10; Co.Litt. 88b.

MINOR NON TENETUR RESPONDERE DURANTE MINOR! ETATE, NISI IN CAUSA DOTIS, PROPTER FAVOREM. 3 Bulst. 143. A minor is not bound to reply during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower.

MINOR QUI INFRA IETATEM 12 ANNORUM FUERIT UITAGARI NON POTEST, NEC EXTRA LEGEM PONI, QUTA ANTE TALEM AITATEM, MINOR QUI INFRA IETATEM 12 ANNORUM is not bound to reply during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower.

MINOR SEPTEMDECIM ANNIS NON ADMITTI FUERIT UITAGARI NON POTEST, NEC EXTRA LEGEM ALIQUA, NEC IN DECENNIA. Co.Litt. 128. A minor who is under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed, nor placed without the law, because before such age he is not under any law, nor in a decennary.

MINORA REGALIA. In English law, the lesser prerogatives of the crown, including the rights of infancy.

MINORITY. The state or condition of a minor; infancy.

The smaller number of votes of a deliberative assembly; opposed to majority, (which see.)

MINT. The place designated by law where bullion is coined into money under authority of the government.

Also a place of privilege, in Southwark, near the king's prison, where persons formerly sheltered themselves from justice under the pretext that it was an ancient palace of the crown. The privilege is now abolished. Wharton.

MINT-MARK. The masters and workers of the English mint, in the indentures made with them, agreed "to make a privy mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making." After every trial of the pix, having proved their moneys to be lawful, they were entitled to their quietus under the great seal, and to be discharged from all suits or actions. Wharton.

MINT-MASTER. One who manages the coinage.

MINTAGE. The charge or commission taken by the mint as a consideration for coining into money the bullion which is brought to it for that purpose; the same as "seigniorage."

Also that which is coined or stamped as money; the product of the mint.

MINUS. Lat. In the civil law, less; less than. The word had also, in some connections, the sense of "not at all." For example, a debt remaining wholly unpaid was described as "minus solutum."

MINUS LATIUM. See Jus Latium.

MINUS SOLVIT, QUI TARDIUS SOLVIT. He does not pay who pays too late. Dig. 50, 16, 12, 1.

MINUTE. In measures of time or circumference, a minute is the sixtieth part of an hour or degree.

MINUTE-BOOK. A book kept by the clerk or prothonotary of a court for entering memoranda of its proceedings.

MINUTE TITHES. Small tithes, usually belonging to the vicar; e. g. eggs, honey, wax, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl.Law 680; 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, §§ 17, 18, 27.

MINUTES. Business law. Memoranda or notes of a transaction or proceeding. Thus, the record of the proceedings at a meeting of directors or shareholders of a company is called the "minutes."

Scotch Practice. A pleading put into writing before the lord ordinary, as the ground of his judgment. Bell.

MINUTIO. Lat. In the civil law, a lessening; diminution or reduction. Dig. 4, 5, 1.

MIRANDA RULE. Prior to any custodial interrogation; that is, questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person is taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom in any significant way, the person must be warned:

1. That he has a right to remain silent;
2. That any statement he does make may be used as evidence against him;
3. That he has a right to the presence of an attorney;
4. That if he cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for him prior to any questioning if he so desires.

Unless and until these warnings or a waiver of these rights are demonstrated at the trial, no evidence obtained in the interrogation may be used against the accused. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 478, 479, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 1612, 1630, 16 L.Ed.2d 294.

MIRROR. The Mirror of Justice, or of the Justices, commonly spoken of as the "Mirror;" is an ancient treatise on the laws of England, supposedly written during the reign of Edward II., and attributed to one Andrew Horne. But it has been thought that the germ of it was written before the Conquest and that Horne only made additions to it.

MIS. An inseparable particle used. in composition, to mark an ill sense or depravation of the meaning; as "miscomputation" or "miscompeiting," e., false reckoning.

MISA. In old English law, the mise or issue in the great seal, and to be discharged from all suits or actions. Wharton.

MISADVENTURE. A mischance or accident; a casualty caused by the act of one person inflicting injury upon another. Homicide "by misadventure" occurs where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. 4 Bl.Comm. 182; Williamson v. State, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct.R. 292.

MISALLEGED. To cite falsely as a proof or argument.

MISAPPROPRIATION. The act of misappropriating or turning to a wrong purpose; wrong appropriation; a term which does not necessarily mean peculation, although it may mean that. Bannon v. Knauss, 57 Ohio App. 288, 13 N.E.2d 733, 735.

MISBEHAVIOR. Ill conduct; improper or unlawful behavior. Smith v. Cutler, 10 Wend., N.Y., 590, 25 Am.Dec. 580; State v. Arnold, 100 Tenn. 307, 47 S.W. 221.

MISBRANDING. False or misleading labeling. People v. Rosenbloom, Cal., 119 Cal.App. 759, 2 P.2d 228, 231.

MISCARRIAGE. Medical jurisprudence. The expulsion of the ovum or embryo from the uterus within the first six weeks after conception. Between that time, and before the expiration of the sixth month, when the child may possibly live, it is termed "abortion." When the delivery takes place soon after the sixth month, it is denominated "premature labor." But the criminal act of destroying or bringing forth prematurely the firtus or unborn offspring of a pregnant woman, at any time before birth, is termed, in law, "procuring miscarriage." Chit. Med. Jur. 410. Smith v. State, 33 Me. 59, 54 Am.Dec. 607; People v. Randi, 10 Cal.2d 198, 74 P.2d 71, 73.

The failure of a woman, from causes beyond her control to carry a fetus to maturity. Flory v. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur, 98 Neb. 160, 152 N.W. 295.

Practice. As used in the statute of frauds, ("debt, default, or miscarriage of another," ) this term means any species of unlawful conduct or wrongful act for which the deor could be held liable in a civil action. Gansey v. Orr, 173 Mo. 532, 73 S.W. 477.

MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE. Prejudice to substantial rights of a party. See the cases of State v. Cluff, 48 Utah, 102, 158 P. 701, 703; State v. Nell, 117 Wash. 142, 202 P. 7, 8.

MISCASING. An error in auditing and numbering. It does not include any pretended miscasting or misvaluing. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4128.

MISCEGENATION. Mixture of races; marriage between persons of different races; as between a white person and a Negro.

MISCHARGE. An erroneous charge; a charge, given by a court to a jury, which involves errors for which the judgment may be reversed.

MISCHIEF. In legislative parlance, the word is often used to signify the evil or danger which a statute is intended to cure or avoid.

In the phrase "malicious mischief," (which see,) it imports a wanton or reckless injury to persons or property.

MISCOGNISANT. Ignorant; uninformed. The word is obsolete.

MISCONDUCT. A transgression of some established and definite rule of action, a forbidden act, a dereliction from duty, unlawful behavior, willful in character, improper or wrong behavior; its synonyms are misdemeanor, misdeed, misbehavior, delinquency, impropriety, mismanagement, offense, but not negligence or carelessness. Mandella v. Mariano, 61 R.I. 163, 200 A. 478, 479.

MISCONDUCT IN OFFICE. Any unlawful behavior by a public officer in relation to the duties of his office, willful in character. Wysong v. Walden, 120 W.Va. 122; 196 S.E. 573, 575.

MISCONSUMPTION. In practice, an improper continuance; want of proper form in a continuance; the same with "discontinuance." Cowell.

MISCREEANT. In old English law, an apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounced Christianity. 4 Bl.Comm. 44.

MISDATE. A false or erroneous date affixed to a paper or document.

MISDEMEANANT. A person guilty of a misde-meanor; one sentenced to punishment upon conviction of a misdemeanor. See First-Class Misde-meanant.

MISDEMEANOR. Offenses lower than felonies and generally those punishable by fine or imprisonment otherwise than in penitentiary. People v. Harshbarger, 296 Ill.App. 397, 16 N.E.2d 247, 248.

In the English law, "misdemeanor" is generally used in contradistinction to "felony;" and misdemeanors comprehend all indictable offenses which do not amount to felony, as libels, conspiracies, attempts, and solicitations to corn-MISPRISION. A word used to describe a misdeemeanor which does not possess a specific name. 3 Inst. 36; United States v. Perlstein, C.C.A.N.J., 126 F.2d 789, 798. But more particularly and properly the term denotes either (1) a contempt against the sovereign, the government, or the courts of justice, including not only contempt of court, properly so called, but also all forms of seditious or disloyal conduct and leze-majesty; (2) maladministration of high public office, including peculation of the public funds; (3) neglect or light account made of a crime, that is, failure in the duty of a citizen to endeavor to prevent the commission of a crime, or, having knowledge of its commission, to reveal it to the proper authorities. 4 Bl.Com. 119-126; State v. Biddle, 124 A. 804, 805, 2 W.W.Harr., Del. 401.

Negative misprision. The concealment of something which ought to be revealed; that is, misprision in the third of the specific meanings given above.
MISPRISION

Positive misprision. The commission of something which ought not to be done; that is, misprision in the first and second of the specific meanings given above.

Practice. A clerical error or mistake made in writing or keeping records. State v. Ryan, 146 Wash. 114, 261 P. 775, 776.

MISPRISION OF FELONY. The offense of concealing a felony committed by another, but without such previous concert with or subsequent assistance to the felon as would make the party concealing an accessory before or after the fact. 4 Steph.Comm. 260; 4 Bl.Comm. 121; United States v. Perlstein, C.C.A.N.J., 126 F.2d 789, 798.

MISPRISION OF TREASON. The bare knowledge and concealment of an act of treason or treasonable plot, that is, without any assent or participation therein, for if the latter elements be present the party becomes a principal. 4 Bl.Comm. 120; Pen.Code Cal. § 38.

MISSING SHIP. In maritime law, a vessel is so called when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year. 2 Duer, Ins. 469.

MISSIONARIES. The term "missionaries," as used in the liquor trade, applies to men employed to visit saloons throughout the country and puff liquors of particular manufacture, so that salesmen of wholesalers and jobbers will find the way prepared for them. Hiram Walker & Sons v. Corning & Co., D.C.Ill., 255 F. 129, 130.

MISSIONS. In church parlance, the establishment of churches and schools and relief depots' through which are taught the principles of Christianity, the afflicted cared for, and the needy supplied. Hitchcock v. Board of Home Missions, 259 Ill. 288, 102 N.E. 741, 744, Ann.Cas.1915B, 1.

MISSIVES. In Scotch law, writings passed between parties as evidence of a transaction. Bell.

MISTAKES. In old records, a messenger.

MISSTAAICUS. In a Roman Catholic church to recommend and dismiss a dying person.

A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact, does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 358; Ward v. Lyman, 108 Vt. 464, 188 A. 892, 896. It may arise either from unconsciousness, ignorance, forgetfulness, imposi-
MISTAKE OF FACT. A mistake not caused by the neglect of an uncorrected oversight of the existence of a thing, material to the contract which does not exist, or in the past existence of such a thing which has not existed. Callan Court 79, 82.

A mistake of law happens when a party, having full knowledge of the facts, comes to an erroneous conclusion as to their legal effect. It is a mistaken opinion or inference, arising from an imperfect or incorrect exercise of the judgment, upon facts. Page v. Provines, 179 Okl. 391, 66 P.2d 7, 10; and necessarily presupposes that the person forming it is in full possession of the facts. The facts precede the law, and the true and false opinion alike imply an acquaintance with them. The one is the result of a correct application of legal principles, which every man is presumed to know, and is called “law”; the other, the result of a faulty application, and is called a “mistake of law.” Hurd v. Hall, 12 Wis. 124; Barnett v. Douglas, 102 Okl. 85, 226 P.1035, 1037, 39 A.L.R. 188.

Mutual mistake is where the parties have a common intention, but it is induced by a common or mutual mistake. Paine-Fishburn Granite Co. v. Reynoldson, 115 Neb. 520, 213 N.W. 750, 751; Northwest Thresher Co. v. McNinch, 42 Okl. 155, 140 P. 1170, 1172. “Mutual” as used in this expression mutual mistake of fact expresses a thought of reciprocity and distinguishes it from a mistake which is a common mistake of both parties. There is something of the thought of a common mistake because it must affect both parties. Mistake of fact as ground for relief may be neither “mutual” nor common in the strict sense because it may be wholly the mistake of one of the parties, the other being wholly ignorant both of the fact upon the faith of which the other has mistakenly acted and that the other has acted upon such an understanding of the fact situation. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Heller, D.C.Pa., 259 P.885, 890; Litteral v. Bevins, 186 Ky. 514, 217 S.W. 369, 370.

MISTER. A title of courtesy. A trade, craft, occupation, employment, office. Webster.

MISTRY. A trade or calling. Cowell.

MISTRESS. The proper style of the wife of an esquire or a gentleman in England.

MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES. Such as do not constitute a justification or excuse of the offense in question, but which, in fairness and mercy, may be considered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability. Heaton v. Wright, 10 How.Prac., N.Y. 82. Those that affect basis for award of exemplary damages, or reduce actual damages by showing, not that they were never suffered, but that they have been partially extinguished. McClelland v. Climax Hosiery Mills, 252 N.Y. 347, 169 N.E. 605, 608. And in actions for libel and slander, circumstances bearing on defendant’s liability for exemplary damages by reducing moral culpability, or on liability for actual damages by showing partial extinguishment thereof. Civil Practice Act, §§ 262, 338. Fleckenstein v. Friedman, 266 N.Y. 19, 193 N.E. 537, 539.

MITIGATION. Alleviation; abatement or diminution of a penalty or punishment imposed by law.

Reduction, diminishing, or lessening amount of penalty or punishment. People v. Fook, 206 Cal. 64, 273 P. 779, 782.

MITIGATION OF DAMAGES. A reduction of the amount of damages, not by proof of facts which are a bar to a part of the plaintiff’s cause of action, or a justification, nor yet of facts which constitute a cause of action in favor of the defendant, but rather facts which show that the plaintiff’s conceded cause of action does not entitle him to so large an amount as the showing on his side would otherwise justify the jury in allowing him. 1 Suth. Dam. 226.

MITIOR SENSUS. Lat. The more favorable acceptance.

MITIUS IMPERANTI MELIUS PARETUR. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed. 3 Inst. 24.

MITOYENNETE. In French law, the joint ownership of two neighbors in a wall, ditch, or hedge which separates their estates.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS FINIS. An abolished judicial writ addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of a fine acknowledged before justices in eyre into the common pleas. Reg. Orig. 14.

MITTER. L. Fr. To put, to send, or to pass; as, mitter restate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. These words are used to distinguish different kinds of releases.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS FINIS. An abolished judicial writ addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of a fine acknowledged before justices in eyre into the common pleas. Reg. Orig. 14.

trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc. Territory v. Hattick, 2 Mart. 0. S., La., 88.

MIXED. Formed by admixture or commingling; partaking of the nature, character, or legal attributes of two or more distinct kinds or classes.

MIXED ESTATE. Leasehold estates created by ground rent leases for 99 years renewable forever, both at common law and in Maryland, are sometimes called "mixed estates." Jones v. Magruder, D.C.Md., 42 F.Supp. 193, 198.

MIXED INSURANCE COMPANY. One which has, at least in part, the nature of both stock and mutual companies, and in which a certain portion of the profits is divided among the stockholders and distribution of other funds is made among the insured. Ohio Farmers Indemnity Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.6, 108 F.2d 665, 667; Pink v. Town Taxi Co., 138 Me. 44, 21 A.2d 656, 658, 659.

MIXED LAWS. A name sometimes given to those which concern both persons and property.

MIXED QUESTION OF LAW AND FACT. A question depending for solution on questions of both law and fact, but is really a question of either law or fact to be decided by either judge or jury. State v. Hayes, 162 La. 917, 111 So. 327, 329.

MIXED QUESTIONS. This phrase may mean either those which arise from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws, or questions arising on a trial involving both law and fact. Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300, 79 N.W. 481.

MIXED SUBJECTS OF PROPERTY. Such as fall within the definition of things real, but which are attended, nevertheless, with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as emblements, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings, connected with land. Besides these, there are others which, though things personal in point of definition, are, in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real; such as animals \textit{fems natura}, charters and deeds, court rolls, and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coats of armor, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heirlooms. Wharton.

MIXED TRIBUNALS. A name given to an international jurisdiction introduced into Egypt in 1878, after negotiations with the various Christian Powers of Europe.

This tribunal made the administration of civil justice quite independent of the government of Egypt. They have jurisdiction over cases between persons of different nations, whether native or European, but criminal charges against natives are heard in the native criminal courts and those against Europeans in the proper consular courts. There are three first instance courts, one at Alexandria with eighteen judges, of whom twelve are foreign, one at Cairo with nineteen judges, of whom thirteen are foreign, and one at Mansura with nine judges, of whom six are foreign, and a Court of Appeal sitting at Alexandria, composed of fifteen judges. The jurisdiction cannot be invoked unless one party is a foreigner, but it is said to be not uncommon for Egyptian merchants to assign their claims to foreigners, so as to get them into these courts. Ann. Bull. of Comp. Law Bureau, 1911, p. 43. The judges are subjects of various European states, and of the United States and Brazil. They are appointed by their respective governments; Milner, England in Egypt.

These courts were instituted for a period of five years only, and have been renewed at various times. Bonfils, Manual of Int. Law 460; 23 L.Q.R. 409; 8 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 445.

MIXTION. The mixture or confusion of goods or chattels belonging severally to different owners, in such a way that they can no longer be separated or distinguished; as where two measures of wine belonging to different persons are poured together into the same cask.

MIXTUM IMPERIUM. Lat. In old English law, mixed authority; a kind of civil power. A term applied by Lord Hale to the "power" of certain subordinate civil magistrates as distinct from "jurisdiction." Hale, Anal. § 11.

MOB. An assemblage of many people, acting in a violent and disorderly manner, defying the law, and committing, or threatening to commit, deprivations upon property or violence to persons. Alexander v. State, 40 Tex.Cr.R. 395, 50 S.W. 716; Marshall v. Buffalo, 50 App.Div. 149, 64 N.Y.S. 411; Champaign County v. Church, 62 Ohio St. 318, 57 N.E. 50, 48 L.R.A. 738.

The word, in legal use, is practically synonymous with "riot," but the latter is the more correct term. Koska v. Kansas City, 123 Kan. 362, 255 P. 57, 58; Blakeman v. City of Wichita, 93 Kan. 444, 144 P. 816, L.R.A.1915C, 578.

MOBBING AND RIOTING. In Scotch law, a general term including all those convocations of the lieges for violent ends. The jurisdiction cannot be invoked unless one party is a foreigner, and a Court of Appeal sitting at Alexandria, composed of fifteen judges. The judges are subjects of various European states, and of the United States and Brazil. They are appointed by their respective governments; Milner, England in Egypt.

These courts were instituted for a period of five years only, and have been renewed at various times. Bonfils, Manual of Int. Law 460; 23 L.Q.R. 409; 8 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 445.

MIXTION. The mixture or confusion of goods or chattels belonging severally to different owners, in such a way that they can no longer be separated or distinguished; as where two measures of wine belonging to different persons are poured together into the same cask.

MIXTUM IMPERIUM. Lat. In old English law, mixed authority; a kind of civil power. A term applied by Lord Hale to the "power" of certain subordinate civil magistrates as distinct from "jurisdiction." Hale, Anal. § 11.

MOB. An assemblage of many people, acting in a violent and disorderly manner, defying the law, and committing, or threatening to commit, deprivations upon property or violence to persons. Alexander v. State, 40 Tex.Cr.R. 395, 50 S.W. 716; Marshall v. Buffalo, 50 App.Div. 149, 64 N.Y.S. 411; Champaign County v. Church, 62 Ohio St. 318, 57 N.E. 50, 48 L.R.A. 738.

The word, in legal use, is practically synonymous with "riot," but the latter is the more correct term. Koska v. Kansas City, 123 Kan. 362, 255 P. 57, 58; Blakeman v. City of Wichita, 93 Kan. 444, 144 P. 816, L.R.A.1915C, 578.

MOBBING AND RIOTING. In Scotch law, a general term including all those convocations of the lieges for violent ends. The jurisdiction cannot be invoked unless one party is a foreigner, and a Court of Appeal sitting at Alexandria, composed of fifteen judges. The judges are subjects of various European states, and of the United States and Brazil. They are appointed by their respective governments; Milner, England in Egypt.

These courts were instituted for a period of five years only, and have been renewed at various times. Bonfils, Manual of Int. Law 460; 23 L.Q.R. 409; 8 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 445.
MOCK. To deride, to laugh at, to ridicule, to treat with scorn and contempt. State v. Warner, 34 Conn. 279.

MOCKADOES. A kind of cloth made in England, mentioned in St. 23 Eliz. c. 9.

MODAL LEGACY. See Legacy.

MODE. The manner in which a thing is done; as the mode of proceeding, the mode of process. Anderson's L. Dict.

MODEL. A pattern or representation of something to be made. A fac simile of something invented, made on a reduced scale, in compliance with the patent laws. State v. Fox, 25 N.J.L. 566; Montana Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston, etc., Min. Co., 27 Mont. 288, 70 P. 1126.

MODERAMEN INCULPATIE TUTELIE. Lat. In Roman law, the regulation of justifiable defense. A term used to express that degree of force in defense of the person or property which a person might safely use, although it should occasion the death of the aggressor. Calvin; Bell.

MODERATA MISERICORDIA. A writ founded on Magna Charta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offense. It is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amerciament of the parties. New Nat. Brev. 167; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 76.

MODERATE CASTIGAVIT. Lat. In pleading, he moderately chastised. The name of a plea in trespass which justifies an alleged battery on the ground that it consisted in a moderate chastisement of the plaintiff by the defendant, which, from their relations, the latter had a legal right to inflict.

MODERATE SPEED. In admiralty law, as applied to a steam-vessel, "such speed only is moderate as will permit the steamer reasonably and effectually to avoid a collision by slackening speed, or by stopping and reversing, within the distance at which an approaching vessel can be seen." The City of New York, C.C.N.Y., 35 F. 609; The Alliance, D.C.N.Y., 39 F. 480. As to sailing vessel, see The Robert M. Thompson, C.C.A.N.Y., 244 F. 662, 671.

MODIATIO. In old English law, a certain duty paid for every tierce of wine.

MODICA CIRCUMSTANTIA FACTI JUS MUTAT. A small circumstance attending an act may change the law.

MODIFICATION. A change; an alteration which introduces new elements into the details, or cancels some of them, but leaves the general purpose and effect of the subject-matter intact. Wiley v. Corporation of Bluffton, 111 Ind. 152, 12 N.E. 165; State v. Tucker, 36 Or. 291, 61 P. 894, 51 L.R.A. 246.

"Modification" is not exactly synonymous with "amendment," for the former term denotes some minor change in the substance of the thing, without reference to its improvement or deterioration thereby, while the latter word imports an amelioration of the thing (as by changing the phraseology of an instrument, so as to make it more distinct or specific) without involving the idea of any change in substance or essence.

Scotch law. The term usually applied to the decree of the teind court, awarding a suitable stipend to the minister of a parish. Bell.

MODIFY. To alter; to change in incidental or subordinate features; enlarge, extend; limit, reduce. State v. Lincoln, 133 Minn. 178, 158 N.W. 50, 52; U. S. v. Felder, D.C.N.Y., 13 F.2d 527, 528. See Modification.

MODIUS. Lat. A measure. Specifically, a Roman dry measure having a capacity of about 550 cubic inches; but in medieval English law used as an approximate translation of the word "bushel."

MODIUS TERRIE VEL AGRI. In old English law, a quantity of ground containing in length and breadth 100 feet.

MODO ET FORMA. Lat. In manner and form. Words used in the old Latin forms of pleadings by way of traverse, and literally translated in the modern precedents, importing that the party traversing denies the allegation of the other party, not only in its general effect, but in the exact manner and form in which it is made. Steph.P1. 189, 190.

MODUS. Lat. Civil law. Manner; means; way. Old conveyancing. Mode; manner; the arrangement or expression of the terms of a contract or conveyance.

Also a consideration; the consideration of a conveyance, technically expressed by the word "ut."

A qualification, involving the idea of variance or departure from some general rule or form, either by way of restriction or enlargement, according to the circumstances of a particular case, the will of a donor, the particular agreement of parties, and the like. Burrril.

Criminal pleading. The modus of an indictment is that part of it which contains the narrative of the commission of the crime; the statement of the mode or manner in which the offense was committed. Tray. Lat. Max.

Ecclesiastical law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom.

Rank modus. One that is too large. Rankness is a mere rule of evidence, drawn from the improbability of the fact, rather than a rule of law. 2 Steph.Comm. 729.

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO. In ecclesiastical law, a custom or prescription of entire exemption from the payment of tithes; this is not valid, unless in the case of abbey-lands.

MODUS DECIMANDI. In ecclesiastical law, a manner of tithing; a partial exemption from tithes, or a pecuniary composition prescribed by immemorial usage, and of reasonable amount; for it will be invalid as a rank modus if greater than the value of the tithes in the time of Richard I. Stim.Law Gloss.

MODUS ET CONVENTIO VINCUNT LEGEM. Custom and agreement overrule law. This maxim down are in cases against public policy, morality, etc. 2 Coke, 73; Broom, Max. 689, 691-695.

MODUS TENENDI. The manner of holding; i.e., the different species of tenures by which estates are held.

MODUS TRANSFERRENDI. The manner of transferring.

MODUS VACANDI. The manner of vacating. How and why an estate has been relinquished or surrendered by a vassal to his lord might well be referred to by this phrase. Tray.Lat.Max. 8. v.

MOERDA. The secret killing of another; murder. 4 Bl.Comm. 194.

MOFUSSIL. In Hindu law, separated; particularized; the subordinate divisions of a district in contradistinction to Sadder or Sunder, which implies the chief seat of government. Wharton.

MOHAMMEDAN LAW. A system of native law prevailing among the Mohammedans in India, and administered there by the British government.

MOHATRA. In French law, a transaction covering a fraudulent device to evade the laws against usury. It takes place where an individual buys merchandise from another on a credit at a high price, to sell it immediately to the first seller, or to a third person who acts as his agent, at a much less price for cash. 16 Toullier, no. 44.

MOIDORE. A gold coin of Portugal, valued at twenty-seven English shillings.

MOIETY. The half of anything. Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. Litt. 125; 3 C.B. 274, 283; Young v. Smithers, 181 Ky. 847, 205 S.W. 949, 950.

MOLITURA. The toll or multure paid for grinding corn at a mill. Jacob.

MOLITURA LIBERA. Free grinding; a liberty to have a mill without paying tolls to the lord. Jacob.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT. Lat. He gentled hands upon. Formal words in the old Latin pleas in actions of trespass and assault where a defendant justified laying hands upon the plaintiff, as where it was done to keep the peace, etc. The phrase is literally translated in the modern precedents, and the original is retained as the name of the plea in such cases. 3 Bl.Comm. 21; 1 Chit.Pl. 501, 502; Id. 1071.

MOLMUTIAN LAWS. The laws of Dunvallo Molmutuis, a legendary or mythical king of the Britons, who is supposed to have begun his reign about 400 B.C. These laws were famous in the land till the Conquest. Tomlins; Mozley & Whiteley.

MOMENTUM. In the civil law, an instant; an indivisible portion of time. Calvin.

A portion of time that might be measured; a division or subdivision of an hour; answering in some degree to the modern minute, but of longer duration. Calvin.

MONACHISM. The state of monks.

MONARCHY. A government in which the supreme power is vested in a single person.

Where a monarch is invested with absolute power, the monarchy is termed "despotic;" where the supreme power is virtually in the laws, though the majesty of government and the administration are vested in a single person, it is a "limited" or "constitutional" monarchy. It is hereditary where the regal power descends immediately from the possessor to the next heir by blood, as in England; or elective, as was formerly the case in Poland. Wharton.

MONASTERIUM. A monastery; a church. Spelman.

MONASTICON. A book giving an account of monasteries, convents, and religious houses.

MONETA. Lat. Money, (q. v.).
MONETA EST JUSTUM MEDIUM ET MENSURA MUTABLES TANUM COMMUTABELIUM, NAM PER MEDIUM MONETIE FIT OMNIA RERUM CONVENTIONES ET JUSTA ZESTIMATIO. Da (ERRUPTA) RECURSUS CONVENIENCEZ MATERIUM. Money is the just medium and measure of commutable things, for by the medium of money a convenient and just estimation of all things is made.

MONETAGIUM. Mintage, or the right of coinage money. Cowell. Hence, anciently, a tribute payable to a lord who had the prerogative of coinage money, by his tenants, in consideration of his refraining from changing the coinage.

MONETANDI IUS COMPREHENDITUR IN REGALIBUS QUIE NUNQUAM A REGIO SCEPTRO ABDICANTUR. The right of coinage money is comprehended among those royal prerogatives which are never relinquished by the royal scepter. Da (LAMMAS) RECURSUS CONVENTIONEZ MATERIUM.

MONETARY. The usual meaning is "pertaining to coinage or currency or having to do with money", but it has been held to include personal property. In re Kipp's Will, Sur., 37 N.Y.S.2d 541, 543.

MONEY. In usual and ordinary acceptation it means gold, silver, or paper money used as circulat medium of exchange. And does not embrace notes, bonds, evidences of debt, or other personal or real estate. Lane v. Bailey, 280 Ky. 319, 133 S.W.2d 74, 79, 81. Currency; the circulating medium; cash.

The term "moneys" is not of more extensive signification than "money," and means only cash, and not things in action. Mann v. Mann, 14 Johns., N.Y., 1, 7 Am.Dec. 416.

In its strict technical sense, "money" means coined metal, usually gold or silver, upon which the government stamp has been impressed to indicate its value. In its more popular sense, "money" means any currency, tokens, bank-notes, or other circulating medium in general use as the representative of value. Kennedy v. Briere, 45 Tex. 305; Cook v. State, 30 Or. 388, 41 P. 931, 924; Vick v. Howard, 136 Va. 101, 116 S.E. 465, 467, 31 A.L.R. 240.

The simple meaning of "money" is current coin, but it may mean possessions expressible in money values. "Money" has no technical meaning, but is of ambiguous import, and may be interpreted having regard to all surrounding circumstances under which it is used. "Money" is often and popularly used as equivalent to "property." "Money" means wealth reckoned in terms of money; capital considered as a cash asset; specifically such wealth or capital dealt in as a commodity to be loaned, invested, or the like; wealth considered as a cash asset. Salt Lake County v. Utah Copper Co., C.C.A.Utah, 93 F.2d 127, 132.

In its more comprehensive and general sense, it means wealth,—the representative of commodities of all kinds, of lands, and of everything that can be transferred in commerce. Paul v. Ball, 31 Tex. 10. A general, indefinite term for the measure and representative of value.

PUBLIC MONEY. Revenue. Hays v. State, 22 Okl. Cr. 99, 210 P. 728, 730. Money received by officers of the state in the ordinary processes of taxation, etc. Beaumont S. L. & W. Ry. Co. v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W. 641, 642; Wardell v. Town of Killingly, 97 Conn. 423, 117 A. 520, 522. Under a municipal charter, money or funds belonging to a city; moneys which are owing or payable to the city in its corporate capacity, such as assessments, license fees, or money derived from the sales of property, wharfage charges, and such like, City of Sacramento v. Simmons, 66 Cal. App. 18, 225 P. 36, 39. Under a statute, all money which by law the sheriff in his capacity as such and as trustee of the county and district is authorized to collect, receive, and disburse for public purposes. Bunch v. Short, 78 W.Va. 764, 90 S.E. 810, 812. As used in the United States statutes, the money of the federal government received from the public revenues, or intrusted to its fiscal officers, wherever it may be. See Branch v. U. S., 12 CICI. 281.

As to money "Broker," "Count," "Judgment," and "Scriever," see those titles.

MONEY-BILL. In parliamentary language, an act by which revenue is directed to be raised, for any purpose or in any shape whatsoever, either for governmental purposes, and collected from the whole people generally, or for the benefit of a particular district, and collected in that district, or for making appropriations. Opinion of Justices, 126 Mass. 547; Northern Counties Inv. Trust v. Sears, 30 Or. 388, 41 P. 931, 35 L.R.A. 188.

MONEY CHANGERS. A money changer is one whose occupation is the exchanging of kinds or denominations of currency, and the common meaning of the term pertained to those persons who, in early history, engaged in the business of foreign exchange and it includes the business of a banker and buying and selling of uncurrenet funds and the exchanging of one kind of money for another. Arnold v. City of Chicago, 387 Ill. 532, 56 N.E.2d 795, 799.

MONEY CLAIMS. In English practice, under the judicature act of 1875, claims for the price of goods sold, for money lent, for arrears of rent, etc., and other claims where money is directly payable on a contract express or implied, as opposed to the cases where money is claimed by way of damages for some independent wrong, whether by breach of contract or otherwise. These "money claims" correspond very nearly to the "money counts" hitherto in use. Mozley & Whitley.

MONEY DEMAND. A claim for a fixed and liquidated amount of money, or for a sum which can be ascertained by mere calculation; in this sense, distinguished from a claim which must be passed upon and liquidated by a jury, called "damages." Roberts v. Nodwift, 8 Ind. 341; Mills v. Long, 58 Ala. 460.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED. In pleading, the technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

Gist of action for "money had and received" is that defendant has received money which, in equity and good conscience, should have been paid to plaintiff and under such circumstances that he ought to pay it over. Bosworth v. Wolfe, 146 Wash. 615, 264 P. 413, 417, 56 A.L.R. 1117.

MONEY LAND. A phrase descriptive of money which is held upon a trust to convert it into land.

MONEY LENT. In pleading, the technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for that the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

MONEY MADE. The return made by a sheriff to a writ of execution, signifying that he has collected the sum of money required by the writ.

MONEY OF ADIEU. In French law, earnest money; so called because given at parting in completion of the bargain. Arrhes is the usual French word for earnest money; "money of adieu" is a provincialism found in the province of Orleans. Poth.Cont. 507.
MONEY

MONEY ORDER. Under the postal regulations of the United States, a money order is a species of draft drawn by one post-office upon another for an amount of money deposited at the first office by the person purchasing the money order, and payable at the second office to a payee named in the order. U. S. v. Long, C.C.Ga., 30 F. 679.

MONEY—ORDER OFFICE. One of the post-offices authorized to draw or pay money orders.

MONEY PAID. In pleading, the technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant.

MONEYED CAPITAL. This term has a more limited meaning than the term "personal property," and applies to such capital as is readily soluble in money. Mercantile Nat. Bank v. New York, 121 U.S. 138, 7 S.Ct. 826, 30 L.Ed. 895.

MONEYED CORPORATION. See Corporation.

MONGER. A dealer or seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity, to express a seller of such commodity.

MONIERS, or MONEYEERS. Ministers of the mint; also bankers. Cowell.

MONIMENT. A memorial, superscription, or record.

MONITION. Admiralty. The summons to appear and answer, issued on filing the libel; which is either a simple monition in personam or an attachment and monition in rem. Ben.Adm. 228, 239.

It is sometimes termed "monition viis et modis," and has been supposed to be derived from the old Roman practice of summoning a defendant. Manro v. Almeida, 10 Wheat. 490, 6 L.Ed. 369.

The monition, in American admiralty practice, is, in effect, a summons, citation, or notice, though in form a command to the marshal to cite and admonish the defendant to appear and answer, and not a summons addressed to the party. 2 Conk.Adm., 2d Ed., 147.

General monition. In civil law and admiralty practice, a monition or summons to all parties in interest to appear and show cause against the decree prayed for.

Practice. A monition is a formal order of the court commanding something to be done by the person to whom it is directed, and who is called the "person monished." Thus, when money is decreed to be paid, a monition may be obtained commanding its payment. In ecclesiastical procedure, a monition is an order monishing or warning the party complained against to do or not to do a certain act "under pain of the law and contempt thereof." A monition may also be appended to a sentence inflicting a punishment for a past offense; in that case the monition forbids the repetition of the offense. Sweet.

MONITORY LETTERS. Communications of warning and admonition sent from an ecclesiastical judge, upon information of scandal and abuses within the cognizance of his court.

MONOCRACY. A government by one person.

MONOCRAT. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

MONOGAMY. The marriage of one wife only, or the state of such as are restrained to a single wife. Webster.

A marriage contracted between one man and one woman, in exclusion of all the rest of mankind. The term is used in opposition to "bigamy" and "polygamy." Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 857.

MONOGAMY. The marriage of one wife only, or the state of such as are restrained to a single wife. Webster.

MONOMACHY. A duel; a single combat.

It was anciently allowed by law for the trial or proof of crimes. It was even permitted in pecuniary causes, but it is now forbidden both by the civil law and canon laws.

MONOMANIA. In medical jurisprudence, derangement of a single faculty of the mind, or with regard to a particular subject, the other faculties being in regular exercise. See Insanity.

MONOPOLIA DICITUR, CUM UNUS SOLUS ALIQUOD GENUS MERCATURIE UNIVERSUM EMIT, PRETIUM AD SUUM LIBITUM STATUENS. 11 Coke, 86. It is said to be a monopoly when one person alone buys up the whole of one kind of commodity, fixing a price at his own pleasure.

MONOPOLISM. The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly. Calvin.

MONOPOLY. A privilege or peculiar advantage vested in one or more persons or companies, consisting in the exclusive right (or power) to carry on a particular business or trade, manufacture a particular article, or control the sale of the whole supply of a particular commodity.

Defined in English law to be "a license or privilege allowed by the king for the sole buying and selling, making, working, or using, of anything whatsoever; whereby the subject in general is restrained from that liberty of manufacturing or trading which he had before." 4 Bl. Comm. 159; 4 Steph. Comm. 291; State v. Duluth Board of Trade, 107 Minn. 506, 121 N.W. 395, 23 L.R.A.,N.S., 1280.

A monopoly consists in the ownership or control of so large a part of the market-supply or output of a given commodity as to stifle competition, restrict the freedom of commerce, and give the monopolist control over prices. State v. Atlantic Ice & Coal Co., 210 N.C. 742, 188 S.E. 412, 416.

MONSTER. A prodigious birth; a human birth or offspring not having the shape of mankind, which cannot be heir to any land, albeit it be brought forth in marriage. Bract. fol. 5; Co.Litt.
7, 8; 2 Bl.Comm. 246.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT. L. Fr. In English law, a showing or manifestation of right; one of the common law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the crown, of either real or personal property.

It is the proper proceeding when the right of the party, as well as the right of the crown, appears upon record, and consists in putting in a claim of right grounded on facts already acknowledged and established, and praying the judgment of the court whether upon these facts the king or the subject has the right. 3 Bl.Comm. 256; 4 Coke, 54b.

MONSTRANS DE FAITS. L. Fr. In old English practice, a showing of deeds; a species of profert.
Cowell.

MONSTRAVERUNT, WRIT OF. In English law,
a writ which lies for the tenants of ancient de-mesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor. Fitzh.

MONSTRUM. A box in which relics are kept;
also a muster of soldiers. Cowell.

MONSTRAVERUNT, WRIT OF. In English law,
a writ which lies for the tenants of ancient de-mesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor. Fitzh.

MONSTRUM. A box in which relics are kept;
also a muster of soldiers. Cowell.

MONTES. In Spanish law, forests or woods.
White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 1.

MONTES PIETATIS. Public pawnbroking establishments; institutions established by government, in some European countries, for lending small sums of money on pledges of personal property. In France they are called "monts de piéte."

MONTH. Word "month," unless otherwise defined, means "calendar month," or time from any day of any of the months as adjudged in the cal-cendar to corresponding day, if any, if not any, to last day, of next month. Daniel v. Ormand, 26
Ala.App. 441, 163 So. 361.

The space of time denoted by this term varies according as one or another of the following varieties of months is intended:

Astronomical, containing one-twelfth of the time occupied by the sun in passing through the entire zodiac.

Calendar, civil, or solar, which is one of the months in the Gregorian calendar,—January, February, March, etc.,—which are of unequal length.

Lunar, being the period of one revolution of the moon, or twenty-eight days.

The word "month," when used in a statute or contract without qualification, meant at common law a lunar month of 28 days. State v. White, 73 Fla. 426, 74 So. 486, 487.

The matter is generally regulated by statute now. In re
313.

MONUMENT. Anything by which the memory of a person, thing, idea, art, science or event is preserved or perpetuated. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited. In re Ogden, 25 R.I.
373, 55 A. 933; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v.
Benedict, 41 R.I. 143, 103 A. 146, 147.

In real-property law and surveying, monuments are visible marks or indications left on natural or other objects indicating the lines and boundaries of a survey. In this sense the term includes not only posts, pillars, stone markers, cairns, and the like, but also fixed natural objects, blazed trees, and even a watercourse. Grier v. Pennsylvania Coal Co., 128 Pa. 79, 18 A. 480; Cox v. Freedley, 33

MONUMENTA QUZE NOS RECORDA VOCAM-
US SUNT VERITATIS ET VETUSTATIS VESTIG-IA. Co.Litt. 118. Monuments, which we call "records," are the vestiges of truth and antiquity.

MONUNG. See Manung.

MONYA, In Norman law, moneage. A tax or tribute of one shilling on every hearth, payable to the duke every three years, in consideration that he should not alter the coin. Hale, Com.Law, 148, and note.

MOOKTAR. In Hindu law, an agent or attorney.

MOOKTARNAMA. In Hindu law, a written authority constituting an agent; a power of attorney.

MOONSHINE. Intoxicating liquor illicitly produced or smuggled into community for beverage purposes, or spirituous liquor, illegally distilled or manufactured. State v. King, 331 Mo. 268, 53
S.W.2d 252, 254.

MOOR. An officer in the Isle of Man, who summons the courts for the several sheadings. The office is similar to the English bailiff of a hundred.

MOORAGE. A sum due by law or usage for mooring or fastening of ships to trees or posts at the shore, or to a wharf. Wharf Case, 3 Bland, Md., 373.

MOORING. In maritime law, anchoring or making fast to the shore or dock; the securing or confining a vessel in a particular station, as by cables and anchors or by a line or chain run to the wharf.

A vessel is "moored in safety," within the meaning of a policy of marine insurance, when she is thus moored to a wharf or dock, free from any immediate danger from any of the perils insured against. 1 Phil.Ins. 908; Bramhall v.

MOOT, n. English law. Moots are exercises in pleading, and in arguing doubtful cases and questions, by the students of an inn of court before the benches of the inn. Sweet.

Saxon law. A meeting or assemblage of peoples, particularly for governmental or judicial purposes. The more usual forms of the word were "mote" and "gemot." See those titles.

MOOT, adj. A subject for argument; unsettled; undecided. A moot point is one not settled by judicial decisions. A moot case is one which seeks to determine an abstract question which does not arise upon existing facts or rights. Adams v.

One which seeks to get a judgment on a pretended controversy, or a decision in advance about a right before it has been actually asserted and contested, or a judgment on some matter which, when rendered, for any reason, cannot have any practical legal effect upon a then existing con-MOOT COURT. A court held for the arguing of moot cases or questions.

MOOT HALL. The place where moot cases were argued. A o a council-chamber, hall of judgment, or town-h 1.

MOOT HILL Hill of meeting, (gemot,) on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence; the parties, etc., on an elevated platform below. Enc.Lond.

MOOT MAN. One of those who used to argue the reader’s cases in the inns of court.

MOOTA CANUM. In old English law, a pack of dogs. Cowell.

MOOTER. Marihuana is popularly known among the criminal element as “muggles,” or “mooter” and addicts are commonly termed “muggle heads.” State v. Navaro, 83 Utah 6, 26 P.2d 955.

MOOTING. The exercise of arguing questions of law or equity, raised for the purpose. See Moot.

MORA. Lat. In the civil law, delay; default; neglect; culpable delay or default. Calvin.

MORA. Sax. A moor; barren or unprofitable ground; marsh; a heath; a watery bog or moor. Co.Litt. 5; Fleta, 1, 2, c. 71.

MORA MUSSA. A watery or boggy moor; a morass.

MORAL. Pertains to character, conduct, intention, social relations, etc. United States v. Carroll., D.C.Mo., 30 r.Sup. 3, 6.

1. Pertaining or relating to the conscience or moral sense or to the general principles of right conduct.

2. Cognizable or enforceable only by the conscience or by the principles of right conduct, as distinguished from positive law.

3. Depending upon or resulting from probability; raising a belief or conviction in the mind independent of strict or logical proof.

4. Involving or affecting the moral sense; as in the phrase “moral insanity.”

MORAL ACTIONS. Those only in which men have knowledge to guide them, and a will to choose for themselves. Ruth, Inst. lib. 1, c. 1.

MORAL CERTAINTY. That degree of assurance which induces a man of sound mind to act, without doubt, upon the conclusions to which it leads. Wills, Circ.Ev. 7. A high degree of impression of the truth of a fact, falling short of absolute certainty, but sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, even in a capital case. Burrill, Circ.Ev. 198-200. As explained in the Century Dictionary, it signifies a probability sufficiently strong to justify action on it. In Webster’s International, the first definition given is, “a very high degree of probability, although not demonstrable, as a certainty.” It has also been used as indicating a conclusion of the mind established beyond a reasonable doubt. Gray v. State, 56 Okl.Cr. 208, 38 P.2d 967.

The phrase “moral certainty” has been introduced into our jurisprudence from the publicists and metaphysicians, and signifies only a very high degree of probability. It was observed by Puffendorf that, “when we declare such a thing to be morally certain, because it has been confirmed by credible witnesses, this moral certainty is nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us.” “Probable evidence,” says Bishop Butler, in the opening sentence of his Analogy, “is essentially distinguished from demonstrative by this: that it admits of degrees, and of all variety of them, from the highest moral certainty to the very lowest presumption.” Corn. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 23.

MORAL CONSIDERATION. See Consideration.

MORAL DURESS. Consists in imposition, oppression, undue influence, or the taking of undue advantage of the business or financial stress or extreme necessity or weakness of another. Lafayette Dramatic Productions v. Ferentz, 305 Mich. 193, 9 N.W.2d 57, 66, 145 A.L.R. 1158.

MORAL EVIDENCE. As opposed to “mathematical” or “demonstrative” evidence, this term denotes that kind of evidence which, without developing an absolute and necessary certainty, generates a high degree of probability or persuasive force. It is founded upon analogy or induction, experience of the ordinary course of nature or the sequence of events, and the testimony of men.

MORAL FRAUD. This phrase is one of the less usual designations of “actual” or “positive” fraud or “fraud in fact,” as distinguished from “constructive” fraud or “fraud in law.” It means fraud which involves actual guilt, a wrongful purpose, or moral obliquity.

MORAL HAZARD. See Hazard.

MORAL INSANITY. See Insanity.

MORAL LAW. The law of conscience; the aggregate of those rules and principles, of ethics which relate to right and wrong conduct and prescribe the standards to which the actions of men should conform in their dealings with each other. Moore v. Strickling, 46 W.Va. 515, 33 S.E. 274, 50 L.R.A. 279.

MORAL OBLIGATION. See Obligation.

Conduct contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals. Marsh v. State Bar of California, 210 Cal. 303, 291 P. 583, 584.

MORANDIE SOLUTIONIS CAUSA. Lat. For the purpose of delaying or postponing payment or performance.

MORATORIUM. A term designating suspension of all or of certain legal remedies against debtors, sometimes authorized by law during financial distress. Brown v. State Nat. Bank of Shawnee, 133 Okl. 173, 271 P. 833, 834. A period of permissive or obligatory delay; specifically, a period during which an obligor has a legal right to delay meeting MORATUR IN LEGE. Lat. He delays in law. The phrase describes the action of one who demurs, because the party does not proceed in pleading, but rests or abides upon the judgment of the court on a certain point, as to the legal sufficiency of his opponent’s pleading. The courts deliberate and determine thereupon.

MORAVIANS. Otherwise called "Herrnhutters" or "United Brethren." A sect of Christians whose social polity is particular and conspicuous. It sprung up in Moravia and Bohemia, on the opening of that reformation which stripped the chair of St. Peter of so many votaries, and gave birth to so many denominations of Christians. They give evidence on their solemn affirmation. 2 Steph.Comm. 338n.

MORON. One whose intellectual development proceeds normally up to about the 8th year of age, then is arrested, and never exceeds that of a normal child of about 12 years. - People v. Joyce, 233 N.Y. 61, 134 N.E. 836, 840.

MORPHINOMANIA, or MORPHINISM. The opium habit. An excessive desire for morphia.

MORRIS PLAN COMPANY. An industrial bank which accepts money from the public for investment in "investment certificates" which draw interest periodically payable to the investor, and which bank lends money principally to steadily employed salaried people who are required to secure repayment with the endorsement of two other employed salaried people, the contract calling for installment payments over a one year period. Other secured loans are also made. Board of Com’rs of Tulsa County v. Remedial Finance Corporation, 186 Okl. 648, 100 P.2d 240, 242.

MORS DICTUR ULTIMUM SUPPLICIUM. Death is called the “last punishment,” the “extremity of punishment.” 3 Inst. 212.

MORSSELLUM, or MORSELLUS, TERRIE. In old English law, a small parcel or bit of land.

MORT CIVILE, In French law, civil death, as upon conviction for felony.

MORT D’ANCESTOR. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in the English law. An assize of mort d’ancestor was a writ which lay for a person whose ancestor died seised of lands in fee-simple, and after his death a stranger abated; and this writ directed the sheriff to summon a jury or assess, who should view the land in question and recognize whether such ancestor were seised thereof on the day of his death, and whether the demandant were the next heir.

MORTAL. Destructive to life; causing or occasioning death; exposing to or deserving death, especially spiritual death; deadly; fatal; as, a mortal wound, State v. Logan, 344 Mo. 351, 126 S.W.2d 256, 259, 122 A.L.R. 417; or mortal sin; of or pertaining to time of death. State v. Baker, 122 Kan. 552, 253 P. 221, 223.

MORTALITY. This word, in its ordinary sense, never means violent death, but death arising from natural causes. Lawrence v. Aberdein, 5 Barn. & Ald. 110.

MORTALITY TABLES. A means of ascertaining the probable number of years any man or woman of a given age and of ordinary health will live. Butler v. Butler, 180 Minn. 134, 230 N.W. 575, 579.
MORTGAGE

MORTGAGE. An estate created by a conveyance absolute in its form, but intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 475.

A debt by specialty, secured by a pledge of lands, of which the legal ownership is vested in the creditor, but of which, in equity, the debtor and those claiming under him remain the actual owners, until debarred by judicial sentence or their own laches, Coote, Mortg. 1.

The foregoing definitions are applicable to the common-law conception of a mortgage. But in many states in modern times, it is regarded as a mere lien, and not as creating a title or estate. Zeigler v. Sawyer, Tex. Civ. App., 16 S.W. 2d 894, 896. It is a pledge or security of particular property for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation, whatever form the transaction may take, but is not now regarded as a conveyance in effect, though it may be cast in the form of a conveyance. Muth v. Goddard, 28 Mont. 237, 72 P. 621, 98 Am. St. Rep. 553; Johnson v. Robinson, 68 Tex. 399, 4 S.W. 625; Killebrew v. Hines, 104 N.C. 182, 10 S.E. 159, 17 Am. St. Rep. 672; Stockel v. Elich, 297 P. 595, 597, 112 Cal. App. 588; In re Morgan, D.C. N.J., 39 F. 2d 489, 490.

Chattel mortgage. A mortgage of goods, chattels, or personal property. See Chattel Mortgage.

Conventional mortgage. The conventional mortgage is a contract by which a person binds the whole of his property, or a portion of it only, in favor of another, to secure the execution of some engagement, but without divesting himself of possession. Civ. Code La. art. 3290; Succession of Benjamin, 39 La. Ann. 612, 2 So. 187. It is distinguished from the "legal" mortgage, which is a privilege which the law alone in certain cases gives to a creditor over the property of his debtor, without stipulation of the parties. This last is very much like a general lien at common law, created by the law rather than by the act of the parties, such as a judgment lien.

Equitable mortgage. A specific lien upon real property to secure the payment of money or the performance of some other obligation, which a court of equity will recognize and enforce, in accordance with the clearly ascertained intent of the parties to that effect, but which lacks the essential features of a legal mortgage, either because it grows out of the transactions of the parties without any deed or express contract to give a lien, or because the instrument used for that purpose is wanting in some of the characteristics of a common-law mortgage, or, being absolute in form, is accompanied by a collateral reservation of a right to redeem, or because an explicit agreement to W' the mortgage has not been carried into effect. 4 Kent, Comm. 150; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1018; Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U.S. 306, 25 L. Ed. 999; Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 26 P. 789, 13 L.R.A. 187.

In English law, the following mortgages are equitable: (1) Where the subject of a mortgage is trust property, which security is effected either by a formal deed or a written memorandum, notice being given to the trustees in order to preserve the priority. (2) Where it is an equity of redemption, which is merely a right to bring an action in the chancery division to redeem the estate. (3) Where there is a written agreement only to make a mortgage, which creates an equitable lien on the land. (4) Where a debtor deposits the title-deeds of his estate with his creditor or some person on his behalf, without even a verbal communication. The deposit itself is deemed evidence of an executed agreement or contract for a mortgage for such estate. Wharton.

First mortgage bonds. Bonds the payment of which is secured by a first mortgage on property. Bank of Atchison County v. Byers, 139 Mo. 627, 41 S.W. 325; Corn. v. Williamstown, 156 Mass. 70, 30 N.E. 472.

General mortgage. Mortgages are sometimes classified as general and special, a mortgage of the former class being one which binds all property, present and future, of the debtor (sometimes called a "blanket" mortgage); while a special mortgage is limited to certain particular and specified property. Barnard v. Erwin, 2 Rob., La., 415.

Judicial mortgage. In the law of Louisiana, the lien resulting from judgments, whether rendered on contested cases or by default, whether final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. Civ. Code La. art. 3321.

Legal mortgage. A term used in Louisiana. The lien alone in certain cases gives to the creditor a mortgage on the property of his debtor, without it being requisite that the parties should stipulate it. This is called "legal mortgage." Civ. Code La. art. 3311.

Mortgage of goods. A conveyance of goods in gage or mortgage by which the whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee; and, if the goods are not redeemed at the time stipulated, the title becomes absolute in law, although equity will interfere to compel a redemption. It is distinguished from a "pledge" by the circumstance that possession by the mortgagee is not or may not be essential to create or to support the title. Story, Bailm. § 287. See Chattel Mortgage.

Purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage given, concurrently with a conveyance of land, by the vendee to the vendor, on the same land, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price. Baker v.
Second mortgage. One which takes rank immediately after a first mortgage on the same property, without any intervening liens, and is next entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds of the property. Green's Appeal, 97 Pa. 347. Properly speaking, however, the term designates the second of a series of mortgages, not necessarily the second lien. For instance, the lien of a judgment might intervene between the first and second mortgages; in which case, the second mortgage would be the third lien.

Tacit mortgage. In Louisiana, the same as a "legal" mortgage. See supra.

Welsh mortgage. In English law, a species of security which partakes of the nature of a mortgage, as there is a debt due, and an estate is given as security for the repayment, but differs from it in the circumstances that the rents and profits are to be received without account till the principal money is paid off, and there is no remedy to enforce payment, while the mortgagor has a perpetual power of redemption. It is now rarely used. 1 Pow. Mortg. 373a; Bentley v. Phelps, 3 F.Cas. 250.

MORTGAGEE. He that takes or receives a mortgage.

MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION. A mortgagee of real property who is in possession of it with the agreement or assent of the mortgagor, express or implied, and in recognition of his mortgage and because of it, and under such circumstances as to make the satisfaction of his lien an equitable prerequisite to his being dispossessed. Rogers v. Benton, 39 Minn. 39, 38 N.W. 765, 12 Am.St.Rep. 613; Stouffer v. Harlan, 68 Kan. 135, 74 P. 610, 64 L.R.A. 320.

MORTGAGOR. One who, having all or some part of title to property, by written instrument pledges that property for some particular purpose such as security for a debt. Goodell v. Silver Creek Nat. Bank, Sup., 48 N.Y.S.2d 572, 576.

MORTH. Sax. Murder, answering exactly to the French "assassinat" or "muerte de guet-apens."

MORTHLAGA. A murderer. Cowell.

MORTLAGE. Murder. Cowell.

MORTIFICATION. In Scotch law, a term nearly synonymous with "mortmain." Bell. Lands are said to be mortified for a charitable purpose.

MORTIS CAUSA. Lat. By reason of death; in contemplation of death. Thus used in the phrase "Donatio mortis causa," (q. v.).

MORTIS MOMENTUM EST ULTIMUM VITAE. MORTUUS. Lat. Dead. So in sheriff's return. mortuis est, he is dead.
MORTUUS EXITUS NON EST EXITUS. A dead issue is no issue. Co.Litt. 29. A child born dead is not considered as issue.

MORTUUS SINE PROLE. Dead without issue. In genealogical tables often abbreviated to "m. s. f."

MOS RETINENDUS EST FIDEISSIMIE VETUSTATIS. 4 Coke, 78. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained.

MOSCOW INTERNATIONAL. See Third International.

MOSLEM LAW. One of the two great systems of customary law which the English found in India. It regulated the life and relations of all Moslems, and parts of it, especially its penal provisions, were applied to both Moslems and Hindus. Bryce, Extension of the Law.

MOST FAVORED NATION CLAUSE. A clause found in most treaties providing that the citizens or subjects of the contracting states may enjoy the privileges accorded by either party to those of the most favored nations. It is said that the general design of such clauses is to establish the principle of equality of international treatment. The test of whether this principle is violated by the concession of advantages to a particular nation is, not the form in which such concession is made, but the condition on which it is granted; whether it is given for a price, or whether this price is in the nature of a substantial equivalent, and not of a mere evasion. The United States has always taken the stand that reciprocal commercial concessions are given for a valuable consideration and are not within the scope of this clause. Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U.S. 190, 8 S.Ct. 456, 31 L.Ed. 386. Great Britain has taken the positive position. See Consular Treaty Rights and Comments on the "Most Favored Nation" Clause, by Ernest Ludwig; 3 Amer.Journ.Int.L. 57; Herod, Most Favored Nation Treatment; Moore's Dig.Int.Law; 3 Amer. Journ.Int.Law 395.

MOSRETENCOS. In Spanish law, strayed goods; estrays. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, c. 6.

MOTE. Sax. A meeting; an assembly. Used in composition, as burgmote, folkmote, etc.

MOTE-BELL. The bell which was used by the Saxons to summon people to the court. Cowell.

MOTEER. A customary service or payment at the mote or court of the lord, from which some were exempted by charter or privilege. Cowell.

MOTHER-IN-LAW. The mother of one's wife or of one's husband.

MOTION. Parliamentary law. The formal mode in which a member submits a proposed measure or resolve for the consideration and action of the meeting.

Practice. Primarily an application for a rule or order made viva voce to a court or judge, but the term is generally employed with reference to all such applications, whether written or oral. Irwin v. Gilson Realty Co., 117 Fla. 394, 158 So. 77.

Special motion. A motion addressed to the discretion of the court, and which must be heard and determined; as distinguished from one which may be granted of course. Merchants' Bank v. Crysler, Mo., 14 C.C.A. 444, 67 F. 390.

MOTION FOR DECREE. Under the chancery practice, the most usual mode of bringing on a suit for hearing when the defendant has answered is by motion for decree. Hunter, Suit Eq. 59; Daniell, Ch.Pr. 722.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT. In English practice, a proceeding whereby a party to an action moves for the judgment of the court in his favor. S.Ct. Rules 1883, ord. 40.

MOTION IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT. It is intended to avoid judgment because of unamendable defect appearing on record. Turner v. Shackford, 43 Ga.App. 271, 158 S.E. 439, 440.

MOTION IN ERROR. A motion in error stands on the same footing as a writ of error; the only difference is that, on a motion in error, no service is required to be made on the opposite party, because, being before the court when the motion is filed, he is bound to take notice of it at his peril. Treadway v. Coe, 21 Conn. 283.

MOTION TO SET ASIDE JUDGMENT. This is a step taken by a party in an action who is dissatisfied with the judgment directed to be entered at the trial of the action.

MOTIVE. Cause or reason that moves the will and induces action. Commonwealth v. Trunk, 311 Pa. 555, 167 A. 333, 338. An inducement, or that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge a criminal act. People v. Lewis, 275 N.Y. 33, 9 N.E.2d 765, 768.

In the popular mind intent and "motive" are not infrequently regarded as one and the same thing. In law there is a clear distinction between them. "Motive" is the moving power which impels to action for a definite result. Intent is the purpose to use a particular means to effect such result. "Motive" is that which incites or stimulates a person to do an act. People v. Weiss, 252 App.Div. 463, 300 N.Y.S. 249, 255.

MOTOR VEHICLE. In the Uniform Act Regulating Traffic on Highways, 11 U.L.A., and similar statutes, any self-propelled "vehicle," defined as including every device in, upon, or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except devices moved by human or muscular power or used exclusively upon stationary rails or tracks. The term "motor vehicles," although sometimes regarded as synonymous with or limited to "automobiles," often has a broader meaning, and includes not only ordinary automobiles, but also motorbusses and trucks, as well as motorcycles. Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., § 2.

Motor vehicle insurance. See Insurance.

A motorcycle is not a "motor-driven car" as that term is used in insurance policies. Generally, however, a motorcycle is included in the term "motor vehicle," although under some statutes the words "automobile" and "motorcycle" are separately defined and the regulations and liabilities with respect thereto differ in material ways. Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed., § 2.

MOTU PROPRIO. Lat. Of his own motion. The commencing words of a certain kind of papal rescript.

MOURNING. The dress or apparel worn by mourners at a funeral and for a time afterwards. Also the expenses paid for such apparel.

As to "year of mourning," see that title.

MOUTH OF RIVER. By statute in some states, the mouth of a river or creek, which empties into another river or creek, is defined as the point where the middle of the channel of each intersects the other. Pol.Code Cal. § 3908; Rev.St.Ariz.1901, par. 931, Rev.Code 1928, § 742.

MOVABLE. That which can be changed in place, as movable property; or in time, as movable feasts or terms of court. Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Iowa 71, 52 N.W. 1124, 17 L.R.A. 788.

MOVABLE ESTATE. A term equivalent to "personal estate" or "personal property." Den v. Sayre, 3 N.J.L. 187.

MOVABLE FREEHOLD. A term applied by Lord Coke to real property which is capable of being increased or diminished by natural causes; as where the owner of seashore acquires or loses land as the waters recede or approach. Holman v. Hodges, 112 Iowa 714, 84 N.W. 950, 58 L.R.A. 673.

MOVABLES. Things movable; movable or personal chattels which may be annexed to or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one part of the world to another. 2 Bl.Comm. 387.

Movables consist—First, of inanimate things, as goods, plate, money, jewels, implements of war, garments, and the like or vegetable productions, as the fruit or other parts of a plant when severed from the body of it or the whole plant itself when severed from the ground; secondly, of animals, which have in themselves a principle and power of motion. 2 Steph.Comm. 67.

Movables are further distinguished into such as are in possession, or which are in the power of the owner, as a horse in actual use, a piece of furniture in a man's own house; and such as are in the possession of another, and can only be recovered by action, which are therefore said to be in action, as a debt.

But it has been held that movable property, in a legacy, strictly includes only such as is corporeal and tangible; not, therefore, rights in action, as judgment or bond debts; Strong v. White, 19 Conn. 238, 245; 1 Wm. Jones 225; but see Penniman v. French, 17 Pick., Mass., 404, 28 Am.Dec. 309; and that, in a will, "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass growing crops, nor building materials on ground; Jackson v. Vandervepreil, 2 Dall. 142, 1 L.Ed. 323.

Civil law. Movables (mobilia,) properly denoted inanimate things; animals being distinguished as moventia, things moving. Calvin. But these words mobilia and moventia are also used synonymously, and in the general sense of "movables." Id.

Scotch law. "Movables" are opposed to "heritage." So that every species of property, and every right a man can hold, is by that law either heritable or movable. Bell.

MOVANT. One who moves; one who makes a motion before a count; the applicant for a rule or order.

MOVE. To make an application to a court for a rule or order, or to take action in any matter. To ask. Harris v. Chicago House-Wrecking Co., 314 Ill. 500, 145 N.E. 666, 669. The term comprehends all things necessary to be done by a litigant to obtain an order of the court directing the relief sought. O'Hanion v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 76 Mont. 128, 245 P. 518, 519.

To propose a resolution, or recommend action in a deliberate body.

To pass over; to be transferred; as when the consideratia of a contract is said to "move" from one party to the other.

To occasion; to contribute to; to tend or lead to. The forewheel of a wagon was said "to move to the death of a man." Sayer, 249.

MOVE OUT. To vacate; to yield up possession. Polich v. Severson, 68 Mont. 225, 216 R 785, 787.

MOVEMENT. In relating to train, the word "movement" was not restricted to actual revolution of wheels of train or locomotive engaged in interstate commerce, but could apply to a train tied up on a siding. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. United States, C.C.A.Idaho, 211 F. 309, 312. Similarly, as regards vehicles, the term could comprehend the control and management of vehicles, including power to require that motor be closed down when a motor vehicle was left on street. White v. District of Columbia, 55 App.D.C. 197, 4 F.2d 163, 164.

MOVENT. An alternative spelling of movant.

MOVING FOR AN ARGUMENT. Making a motion on a day which is not motion day in virtue of having argued a special case; used in the exchequer after it became obsolete in the queen's bench. Wharton, MOVING PAPERS. Such papers as are made the basis of some motion in court proceedings, e. g. a bill in equity with supporting affidavits.

MOVING PICTURE SHOW. A place where motion pictures are exhibited for the purpose of public amusement and entertainment. State v. Morris, 28 Idaho 599, 155 P. 296, 297, L.R.A.1916D, 573.

MRS. Title of courtesy prefixed to name of woman to indicate that she has been married. Guide Pub. Co. v. Futrell, 175 Va. 77, 7 S.E.2d 133, 138.

MUCIANA CAUTIO. See Cautio.

MUEBLES. In Spanish law, movables; all sorts of personal property. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 3, c. 1, § 2.

MUFFLER. Any of various devices to deaden the noise of escaping gases or vapors, such as a tube filled with obstructions, through which the exhaust gases of an internal combustion engine, as an automobile, are passed (called also a silencer), or an attachment usually consisting of a series of perforated baffles for a locomotive pop safety valve. Hines v. Foreman, Tex.Com.App., 243 S.W. 479, 484.

MUGGLE; MUGGLE HEADS. Marihuana is popularly known among the criminal element as "muggles" or "mooter," and addicts are commonly termed "muggle heads." State v. Navaro, 83 Utah, 6, 26 P.2d 955.

MUIRBURN. In Scotch law, the offense of setting fire to a muir or moor. 1 Brown, Ch. 78, 116.

MULATTO. A person that is the offspring of a negro by a white man, or of a white woman by a negro. Thurman v. State, 18 Ala. 276. In a more general sense, a person of mixed Caucasian and negro blood, or Indian and negro blood. Webster, Dict. See, also, Mustizo.

Properly a mulatto is a person one of whose parents is wholly black and the other wholly white; but the word does not always, though perhaps it does generally, require so exactly even a mixture of blood, nor is its signification alike in all the states. 1 Bish.Mar. & D. § 308.

MULCT. A penalty or punishment imposed on a person guilty of some offense, tort, or misdemeanor, usually a pecuniary fine or condemnation in damages. Cook v. Marshall County, 119 Iowa 384, 93 N.W. 372, 104 Am.St.Rep. 283. A forfeit, fine, or penalty. Kleinath, Schuster & Hudson v. Reed, 18 N.M. 358, 137 P. 841, 844. To sentence to a pecuniary penalty or forfeiture as a punishment; fine; hence to fine unjustly; to punish. Gorton v. Doty, 57 Idaho 792, 69 P.2d 136, 142.

Formerly, an imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like.

MULCTA DAMNUM FAME NON IRROGAT. Cod. 1, 54; Calvin. A fine does not involve loss of character.

MULE. A hybrid between the horse and the ass; especially, the offspring of a male ass and a mare. Webster, Diet.

MULIER. Lat. A woman; a wife; a widow; a virgin; a legitimate child. 1 Inst. 243; Co.Litt. 170, 253; 2 Bla.Com. 248.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate. Co. Litt. 243.

MULIER PUISNE. L. Fr. When a man has a bastard son, and afterwards marries the mother, and by her has also a legitimate son, the elder son is bastard eignó, and the younger son is mulier puisnd.

MULIERATUS. A legitimate son. Glanvil.

MULIERTY. In old English law, the state or condition of a mulier, or lawful issue. Co.Litt. 352b. The opposite of bastardy. Blount.

MULTA. A fine or final satisfaction, anciently given to the king by the bishops, that they might have power to make their wills, and that they might have the probate of other men’s wills, and the granting of administration. 2 Inst. 291. Called, also, multura episcopi.

A fine imposed ex arbitrio by magistrates on the procedes probiciarum. Inst. 4, 1.

MULTA CONCEDUNTUR PER OBLIQUUM QUIE NON CONCEDUNTUR DE DIRECTO. Many things are allowed indirectly which are not allowed directly. 6 Coke, 47.

MULTA IGNORAMUS QUIE NOBIS NON LAT-TERENT SI VETERUM LECTIO NOBIS FUIT FAMILIAR’S. 10 Coke, 73. We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors was familiar to us.

MULTA IN JURE COMMUNI CONTRA RA-TIONEM DISPUTANDI, PRO COMMUNI UTIL-ITATE INTRODUCTA SUNT. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, which are inconsistent with sound reason. Co.Litt. 70b; Broom, Max. 158; 2 Co. 75. See 3 Term 146; 7 id. 252.

MULTA MULTO EXERCITATIONE FACILIUS QUAM REGULIS PERCIPIES. 4 Inst. 50. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules.

MULTA NON VETAT LEX, QUIE TAMEN TACI-TE DAMNAVIT. The law forbids not many things which yet it has silently condemned.

MULTA TRANSEUNT CUM UNIVERSITATE QUIE NON PER SE TRANSEUNT. Many things pass with the whole which do not pass separately. Co.Litt. 12a.

MULTI MULTE, NEMO OMNIA NOVIT. 4 Inst. 348. Many men have known many things; no one has known everything.

The fault of improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confusing them; as, for example, the uniting in one bill of several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected against one defendant (more commonly called misjoinder of claims), or the demand of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants, in the same bill. Storke, Eq.P1. § 271; Essen v. Adams, 342 Mo. 1196, 119 S.W.2d 773, 777, 118 A.L.R. 1393.

"Multifariousness" as to matter consists in uniting in the same bill distinct and disconnected subjects, matters, or causes of action in one suit parties who are without a common interest in subject of litigation and have no connection with each other. Essen v. Adams, 342 Mo. 1196, 119 S.W.2d 773, 777, 118 A.L.R. 1393.

"Multifariousness" abstractly is incapable of an accurate definition, but includes those cases where a party is brought as a defendant on a record with a large portion of which, and, in the case made by which, he has no connection whatever. Stamey v. Fortner; 230 Ala. 204, 160 So. 116.

The vice of multifariousness is the union of causes of action which, or of parties whose claims, it is either impractical or inconvenient to adjudicate in a single suit. Where it is as practical and convenient for court and parties to deal with the claims, and parties joined, in one suit as in many, there is no multifariousness. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. R. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 71 C.C.A. 1, 137 F. 26; Schell v. Leander Clark College, C.C.A.Iowa, 2 F.2d 17, 21.

And it is not essential that every defendant have an interest in or concern for all matters or phases of the controversy. Mitchell v. Cudd, 196 Ala. 162, 71 So. 660; Norfolk Southern R. Co. v. Stricklin, D.C.N.C., 264 F. 546, 555.

A bill is not multifarious which seeks alternative or inconsistent relief growing out of the same subject-matter or founded on the same contract or transaction, or relating to the same property between the same parties. Code Ala. § 3095, Code 1923, § 6526; Szabo v. Specman, 73 Fla. 374, 74 So. 411, 412, L.R.A. 1917D, 357.

Legislation. The joining, in a single legislative act, of dissimilar and discordant subjects, which, by no fair intendment, can be considered as having a legitimate connection or relation to the subject of the act. Boise City v. Baxter, 41 Idaho 368, 238 P. 1029, 1033.

MULTIPARTITE. Divided into many or several parts.

MULTIPLE EVIDENCE. That which is admissible for a specific purpose to which it must be confined and inadmissible to prove a different fact. Green v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 136 S.C. 337, 134 S.E. 385, 386.

MULTIPLE POINDING. In Scotch law, double distress; a name given to an action, corresponding to proceedings by way of interpleader, which may be brought by a person in possession of goods claimed by different persons pretending a right thereto, calling the claimants and all others to settle their claims, so that the party who sues may be liable only "in once and single payment." Bell.
MUNERA. In the early ages of the feudal law, holidays, suppressed in Queen Anne's time.

MUND. In old English law, peace; whence mund-bryc, a breach of the peace.

MUNDBYRD, MUNDEBURDE. A receiving into favor and protection. Cowell.

MUNDIUM. In old French law, a tribute paid by a church or monastery to its seigniorial avoués and vidames, as the price of protecting them. Steph.Lect. 236.

MUNERA. In the early ages of the feudal law, the name given to the grants of land made by a king or chieftain to his followers, which were held by no certain tenure, but merely at the will of the lord. Afterwards they became life-estates, and then hereditary, and were called first "benefices," and then "feuds." See Wright, Ten. 19.

MUNICEPS. Lat. In Roman Law, eligible to office by no certain tenure, but merely at the will of the lord. Afterwards they became life-estates, and then hereditary, and were called first "benefices," and then "feuds." See Wright, Ten. 19.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corpo- ration, created by government for political pur- poses, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation. 2 Kent, Comm. 275; Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co., Baldw. 222, F.Cas.No.1617.

MUNICIPAL CHARTER. A legislative enact- ment conferring governmental powers of the state upon its local agencies. State v. Thompson, 193 Ala. 561, 69 So. 461, 464.

MUNICIPAL CLAIMS. In Pennsylvania law, claims filed by a city against property owners therein, for taxes, rates, levies, or assessments for local improvements, such as the cost of grading, paving, or curbing the streets, or removing nuis- ances.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corpo- ration, created by government for political pur- poses, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation. 2 Kent, Comm. 275; Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co., Baldw. 222, F.Cas.No.1617.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corpo- ration, created by government for political pur- poses, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation. 2 Kent, Comm. 275; Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co., Baldw. 222, F.Cas.No.1617.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corpo- ration, created by government for political pur- poses, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation. 2 Kent, Comm. 275; Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co., Baldw. 222, F.Cas.No.1617.

MUND. In old English law, peace; whence mund-bryc, a breach of the peace.

MUNICIPAL ACTION. Exercise of governmental power by a municipality. Grifpossessing local legislative and administrative power, also power to exercise within such area so much of the administrative power of the state as may be delegated to it and possessing limited capacity to own and hold property, and to act in purveyance of public conveniences. Van Gelder v. City of Madison, 222 Wis. 58, 268 N.W. 108, 109.

Cities, towns, and villages are municipal corporations proper. Strickfaden v. Green Creek Highway Dist., 42 Idaho 738, 248 P. 456, 458, 49 A.L.R. 1057. On the other hand, such term in many instances does not extend so far as to include counties, Hersey v. N. H., 67 Mont. 132, 131 P. 30, 31, Ann.Cas.1914C, 963; or drainage districts; Sawyer v. Camden Run Drainage Dist., 179 N.E. 182, 102 S.E. 273, 274; or irrigation districts; Crawford v. Imperial Irr. Dist., 200 Cal. 318, 253 P. 726, 729; or road districts; William T. Joyce Co. v. Police Jury of Parish of Tangipahoa, 146 La. 322, 83 So. 587, 588; or school districts; Dickson v. Brewer, 180 N.C. 403, 104 S.E. 887, 889; nor does it include the state; Herkimer Lumber Co. v. State, 196 App. Div. 708, 189 N.Y.S. 119, 122; but see contra, as to the District of Columbia, Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U.S. 141, 129 N.E. 305, 307; and, in Louisiana, parishes; State v. Rives, 146 La. 322, 83 So. 587, 588; or irrigation districts; Peters v. Union Gap Irr. Dist., 98 Wash. 167, P. 1085, 1086; road districts; State ex rel. Little Prairie Special Road Dist. of Pemiscot County v. Thompson, 315 Mo. 56, 285 S.W. 57, 61; and the like; Milheim v. Moffat-Tunnel Improvement Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649, 653; Drum v. University Place Water Dist.: 144 Wash. 585, 258 P. 505, 506.

English law. A body of persons in a town having the powers of acting as one person, of holding and transmitting property, and of regulating the government of the town. Such corporations existed in the chief towns of England (as opposed to other countries) from very early times, deriving their authority from “incorporating” charters granted by the crown. Wharton.

Quasi municipal corporations. Bodies politic and corporate, created for the sole purpose of performing one or more municipal functions. Woodward v. Livermore Falls Water Dist., 116 Me. 86, 100 A. 317, 319, L.R.A.1917D, 678.

Public corporations organized for governmental purposes and having for most purposes the status and powers of municipal corporations (such as counties, townships, school districts, drainage districts, irrigation districts, etc.), but not municipal corporations proper, such as cities and incorporated towns. Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 53 N.W. 763, 18 L.R.A. 151; Plumbing Supply Co. v. Board of Education of Independent School Dist. of City of Canton, 32 S.D. 270, 142 N.W. 1131, 432; Melvin v. Community Consol. School Dist. No. 76, 312 Ill. 376, 144 N.E. 13, 16. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION DE FACTO. One which exists when there is (1) some law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might lawfully have been created; (2) a colorable and bona fide attempt to perfect an organization under such a law; (3) user of the rights claimed to have been conferred by the law. Evens v. Anderson, 132 Minn. 59, 155 N.W. 1040, 1041.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ACT. In English law, a general statute, (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76), passed in 1835, prescribing general regulations for the incorporation and government of boroughs. MUNICIPAL COURTS. In the judicial organization of several states, courts are established under this name, whose territorial authority is confined to the city or community in which they are erected. Such courts usually have a criminal jurisdiction corresponding to that of a police court, and, in some cases, possess civil jurisdiction in small cases. Ex parte Gownlock, 13 Okl.Cr. 293, 164 P. 130, 131.

MUNICIPAL DOMICILE. Sometimes used in contradistinction to “national domicile” and “quasi national domicile” to refer to residence in a county, township, or municipality; called also “domestic domicile.” Hayward v. Hayward, 65 Ind.App. 440, 115 N.E. 966, 970.

MUNICIPAL FUNCTION. One created or granted for the special benefit and advantage of the urban community embraced within the corporate boundaries. State ex rel. Gebhardt v. City Council of Helena, 102 Mont. 27, 55 P.2d 671, 673.

Sometimes called a private function, as distinguished from a public or governmental function, which is one conferred or imposed on the municipality as a local agency of limited and prescribed jurisdiction to be employed in administering the affairs of the state, and promoting the public welfare generally. Bryan v. City of West Palm Beach, 75 Fla. 19, 77 So. 627; Griffith v. City of Butte, 72 Mont. 552, 234 P. 829, 831.

Logically all those are strictly municipal functions which specially and peculiarly promote the comfort, convenience, safety and happiness of the citizens of the municipality, rather than the welfare of the general public. Under this class of functions are included, in most jurisdictions, the proper care of streets and alleys, parks and other public places, and the erection and maintenance of public utilities and improvements generally. Chardkoff Junk Co. v. City of Tampa, 102 Fla. 501, 135 So. 457, 459.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT. Instrumentalities of state for purpose of local government. Moore v. State, 159 Tenn. 468, 19 S.W.2d 233.

This term, in certain state constitutions, embraces the governmental affairs of coal mining, State v. Toutchberry, 121 S.C. 5, 113 S.E. 345; and includes all forms of representative municipal government; In re Opinion of the Justices, 229 Mass. 601, 119 N.E. 778, 781.

MUNICIPAL LAW. Not the law of a city only but the law of the state. People ex rel. Ray v. Martin, 181 Misc. 925, 47 N.Y.S.2d 883, 891.

In contradistinction to international law, it is the law of an individual state or nation. It is the rule or law by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. 1 Bl.Comm. 44. That which pertains solely to the citizens and inhabitants of a state, and is thus distinguished from political law, commercial law, and the law of nations. Wharton; City of Louisville v. Babb, C.C.A. Ind., 75 F.2d 162, 165. In its more modern and narrower connotation it means those laws which pertain to towns, cities and villages and their local government. People ex rel. Ray v. Martin, 294 N.Y. 61, 60 N.E.2d 541, 547, 548.

MUNICIPAL LIEN. A lien or claim existing in favor of a municipal corporation against a property owner for his proportionate share of a public improvement, made by the municipality, whereby his property is specially and individually benefited.

MUNICIPAL OFFICER. One who holds an office of a municipality. Danculoic v. Zimmerman, MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE

184 Minn. 370, 238 N.W. 695. A city, town, or borough—not including a county. State v. Coo- ney, 70 Mont. 355, 225 P. 1007, 1010, but the term often bears a special or limited sense, in which it may be used even as members of the city council. Lambert v. Barrett, 115 Va. 136, 78 S.E. 586, 587, Ann.Cas.1914D, 1226.

MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE. A law, rule, or ordinance enacted or adopted by a municipal corpora- tion for the proper conduct of its affairs or the government of its inhabitants. Rutherford v. Swink, 96 Tenn. 564, 35 S.W. 554. Particularly a regulation under a delegation of power from the state. Harris v. City of Des Moines, 202 Iowa 53, 209 N.W. 454, 456, 46 A.L.R. 1429.

MUNICIPAL PURPOSES. Public or government- al purposes as distinguished from private purposes; Georgia Ry. & Power Co. v. City of Atlanta, 154 Ga. 731, 115 S.E. 263, 271. It may comprehend all activities essential to the health, morals, protection, and welfare of the municipality. State ex rel. Harper v. McDavid, 145 Fla. 605, 200 So. 100, 102, 133 A.L.R. 360.

For example, the taking of land for a school; Byfield v. City of Newton, 247 Mass. 46, 141 N.E. 658, 661; lighting the streets; City of Colorado Springs v. Pike's Peak Hydro-Electric Co., 57 Colo. 169, 140 P. 921, 927; supplying water to the inhabitants; Marin Water & Power Co. v. Town of Sausalito, 168 Cal. 587, 43 P. 767, 772; The collection and disposal of garbage and refuse; N. Ward Co. v. Board of Street Com'rs of City of Boston, 217 Mass. 381, 104 N.E. 965, 966; or the building of a subway; In re Montague Street in Borough of Brooklyn in City of New York, 87 Misc. 120, 150 N.Y.S. 382, 383.

MUNICIPAL SECURITIES. The evidences of indebtedness issued by cities, towns, counties, townships, school-districts, and other such territorial divisions of a state. They are of two general classes; (1) Municipal warrants, orders, or certifies; (2) municipal negotiable bonds. 15 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1206.

MUNICIPAL TAXATION. Refers to municipal purposes that are beneficial to municipality as a whole. Klemm v. Davenport, 100 Fla. 627, 129 So. 904, 910, 70 A.L.R. 156.

This term may have reference to any tax collected by the city tax collector, including state, county, and city or town taxes. Boston Fish Market Corp. v. City of Boston, 224 Mass. 31, 112 N.E. 616.

MUNICIPAL WARRANTS. A municipal warrant or order is an instrument, generally in the form of a bill of exchange, drawn by an officer of a municipality upon its treasurer, directing him to pay an amount of money specified therein to the person named or his order, or to bearer. 15 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1206.

MUNICIPALITY. A legally incorporated or duly authorized association of inhabitants of limited area for local governmental or other public purposes. State ex rel. Attorney General v. City of Avon Park, 108 Fla. 641, 149 So. 409, 412.

A body politic created by the incorporation of the people of a prescribed locality invested with subordinate powers of legislation to assist in the civil government of the state and to regulate and administer local and internal affairs of the community. State ex rel. McIntire v. City Council of City of Libby, 107 Mont. 216, 82 P.2d 587, 588.

Though sometimes limited in its application to cities only; City of Bangor v. Ridley, 117 Me. 297, 104 A. 230, 232; it ordinarily includes towns as well as cities of all classes; Goodman Warehouse Corporation v. Jersey City, 102 N.J.L. 294, 132 A. 503, 506; and may on occasion in- clude townships; Whittingham v. Milburn Tp., 90 N.J.L. 344, 100 A. 854; counties; Murphy v. Freeholders of Hud- son, 91 N.J.L. 40, 102 A. 896; school districts; Scobee v. Board of Education of Clark County, 157 Ky. 510, 163 S.W. 472, 473; and every kind and character of public corporations which are created by statute or the Constitution of the state, and which are dependent for their support and maintenance from taxes imposed and collected; Joint School Dist. No. 132 in Major County and Alfalfa County v. Dabney, 127 Okl. 234, 260 P. 486, 487. But neither townships; Petition of Herrington, 269 Pa. 88, 109 A. 791, 793; nor school districts; Long v. School Dist. of Chelten- ham Tp., 269 Pa. 472, 473, 112 A. 545, 546; nor drainage dis- tricts or the like are necessarily included; Witty v. Ells- berry Drainage Dist., 126 Miss. 645, 89 So. 268, 270.

Also, the body of officers taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs and defend its interests.

MUNICIPIUM. In Roman law, a foreign town to which the freedom of the city of Rome was grant- ed, and whose inhabitants had the privilege of enjoying offices and honors there. Adams, Rom. Ant. 47, 77. NATION. A people, or aggregation of men, existing in the form of an organized jural society, usually inhabiting a distinct portion of the earth, speaking the same language, using the same customs, possessing historic continuity, and distinguished from other like groups by their racial origin and characteristics, and generally, but not necessarily, living under the same government and sovereignty. Montoya v. U. S., -180 U.S. 261, 21 S. Ct. 358, 45 L.Ed. 521; Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 539, 8 L.Ed. 483; Republic of Honduras v. Soto, 112 N.Y. 310, 19 N.E. 845, 2 L.R.A. 642.

Besides the element of autonomy or self-government, that is, the independence of the community as a whole from the interference of any foreign power in its affairs or any subjection to such power, it is further necessary to the constitution of a nation that it should be an organized jural society, that is, both governing its own members by regular laws, and defining and protecting their rights, and respecting the rights and duties which attach to it as a constituent member of the family of nations. Such a society, says Vattel, has her affairs and her interests; she deliberates and takes resolutions in common; thus becoming a moral person, who possesses an understanding and will peculiar to herself, and is susceptible of obligations and rights. Vattel, §1, 2.

The words "nation" and "people" are frequently used as synonyms, but there is a great difference between them. A nation is an aggregation of men speaking the same language, having the same customs, and endowed with certain moral qualities which distinguish them from other groups of a like nature. It would follow from this definition that a nation is destined to form only one state, and that it constitutes one indivisible whole. Nevertheless, the history of every age presents us with nations divided into several states. Thus, Italy was for centuries divided among several different governments. The people is the collection of all citizens without distinction of rank or color. All men living under the same government compose the people of the state. In relation to the state, the citizens constitute the people; in relation to the human race, they constitute the nation. A free nation is one not subject to a foreign government, whatever be the constitution of the state; a people is free when all the citizens can participate in a certain measure in the direction and in the examination of public affairs. The people is the political body brought into existence by community of laws, and the people may perish with these laws. The nation is the moral body, independent of political revolutions, because it is constituted by inborn qualities which render it indissoluble. The state is the people organized into a political body. Lalor, Pol.Enc. s.

In American constitutional law the word "state" is applied to the several members of the American Union, while the word "nation" is applied to the whole body of the people embraced within the jurisdiction of the federal government. Cooley, Const.Lim. 1; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 720, 19 L. Ed. 227.

NATIONAL. Pertaining or relating to a nation as a whole; commonly applied in American law to institutions, laws, or affairs of the United States or its government, as opposed to those of the several states.

The term "national" as used in the phrase "national of the United States" is broader than the term "citizen". Brassert v. Biddle, D.C.Conn., 59 F.Supp. 457, 462.

NATIONAL AGENCY. That Mexican government contributed to capital of association, and was represented on governing board and even subsidized association did not render association a "national agency" that it might claim sovereign immunity. The Uxmal, D.C.Mass., 40 F.Supp. 258, 261.

NATIONAL BANK. A bank incorporated and doing business under the laws of the United States, as distinguished from a state bank, which derives its powers from the authority of a particular state.
NATIONAL

NATIONAL DEBT. The money owing by government to some of the public, the interest of which is paid out of the taxes raised by the whole of the public.

NATIONAL DEFENSE. A generic concept and refers to the military and naval establishments and the related activities of national preparedness and includes all matters directly and reasonably connected with the defense of the nation against its enemies. Gorin v. United States, Cal., 312 U. S. 19, 61 S.Ct. 429, 434, 436, 85 L.Ed. 488.

NATIONAL DOMAIN. See Domain.

NATIONAL DOMICILE. See Domicile.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY. A state of national crisis; a situation demanding immediate and extraordinary national or federal action.

Congress has made little or no distinction between a "state of national emergency" and a "state of war". Brown v. Bernstein, D.C.Pa., 49 F.Supp. 728, 732.

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT. The government of a whole nation, as distinguished from that of a local or territorial division of the nation, and also as distinguished from that of a league or confederation.

A national government is a government of the people of a single state or nation, united as a community by what is termed the 'social compact,' and possessing complete and perfect supremacy over persons and things, so far as they can be made the lawful objects of civil government. A federal government is distinguished from a national government, by its being the government of a community of independent and sovereign states, united by compact." Piqua Branch Bank v. Knoup, 6 Ohio St. 393.

NATIONALITY. That quality or character which arises from the fact of a person's belonging to a nation or state.

Nationality determines the political status of the individual, especially with reference to allegiance; while domicile determines his civil status. Nationality arises either by birth or by naturalization. According to Savigny, "nationality" is also used as opposed to "territoriality," for the purpose of distinguishing the case of a nation having no national territory; e. g., the Jews. 8 Sa27. Syst. § 346; Westl.Priv.Int. Law, 5.

NATIONALIZACION. In Spanish and Mexican law, nationalization.

"The nationalization of property is an act which denotes the naturalization of the owner of the property, to secure permanent recognition of his title to the property. It is a means of obtaining the legal protection of the state over the property, and the owner is thereby enabled to enforce his rights against all persons, natural or artificial, who may attempt to deprive him of his property. Thus, nationalization is a legal measure taken by the state to protect the owner of the property from any wrongful interference by third persons, and to give the owner the right to enforce his title in a court of law.

NATIVUS. Lat. In old English law, a native; specifically, one born into a condition of servitude; a born serf or villein.

NATURA APPETIT PERFECTUM; ITA ET LEX. Nature covets perfection; so does law also. Hob. 144.

NATURA BREVIUM. The name of an ancient collection of original writs, accompanied with brief comments and explanations, compiled in the time of Edward III. This is commonly called "Old Natura Breuim," or "0. N. B.," to distinguish it from Fitzherbert's Natura Breuim, a later work, cited as "F. N. B.," or "Fitzh. Nat. Breu."

NATURA FIDE JUSSIONIS SIT STRICTISSIMI.

NATURA FIDE JUSSIONIS SIT STRICTISSIMI JURIS ET NON DURAT VEL EXTENDATUR DE RE AD REM, DE PERSONA AD PERSONAM, DE TEMPORE AD TEMPOREM. The nature of the contract of suretyship is strictissimi juris, and cannot endure nor be extended from thing to thing, from person to person, or from time to time. Burge, Sur. 40.

NATURA NON FACIT SALTUM; ITA NEC LEX. Nature makes no leap, [no sudden or irregular movement,] so neither does law. Co. Litt. 238. Applied in old practice to the regular observance of the degrees in writs of entry, which could not be passed over per saltum.

NATURA NON FACIT VACUUM, NEC LEX SUPERVACUUM. Nature makes no vacuum, the law nothing purposeless. Co. Litt. 79.
NATURAL. The juristic meaning of this term does not differ from the vernacular, except in the cases where it is used in opposition to the term "legal," and then it means proceeding from or determined by physical causes or conditions, as distinguished from positive enactments of law, or attributable to the nature of man rather than to the commands of law, or based upon moral rather than legal considerations or sanctions.

NATURAL AFFECTION. Such as naturally subsists between near relatives, as a father and child, brother and sister, husband and wife. This is regarded in law as a good consideration.

NATURAL—BORN SUBJECT. In English law, one born within the dominions, or rather within the allegiance, of the king of England.

NATURAL FLOOD CHANNEL. A channel beginning at some point on banks of stream and ending at some other point lower down stream, through which flood waters naturally flow at times of high water. C. M. Bott Furniture Co. v. City of Buffalo, 131 Misc. 624, 227 N.Y.S. 660, 665.

NATURAL FOOL. A person born without understanding; a born fool or idiot. Sometimes called, in the old books, a "natural." In re Anderson, 132 N.C. 243, 43 S.E. 649.

NATURAL LAW. This expression, "natural law," or jus naturale, was largely used in the philosophical speculations of the Roman jurists of the Ante-nine age, and was intended to denote a system of rules and principles for the guidance of human conduct which, independently of enacted law or of the systems peculiar to any one people, might be discovered by the rational intelligence of man, and would be found to grow out of and conform to his nature, meaning by that word his whole mental, moral, and physical constitution. The point of departure for this conception was the Stoic doctrine of a life ordered "according to nature," which in its turn rested upon the purely supposititious existence, in primitive times, of a "state of nature." that is, a condition of society in which men universally were governed solely by a rational and consistent obedience to the needs, impulses, and promptings of their true nature, such nature being as yet undefaced by dishonesty, falsehood, or indulgence of the baser passions. Maine, Anc.Law, 50, et seq.; Jus Naturale.

NATURAL LIFE. The period of a person's existence considered as continuing until terminated by physical dissolution or death occurring in the course of nature; used in contradistinction to that juristic and artificial conception of life as an aggregate of legal rights or the possession of a legal personality, which could be terminated by "civil, death,"(q. v.), that is, that extinction of personality which resulted from entering a monastery or being attainted of treason or felony. See People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70, 50 N.W. 792.

NATURAL MARKETING AREA. A region within which milk is ordinarily sold in response to commercial demand. State v. Auclair, 110 Vt. 147, 4 A.2d 107, 116.

NATURAL MILK SHED. The milk producing area which normally produces milk for a given milk consuming area or market.

Milk producer whose milk could be preserved and transported to Connecticut in time to be usable as fresh milk was within the "natural milk shed" of Connecticut. Bryant & Chapman & Co. v. Lowell, 129 Conn. 321, 27 A.2d 637, 638.

NATURAL MONUMENT. Objects permanent in character which are found on the land as they were placed by nature, such as streams, lakes, ponds, shores, and beaches. Timme v. Squires, 199 Wis. 178, 225 N.W. 825, 828. Sometimes including highways and streets, walls, fences, trees, hedges, springs, and rocks, and the like. Parran v. Wilson, 160 Md. 604, 154 A. 449, 451.

NATURAL OBJECT OF TESTATOR’S BOUNTY. In testamentary law, term comprises whoever would take, in the absence of a will, because they are the persons whom the law has so designated, and in the ordinary case the law follows the normal condition of near relationship. Page v. Phelps, 108 Conn. 572, 143 A. 890, 893.

NATURAL PREMIUM. Actual sum necessary to meet maturing death claims each year and is necessarily exceeded by the "net premium". Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

NATURAL RESOURCE. The term includes not only timber, gas, oil, coal, minerals, lakes, and submerged lands, but also, features which supply a human need and contribute to the health, welfare, and benefit of a community, and are essential to the well-being thereof and proper enjoyment of property devoted to park and recreational purposes. Snyder v. Board of Park Com'r's of Cleveland Metropolitan Park Dist., 125 Ohio St. 336, 181 N.E. 483, 484.

NATURALEST QUINDLIBET DISSOLVI EO MODO QUO LIGATUR. It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound. Jenk. Cent. 66; Broom, Max. 877.

NATURALEZA. In Spanish law, the state of a natural-born subject. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 2, NATURALIZATION. The act of adopting a foreigner and clothing him with the privileges of native citizen. U. S. v. Harbanuk, F.2d 759, 761.

Collective Naturalization. This takes place where a government, by treaty or cession, acquires he whole or part of the territory of a foreign nation and takes to itself the inhabitants thereof, clothing them with the rights of citizenship either by the terms of the treaty or by subsequent legislation. State v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 682, 48 N.W. 739; Opinion of Justices, 68 Me. 589.

NATURALIZE. To confer citizenship upon an alien; to make a foreigner the same, in respect to rights and privileges, as if he were a native citizen or subject.

NATURALIZED CITIZEN. One who, being an alien by birth, has received citizenship under the laws of the state or nation.

NATUS. Lat. Born, as distinguished from nasciturus, about to be born. Ante natus, one born before a particular person or event, e. g., before the death of his father, before a political revolution, etc. Post natus, one born after a particular person or event.

NAUCERUS. Lat. In the civil law, the master or owner of a merchant ship. Calvin.

NAUFRAGE. In French maritime law, shipwreck.

"The violent agitation of the waves, the impetuous force of the winds, storm, or lightning, may swallow up the vessel, or shatter it, in such a manner that nothing remains of it but the wreck; this is called making shipwreck, (faire naufrage.) The vessel may also strike or run aground upon a bank, where it remains grounded, which is called (bris;) an accident of any kind may sink it in the sea, where it is swallowed up, which is called sombrer." 3 Pard. Droit Commer, § 643.

NAUFRAGIUM. Lat. Shipwreck.

NAUGHT. In old practice, bad; defective. "The bar is naught." 1 Leon. 77. "The avowry is naught." 5 Mod. 73. "The plea is undoubtedly naught." 10 Mod. 329. See 11 Mod. 179.

NAULAGE. The freight of passengers in a ship. Johnson; Webster.

NAULUM. In the civil law, the freight or fare paid for the transportation of cargo or passengers over the sea in a vessel. This is a Latinized form of a Greek word.

NAUTA. Lat. In the civil law, a sailor; one who works a ship. Calvin. Any one who is on board a ship for the purpose of navigating her. The employer of a ship. Dig. 4, 9, 1, 2.

NAUTICA PECUNIA. A loan to a shipowner, to be repaid only upon the successful termination of the voyage, and therefore allowed to be made at an extraordinary rate of interest (nauticum foenus). Holland, Jurispr. 250.

NAUTAL. Pertaining to ships or to the art of navigation or the business of carriage by sea.

NAUTAL ASSESSORS. Experienced shipmasters, or other persons having special knowledge of navigation and nautical affairs, who are called to the assistance of a court of admiralty, in difficult cases involving questions of negligence, and who sit with the judge during the argument, and give their advice upon questions of seamanship or the weight of testimony. The Empire, D.C.Mich., 19 F. 559; The Clement, 2 Curt. 369, F.Cas.No.2,879.

NAUTICAL MILE. See Mile.

NAUTICUM FCENUS. Lat. In the civil law, nautical or maritime interest; an extraordinary rate of interest agreed to be paid for the loan of money on the hazard of a voyage; corresponding to interest on contracts of bottomry or respondentia in English and American maritime law. Mackeld. Rom.Law, § 433; 2 Bl.Comm. 458.

NAVAGIUM. In old English law, a duty on certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship.

NAVAL. Appertaining to the navy, (q. v.).

NAVAL BASE. See Base.

NAVAL COURTS. Courts held abroad in certain cases to inquire into complaints by the master or seamen of a British ship, or as to the wreck or abandonment of a British ship.

A naval court consists of three, four, or five members, being officers in her majesty's navy, consular officers, masters of British merchant ships, or British merchants. It has power to supersede the master of the ship with reference to which the inquiry is held, to discharge any of the seamen, to decide questions as to wages, send home offenders for trial, or try certain offenses in a summary manner. Sweet.

NAVAL COURTS—MARTIAL. Tribunals for the trial of offenses arising in the management of public war vessels.

NAVAL LAW. The system of regulations and principles for the government of the navy.

NAVAL OFFICER. An officer in the navy. Also an important functionary in the United States custom-houses, who estimates duties, signs permits and clearances, certifies the collectors' returns, etc.

NAVARCIUS. In the civil law, the master or commander of a ship; the captain of a man-of-war.

NAVICULARIUS. In the civil law, the master or captain of a ship. Calvin.

NAVIGABLE. Capable of being navigated; that may be navigated or passed over in ships or vessels. Natcher v. City of Bowling Green, 264 Ky. 584, 95 S.W.2d 255, 259. But the term is often, particularly at common law, understood in a more restricted sense, viz., subject to the ebb and flow of the tide. Luscher v. Reynolds, 153 Or. 625, 56 P.2d 1158, 1162.

The doctrine of the common law as to the navigability of waters has no application in this country. • • •
There [In England] no waters are navigable in fact, or at least to any considerable extent, which are not subject to the tide, and from this circumstance tide-water and navigable water there signify substantially the same thing. But in this country the case is widely different. * * * That line of public navigable rivers, as regarded in law, which are navigable in fact.” The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. 563, 19 L.Ed. 999.

Waters are “navigable” when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in customary modes of trade and travel on water. United States v. Appalachian Electric Power Co., D.C.Va., 23 F.Supp. 83.

NAVIGABLE IN FACT. Streams or lakes are navigable in fact when they are used or are susceptible of being used in their natural and ordinary condition as highways for commerce over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. Taylor Fishing Club v. Hammett, Tex.Civ.App., 88 S.W.2d 127, 129.

NAVIGABLE RIVER OR STREAM. At common law, a river or stream in which the tide ebbs and flows, or as far as the tide ebbs and flows. 3 Kent, Comm. 412, 414, 417, 418; 2 Hil. Real Prop. 90, 91. But as to the definition in American law, see Navigable, supra.

NAVIGABLE WATERS. Those waters which afford a channel for useful commerce. The Montello, 20 Wall. 430, 22 L.Ed. 391.

See, also, Navigable, supra.

In several states so long as a stream or body of water may be put to public use it is “navigable” whether it can be used for commercial navigation or not. U. S. v. Holt State Bank, C.C.A.Minn., 294 F. 161, 166; State v. Korrer, 127 Minn. 60, 148 N.W. 617, 618, L.R.A.1916C, 139; State v. Akers, 92 Kan. 169, 140 P. 637, 640, Ann.Cas.1916B, 543. Any natural waters that are usable for rowing or canoeing are “navigable,” and as such open to the public for hunting or fishing, notwithstanding water is a shallow, muddy lake or marsh. Beier v. Voss, 217 Wis. 415, 259 N.W. 415; Contra: To be “navigable,” waters must be navigable for some purpose useful to trade or agriculture and susceptible of use for purposes of commerce, or possess capacity for valuable floatage in transportation to market of products of country through which it runs, a mere theoretical or potential navigability, or one that is temporary, precarious, unprofitable, or which requires artificial improvement, being insufficient. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Carroll, Tex.Civ.App., 106 S.W.2d 757, 759. The test of “navigability” is whether there is in the stream capacity for use for the purpose of transportation valuable to the public. American Red Cross v. Hinson, 173 Tenn. 667, 122 S.W.2d 433, 435. Navigability is not imparted by ability to float small boats, such as skiffs or canoes. United States v. Appalachian Electric Power Co., D.C.Va., 23 F.Supp. 83.

NAVIGATION ACTS. Various English enactments passed for the protection of British shipping and commerce as against foreign countries. For a sketch of their history and operation, see 3 Steph. Comm. They are now repealed. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, and 17 & 18 Vict. cc. 5, 120. Wharton.

NAVIGATIONAL VISIBILITY. Visibility as affecting speed with reference to distance within which boat in fog could be brought to stop, before any course of any vessel emerging from fog on either side would cross her projected course along-side the fog bank at its nearest point. The Silver Palm, C.C.A.Cal., 94 F.2d 754, 767.

NAVIRE. Fr. In French law, a ship. Emerig. Traite des Assur. c. 6, § 1.

NAVIS. Lat. A ship; a vessel.

NAVIS BONA. A good ship; one that was staunch and strong, well caulked, and stiffened to bear the sea, obedient to her helm, swift, and not unduly affected by the wind. Calvin.

NAVY. A fleet of ships; the aggregate of vessels of war belonging to an independent nation. In a broader sense, and as equivalent to "naval forces," the entire corps of officers and men enlisted in the naval service and who man the public ships of war, including in this sense, in the United States, the officers and men of the Marine Corps. Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How. 124, 12 L.Ed. 618; U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U.S. 249, 7 S.Ct. 507, 30 L.Ed. 667.
NAVY BILLS

NAVY BILLS. Bills drawn by officers of the English navy for their pay, etc.

NAVY DEPARTMENT. One of the executive departments of the United States, presided over by the secretary of the navy, and having in charge the defense of the country by sea, by means of ships of war and other naval appliances.

NAVY PENSION. A pecuniary allowance made in consideration of past services of some one in the navy.

NAZERANNA. A sum paid to government as an acknowledgment for a grant of lands, or any public office. Enc. Lond.

NAZIM, In Hindu law, composer, arranger, adjuster. The first officer of a province, and minister of the department of criminal justice.

NE ADMITTAS. Lat. In ecclesiastical law, the name of a prohibitory writ, directed to the bishop, at the request of the plaintiff or defendant, where a quare impedit is pending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk pending the suit between them. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 37.

NE BAILA PAS. L. Fr. He did not deliver. A plea in detinue, denying the delivery to the defendant of the thing sued for.

NE DISTURBA PAS. L. Fr. (Does or did not disturb.) In English practice, the general issue or general plea in quare impedit. 3 Steph. Comm. 663.

NE DONA PAS, or NON DEDIT. The general issue in a formedon, now abolished. It denied the gift in tail to have been made in manner and form as alleged; and was therefore the proper plea, if the tenant meant to dispute the fact of the gift, but did not apply to any other case. 5 East, 289.

NE .EXEAT. A writ which forbids the person to whom it is addressed to leave the country, the state, or the jurisdiction of the court; available in some cases to keep a defendant within the reach of the court's process, where the ends of justice would be frustrated if he should escape from the jurisdiction.

Sometimes a ne exeat writ is issued only to restrain a person from leaving the jurisdiction, and sometimes it is issued against a person who is removing or attempting to remove property beyond the jurisdiction. August v. August, 65 Ga.App. 883, 16 S.E.2d 784, 785.

NE EXEAT BOND. In wife's suit for divorce and alimony, "ne exeat bond" conditioned on husband's appearance on hearing of bill of complaint was in effect an appearance bond to abide the decree of the court. Muckelrath v. Chezem, 184 Miss. 511, 186 So. 621, 623.

NE EXEAT REGNO. Lat. In English practice, a writ which issues to restrain a person from leaving the kingdom. It was formerly used for political purposes, but is now only resorted to in equity when the defendant is about to leave the kingdom; it is only in cases where the intention of the party to leave can be shown that the writ is granted.

NE EXEAT REPUBLICA. Lat. In American practice, a writ similar to that of ne exeat regno, (q. v.) available to the plaintiff in a civil suit, under some circumstances, when the defendant is about to leave the state. Dean v. Smith, 23 Wis. 483, 99 Am.Dec. 198; Adams v. Whitcomb, 46 Vt. 712; Cable v. Alvord, 27 Ohio St. 664.

NE GIST PAS EN BOUCHE. L. Fr. It does not lie in the mouth. A common phrase in the old books. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. II. 50.

NE INJUSTE VEXES. Lat. In old English practice, a prohibitory writ, commanding a lord not to demand from the tenant more services than were justly due by the tenure under which his ancestors held.

NE LUMINIBUS OFFICIATUR. Lat. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house. Dig. 8, 4, 15, 17.

NE QUID IN LOCO PUBLICO VEL ITINERE FIAT. Lat. That nothing shall be done (put or erected) in a public place or way. The title of an interdict in the Roman law. Dig. 43, 8.

NE RECIPIATUR. Lat. That it be not received. A caveat or warning given to a law officer, by a party in a cause, not to receive the next proceedings of his opponent. 1 Sell. Pr. 8.

NE RECTOR PROSTERNET ARBORES. L. Lat. The statute 35 Edw. I. § 2, prohibiting rectors, l. e., parsons, from cutting down the trees in churchyards. In Rutland v. Green, 1 Keb. 557, it was extended to prohibit them from opening new mines and working the minerals therein. Brown.

NE RELEESSA PAS. L. Fr. Did not release. Where the defendant had pleaded a release, this was the proper replication by way of traverse.

NE UNQUES ACCOUPLE. L. Fr. Never married. More fully, ne unques accouple en totall matrimonie, never joined in lawful marriage. The name of a plea in the action of dower unde nihil habet, by which the tenant denied that the dowerress was ever lawfully married to the decedent.

NE UNQUES EXECUTOR. L. Fr. Never executor. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that he is an executor, as he is alleged to be; or that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be.

NE UNQUES SEISE QUE DOWER. L. Fr. (Never seised of a dowable estate.) In pleading, the general issue in the action of dower unde nil habet, by which the tenant denies that the demandant's husband was ever seised of an estate of which dower might be had. Rosc. Real Act. 219, 220.

NE UNQUES SON RECEIVER. L. Fr. In pleading, the name of a plea in an action of account-render, by which the defendant denies that he ever was receiver of the plaintiff. 12 Vin. Abr. 183.

NE VARLETUR. Lat. It must not be altered. A phrase sometimes written by a notary upon a bill or note, for the purpose of establishing its identity, which, however, does not affect its negotiability.

NEAP TIDE. When the moon is in its first and third quarters, the tides do not rise as high, nor fall as low, as on the average; at such times the tides are known as "neap tides." Borax Consolidated v. City of Los Angeles, Cal., 296 U.S. 10, 56 S.Ct. 23, 80 L.Ed. 9.

NEAR. The word as applied to space is a relative term without positive or precise meaning, depending for its signification on the subject-matter in relation to which it is used and the circumstances under which it becomes necessary to apply it to surrounding objects. Case-Fowler Lumber Co. v. Winslett, 168 Ga. 808, 149 S.E. 211, 213.

NEAT, NET. The clear weight or quantity of an article, without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

NEAT CATTLE. Oxen or heifers. "Beeves" may include neat stock, but all neat stock are not beeves. Castello v. State, 36 Tex. 324; Hubotter v. State, 32 Tex. 479. Straight-backed, domesticated animals of the bovine genus regardless of sex, and is not generally but may be, taken to mean calves, or animals younger than yearlings. It includes cows, bulls, and steers, but not horses, mares, geldings, colts, mules, jacks, or jennies, goats, hogs, sheep, shoats, or pigs. State v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist. in and for Nye County, 42 Nev. 218, 174 P. 1023, 1025; State v. Swager, 110 Wash. 431, 188 P. 504, 506.

NEAT—LAND. Land let out to the yeomanry. Cowell.

NEATNESS. In pleading, the statement in apt and appropriate words of all the necessary facts, and no more. Lawes, Pl. 62.

NEC CURIA DEFICERET IN JUSTITIA EXHIBENDA. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice. 4 Inst. 63.

NEC NON. A clause so called which was used as a fiction to give jurisdiction to the common pleas in connection with the writ of quare clausum fretit. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 89, note. See Bill of Middlesex.

NEC TEMPUS NEC LOCUS OCCURRIT REGI. Jenk. Cent. 190. Neither time nor place affects the king.

NEC VENIAM EFFUSO SANGUINE CASUS HABET. Where blood is spilled, the case is unpardonable. 3 Inst. 57.

NEC VENIAM, L7ESO NUMINE, CASUS HABET. Where the Divinity is insulted the case is unpardonable. Jenk. Cent. 167.

NEC TEMPUS NEC LOCUS OCCURRIT REGI. Jenk. Cent. 190. Neither time nor place affects the king.

NECESSITY. This word must be considered in the connection in which it is used, as it is a word susceptible of various meanings. It may import absolute physical necessity or inevitability, or it may import that which is only convenient, useful, appropriate, suitable, proper, or conducive to the end sought. It is an adjective expressing degrees, and may express mere convenience or that which is indispensable or an absolute physical necessity. It may mean something which in the accomplishment of a given object cannot be dispensed with, or it may mean something reasonably useful and proper, and of greater or lesser benefit or convenience, and its force and meaning must be determined with relation to the particular object sought. Kay County Excise Board v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 185 Okl. 327, 91 P.2d 1087, 1088.

In eminent domain proceedings, it means land reasonably requisite and proper for accomplishment of end in view, not absolute necessity of particular location. State v. Whitcomb, 94 Mont. 415, 22 P.2d 823.

NECESSARY INFERENCE. One which is inescapable or unavoidable from the standpoint of reason. Taylor v. Twiner, 193 Miss. 410, 9 So.2d 644, 646.

NECESSARY INJURY. Under Wrongful Death Statute the words mean pecuniary injury and include any damages whether present, prospective, or proximate which may be estimated according to a pecuniary standard, and the jury is not confined to precise calculation as to amount of loss to survivors of deceased, but has large discretion in determining such damages. Polk v. Krenning. Mo. App., 2 S.W.2d 107, 109.

NECESSITAS. Lat. Necessity; a force, power, or influence which compels one to act against his will. Calvin.

NECESSITAS CULPABILIS. Culpable necessity; unfortunate necessity; necessity which, while it excuses the act done under its compulsion, does not leave the doer entirely free from blame. The necessity which compels a man to kill another in self-defense is thus distinguished from that which requires the killing of a felon. See 4 Bl. Comm. 187.

NECESSITAS EST LEX TEMPORIS ET LOCI. Necessity is the law of time and of place. 1 Hale, P. C. 54.

NECESSITAS EXCUSAT AUT EXTENUAT DELICTUM IN CAPITALIBUS, QUOD NON OPERATUR IDEM IN CIVILIBUS. Necessity excuses or extenuates a delinquency in capital cases, which has not the same operation in civil cases. Bac. Max.

NECESSITAS FACIT LICITUM QUOD ALIAS NON EST LICITUM. 10 Coke, 61. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is not lawful.

NECESSITAS INDUCTIC PRIVILEGIO QUOD JURA PRIVATA. Bac. Max. 25. Necessity gives a privilege with reference to private rights. The necessity involved in this maxim is of three kinds, viz.: (1) Necessity of self-preservation; (2) of obedience; and (3) necessity resulting from the act of God, or of a stranger. Noy. Max. 32.

NECESSITAS NON HABET LEGEM. Necessity has no law. Plowd. 18a. "Necessity shall be a good excuse in our law, and in every other law." Id.

NECESSITAS PUBLICA MAJOR EST QUAM PRIVATA. Public necessity is greater than private. "Death," it has been observed, "is the last and furthest point of particular necessity, and the law imposes it upon every subject that he prefer the urgent service of his king and country before the safety of his life." Noy. Max. 34; Broom, Max. 18.

NECESSITAS QUOD COGIT, DEFENDIT. Necessity defends or justifies what it compels. 1 Hale, P. C. 54. Applied to the acts of a sheriff, or ministerial officer, in the execution of his office. Broom, Max. 14.

NECESSITAS SUB LEGE NON CONTINETUR, QUIA QUOD ALIAS NON EST LICITUM NECESSITAS FACIT LICITUM. 2 Inst. 326. Necessity is not restrained by law; since what otherwise is not lawful necessity makes lawful.

NECESSITAS VINCIT LEGEM. Necessity overrules the law. Hob. 144; Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th Ed. 747.

NECESSITAS VINCIT LEGEM; LEGUM VINCULA IRRIDET. Hob. 144. Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of laws.

NECESSITOUS. Indigent or pressed by poverty. St. Cyr v. Wills, 87 N.H. 277, 178 A. 257.

NECESSITOUS CIRCUMSTANCES. In the civil code of Louisiana the words are used relative to the fortune of the deceased and to the condition in which the claimant lived during the marriage. Smith v. Smith, 43 La.Ann. 1140, 10 So. 248.

Needing the necessities of life, which cover not only primitive physical needs, things absolutely indispensable to human existence and decency, but those things, also, which are in fact necessary to the particular person left without support. State v. Waller, 90 Kan. 829, 136 P. 215, 216, 49 L.R.A., N.S., 588.

NECESSITUDO. Lat. In the civil law, an obligation; a close connection; relationship by blood. Calvin.

NECESSITY. Controlling force; irresistible compulsion; a power or impulse so great that it admits no choice of conduct.

When it is said that an act is done "under necessity," it may be, in law, either of three kinds of necessity: (1) The necessity of preserving one's own life, which will excuse a homicide; (2) the necessity of obedience, as to the laws, or the obedience of one not sui juris to his superior; (3) the necessity caused by the act of God or a stranger. See Jacob; Mozley & Whiteley.

That which makes the contrary of a thing impossible. The quality or state of being necessary, in its primary sense signifying that which makes an act or event unavoidable. Spreckels v. City and County of San Francisco, 76 Cal.App. 267, 244 P. 919, 922; In re Washington Ave., in Borough of Chatham, 5 N.J.Misc. 858, 139 A. 239, 240.

A constraint upon the will whereby a person is urged to do that which his judgment disapproves, and which, it is to be presumed, his will (if left to itself) would reject. A man, therefore, is excused for those actions which are done through unavoidable force and compulsion. Wharton.

In determining what is a work of "necessity" excepted from the operation of the Sunday law, the necessity meant is not a physical or absolute necessity, but a moral fitness or propriety of the work and labor done under the circumstances of the particular case, and whether or not the act is morally fit and proper is usually a question of fact for the jury under proper instructions. Lakeside Inn Corpora- tion v. Commonwealth, 134 Va. 696, 114 S.E. 769, 771; Na- tural Gas Products Co. v. Thurman, 205 Ky. 100, 265 S.W. 475, 477. The term "necessity" means an economical and moral necessity, rather than an unavoidable physical necessity. Rosenbaum v. State, 131 Ark. 251, 199 S.W. 388, 392, L.
R.A.1918B, 1109. The necessity which must exist depends on what the general public in its ordinary modes of doing business regards as necessary. Gray v. Commonwealth, 171 Ky. 269, 188 S.W. 354, 355, L.R.A. 1917B, 93. "Works of necessity" include whatever is needful for the good health, order, or comfort of the community. State v. Dean, 149 Minn. 410, 84 N.W. 275.

The word "necessity," within certificate of public convenience and necessity, is not used in the sense of being essential or absolutely indispensable but merely that certificate is reasonably necessary for public good. Alabama Public Service Commission v. Crow, 247 Ala. 120, 22 So.2d 721, 724.

To fulfill requirements for easement of right of way of necessity, the necessity must be actual, real, and reasonable, as distinguished from inconvenience, but it need not be absolute and irresistible necessity. Brasington v. Williams, 143 S.C. 223, 141 S.E. 375, 383.

"Necessity" when used in relation to power of eminent domain does not mean absolute necessity, but only reasonable necessity. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. City of Racine, 200 Wis. 170, 227 N.W. 859, 861.

The "necessity" of and appurtenance for the beneficial use of leased premises, which will entitle the lessee there-to, is not an absolute necessity in the sense that it must be completely indispensable, but is a real necessity and not a mere convenience or advantage. Raynes v. Stevens, 219 Mass. 556, 107 N.E. 398, 399.

NECK-VERSE The Latin sentence, "Miserere mei, Deus," was so called, because the reading of it was made a test for those who claimed benefit of clergy.

NECROPSY. An autopsy, or post-mortem examination of a human body.

NEED. A relative term, the conception of which must, within reasonable limits, vary with the personal situation of the individual employing it. In re Skuse's Estate, 165 Misc. 554, 1 N.Y.S.2d 202, 205.

NEEDLESS. In a statute against "needless" killing or mutilation of any animal, this term denotes an act done without any useful motive, in a spirit of wanton cruelty, or for the mere pleasure of destruction. Grise v. State, 37 Ark. 460; Hunt v. State, 3 Ind.App. 383, 29 N.E. 933; State v. Bogardus, 4 Mo.App. 215.

NEFAS. Lat. That which is against right or the divine law. A wicked or impious thing or act. Calvin.

NEFASTUS. Lat. Inauspicious, Applied, in the Roman law, to a day on which it was unlawful to open the courts or administer justice.

NEGATIO CONCLUSIONIS EST ERROR IN LEGE. Wing. 268. The denial of a conclusion is error in law.

NEGATIO DESTRUCT NATIONEM, ET AMBIE FACIUNT AFFIRMATIONEM. A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative. Co. Lit. 146b. Lord Coke cites this as a rule of grammatical construction, not always applying in law.

NEGATIO DUPLEX EST AFFIRMATIO. A double negative is an affirmative.

NEGATIVE. A denial; a proposition by which something is denied; a statement in the form of denial. Two negatives do not make a good issue. Steph. Pl. 386, 387.

NEGATIVE AMVERMENT. As opposed to the traverse or simple denial of an affirmative allegation, a negative averment is an allegation of some substantive fact, e.g., that premises are not in repair, which, although negative in form, is really affirmative in substance, and the party alleging the fact of non-repair must prove it. Brown. An averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a negative is asserted. U. S. v. Eisenminger, D.C. Del., 16 F.2d 816, 819.

NEGATIVE CONDITION. One by which it is stipulated that a given thing shall not happen.

NEGATIVE HEAD. As used in connection with a filtration plant it means the force that comes into play when a partial vacuum is created either within or below the filter bed. City of Harrisburg v. New York Continental Jewell Filtration Co., C.C. A.Pa., 217 F. 366, 368.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT. In pleading, a negative implying also an affirmative. Cowell. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative. Steph. Pl. 318; Fields v. State, 134 Ind: 46, 32 N.E. 780; Stone v. Quaal, 36 Minn. 46, 29 N.W. 326.

As if a man be said to have aliened land in fee, and he says he has not aliened in fee, this is a negative pregnant; for, though it be true that he has not aliened in fee, yet it may be that he has made an estate in tail. Cowell. A "negative pregnant," is a denial in form, but is in fact an admission, as where the denial in hie verba includes the time and place, which are usually immaterial. Hall & Lyon Furniture Co. v. Torrey, 196 App. Div. 804, 188 N.Y. S. 486, 487; Green v. Commercial Bank & Trust Co. D.C. Wyo., 277 F. 527, 528; McIntosh Livestock Co. v. Buffalo, 108 Or. 358, 217 P. 635, 636.

A denial in such form as to imply or express an admission of the substantial fact which apparently is controverted; or a denial which, although in the form of a traverse, really admits the important facts contained in the allegations to which it relates. Cramer v. Aiken, 63 App.D.C. 16, 68 F.2d 761, 762.
NEGGLIANCE. To claim kindred. Jac. L. Dict. NEGLECT. May mean to omit, fail, or forbear to do a thing that can be done, or that is required to be done, but it may also import an absence of care or attention in the doing or omission of a given act. State v. Sheldon, 135 Okl. 278, 276 P. 468, 472; Same v. Butterfield, 138 Okl. 112, 276 P. 473.

And it may mean a designed refusal or unwillingness to perform one's duty. In re Perkins, 234 Mo.App. 716, 117 S.W.2d 686, 692.

The term is used in the law of bailment as synonymous with "negligence." But the latter word is the closer translation of the Latin "negligentia."

Culpable Neglect. In this phrase, the word "culpable" means not only criminal, but censurable. As he has merely been negligent in the performance which he undertook voluntarily, and has wronged nobody but himself, culpable neglect to preserve rights conveys the idea of neglect which, whenever it can fairly be ascribed to the party's own carelessness, improvidence, or folly. State ex rel. Fulton v. Coburn, 133 Ohio St. 192, 12 N.E.2d 471, 477.

Willful Neglect. The neglect of the husband to provide for his wife the common necessaries of life, he having the ability to do so; or it is the failure to do so by reason of idleness, profligacy, or dissipation. Civil Code Cal. § 105.

Negligence usually consists in the "involuntary and casual"-that is, "accidental"-doing or omission to do something which results in an injury, Root v. Topeka Ry. Co., 98 Kan. 694, 153 P. 590; and is synonymous with heedlessness, carelessness, thoughtlessness, disregard, inattention, inadvertence, remissness and oversight, Payne v. Vance, 103 Ohio St. 59, 133 N.E. 85, 87.

"Negligence" in official conduct is ordinarily the failure to use such reasonable care and caution as would be expected of a prudent man. Hamrick v. McCutcheon, 101 W. Va. 485, 133 S.E. 127, 129.

Negligence is any culpable omission of a positive duty. It differs from heedlessness, in that heedlessness is the doing or act in violation of a negative duty, without adverting to its possible consequences. In both cases there is inadvertence, and there is breach of duty. Aust. Jur. 630.

Negligence or carelessness signifies want of care, caution, attention, diligence, or discretion in one having no positive intention to injure the person complaining thereof. The words "reckless," "indifferent," "careless," and "wantation, unless when joined with other words which show that they are to receive an artificial or unusual, if not an unnatural, interpretation. Lexington v. Lewis, 10 Bush, Ky., 677.

See Care.

Actionable Negligence. See Actionable Negligence.

Collateral Negligence. In the law relating to the responsibility of an employer or principal for the negligent acts or omissions of his employee, the term "collateral" negligence is sometimes used to describe negligence attributable to a contractor employed by the principal and for which the latter is not responsible, though he would be responsible for the same thing if done by his servant. Weber v. Railway Co., 20 App.Div. 292, 47 N.Y.S. 11.

Comparative Negligence, See Comparative Negligence.

Concurrent Negligence. Arises where the injury is...proximately, caused by the concurrent wrongful acts or omissions of two or more persons acting independently. Carr v. St. Louis Auto Supply Co., 293 Mo. 562, 239 S.W. 827, 828.

Contributory Negligence. The act or omission amounted to want of ordinary care on part of the complaining party, which, concurring with defendant's negligence, is proximate cause of injury. Honaker v. Crutchfield, 247 Ky. 495, 57 S.W.2d 502.

Any want of ordinary care on the part of the person injured, or on the part of another whose negligence is imputable to him, which combined and concurred with the defendant's negligence, and contributed to the injury as a proximate cause thereof, and as an element without which the injury would not have occurred. Railroad Co. v. Young, 153 Ind. 163, 54 N.E. 791; Barton v. Railroad Co., 52 Mo. 253, 14 Am.Rep. 418; McLaughlin v. Electric Light Co., 100 Ky. 173, 37 S.W. 851, 34 L.R.A. 812; 25 C.J. S. Damages; Townsend v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 162 Ky. 366, 172 S.W. 698, 701.

"Assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" are not synonymous. Chicago, R. L. & P. R. Co. v. Rogers, 60 Ill. 249, 159 P. 1132, 1136.

Criminal Negligence. Criminal negligence which will render killing a person manslaughter is the omission on the part of the person to do some act which an ordinarily careful and prudent man would do under like circumstances, or the doing of some act which an ordinarily careful, prudent man under like circumstances would not do by reason of which another person is endangered in life or bodily safety; the word "ordinary" being synonymous with "reasonable" in this connection. State v. Coulter, Mo.Sup., 204 S.W. 5.

Negligence of such a character, or occurring under such circumstances, as to be punishable as a crime by statute; or (at common law) such a flagrant and reckless disregard of the safety of others, or willful indifference to the injury liable to follow, as to convey an act otherwise lawful into a crime when it results in personal injury or death. 4 Bl. Comm. 192, note; Cook v. Railroad Co., 72 Ga. 48; Rankin v. Transportation Co., 73 Ga. 229, 54 Am.Rep. 874; Railroad Co. v. Chollette, 33 Neb. 143, 49 N.W. 1114.

Degrees of Negligence. There are degrees of care, and failure to exercise proper degree of care is "negligence," but there are no degrees of negligence. Murray v. De Luxe Motor Stages of Illinois, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1074, 1078.

Classification of "negligence" as "gross," "ordinary," and "slight" indicates only that under special circumstances great care and caution, or ordinary care, or slight care are required, but failure to exercise care demanded is "negligence." 38 Del. Laws, c. 26. Gallegher v. Davis, 7 W.W.Harr. 380, 183 A. 620.

Gross Negligence. The Intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another; such a gross want of care and regard for the rights of others as to justify the presumption of willfulness and wantonness. Seeig v. First Nat. Bank, D.C.I1L, 20 F.Supp. 61, 68.

The want of slight diligence. The want of that care which every man of common sense, how inattentive soever, takes of his own property. The omission of that care which a man of ordinary prudence in the same situation and with equal experience would not have taken of their own property. Litchfield v. White, 7 N.Y. 442, 57 Am. Dec. 534; Seybel v. National Currency Bank, 54 N.Y. 259, 13 Am.Rep. 583; Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S. Ct. 925, 34 L.Ed. 662; The want of ordinary care in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another; such a gross want of care and regard for the rights of others as to justify the presumption of willfulness and wantonness. Seeig v. First Nat. Bank, D.C.I1L, 20 F.Supp. 61, 68.

In the law of torts (and especially with reference to personal injury cases), the term means such negligence as evidences a reckless disregard of human life, or of the safety of persons exposed to its dangerous effects, or that entire want of care which would raise the presumption of conscious indifference to the rights of others which is equivalent to an intentional violation of them. McDonald v. Railroad Co., 237 N.Y. 775, 151 N.E. 768; Railroad Co. v. Bodeimer, 139 Ill. 596, 29 N.E. 692, 32 Am.St.Rep. 218; Cole v. Western Union Tel. Co., 130 Cal. 657, 63 P. 83, 53 L.R.A. 678; Bremer v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 318 Ill. 11, 148 N.E. 862, 866, 41 A.L.R. 1345.

"Gross negligence," is substantially higher in magnitude than simple inadvertence, but falls short of intentional wrong. Young v. City of Worcester, 253 Mass. 481, NEGLIGENCE

Hazardous Negligence. Such careless or reckless conduct as exposes one to very great danger of injury or to imminent peril. Rigs v. Standard Oil Co., C.C.Minn., 130 F. 204.

Legal Negligence. See Legal Negligence.

Ordinary Negligence. The omission of that care which a man of common prudence usually takes of his own concerns. Ouderkirk v. Central Nat. Bank, 119 N.Y. 263, 23 N.E. 875; Scott v. Depeyster, 1 Edw. Ch., N.Y., 543; Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, n. Sup.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662. Failure to exercise care of an ordinarily prudent person in same situation. Avery v. Thompson, 117 Me. 120, 103 A. 4, 5, L.R.A. 1918D 205. A want of that care and prudence that the great majority of mankind exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Clemens v. State, 176 Wis. 289, 185 N.W. 209, 212, 21 A.L.R. 1490. Wherever distinctions between gross, ordinary and slight negligence are observed, "ordinary negligence" is said to be the want of ordinary care. Saxe v. Terry, 250 P. 27, 28, 140 Wash. 503.

"Ordinary negligence" is based on fact that one ought to have known results of his acts, while "gross negligence" rests on assumption that one knew results of his acts, but was recklessly or wantonly indifferent to results. All negligence below that called gross by courts and text-book writers is "slight negligence" and "ordinary negligence." People v. Campbell, 237 Mich. 424, 212 N.W. 97, 99. The distinction between "ordinary negligence" and "gross negligence" is that the former lies in the field of inadvertence and the latter in the field of actual or constructive intent to injure. Benson v. Brown, 191 Wis. 460, 211 N.W. 132, 133.

Wanton Negligence. Reckless indifference to the consequences of an act or omission, where the party acting or failing to act is conscious of his conduct and, without any actual intent to injure, is aware, from his knowledge of existing circumstances and conditions, that his conduct will inevitably or probably result in injury to another. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hall, 105 Ala. 599, 17 So. 176.

Willful Negligence. Though rejected by some courts and writers as involving a contradiction of terms, this phrase is occasionally used to describe a higher or more aggravated form of negligence than "gross." It then means a willful determination not to perform a known duty, or a reckless disregard of the safety or the rights of others, as manifested by the conscious and intentional omission of the care proper under the circumstances. Victor Coal Co. v. Muir, 20 Colo. 320, 38 P. 378, 26 L.R.A. 345; Hoiewson v. Railway Co., 157 Mo. 216, 57 S.W. 770, 50 L.R.A. 850.

Also, the failure to exercise ordinary care after discovering a person to be in a position of peril. Cowan v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. R. Co., 42 N.D. 170, 172 N.W. 322, 323. It involves deliberation and malice. Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S.W. 32, 33, 47 A.L.R. 323. "Willful negligence" implies an act intentionally done in disregard of another's rights, or omission to do something to protect the rights of another after having had such notice of those rights as would put a prudent man on his guard to use ordinary care to avoid injury. Covert v. Rockford & I. Ry. Co., 299 Ill. 288, 132 N.E. 504, 505. There is no proof of what is called "willful negligence," unless it is shown that defendant discovered plain- tiff's peril at such a time and under such circumstances as offered an opportunity, and in consequence imposed a duty on defendant, to take some step to prevent the injury. It is the failure in such a duty that is willful negligence, so called. Westerberg v. Motor Truck Service Co., 158 Minn. 202, 197 N.W. 98, 99. A charge of "willful and wanton negligence" does not signify degrees of negligence, but the words have reference to the intent, which must have been bad. Do the wrong act, but not with necessary result, and the result will be injurious; otherwise, it would be a willful and not a negligent injury. Westre v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., C.C.A.S.D., 2 F.2d 227, 229.

NEGLIGENCE, ESTOPPEL BY. An estoppel which occurs when one who is under a legal duty, either to the person injured or to the public, to act with due care, fails to do so, and such failure is the natural and proximate cause of misleading that person to alter his position. Bradford v. Ins. Co., C.C.A.Pa., 102 F. 48, 43 C.C.A. 310, 49 L.R.A. 530; Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. McCarty, 68 N.J.Law, 165, 52 Atl. 575; Brown & Co. v. Ins. Co., 42 Md. 384, 20 Am.Rep. 90; 1 C. P. D. 578; 1905, 1 K. B. 677; Bigelow, Est. 6th Ed. 711.

An estoppel arises when one by acts, representations, intentionally or negligently, induces another to change his position for the worse. Smith v. Vara, 136 Misc. 500, 241 N.Y.S. 202, 209.

An estoppel arises when one by acts, representations, or admissions, or by silence when he ought to speak, intentionally or through culpable negligence, induces another to believe certain facts to exist and such other rightfully relies and acts on such belief so that he will be prejudiced if the former is permitted to deny the existence of such facts. Postal v. Home State Bank for Savings, 284 Mich. 220, 279 N.W. 488, 491. American Exchange Nat. Bank v. Winder, 198 N.C. 18, 150 S.E. 489, 491.

Estoppel may exist where a party has led another into the belief of a certain state of facts by conduct of culpable negligence, calculated to have that result, and the other party has acted upon such belief to his prejudice. Scott v. First Nat. Bank, 343 Mo. 77, 119 S.W.2d 929, 938.

The phrase "estoppel by negligence" has been characterized as "an expression usual but not accurate, since negligence prevents a right of action accruing, estoppel a right that has accrued from being set up"; 2 Beven, Negl. 1332. See a discussion of the doctrine, with critical examination of the English cases, in 15 L. Q. R. 384.

NEGLIGENCE PER SE. Conduct, whether of action or omission, which may be declared and treated as negligence without any argument or proof as to the particular surrounding circumstances, either because it is in violation of a statute or valid municipal ordinance, or because it is so palpably opposed to the dictates of common prudence that it can be said without hesitation or doubt that no careful person would have been guilty of it. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Lee, 70 Tex. 496, 7 S.W. 857; Murray v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 101 Mo. 236, 13 S.W. 817, 20 Am.St.Rep. 601. As a general rule, the violation of a public duty, enjoined by law for the protection of person or property, constitutes. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Pitchford, 44 Okl. 197, 143 P. 1146, 1150; Kavanaugh v. New York, 0. & W. Ry. Co., 196 App.Div. 384, 187 N.Y.S. 859, 860.

NEGLIGENT. One is not "negligent" unless he fails to exercise that degree of reasonable care that would be exercised by person of ordinary prudence under all the existing circumstances in view of probable danger of injury. Pulford v. Mouw, 279 Mich. 376, 272 N.W. 713, 714.

The word is often used to include all conduct which, although not intended to invade any legally protected interest, has the element of social fault. Universal Concrete Pipe Co. v. Bassett, 130 Ohio St. 567, 200 N.E. 843, 847.

NEGLIGENT ESCAPE. Where prisoner escapes through officer's negligence. Hershey v. People, 91 Colo. 113, 12 P.2d 345, 347.

Where a party arrested or imprisoned escapes against the will of him who arrests or imprisons him, and is not freshly pursued and taken again before he has been lost sight of. State v. Wedin, 85 N.J.L. 399, 89 A. 753, 754.

NEGLIGENT OFFENSE. One which ensues from a defective discharge of a duty, which defect could have been avoided by the exercise of that care which is usual, under similar circumstances, with prudent persons of the same class. People v. Gaydica, 122 Misc.Rep. 31, 203 N.Y.S. 243, 258.

NEGLIGENT VIOLATION OF STATUTE. One occasioned by or accompanied with negligent conduct. Hamrick v. McCutcheon, 101 W.Va. 485, 133 S.E. 127, 128.

NEGLIGENTIA. Lat. In the civil law, carelessness; inattention; the omission of proper care or forethought. The term is not exactly equivalent to our "negligence," inasmuch as it was not a negligence, but only a high or gross degree of it, that amounted to culpa, (actionable or punishable fault.)

NEGLIGENTIA SEMPER HABET INFORTUNIUM COMITEM. Negligence always has misfortune for a companion. Co. Litt. 246b; Shep. Touch. 476.

NEGLIGENTLY DONE. The doing of an act where ordinary care required that it should not have been done at all, or that it should have been done in some other way, and where the doing of the act was not consistent with the exercise of ordinary care under the circumstances. Curtis v. Mauger, 186 Ind. 118, 114 N.E. 408, 409.

NEGOCE. Fr. Business; trade; management of affairs.

NEGOTIABILITY. In mercantile law, transferable quality. That quality of bills of exchange and promissory notes which renders them transferable from one person to another, and from possessing which they are emphatically termed "negotiable paper." 3 Kent, Comm. 74, 77, 89, et seq. Story, Bills, § 60.

NEGOTIABLE. Capable of being transferred by indorsement or delivery so as to pass to holder the right to sue in his own name and take free of equities against assignor payee. Fischbach & Moore v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 134 Pa.Super. 84, 3 A.2d 1011, 1012.

An instrument embodying an obligation for the payment of money is called "negotiable" when the legal title to the instrument itself and to the whole amount of money expressed upon its face, with the right to sue therefor in his own name, may be transferred from one person to another without a formal assignment, but by mere indorsement and delivery by the holder or by delivery only. 1 Daniel, Nego. Inst. § 1; Walker v. Ocean Bank, 19 Ind. 247; Robinson v. Wilkinson, 38 Mich. 299.

Quasi Negotiable. "Quasi negotiable" describes the nature of instruments which, while not negotiable, in sense of law merchant, are so framed and dealt with as frequently to convey as good title to transferee as if they were negotiable. A bill of lading is a quasi negotiable instrument. National Bank of Savannah v. Kershaw Oil Mill, C. C. A. S. C., 202 F. 90, 94.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. Any written securities which may be transferred by indorsement and delivery or by delivery merely, so as to vest in the indorsor the legal title, and thus enable him to sue thereon in his own name. Or, more technically, those instruments which not only carry the legal title with them by indorsement.
or delivery, but carry as well, when transferred before maturity, the right of the transferee to demand the full amounts which their faces call for. Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1a.

A negotiable instrument is a written promise or request for the payment of a certain sum of money to order or bearer. Civ.Code Cal. § 3087.

Under the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act, an instrument, to be negotiable, must be in writing and signed; must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a certain sum of money on demand, or at a fixed and determinable future time; it must be payable to order or to bearer, and where it is addressed to the drawee, he must be named or otherwise indicated with reasonable certainty; its negotiability is not affected by the fact that it is not dated, or that it bears a seal, or that it does not specify the value given or that any value was given.

NEGOTIABLE WORDS. Words and phrases which impart the character of negotiability to bills, notes, checks, etc., in which they are inserted; for instance, a direction to pay to A. "or order" or "bearer."

NEGOTIATE. To transact business, to treat with another respecting a purchase and sale, to hold intercourse, to bargain or trade, to conduct communications or conferences. It is that which pass-es between parties or their agents in the course of or incident to the making of a contract and is also conversation in arranging terms of contract. Werner v. Hendricks, 121 Pa.Super. 46, 182 A. 748, 749.

To discuss or arrange a sale or bargain; to arrange the preliminaries of a business transaction. Also to sell or discount negotiable paper, or assign or transfer it by indorse-ment and delivery. Palmer v. Ferry, 6 Gray, Mass., 420; Newport Nat. Bank v. Board of Education, 114 Ky. 87, 70 S.W. 186.

An instrument is "negotiated" when transferred from one person to another so as to constitute transferee holder thereof. Ficklin v. Nickles, 238 Ky. 591, 38 S.W.2d 456, 459.

NEUTRALITY PROCLAMATION. A proclamation by the president of the United States, issued on the outbreak of a war between two powers with both of which the United States is at peace, announcing the neutrality of the United States and warning all citizens to refrain from any breach of the neutrality laws.

NEW. As an element in numerous compound terms and phrases of the law, this word may denote novelty, or the condition of being previously unknown or of recent or fresh origin, but ordinarily it is a purely relative term and is employed in contrasting the date, origin, or character of one thing with the corresponding attributes of another thing of the same kind or class.

Of New. See that title.

NEW ACQUISITION. An estate derived from any source other than descent, devise, or gift from father or mother or any relative in the paternal or maternal line. Webb v. Caldwell, 198 Ark. 331, 128 S.W.2d 691, 694, 122 A.L.R. 814.

NEW AND USEFUL. The phrase used in the patent laws to describe the two qualities of an invention or discovery which are essential to make it patentable, viz., novelty, or the condition of having been previously unknown, and practical utility. In re Gould, 1 MacArthur, D.C. 410; Adams v. Turner, 73 Conn. 38, 46 A. 247; Lowell v. Lewis, 1 Mason, 182, F.Cas.No.8,568.

To accomplish a new and useful result within meaning of Rev.St. § 4886, 35 U.S.C.A. § 31, it is not necessary that result before unknown should be brought about, but it is sufficient if an old result is accomplished in a new and more effective way. Hirschy v. Wisconsin-Minnesota Gas & Electric Household Appliances Co., D.C.Minn., 18 F.2d 347, 354. An invention achieves a new result, where a function which had been performed by other means was performed to an efficient degree by an association of means never before combined, though all of them were old, and some of the changes seemed to be only in degree. American Ball Bearing Co. v. Finch, C.C.A.Ohio, 239 F. 885, 889.

NEW ASSIGNMENT. Under the common-law practice, where the declaration in an action is ambiguous, and the defendant pleads facts which are literally an answer to it, but not to the real claim set up by the plaintiff, the plaintiff's course is to reply by way of new assignment; i.e., allege that he brought his action not for the cause supposed by the defendant, but for some other cause to which the plea has no application. 3 Steph.Comm. 507; Sweet. Bishop v. Travis, 51 Minn. 183, 53 N.W. 461.

NEW CAUSE OF ACTION. With reference to the amendment of pleadings, this term may refer to a new state of facts out of which liability is claimed to arise, or it may refer to parties who are alleged to be entitled under the same state of facts, or it may embrace both features. Love v. Southern R. Co., 108 Tenn. 104, 65 S.W. 475, 55 L.R.A. 471; Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 139 Ala. 578, 36 So. 707, 101 Am.St.Rep. 52.

NEW FOR OLD. In making an adjustment of a partial loss under a policy of marine insurance, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance. 3 Kent, Comm. 339.

NEW INN. An inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery.

NEW MATTER. In pleading, matter of fact not previously alleged by either party in the pleadings. Walters v. Battenfield, 21 N.M. 413, 155 P. 721, 723; Continental Gin Co. v. Arnold, 52 Okl. 569, 153 P. 160, 163.

When the ancient form of work is changed, either by an addition being made to it or by some part of the ancient work being taken away, it is styled also a "new work." Civ.Code La. art. 856.

NEW YEAR'S DAY. The first day of January.

The 25th of March was the civil and legal New Year's Day, till the alteration of the style in 1752, when it was permanently fixed at the 1st of January. In Scotland the year was, by an act of the privy council, which bears date 27th of November, 1599, ordered thenceforth to commence in that kingdom on the 1st of January instead of the 25th of March. Enc.Lond.

NEWGATE. The name of a prison in London, said to have existed as early as 1207. For centuries the condition of the place was horrible, but it has been greatly improved since 1808.

NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE. Evidence of a new and material fact, or new evidence in relation to a fact in issue, discovered by a party to a cause after the rendition of a verdict or judgment therein. Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 816; People v. Priori, 164 N.Y. 459, 58 N.E. 668. Testimony discovered after trial, not discoverable before trial by exercise of due diligence. Mode v. State, 169 Ark. 356, 275 S.W. 700, 701; State v. Blackwood, 103 Wash. 529, 175 P. 168, 169; Murphy v. Skelly, 101 N.J.Eq. 753, 138 A. 882, 884, any evidence newly discovered, whether the facts existed at the time of the trial or not. In re Wood, 140 Minn. 130, 167 N.W. 358, 359. For the requirements which such evidence must meet before a new trial will be granted, State v. Luttrell, 28 N.M. 393, 212 P. 739, 741; Sanchez v. State, 199 Ind. 235, 157 N.E. 1, 3; Goniirenki v. American Steel & Wire Co., 106 Conn. 1, 137 A. 26, 28.

Official Newspaper. One designated by a state or municipal legislative body, or agents empowered by them, in which the public acts, resolves, advertisements, and notices are required to be published. Albany County v. Chaplin, 5 Wyo. 74, 37 P. 370.

NEXI. Lat. In Roman law, bound; bound persons. A term applied to such insolvent debtors as were delivered up to their creditors, by whom they might be held in bondage until their debts were discharged. Calvin; Adams, Rom.Ant. 49.

Nearest or highest, not in the sense of propinquity alone, as, for example, three persons on three chairs, one in the midst; those 775 each side of the middle one are equally near, each "next" to the middle one; but it signifies also order, or succession, or relation as well as propinquity. 27 L.J.Ch. 654. 3 Q.B. 723; Couch v. Turnpike Co., 4 Johns. Ch., N.Y., 26.

NEXT DEVISEE. Person to whom remainder is given by will. Young v. Robinson, 5 N.J.L. 689.

NEXT EVENTUAL ESTATE. Estate taking effect upon happening of the event terminating accumulation. In re Shupack's Estate, 158 Misc. 873, 287 N.Y.S. 184, 196.

NEXT FRIEND. One acting for benefit of infant, married woman, or other person not sui juris, without being regularly appointed guardian. In re Boulware's Will, 144 Misc. 235, 258 N.Y.S. 522.

"Next friend" or "prochein ami" is one admitted to court to prosecute for infant. Crawford v. Amusement Syndicate Co., Mo., 37 S.W.2d 581, 584.

NEXT OF KIN. In the law of descent and distribution, this term properly denotes the persons nearest of kindred to the decedent, that is, those who are most nearly related to him by blood; but it is sometimes construed to mean only those who are entitled to take under the statute of distributions, and sometimes to include other persons. 2 Story, Eq.Jur. § 1065b; Barrett v. Egbertson, 92 N.J.Eq. 118, 111 A. 326, 327; Godfrey v. Epble, 100 Ohio St. 447, 126 N.E. 886, 11 A.L.R. 317; Close v. Breathing, 97 Conn. 102, 115 A. 626, 627, 20 A.L.R. 351; Hamilton v. Erie R. Co., 219 N.Y. 343, 114 N.E. 399, 403, Ann.Cas.1918A, 928; Arnold v. O'Connor, 37 R.I. 557, 94 A. 145, L.R.A.1916C, 898; Mostenbocker v. Shawnee Gas & Electric Co., 49 Okl. 304, 152 P. 82, 83, L.R.A.1916B, 910. The words "next of kin," used simpliciter in a deed or will, mean, not nearest of kindred, but those relatives who share in the estate according to the statute of distributions, including those claiming per stirpes or by representation. Slosson v. Lynch, 43 Barb., N.Y., 147.

NEXT PRESENTATION. In the law of advowsons, the right of next presentation is the right to present to the first vacancy of a benefice.

NEXUM. Lat. In Roman law, in ancient times the nexum seems to have been a species of formal contract, involving a loan of money, and attended with peculiar consequences, solemnized with the "copper and balance." Later, it appears to have been used as a general term for any contract struck with those ceremonies, and hence to have included the special form of conveyance called "mancipatio." In a general sense it means the obligation or bond between contracting parties. Maine, Anc.Law, 305, et seq.; Hadl.Rom. Law. 247.

In Roman law, this word expressed the tie or obligation involved in the old conveyance by mancipatio; and came latterly to be used interchangeably with (but less frequently than) the word "obligatio" itself. Brown.

NICHELLS. In English practice, debts due to the exchequer which the sheriff could not levy, and as to which he returned nil. These sums were transcribed once a year by the clerk of the nichills, and sent to the treasurer's remembrancer's office, whence process was issued to recover the "nichill" debts. Both of these offices were abolished in 1833. Mozley & Whitley.
NIENT SEISI. In old pleading, not seised.

NICKNAME. A short name; one nicked or cut off for the sake of brevity, without conveying an idea of opprobrium, and frequently evincing the strongest affection or the most perfect familiarity. North Carolina Inst. v. Norwood, 45 N.C. 74.

NIDERLING, NIDERING, or NITHING. A vile, base person, or sluggard; chicken-hearted. Spel.

NIECE. The daughter of one's brother or sister. Amb. 514. Capps v. State, 87 Fla. 388, 100 So. 172, 173.

In legal usage only children of brothers and sisters are called "nephews" and "nieces," children of husband's or wife's brothers and sisters being so called only by courtesy. In re Lambert's Estate, 105 Pa.Super. 348, 161 A. 596, 597.

NIEFE. In old English law, a woman born in vassalage; a bondwoman.

NIENT. L. Fr. Nothing; not.

NIENT COMPRISE. Not comprised; not included. An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded. Tomlins.

NIENT CULPABLE. Not guilty. The name in law French of the general issue in tort or in a criminal action.

NIENT DEDIRE. To say nothing; to deny nothing; to suffer judgment by default.

NIENT LE FAIT. In pleading, not the deed; not his deed. The same as the plea of non est factum.

NIENT SEISI. In old pleading, not seised. The general plea in the writ of annuity. Crabb, Eng. Law, 424.

NIGER LIBER, See Liber Niger.

NIGHT. At common-law, that period between sunset and sunrise during which there is not daylight enough to discern a man's face. 1 Hale, P. C. 350; State v. Perkins, 342 Mo. 560, 116 S.W.2d 80, 81, 82.

The rule is often followed that "nighttime" begins thirty minutes after sunset and ends thirty minutes before sunrise. State v. Perkins, 342 Mo. 560, 116 S.W.2d 80, 82.

However, the limit of 9 p. m. to 6 a. m. has been fixed by statute, in England, as the period of night, in prosecutions for burglary and larceny. St. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 1; Brown. In American law, the common-law definition is still adhered to in some states, but in others "night" has been defined by statute. U. S. v. Lepper, D.C.N.Y., 288 F. 136, 137; Weatherred v. State, 101 Tex.Cr.R. 520, 276 S.W. 436, 437.

NIGHT MAGISTRATE. A constable of the night; the head of a watch-house.

NIGHT WALKERS. Described in the statute 5 Edw. III. c. 14, as persons who sleep by day and walk by night. Persons who prowl about at night, and are of a suspicious appearance and behavior. Persons whose habit is to be abroad at night for the purpose of committing some crime or nuisance or mischief or disturbing the peace; not now generally subject to the criminal laws except in respect to misdemeanors actually committed, or in the character of vagrants or suspicious persons. Thomas v. State, 55 Ala. 260, 261; State v. Dowers, 45 N.H. 543. In a narrower sense, a night walker is a prostitute who walks the streets at night for the purpose of soliciting men for lewd purposes. Stokes v. State, 92 Ala. 73, 9 So. 400, 25 Am.St.Rep. 22; People v. Berger, Gen.Sess., 169 N.Y.S. 319, 321.

NIGRUM NUNQUAM EXCEDERE DEBET RU-BRUM. The black should never go beyond the red, [i. e., the text of a statute should never be read in a sense more comprehensive than the rubric, or title.] Tray. Lat. Max. 373.

NIHIL. Lat. Nothing. Often contracted to "nill." The word standing alone is the name of an abbreviated form of return to a writ made by a sheriff or constable, the fuller form of which would be "nihil est" or "nihil habet," according to circumstances.

NIHIL ALIUD POTEST REX QUAM QUOD DE JURE POTEST. 11 Coke, 74. The king can do nothing except what he can by law do.

NIHIL CAPIAT PER BREVE. In practice, that he take nothing by his writ. The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nihil capiat per billam. Co.Litt. 363.

NIHIL CONSENSUI TAM CONTRARIA EST QUAM VIS ATQUE METUS. Nothing is so opposed to consent as force and fear. Dig. 50, 17, 116.

NIHIL DAT QUI NON HABET. He gives nothing who has nothing.

NIHIL DE RE ACCRESCIT EI QUI NIHIL EV. RE QUANDO JUS ACCRESCERET HABET. Co. Litt. 188. Nothing of a matter accrues to him who, when the right accrues, has nothing in that matter.

NIHIL DICT. He says nothing.

This is the name of the judgment which may be taken as of course against a defendant who omits to plead or answer the plaintiff's declaration or complaint within the time limited. In some jurisdictions it is otherwise known as judgment "for want of a plea." Gilder v. McIntyre, 29 Tex. 91; Falken v. Housatonic R. Co., 63 Conn. 258, 27 A. 1117; Wilbur v. Maynard, 6 Colo. 486.

Judgment taken against party who withdraws his answer which amounts to confession of judgment nihil dicit, which amounts to confession of cause of action stated, and carries with it, more strongly than judgment by default, admission of justice of plaintiff's case. Howe v. Central State Bank of Coleman, Tex. Civ.App., 297 S.W. 692, 694.

NIHIL DICTUM QUOD NON DICTUM PRIUS. Nothing is said which was not said before. Said of a case where former arguments were repeated. Hardr. 464.
NIHIL EST. There is nothing. A form of return made by a sheriff when he has been unable to serve the writ.

“Although non est inventus is the more frequent return in such a case, yet it is by no means as full in answer to the command of the writ as is the return of nihil. That amounts to an averment that the defendant has nothing in the bailiwick, no dwelling-house, no family, no residence, and no personal presence to enable the officer to make the service required by the act of assembly. It is therefore a full answer to the exigency of the writ.” Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. 139.

NIHIL EST ENIM LIBERALE QUOD NON IDEM JUSTUM. For there is nothing generous which is not at the same time just. 2 Kent, Comm. 441, note a.

NIHIL FACIT ERROR NOMINIS CUM DE CORPORE CONSTAT. 11 Coke, 21. An error as to a name is nothing when there is certainty as to the person.

NIHIL HABET. He has nothing. The name of a return made by a sheriff to a scire facias or other writ which he has been unable to serve on the defendant.

NIHIL HABET FORUM EX SCENA. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it. Bac.Max.

NIHIL IN LEGE INTORELABIILUS EST [QUAM] EANDEM REM DIVERSO JURE CENSERI. Nothing is more intolerable in law than that the same matter, thing, or case should be dissolved or discharged in the same way in which it was created. Shep.Touch. 323.

NIHIL INFRA REGNUM SUBDITOS MAGIS CONSERVAT IN TRANQUILITATE ET CONCORDIA QUAM DEBITA LEGUM ADMINISTRATIONE. Nothing preserves in tranquillity and concord those who are subjected to the same government better than a due administration of the laws. 2 Inst. 158.

NUM INIQUIUS QUAM ZEQUITATEM NIMIS INTENDERE. Nothing is more unjust than to extend equity too far. Halk. 103.

NIHIL MAGIS JUSTUM EST QUAM QUOD NECESSARIUM EST. Nothing is more just than that which is necessary. Da2/Ir.K.B. 12; Branch, Princ.

NIHIL NEQUAM EST PRZESUMENDUM. Nothing wicked is to be presumed. 2 P.Wms. 583.

NIHIL PETI POTEST ANTE ID TEMPUS QUO PER RERUM NATURAM PERSOLVI POSSIT. Nothing can be demanded before the time when, by the nature of things, it can be paid. Dig. 50, 17, 186.

NIHIL POSSUMUS CONTRA VERITATEM. We can do nothing against truth. Doct. & Stud. dial. 2, c. 6.

NIHIL PRZESCRIBITUR NISI QUOD POSSIDERE TUR. There is no prescription for that which is not possessed. 5 Barn. & Ald. 277.

NIHIL QUOD EST CONTRA RATIONEM EST LICITUM. Nothing that is against reason is lawful. Co.Litt. 97b.

NIHIL QUOD EST INCONVENIENS EST LICITUM. Nothing that is inconvenient is lawful. Co.Litt. 66a, 97b. A maxim very frequently quoted by Lord Coke, but to be taken in modern law with some qualification. Broom, Max. 186, 366.

NIHIL SIMUL INVENTUM EST ET PERFECTUM. Co.Litt. 230. Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment.

NIHIL TAM CONVENIENS EST NATURAL'ÆQUITATI QUAM UNUMQUODQUE DISSOVLÆO LIGAMINE QUO LIGATUM EST. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as that a thing should be dissolved by the same means by which it was bound. 2 Inst. 359; Broom, Max. 877.

NIHIL TAM CONVENIENS EST NATURALÆQUITATI QUAM VOLUNTATEM DOMINI REM SUAM IN ALIUM TRANSFERRE RATAM HABERE. 1 Coke, 100. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as to regard the intention of the owner in transferring his own property to another.

NIHIL TAM NATURALE EST, QUAM EO GENERE QUIQUE DISSOVLÆO, QUO COLLIGATUM EST; IDEO VERBORUM OBLIGATIO VERBIS TOLLITUR; NUDI CONSENSUS OBLIGAT OBLIGAT CONTRARIO CONSENSU DISSOLVITUR. Nothing is so natural as to dissolve anything in the way in which it was bound together; therefore the obligation of words is taken away by words; the obligation of mere consent is dissolved by the contrary consent. Dig. 50, 17, 35; Broom, Max. 887.

NIHIL TAM PROPRIUM IMPERIO QUAM LEGIBUS VI VERÈ. Nothing is so becoming to authority as to live in accordance with the laws. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 17, § 11.

NIHILIST. One advocating doctrine of nihilism. Webster. One devoted to the destruction of the present political, religious, and social institutions.

NIL. Lat. Nothing. A contracted form of “nihil,” which see.

NIL AGIT EXEMPLUM LITEM QUOD LITEM RESOLVIT. An example does no good which settles one question by another. Hatch v. Mann, 15 Wend. (N.Y.) 44, 49.
NIL CONSENSUI TAM CONTRARIUM EST QUAM VIS ATQUE METUS. Nothing is so opposed to consent as force and fear. Dig. 50, 17, 116.

NIL DEBET. He owes nothing. The form of the general issue in all actions of debt on simple contract.

NIL FACIT ERROR NOMINIS CUM DE CORPORE VEL PERSONA CONSTAT. A mistake in the name does not matter when the body or person is manifest. 11 Coke, 21; Broom, Max. 634.

NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS. He had nothing (no interest) in the tenements. A plea in debt on a lease indented, by which the defendant sets up that the person claiming to be landlord had no title or interest.

NIL LIGATUM. Nothing bound; that is, no obligation has been incurred. Tray. Lat. Max.

NIL SINE PRUDENTI FECIT RAIONE VETUSTAS. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason. Co.Litt. 65.

NIL SINE PRUDENT! FECIT RAIONE VETUSTAS. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason. Co.Litt. 65.

Nrr., TEMERE NOVANDUM. Nothing should be rashly changed. Jenk.Cent. 163.

NIMIA CERTITUDO CERTITUDINEM IPSAM DESTRUIT. Too great certainty destroys certainty itself. Loftt, 244.

NIMIA SUBTILITAS IN JURE REPROBATUR. Too much subtlety in law is dis- countenanced.

NIMIUM ALTERCANDO VERITAS AMITTITUR. By too much altercation truth is lost.

NIMMER. A thief; a pilferer.

NISI. Lat. Unless.

The word is often affixed, as a kind of elliptical expression, to the words “rule,” “order,” “decree,” “judgment,” or “confirmation,” to indicate that the adjudication spoken of is one which is to stand as valid and operative unless the party affected by it shall appear and show cause against it, or shall other wise step to avoid it or procure its revocation. Thus a “decree nisi” is one which will definitely conclude the defendant’s rights unless, within the prescribed time, he shows cause to set it aside or successfully appeals. The word, in this sense, is opposed to “absolute.” And when a rule nisi is finally confirmed, for the defendant’s failure to show cause against it, it is said to be “made absolute.”

NISI FECERIS. The name of a clause commonly occurring in the old manorial writs, commanding that, if the lords failed to do justice, the king’s court or officer should do it. By virtue of this clause, the king’s court usurped the jurisdiction of the private, manorial, or local courts. Stim. Law Gloss.

NISI PRIUS. The nisi prius courts are such as are held for the trial of issues of fact before a jury and one presiding judge. In America the phrase is familiarly used to denote the forum (whatever may be its statutory name) in which the cause was tried to a jury, as distinguished from the appellate court. See 3 Bl.Comm. 58.

NISI PRIUS CLAUSE. In practice, a clause entered on the record in an action at law, authorizing the trial of the cause at nisi prius in the particular county designated. It was first used by way of continuance.

NISI PRIUS ROLL. In practice, the roll or record containing the pleadings, issue, and jury process of an action, made up for use in the nisi prius court.

NISI PRIUS WRIT. The old name of the writ of venire, which originally, in pursuance of the statute of Westminster 2, contained the nisi prius clause. Reg.Jud. 28, 75. Cowell.

NIVICOLLINI BRITONES. In old English law, Welshmen, because they live near high mountains covered with snow. Du Cange.

NO AWARD. The name of a plea in an action on an award, by which the defendant traverses the allegation that an award was made.

NO BILL. This phrase, when indorsed by a grand jury on an indictment, is equivalent to “not found,” “not a true bill,” or “ignoramus.”

NO FUNDS. See Fund.

NO GOODS. This is the English equivalent of the Latin term “nulla bona,” being the form of the return made by a sheriff or constable, charged with an execution, when he has found no property of the debtor on which to levy.

NO MAN CAN HOLD THE SAME LAND IMMEDIATELY OF TWO SEVERAL LANDLORDS. Co.Litt. 152.

NO MAN IS PRESUMED TO DO ANYTHING AGAINST NATURE. 22 Vin.Abr. 154.

NO MAN MAY BE JUDGE IN HIS OWN CAUSE.

NO MAN SHALL SET UP HIS INFAMY AS A DEFENSE. 2 W.B1. 364.

NO MAN SHALL TAKE BY DEED BUT PARTIES, UNLESS IN REMAINDER.

NO RECOUERCE. No access to; no return; no coming back upon; no assumption of any liability whatsoever; no looking to the party using the term for any reimbursement in case of loss or damage or failure of consideration in that which was the cause, the motive, the object, of the undertaking or contract. Guardian Homestead Ass'n v. Mazerat, 182 La. 710, 162 So. 574.

NOBILE OFFICIIUM. In Scotch law, an equitable power of the court of session, to give relief when none is possible at law. Ersk.Inst. 1, 3, 22; Bell.

NOBILES MAGIES PLECTUNTUR PECUNIA; PLEBES VERO IN CORPORE. 3 Inst. 220. The higher classes are more punished in money; but the lower in person.

NOBILES SUNT, QUI ARMA GENTILITIA ANTECESSORUM SUORUM PROFERRE POSSUNT. 2 Inst. 595. The gentry are those who are able to produce armorial bearings derived by descent from their own ancestors.

NOBILIORES ET BENIGNIORES PRZESUMP-TIONES IN DUBIS SUNT PRIEFERENDIE. In cases of doubt, the more generous and more benign presumptions are to be preferred. A civil-law maxim.

NOBILITAS EST DUPLEX, SUPERIOR ET INFERIOR. 2 Inst. 583. There are two sorts of nobility, the higher and the lower.

NOBILITY. In English law, a division of the people, comprehending dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons.

These had anciently duties annexed to their respective honours. They are created either by writ, i.e., by royal summons to attend the house of peers, or by letters patent, i.e., by royal grant of any dignity and degree of peerage; and they enjoy many privileges, exclusive of their senatorial capacity. 1 Bl. Comm. 396.

NOCTANTER. By night; an abolished writ which issued out of chancery, and returned to the queen's bench, for the prostration of inclosures, etc.

NOCTES and NOCTEM DE FIRMA. Entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights. Domesday.

NOCUMENTUM. Lat. In old English law, a nuisance. Nocumentum damnosum, a nuisance occasioning loss or damage. Nocumentum injuriosum, an injurious nuisance. For the latter only a remedy was given. Bract. fol. 221.

NOLENS VOLENS. Lat. Whether willing or unwilling; consenting or not.

NOLLE PROSEQUI. Lat. In practice, a formal entry upon the record, by the plaintiff in a civil suit (Hewitt v. International Shoe Co., 110 Fla. 37, 148 So. 533, 536), or the prosecuting officer in a criminal action, (Commonwealth v. Shields, 89 Pa. Super. 266, 268) by which he declares that he "will not further prosecute" the case, either as to some of the counts, or some of the defendants, or altogether. State v. Primm, 61 Mo. 171; Com. v. Casey, 12 Allen, Mass., 214; Scheibler v. Steinburg, 129 Tenn. 614, 167 S.W. 866, Ann.Cas.1915D, 1162.

A nolle prosequi is in the nature of an acknowledgment or undertaking by the plaintiff in an action to forbear to proceed any further either in the action altogether, or as to some part of it, or as to some of the defendants; and is different from a non pros., by which the plaintiff is put out of court with respect to all the defendants. Brown.

NOLLE CONTENDERE. Lat. I will not contest it. The name of a plea in a criminal action, having the same legal effect as a plea of guilty, so far as regards all proceedings on the indictment, and on which the defendant may be sentenced. U. S. v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. 221, F.Cas.No.15,318.

See, also, Plea.

NOMEN. Lat. In the civil law, a name; the name, style, or designation of a person. Properly, the name showing to what class, or term expressive of a class; a term inclusive of a class or genus of persons or objects. A debt or a debtor. Ainsworth; Calvin.

NOMEN COLLECTIVUM. A collective name or term; a term expressive of a class; a term including several of the same kind; a term expressive of the plural, as well as singular, number.

NOMEN EST QUASI REI NOTAMEN. A name is, as it were, the note of a thing. 11 Coke, 20.

NOMEN GENERALE. A general name; the name of a genus. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 1.

NOMEN GENERALISSIMUM. A name of the most general kind; a name or term of the most general meaning. By the name of "land," which is nomen generalissimum, everything terrestrial will pass. 2 Bl.Comm. 19; 3 Bl.Comm. 172.

NOMEN JURIS. A name of the law; a technical legal term.

NOMEN NON SUFFICIT, SI RES NON SIT DE JURE AUT DE FACTO. A name is not sufficient if there be not a thing [or subject for it] de jure or de facto. 4 Coke, 107b.

NOMEN TRANSCRIPTITUM. See Nomina Transcriptitia.
NOMINA MUTABILIA SUNT, RES AUTEM IMMOBILES. Names are mutable, but things are immovable, jmutable. A name may be true or false, or may change, but the thing itself always maintains its identity. 6 Coke, 66.

NOMINA SI NESCIS PERIT COGNITIO RERUM; ET NOMINA SI PERDAS, CERTE DISTINCTIO NOMINA SI NESCIS PERIT COGNITIO RERUM; the plaintiff’s action would be defective, under the connection with the subject-matter is such that he must be joined as defendant in an action, not because he is immediately liable in damages or because any specific relief is demanded as against him, but because his connection with the subject-matter is such that the plaintiff’s action would be defective, under the technical rules of practice, if he were not joined.

NOMINAL DEFENDANT. A person who is joined to appear in the style of the firm or to be used in its business, in the character of a partner, but who has no actual interest in the firm or business. Story, Partn. § 80.

NOMINAL PARTY. Those who are joined as parties or defendants merely because the technical rules of pleading require their presence in the record. Yellow Cab & Baggage Co. v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 30 S.W.2d 697, 702. Those having no interest in immediate controversy, but having interest in subject-matter which may be conveniently settled in suit. Medico v. Employers’ Liability Assur. Corporation, 132 Me. 422, 172 A. 1, 3.

NOMINAL PLAINTIFF. One who has no interest in the subject-matter of the action, having assigned the same to another, (the real plaintiff in interest, or “use plaintiff,”) but who must be joined as plaintiff, because, under technical rules of practice, the suit cannot be brought directly in the name of the assignee.

NOMINATE CONTRACTS. In the civil law, contracts having a proper or peculiar name and form, and which were divided into four kinds, expressive of the ways in which they were formed, viz.: (1) Real, which arose ex re, from something done; (2) verbal, ex verbis, from something said; (3) literal, ex literis, from something written; and (4) consensual, ex consensu, from something agreed to. Calvin.

NOMINATIM. Lat. By name; expressed one by one.

NOMINATING AND REDUCING. A mode of obtaining a panel of special jurors in England, from which to select the jury to try a particular action. The proceeding takes place before the under-sheriff or secondary, and in the presence of the parties’ solicitors. Numbers denoting the persons on the sheriff’s list are put into a box and drawn until forty-eight unchallenged persons have been nominated. Each party strikes off twelve, and the remaining twenty-four are returned as the “panel,” (q. v.). This practice is now only employed by order of the court or judge. (Sm.Ac. 130; Juries Act 1870, § 17.) Sweet.

NOMINATIO AUCTORIS. Lat. In Roman law, a form of plea or defense in an action for the recovery of real estate, by which the defendant, sued as the person apparently in possession, alleges that he holds only in the name or for the benefit of another, whose name he discloses by the plea, in order that the plaintiff may bring his action against such other. Mackeld. Rom.Law, § 297.

NOMINATION. An appointment or designation of a person to fill an office or discharge a duty. The act of suggesting or proposing a person by name as a candidate for an office.

NOMINATION PAPER. A paper used for selection of candidates by a political body which is not void or ineffective because it was not signed, marked, or otherwise authenticated. It is a mode of nominating candidates for office, which is not void or ineffective because it was not signed, marked, or otherwise authenticated. It is a mode of nominating candidates for office.
a political party and is not entitled to use a "nomination petition". Commonwealth v. Antico, 146 Pa.Super. 293, 22 A.2d 204, 209.

NOMINATION TO A LIVING. In English ecclesiastical law, the rights of nominating and of presenting to a living are distinct, and may reside in different persons. Presentation is the offering a clerk to the bishop. Nomination is the offering a clerk to the person who has the right of presentation. Brown.

NOMINATIVUS PENDENS. Lat. A nominative case grammatically unconnected with the rest of the sentence in which it stands. The opening words in the ordinary form of a deed inter partes, "This indenture," etc., down to "whereas," though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, are of this kind. Wharton.

NOMINE. Lat. By name; by the name of; under the name or designation of.

NOMINE PCENIE. In the name of a penalty.

In the civil law, a legacy was said to be left nomine penea3 where it was left for the purpose of coercing the heir to do or not to do something. Inst. 2, 20, 36.

The term has. also been applied, in English law, to some kinds of covenants, such as a covenant inserted in a lease that the lessee shall forfeit a certain sum on non-payment of rent, or on doing certain things, as plowing up ancient meadow, and the like. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 171, § 155.

NOMINEE. One who has been nominated or proposed for an office.

One designated to act for another as his representative in a rather limited sense. It is used sometimes to signify an agent or trustee. It has no connotation, however, other than that of acting for another, in representation of another, or as the grantee of another. Schuh Trading Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.7, 95 F.2d 404, 411.

NOMOCANON. (1) A collection of canons and imperial laws relative or conformable thereto. The first nomocanon was made by Johannes Scholasticus in 554. Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, in 883, compiled another nomocanon, or collection of the civil laws with the canons; this is the most celebrated.. Balsam wrote a commentary upon it in 1180. (2) A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without regard to imperial constitutions. Such is the nomocanon by M. Cotelier. Enc. Lond.

NON ERIT ALIA LEX ROME, ALIA ATHENIIS; ALIA NUNC, ALIA POSTHAC; SED ET OMNES GENTES, ET OMNI TEMPORE, UNA LEX, ET SEMPETERNA, ET IMMORTALIS CONTINEBIT. There will not be one law at Rome, another at Athens; one law now, another hereafter; but one eternal and immortal law shall bind together all nations throughout all time. Cic.Frag. de Repub. lib. 3; 3 Kent, Comm. 1.

NON EST ARCTIUS VINCULUM INTER HOMINES QUAM JUS JURANDUM. There is no closer [or firmer] bond between men than an oath. Jenk.Cent. p. 126, case 54.

NON EST CERTANDUM DE REGULIS JURIS. There is no disputing about rules of law.

NON EST CONSONUM RATIONI, QUOD CONGINITIO ACCESSORII IN CURIA CHRISTIANITATIS IMPEDIATUR, UBI CONGINITIO CAUSIE PRINCIPALIS AD FORUM ECCLESIASTICUM NOSCITUR PARTINERE. 12 Coke, 65. It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is admitted to appertain to an ecclesiastical court.

NON EST DISPUTANDUM CONTRA PRINCIPIA NEGANTEM. Co. Litt. 343. We cannot dispute against a man who denies first principles.

NON. EST FACTUM. Lat. A plea denying execution of instrument sued on, Blair v. Lockwood, 226 Ky. 412, 11 S.W.2d 107, 109.

A plea by way of traverse, which occurs in debt on bond or other specialty, and also in covenant. It denies that the deed mentioned in the declaration is the defendant’s deed. Under this, the defendant may contend at the trial that the deed was never executed in point of fact; but he cannot deny its validity in point of law. Wharton; Haggart v. Morgan, 5 N.Y. 422, 55 Am.Dec. 350; Evans v. Southern Turnpike Co., 18 Ind. 101.

The plea of non est factum is a denial of the execution of the instrument sued upon, and applies to notes or other instruments, as well as deeds, and applies only when the execution of the instrument is alleged to be the act of the party filing the plea, or adopted by him. Code Ga.1882, § 3472 (Civ.Code 1910, § 5676).

Special Non Est Factum. A form of the plea of non est factum, in debt on a specialty, by which the defendant alleges that, although he executed the deed, yet it is in law “not his deed,” because of certain special circumstances which he proceeds to set out; as, where he delivered the deed as an escrow, and it was turned over to the plaintiff prematurely or without performance of the condition.

NON EST INVENTUS. Lat. He is not found. The sheriff’s return to process requiring him to arrest the body of the defendant, when the latter is not found within his jurisdiction. It is often abbreviated, “n. e. i.,” or written, in English, “not found.” The Bremena v. Card, D.C.Wash., 38 F. 144.

NON EST JUSTUM ALIQUEM ANTEMATUM POST MORTEM FACERE BASTARDUM QUI TO- TO TEMPORE VITIE SUJE PRO LEGITIMO HABEBATUR. It is not just to make an elder-born a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate. 12 Coke, 44.

NON EST NOVUM UT PRIORES LEGES AD POSTERIORES TRAHANTUR. It is no new thing that prior statutes should give place to later ones. Dig. 1, 3, 36; Broom, Max. 28.

NON EST RECEDENDUM A COMMUNI OBSERVANTIA. There should be no departure from a common observance. 2 Co. 74.

NON EST REGULA QUIN FALLET. There is no rule but what may fail. Off.Exec. 212.

NON EST REUS NISI MENS SIT REA. One is not guilty unless his intention be guilty. Chisholm v. Chisholm, 105 Fla. 402, 141 So. 302, 303. This maxim is much criticised. See actus non reum tacit, etc.; Mens Rea.

NON EST SINGULIS CONCEDENDUM, QUOD PER MAGISTRATUM PUBLICE POSSIT FIERI, NE OCCASIO SIT MAJORIS TUMULTUS FACERI ENDI. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumults. Dig. 50, 17, 176.

NON EX OPINIONIBUS SINGULORUM, SED EX COMMUNI USI, NOMINA EXAUDIRI DEBENT. The names of things ought to be understood, not according to the opinions of individuals, but according to common usage. Dig. 33, 10, 7, 2.

NON EXEMPLIS SED LEGIBUS JUDICANDUM EST. Not by the facts of the case, but by the law must judgment be made. Dig. 7, 45, 13. (called by Albericus Gentilis lex aurea).

NON FACIAS MALUM, UT INDE FIAT BONUM. You are not to do evil, that good may be or result therefrom. 11 Coke, 74a; 5 Coke, 30b.

NON FECIT. Lat. He did not make it. A plea of the general issue in an action of assumpsit on a promissory note. 3 Man. & G. 446.

NON INFREGIT CONVENTIONEM. Lat. He did not break the contract. The name of a plea sometimes pleaded in the action of covenant, and intended as a general issue, but held to be a bad plea; there being, properly speaking, no general issue in that action. 1 Tidd, Pr. 356.

NON INTERFUI. I was not present. A report

NON INTROMITTENDO, QUANDO BREVE PRIECIPE IN CAPITE SUBDOLE IMPETRA-TUR. A writ addressed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one, who, under color of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite, had deceitfully obtained the writ called "precipe in capite," any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right. Reg. Orig. 4.

NON JURIDICUS. Not judicial; not legal. Dies non juridicus is a day on which legal proceedings cannot be had.

NON JUS EX REGULA, SED REGULA EX JURE. The law does not arise from the rule (or maxim,) but the rule from the law. Tray.Lat.Max. 384.

NON JUS, SED SEISINA, FACIT STIPITEM. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 2. It is not a mere right to enter on lands, but actual seisin, which makes a person the root or stock from which all future inheritance by right of blood must be derived. 2 Broom, Max. 525, 527.

NON LICET QUOD DISPENDIO LICET. That which may be [done only] at a loss is not allowed [to be done.] The law does not permit or require the doing of an act which will result only in loss. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, changeable, and unprofitable. Co.Litt. 127b.

NON LIQUET. Lat. It is not clear.

In the Roman courts, when any of the judges, after the hearing of a cause, were not satisfied that the case was made clear enough for them to pronounce a verdict, they were privileged to signify this opinion by casting a ballot inscribed with the letters "N. L.," the abbreviated form of the phrase "non liquet."

NON MERCHANDIZANDA VICTUALIA. An ancient writ addressed to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of a town sold victuals in gross or by retail during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they did. Reg. Orig. 184.

NON MOLESTANDO. A writ that lay for a person who was molested contrary to the king's protection granted to him. Reg.Orig. 184.

NON NASCI, ET NATUM MORI, PARIA SUNT. Not to be born, and to be dead-born, are the same.

NON OBLIGAT LEX NISI PROMULGATA. A law is not obligatory unless it be promulgated.

NON OBSERVATA FORMA, INFERTUR AD-NULLATIO ACTUS. Where form is not observed, an annulling of the act is inferred or follows. 12 Coke, 7.

NON OBSTANTE. Lat. Notwithstanding.

Words anciently used in public and private instruments, intended to preclude, in advance, any interpretation contrary to certain declared objects or purposes. Burrill.

A clause frequent in old English statutes and letters patent, (so termed from its initial words,) importing a license from the crown to do a thing which otherwise a person would be restrained by act of parliament from doing. Crabb, Corn. Law, 570; Flowl. 501; Cowell.

A power in the crown to dispense with the laws in any particular case. This was abolished by the bill of rights at the Revolution. 1 B1. Comm. 342.

NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO. Notwithstanding the verdict. A judgment entered by order of court for the plaintiff, although there has been a verdict for the defendant, is so called. German Ins. Co. v. Frederick, Kan., 58 F. 144, 7 C.C.A. 122; Wentworth v. Wentworth, 2 Minn. 282, Gil. 238, 72 Am.Dec. 97

Judgment non obstante veredicto originally, at common law, was a judgment entered for plaintiff "notwithstanding the verdict" for defendant; which could be done only, after verdict and before judgment, where it appeared that defendant's plea confessed the cause of action and set up matters in avoidance which, although verified by the verdict, were insufficient to constitute a defense or bar to the action. But either by statutory enactment or because of relaxation of the early common-law rule, the generally prevailing rule now is that either plaintiff or defendant may have a judgment non obstante veredicto in proper cases. 49 C.J.S.Judgments § 58.

Judgment non obstante veredicto in its broadest sense is a judgment rendered in favor of one party notwithstanding the finding of a verdict in favor of the other party, 49 C.J.S.Judgments § 59.

NON-ANCESTRAL ESTATE. Realty coming to deceased in any way other than by descent or devise from a now dead ancestor, or by deed of actual gift from a living one, there being no other consideration than that of blood. In re Yahola's Heirship, 142 Okl. 79, 285 P. 946, 948. One acquired by purchase or by act or agreement of the parties, as distinguished from one acquired by descent or by operation of law. Gray v. Chapman, 122 Okl. 130, 243 P. 522, 524.

NON-APPARENT EASEMENT. A non-continuous or discontinuous easement. Fetters v. Humphreys, 18 N.J.Eq. 262. See Easement.

NON-APPEARANCE. A failure of appearance; the omission of the defendant to appear within the time limited.

NON-ASSESSABLE. This word, placed upon a certificate of stock, does not cancel or impair the obligation to pay the amount due upon the shares created by the acceptance and holding of such certificate. At most its legal effect is a stipulation against liability from further assessment or taxation after the entire subscription of one hundred per cent. shall have been paid. Upton v. Tribblecock, 91 U.S. 45, 23 L.Ed. 203; Porter v. Northern Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 36 N.D. 199, 161 N.W. 1012, 1014.

NON-BAILABLE. Not admitting of bail; not requiring bail.

NON-CANCELLABLE. The term merely limited the right of assurer to cancel after an illness or accident, so long as the premium was paid. Dudgeon v. Mutual Ben. Health & Accident Ass'n, C.C. A.W.Va., 70 F.2d 49, 52.

NON-CLAIM. The omission or neglect of him who ought to claim his right within the time limited by law; as within a year and a day where a continual claim was required, or within five years after a fine had been levied. Termes de la Ley.

Covenant of Non-Claim. See Covenant.

NON-COMBATANT. A person connected with an army or navy, but for purposes other than fighting; such as the surgeons and chaplains. Also a neutral.

NON-COMMISSIONED. A non-commissioned officer of the army or militia is a subordinate officer who holds his rank, not by commission from the executive authority of the state or nation, but by appointment by a superior officer.

NON-COMPETITIVE TRAFFIC. Traffic which originates at a point served by a single haul carrier, or which is consigned to an industry on a line whose switching charge is not absorbed by a competing line-haul carrier. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, D.C.Minn., 41 F.Supp. 439, 441.

NON-CONFORMING USES. Uses permitted by zoning statutes or ordinances to continue notwithstanding similar uses are not permitted in area in which they are located. Beyer v. Mayor and Council of Baltimore City, 182 Md. 444, 34 A.2d 765, 766.

NON-CONFORMIST. In English law, one who refuses to comply with others; one who refuses to join in the established forms of worship.

Non-conformists are of two sorts: (1) such as absent themselves from divine worship in the Established Church through total irreligion, and attend the service of no other persuasion; (2) such as attend the religious service of another persuasion. Wharton.

NON-CONTESTABLE. A non-contestable clause secures to insured indemnity by way of short limitations by contract against belated charges of fraud and mistake and rescission therefor, when he has acted thereon to his detriment by payment of premiums and foregoing other insurance. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California v. Strange, 226 Ala. 98, 145 So. 425, 426.

NON-CONTINUOUS EASEMENT. "Continuous easement" is one which may be enjoyed without any act by party claiming it, while "noncontinuous easement," such as right of way, is one to enjoyment of which party's act is essential. Wau-bun Beach Ass'n v. Wilson, 274 Mich. 598, 265 N.W. 474, 477, 103 A.L.R. 983. A non-apparent or discontinuous easement. Fetters v. Humphreys, 18 N.J.Eq. 262. See Easement.

NON-CUMULATIVE DIVIDENDS. "Cumulative dividends" must be paid regardless of the year in which they are earned, whereas "noncumulative dividends" paid in a year are dependent upon earnings of that year. Barclay v. Wabash Ry. Co., C. C.A.N.Y., 30 F.2d 260, 262.

NON-DELIVERY. Neglect, failure, or refusal to deliver goods, on the part of a carrier, vendor, bailee, etc.

NON-DIRECTION. Omission on the part of a judge to properly instruct the jury upon a necessary conclusion of law.

NON-DISCLOSURE. A failure to reveal facts, which may exist when there is no "concealment." State v. Watson, 145 Kan. 792, 67 P.2d 515, 517, 110 A.L.R. 998.

NON-ENUMERATED DAY. A motion day in New York on which the court hears motions classified as "non-enumerated motions." Jackson v. _____, 2 Caines (N.Y.) 259. For a collection of cases holding particular motions to be either enumerated or non-enumerated motions, see 66 C.J.S. Non, p. 603, n. 36(26).

NON-FUNCTIONAL. A feature of goods is "non-functional" if it does not affect their purpose, according to users' purposes, or their function or economy of processing, handling or using them. In effect a mere form of merchandising or a business method. J. C. Penney Co. v. H. D. Lee Mercantile Co., C.C.

NON-INTERCOURSE. The refusal of one state or nation to have commercial dealings with another; similar to an embargo (q.v.).

The absence of access, communication, or sexual relations between husband and wife.

NON-INTERVENTION WILL. A term sometimes applied to a will which authorizes the executor to settle and distribute the estate without the intervention of the court and without giving bond. In re Macdonald's Estate, 29 Wash. 422, 69 P. 1111.

NON-ISSUABLE PLEAS. Those upon which a decision would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement. 1 Chit.Archb.Pr. 12th Ed., 249.

NON-JOINDER. See Joiner.

NON-JUDICIAL DAY. Day on which process cannot ordinarily issue or be executed or returned, and on which courts do not usually sit. Vidal v. Backs, 218 Cal. 99, 21 P.2d 952, 86 A.L.R. 1134.

NON-JURORS. In English law, persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government.

NON-LEVIALE. Not subject to be levied upon. Non-leviable assets are assets upon which an execution cannot be levied. Farmers' F. Ins. Co. v. Conrad, 102 Wis. 387, 78 N.W. 582.

NON-MAILABLE. A term applied to all letters and parcels which are by law excluded from transportation in the United States mails, whether on account of the size of the package, the nature of its contents, its obscene character, or for other reasons. U. S. v. Nathan, D.C.Iowa, 61 F. 936.

NON-MERCHANTABLE TITLE. The title to realty need not be bad in fact to render it "non-merchantable", but it is sufficient, if an ordinarily prudent man with knowledge of facts and aware of legal questions involved would not accept it in ordinary course of business. Ghormley v. Kleeden, 155 Kan. 319, 124 P.2d 467, 470.

NON-NAVIGABLE. At common law, streams or bodies of water not affected by tide were "non-navigable". Luscher v. Reynolds, 153 Or. 625, 56 P.2d 1158, 1162.

NON-NEGOTIABLE. Not negotiable; not capable of passing title or property by indorsement and delivery.

NON-OCCLUSIONAL. Not of or pertaining to an occupation, trade, or work. Morgan v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., La.App., 22 So.2d 595, 597.

NON-PERFORMANCE. Neglect, failure, or refusal to do or perform an act stipulated to be done. Failure to keep the terms of a contract or covenant, in respect to acts or doings agreed upon.

NON-PROFIT. A "non-profit" corporation is one not designed primarily to pay dividends on invested capital. Greene County Rural Electric Co-operative v. Nelson, 234 Iowa 362, 12 N.W.2d 886, 888.

NON-RESIDENCE. Residence beyond the limits of the particular jurisdiction.

In ecclesiastical law. The absence of spiritual persons from their benefices.

NON-RESIDENT. One who is not a dweller within jurisdiction In question; not an inhabitant of the state of the forum. Gardner v. Meeker, 169 Ill. 40, 48 N.E. 307; Nagel v. Loomis, 33 Neb. 499, 50 N.W. 441. For the distinction between "residence" and "domicile," see Domicile.

NON-SANE. As "sane," when applied to the mind, means whole, sound, in a healthful state, "non-sane" must mean not whole, not sound, not in a healthful state; that is, broken, impaired, shattered, infirm, weak, diseased, unable, either from nature or accident, to perform the rational functions common to man upon the objects presented to it. Den v. Vancleve, 5 N.J.L. 589, 661.

NON-SUMMONS, WAGER OF LAW OF. The mode in which a tenant or defendant in a real action pleaded, when the summons which followed the original was not served within the proper time.

NON-TENURE. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant asserts, either as to the whole or as to some part of the land mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration, that he does not hold it. Pub. St.Mass.1882, p. 1293.

NON-TERM. The vacation between two terms of a court.

NON-TERMINUS. The vacation between term and term, formerly called the time of days of the king's peace.

NON-TRADER. Person not engaged in buying and selling so as to be required to establish credit in commercial world. First Nat. Bank v. Ducros, 27 Ala.App. 193, 168 So. 704, 706.

NON-USER. Neglect to use. Neglect to use a franchise; neglect to exercise an office. 2 Bl. Comm. 153. Neglect or omission to use an easement or other right. 3 Kent, Comm. 448. A right acquired by use may be lost by non-user.

NON-WAIVER AGREEMENT. A "nonwaiver agreement" reserves to insurer every right under fire policy not previously waived, and to the insured every right which had not been forfeited. -Etna Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., v. Powers, 190 Okl. 116, 121 P.2d 599, 602.
NONE ET DECIMIE. Payments made to the church, by those who were tenants of church-lands. The first was a rent or duty for things belonging to husbandry; the second was claimed in right of the church. Wharton.

NONAGIUM, or NONAGE. A ninth part of moveables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on presentment of being distributed to pious uses. Blount.

NONES. In the Roman calendar, the fifth, and, in March, May, July, and October, the seventh, day of the month. So called because, counting inclusively, they were nine days from the ides. Adams, Rom.Ant. 355, 357.

Under the word “Ides” in Bouvier’s Law Diet., Rawle’s 3d Rev., p. 1486, will be found a complete table of the calends, nones, and ides.

NONFEASANCE. Nonperformance of some act which ought to be performed, omission to perform a required duty at all, or total neglect of duty. Brooks v. Jacobs, 139 Me. 371, 31 A.2d 414, 416.

The term is not generally used to denote a breach of contract, but rather the failure to perform a duty towards the public whereby some individual sustains special damage, as where a sheriff fails to execute a writ. Sweet. Coite v. Lines, 33 Conn. 115; Gregor v. Cady, 82 Me. 131, 19 A. 108, 17 Am.St.Rep. 466.

There is a distinction between “nonfeasance” and “misfeasance” or “malfeasance”; and this distinction is often of great importance in determining an agent’s liability to third persons. “Nonfeasance” means the total omission or failure of an agent to enter upon the performance of some distinct duty or undertaking which he has agreed with his principal to do; “misfeasance” means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully do, or, in other words, it is the performing of his duty to his principal in such a manner as to infringe upon the rights and privileges of third persons; and “malfeasance” is a doing of an act which he ought not to do at all. Owens v. Nichols, 139 Ga. 475, 77 S.E. 635, 636; Maddock v. Riggs, 106 Kan. 808, 190 P. 12, 14, 12 A.L.R. 216.

NONPAYMENT. The neglect, failure, or refusal of payment of a debt or evidence of debt when due.

NONSENSE. Unintelligible matter in a written agreement or will.

NONSUIT. A term broadly applied to a variety of terminations of an action which do not adjudicate issues on the merits. McCollgan v. Jones, Hubbard & Donnell, 11 Cal.2d 243, 78 P.2d 1010, 1011. Name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove a case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to trial and leaves the issue undetermined. Carolina Transportation & Distributing Co. v. American Alliance Ins. Co., 214 N.C. 596, 200 S.E. 411, 413.

Judgment of Nonsuit is of two kinds,—voluntary and involuntary. When plaintiff abandons his case, and consents that judgment go against him for costs, it is voluntary. But when he, being called, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict, or when his case is put out of court by some adverse ruling precluding a recovery, it is involuntary. Freem.Judgm. § 6.

A peremptory nonsuit is a compulsory or involuntary nonsuit, ordered by the court upon a total failure of the plaintiff to substantiate his claim by evidence. Jacques v. Fourthman, 137 Pa. 428, 20 A. 802.

NOOK OF LAND, In English law, twelve acres and a half.

NORMAL. According to, constituting, or not deviating from an established norm, rule, or principle; conformed to a type, standard or regular form; performing the proper functions; regular; natural. Webster; Railroad Commission v. Konowa Operating Co., Tex.Civ.App., 174 S.W.2d 605, 609.

NORMAL LAW. A term employed by modern writers on jurisprudence to denote the law as it affects persons who are in a normal condition; i. e., sui juris and sound in mind.

NORMAL MIND. One which in strength and capacity ranks reasonably well with the average of the great body of men and women who make up organized human society in general and are by common consent recognized as sane and competent to perform the ordinary duties and assume the ordinary responsibilities of life. State v. Haner, 186 Iowa, 2159, 173 N.W. 225, 226.

NORMAL SCHOOL. See School.

NORMALLY. As a rule; regularly; according to rule, general custom, etc. Palmer v. Jordan Mach. Co., C.C.N.Y., 186 F. 496, 504.

NORMAN FRENCH. The tongue in which several formal proceedings of state in England are still carried on. The language, having remained the same since the date of the Conquest, at which it was introduced into England, is very different from the French of this day, retaining all the peculiarities which at that time distinguished every province from the rest. A peculiar mode of pronunciation (considered authentic) is handed down and preserved by the officials who have, on particular occasions, to speak the tongue. Norman French was the language of English legal procedure till the 36 Edw. III. (A.D.1362). Wharton.

NORROY. In English law, the title of the third of the three kings-at-arms, or provincial heralds.

NORTHAMPTON, ASSIZE OF. An assize held in 1176; in it, the king confirmed and perfected the judicial legislation which he had begun ten years before in the Assize of Clarendon. Stephen, Cr.Proc. in 2 Essays in Anglo-Amer. L.H. 445; Mrs. J. R. Green in 1 id.

NORTHAMPTON TABLES. Longevity and annuity tables compiled from bills of mortality kept in All Saints parish, England, in 1735-1780.
NORTHWEST TERRITORY. A name formerly applied to the territory northwest of the Ohio river.

NOSCITUR A SOCIIS. It is known from its associates. 1 Vent. 225. The meaning of a word is or may be known from the accompanying words. 3 Term R. 87; Broom, Max. 588. Morecock v. NORTHWEST TERRITORY. A name formerly or may be known from the accompanying words. The meaning of a word is applied to the territory northwest of the Ohio river. Stuyvesant Ins. Co. v. Jacksonville Oil Mill, C.C.A.Tenn., NOT FOUND. These words, indorsed on a bill noramus.

NOT GUILTY. A plea of the general issue in the matter in evidence by virtue of some act or acts of parliament, in which case he must add the reference to such act or acts, and state whether such acts are public or otherwise. But, if a defendant so plead, he. will not be allowed to plead any other defense, without the leave of the court or a judge. Mozley & Whiteley.

NOT LESS THAN. The words "not less than" signify in the smallest or lowest degree, at the lowest estimate; at least. Watson v. City of Salem, 84 Or. 666, 164 P. 567, 568; Miller v. Rodd, 285 Pa. 16, 131 A. 482, 483.

NOT POSSESSSED. A special traverse used in an action of trover, alleging that defendant was not possessed, at the time of action brought, of the chattels alleged to have been converted by him.

NOT PROVEN. A verdict in a Scotch criminal trial, to the effect that the guilt of the accused is not made out, though his innocence is not clear.

NOT SATISFIED. A return sometimes made by sheriffs or constables to a writ of execution; but it is not a technical formula, and is condemned by the courts as ambiguous and insufficient. Martin v. Martin, 50 N.C. 346; Langford v. Few, 146 Mo. 142, 47 S.W. 927, 69 Am.St.Rep. 606.

NOT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN ONE YEAR. The clause "not to be performed within one year" includes any agreement which by a reasonable interpretation in view of all the circumstances does not admit of its performance, according to its language and intention, within one year from the time of its making. Mrs. K. Edwards & Sons v. Farve, 110 Miss. 864, 71 So. 12, 13.

NOT TRANSFERABLE. These words, when written across the face of a negotiable instrument, operate to destroy its negotiability. Durr v. State, 59 Ala. 24.

NOTARIAL. Taken by a notary; performed by a notary in his official capacity; belonging to a notary and evidencing his official character, as, a notarial seal.

NOTARIAL WILL. A will executed by the testator in the presence of a Notary Public and two witnesses.

NOTARIUS. Lat.

In old English law. A scribe or scrivener who made short draughts of writings and other instruments; a notary. Cowell.

In Roman law. A draughtsman; an amanuensis; a shorthand writer; one who took notes of the proceedings in the senate or a court, or of what was dictated to him by another; one who prepared draughts of wills, conveyances, etc.

NOTARY PUBLIC. A public officer whose function it is to administer oaths; to attest and certify, by his hand and official seal, certain classes of documents, in order to give them credit and authenticity in foreign jurisdictions; to take acknowledgments of deeds and other conveyances, and certify the same; and to perform certain official acts, chiefly in commercial matters, such as the protesting of notes and bills, the noting of foreign drafts, and marine protests in cases of loss or damage. Kip v. People's Bank & Trust Co., 110 N.J.L. 178, 164 A. 253, 254.
NOTATION

NOTATION. In English probate practice, the act of making a memorandum of some special circumstance on a probate or letters of administration.

Thus, where a grant is made for the whole personal estate of the deceased within the United Kingdom, which can only be done in the case of a person dying domiciled in England, the fact of his having been so domiciled is noted on the grant. Coote, Prob. Pr. 36; Sweet.

NOTCHELL, or NOCHELL. "Crying the wife's Notchell" seems to have been a means of preventing her running up debts against her husband. 20 Law Mag. & Rev. 280.

It is the custom in Lancashire for a man to advertise that he will not be responsible for debts contracted by her [his wife] after that date. He is thus said to notchel her, and the advertisement is termed a notchel notice. N. and Q., 7th ser., VIII, 268, quoted in Cent. Dict.

NOTE, v. To make a brief written statement; to enter a memorandum; as to note an exception.

NOTE, n. A unilateral instrument containing an express and absolute promise of signer to pay to a specified person or order, or bearer, a definite sum of money at a specified time. Shawano Finance Corporation v. Julius, 214 Wis. 637, 254 N.W. 355. An abstract, a memorandum; an informal statement in writing. Road Improvement Dist. No. 4 of Cleveland County v. Southern Trust Co., 152 Ark. 422, 239 S.W. 8, 11; American Nat. Bank v. Marshall, 122 Kan. 793, 253 P. 214, 215. See Bought Note; Notes; Judgment Note; Promissory Note; Sold Note.

NOTE A BILL. When a foreign bill has been dishonored, it is usual for a notary public to present it again on the same day, and, if it be not then paid, to make a minute, consisting of his initials, the day, month, and year, and reason, if assigned, of non-payment. The making of this minute is called "noting the bill." Wharton.

NOTE OF A FINE. In old conveyancing, one of the parcels of land, and the agreement. 2 Bl. Comm. 351.

NOTE OF ALLOWANCE. In English practice, a part of the agreement, naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the concord; allowing him to bring error. 2 Bl. Comm. 351.

NOTE OF PROTEST. A memorandum of the fact of protest, indorsed by the notary upon the bill, at the time, to be afterwards written out at length.

NOTES. In practice, memoranda made by a judge on a trial, as to the evidence adduced, and the points reserved, etc. A copy of the judge's notes may be obtained from his clerk.

NOTUS. Lat. In Roman law, a natural child or a person of spurious birth.

NOTICE. Information; the result of observation, whether by the senses or the mind; knowledge of the existence of a fact or state of affairs; the knowledge of knowledge. Abercrombie v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 206 Ala. 615, 91 So. 311, 312; Knights and Ladies of Security v. Bell, 93 Old. 272, 220 P. 594, 597.

Knowledge of facts which would naturally lead an honest and prudent person to make inquiry constitutes "notice" of everything which such inquiry pursued in good faith would disclose. Twitchell v. Nelson, 131 Minn. 375, 155 N.W. 621, 624; German-American Nat. Bank of Lincoln v. Martin, 277 Ill. 629, 119 N.E. 721, 729.

In another sense, "notice" means information, an advice, or written warning, in more or less formal shape, intended to apprise a person of some proceeding in which his interests are involved, or informing him of some fact which it is his right to know and the duty of the notifying party to communicate.

Under the Negotiable Instrument Law "notice" of infirmity of instrument is actual knowledge or knowledge of such facts that taking note amounts to bad faith. Glendo State Bank v. Abbott, 30 Wyo. 98, 216 P. 700, 702, 34 A.L.R. 294.

Notice is either (1) statutory, e.g., made so by legislative enactment; (2) actual, which brings the knowledge of a fact directly home to the party; or (3) constructive. Constructive notice may be subdivided into: (a) where there exists actual notice of matter, to which equity has added constructive notice of facts, which an inquiry after such matter would have elicited; and (b) where there has been a designed abstinence from inquiry for the very purpose of escaping notice. Wharton.

Actual notice has been defined as notice expressly and actually given, and brought home to the party directly. Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 145; McCray v. Clar, 82 Pa. 457; Morey v. Milliken, 86 Me. 464, 30 A. 102. The term "actual notice," however, is generally given a wider meaning as embracing two classes, express and implied; the former includes all knowledge of a degree above that which depends upon collateral inference, or which imposes upon the party the further duty of inquiry; the latter imputes knowledge to the party because he is shown to be conscious of having the means of knowledge. In this sense actual notice is such notice as is positively proved to have been given to a party directly and personally, or such as he is presumed to have received personally because the evidence within his knowledge was sufficient to put him upon inquiry. Picklesimer v. Smith, 164 Ga. 600, 139 S.E. 72, 74; White v. Fisher, 77 Ind. 65, 40 Am. Rep. 287.

Constructive notice is information or knowledge of a fact imputed by law to a person, (although he may not actually have it), because he could have discovered the fact by proper diligence, and his situation was such as to cast upon him the duty of inquiring into it. Baltimore v. Whittington, 78 Md. 231, 27 A. 984; Acre v. Westcott, 46 N.Y. 384, 7 Am. Rep. 355.

Notice is also further classified as express or implied. Express notice embraces not only knowledge, but also that which is communicated by direct information, either written or oral, from those who are cognizant of the fact communicated. Baltimore v. Whittington, 78 Md. 231, 27 A. 984. Implied notice is one of the varieties of actual notice (not constructive) and is distinguished from "express" actual notice. It is notice inferred or imputed to a party by reason of his knowledge of facts or circumstances collateral to the main fact, of such a character as to put him upon inquiry, and which, if the inquiry were followed up with proper diligence, would lead him to knowledge of the main fact. Rhodes v. Outcalt, 48 Mo. 370; Baltimore v. Whittington, 78 Md. 231, 27 A. 984; Wells v. Sheerer, 78 Ala. 147.
"Constructive notice" is a presumption of law, making it impossible for one to deny the matter concerning which notice is given, while "implied notice" is a presumption of fact, relating to what one can learn by reasonable inquiry, and arises from actual notice of circumstances, and not from constructive notice. Charles v. Roxana Petroleum Corporation, C.C.A.Okl., 282 F. 983, 988. Or as otherwise defined, implied notice may be said to exist where the fact in question lies open to the knowledge of the party, so that the exercise of reasonable observation and watchfulness would not fail to apprise him of it, although no one has told him of it in so many words. See City of Philadelphia v. Smith, Pa., 16 A. 493.

Averment of Notice. The statement in a pleading that notice has been given.

Judicial Notice. See Judicial Notice.

Legal Notice. See Legal Notice.

Personal Notice. Communication of notice orally or in writing (according to the circumstances) directly to the person affected or to be charged, as distinguished from constructive or implied notice, and also from notice imparted to him because given to his agent or representative. Loeb v. Huddleston, 105 Ala. 257, 16 So. 714; Pearson v. Lovejoy, 53 Barb., N.Y., 407.

Presumptive Notice. Implied actual notice. The difference between "presumptive" and "constructive" notice is that the former is an inference of fact which is capable of being explained or contradicted, while the latter is a conclusion of law which cannot be contradicted. Brown v. Baldwin, 121 Mo. 106, 25 S.W. 858; Brush v. Ware, 15 Pet. 98, 10 L.Ed. 672.

Reasonable Notice. Such notice or information of a fact as may fairly and properly be expected or required in the particular circumstances. Sterling Mig. Co. v. Hough, 49 Neb. 618, 68 N.W. 1019; Mallory v. Leiby, 1 Kan. 102.

NOTICE IN LIEU OF SERVICE. In lieu of personally serving a writ of summons (or other legal process,) in English practice, the court occasionally allows the plaintiff (or other party) to give notice in lieu of service, such notice being such as will in all probability reach the party. This notice is peculiarly appropriate in the case of a foreigner out of the jurisdiction, whom it is desired to serve with a writ of summons. Sweet.

NOTICE OF ACTION. When it is intended to sue certain particular individuals, as in the case of actions against justices of the peace, it is necessary in some jurisdictions to give them notice of the action some time before.
“notify” one of a fact is to make it known to him; to inform him by notice. Fast v. Scruggs, 164 Okl. 196, 23 P.2d 383.

In legal proceedings, and in respect to public matters, this word is generally, if not universally, used as importing a notice given by some person, whose duty it was to give it, in some manner prescribed, and to some person entitled to receive it, or be notified. Appeal of Potwine, 31 Conn. 384; Home Benefit Ass’n of Angelina County v. Jordan, Tex.Civ.App., 191 S.W. 725, 728.

NOTIFY. The act of a notary in minuting on a bill of exchange, after it has been presented for acceptance or payment, the initials of his name, the date of the day, month, and year when such presentation was made, and the reason, if any has been assigned, for non-acceptance or non-payment, together with his charge. 4 Term 175.

NOTIO. Lat. In the civil law, the power of hearing and trying a matter of fact; the power or authority of a judex; the power of hearing causes and of pronouncing sentence, without any degree of jurisdiction. Calvin.

NOTITIA. Lat. Knowledge; information; intelligence; notice.

NOTITIA DICTUR A NOSCENDO; ET NOTITIA NON DEBIT CALUDICARE. Notice is named from a knowledge being had; and notice ought not to halt, [i. e., be imperfect.] 6 Coke, 29.

NOTORIAL. The Scotch form of “notarial,” (q. v.). Bell.

NOTORIETY. The state of being notorious or universally well known.

Proof by Notoriety. In Scotch law, dispensing with positive testimony as to matters of common knowledge or general notoriety, the same as the “judicial notice” of English and American law. See Judicial Notice.

In the law of evidence, matters deemed notorious do not require to be proved. There does not seem to be any recognized rule as to what matters are deemed notorious. Cases have occurred in which the state of society or public feeling has been treated as notorious; e. g., during times of sedition. Best, Ev. 354; Sweet.

NOTORIOUS INSOLVENCY. A condition of insolvency which is generally known throughout the community or known to the general class of persons with whom the insolvent has business relations.

NOTORIOUS POSSESSION. Possession that is so conspicuous that it is generally known and talked of by the public or the people in the neighborhood. Terral v. Brooks, 194 Ark. 311, 108 S.W. 2d 489, 493. Possession or character of holding in its nature having such elements of notoriety that the owner may be presumed to have notice of it and of its extent. Watrous v. Morrison, 33 Fla. 261, 14 So. 805, 39 Am.St.Rep. 139.

NOTOUR. In Scotch law, open; notorious. A notour bankrupt is a debtor who, being under diligence by homing and caption of his creditor, retires to sanctuary or absconds or defends by force, and is afterwards found insolvent by the court of session. Bell.

NOVA CONSTITUTIO FUTURIS FORMAM IMPONERE DEBET NON PRIETERITIS. A new state of the law ought to affect the future, not the past. 2 Inst. 292; Broom, Max. 34, 37.

NOVA CUSTUMA. The name of an imposition or duty. See Antigua Custuma.

NOVA STATUTA. New statutes. An appellation sometimes given to the statutes which have been passed since the beginning of the reign of Edward III. 1 Steph.Comm. 68.

NOVIE NARRATIONES. New counts. The collection called “Novas Narrationes” contains pleadings in actions during the reign of Edward III. It consists principally of declarations, as the title imports; but there are sometimes pleas and subsequent pleadings. The Articuli ad Novas Narrationes is usually subjoined to this little book, and is a small treatise on the method of pleading. It first treats of actions and courts, and then goes through each particular writ, and the declaration upon it, accompanied with directions, and illustrated by precedents. 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 152; Wharton.

NOVALE. Land newly plowed and converted into tillage, and which has not been tilled before within the memory of man; also fallow land.

NOVALIS. In the civil law, land that rested a year after the first plowing. Dig. 50, 16, 30, 2.

The requisites of a “novation” are a previous valid obligation, an agreement of all the parties to a new contract, the extinguishment of the old obligation, and the validity of the new one. Alkire v. Acuff, 134 Okl. 43, 272 P. 405, 406; Tulsa Ice Co. v. Liley, 157 Okl. 86, 10 P.2d 1990, 1991; Cox v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 180 Ind. 495, 103 N.E. 337, 342, 50 L.R.A.,N.S., 453.

The term was originally a technical term of the civil law, but is now in very general use in English and American jurisprudence.
In the civil law, there are three kinds of novation: Where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one; where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted; where the debt and debtor remain, but a new creditor is substituted. Wheeler v. Wardell, 173 Va. 168, 3 S.E.2d 377, 380.

NOVEL ASSIGNMENT. See New Assignment.

NOVEL DISSEISIN. See Assise of Novel Disseisin.

NOVELLIE (or NOVELLZE CONSTITUTIONES.) New constitutions; generally translated in English, "Novels." The Latin name of those constitutions which were issued by Justinian after the publication of his Code; most of them being originally written in Greek. After his death, a collection of 168 Novels was made, 154 of which had been issued by Justinian, and the rest by his successors. These were afterwards included in the Corpus Juris Civilis, (q. v.,) and now constitute one of its four principal divisions. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 80; 1 Kent, Comm. 541.

NOVELLIE LEONIS. The ordinances of the Emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These Novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection contains 113 Novels, written originally in Greek, and afterwards, in 1560, translated into Latin by Agilteus. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 84.

NOVELS. The title given in English to the New Constitutions (Novellae Constitutiones) of Justinian and his successors, now forming a part of the Corpus Juris Civilis. See NovellEe.

NOVELTY. In order that there may be "novelty" so as to sustain a patent, the thing must not have been known to any one before, mere novelty of form being insufficient. Seaver v. Wm. Filene's Sons Co., D.C.Mass., 37 F.Supp. 762, 765. An objection to a patent or claim for a patent on the ground that the invention is not new or original is called an objection "for want of novelty."

NOVERCA. Lat. In the civil law, a stepmother.

NOVERINT UNIVERSI PER PRZESENTES. Know all men by these presents. Formal words used at the commencement of deeds of release in the Latin forms.

NOVI OPERIS NUNCIATIO. Lat. Denunciation of, or protest against, a new work.

This was a species of remedy in the civil law, available to a person who thought his rights or his property were threatened with injury by the act of his neighbor in erecting or demolishing any structure, which was called a "new work." In such case, he might go upon the ground, while the work was in progress, and publicly protest against or forbid its completion, in the presence of the workmen or of the owner or his representative.

NOVIGILD. In Saxon law, a pecuniary satisfaction for an injury, amounting to nine times the value of the thing for which it was paid. Spelman.

NOVISSIMA RECOPIALACION. (Latest Compilation.) The title of a collection of Spanish law compiled by order of Don Carlos IV. in 1805. 1 White, Recop. 355.

NOVITAS. Lat. Novelty; newness; a new thing.

NOVITAS NON TAM UTILITATE PRODEST QUAM NOVITATE PERTURBAT. A novelty does not benefit so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty. Jenk. Cent. p. 167, case 23.

NOVITER PERVERTA, or NOVITER AD NOSTIATAM PERVERTA. In ecclesiastical procedure, facts "newly come" to the knowledge of a party to a cause. Leave to plead facts noviter perventa is generally given, in a proper case, even after the pleadings are closed. Phllim. Ecc. Law, 1257; Rog. Ecc. Law, 723.

NOVODAMUS. In old Scotch law, we give anew. The name given to a charter, or clause in a charter, granting a renewal of a right. Bell.

NOVUM JUDICIONUM NON DAT NOVUM JUS, SED NOVITIAS NON TAM UTILITATE PRODEST QUAM NOVITATE PERTURBAT. The name given to a charter, or clause in a charter, granting a renewal of a right. Bell.

NOVUM OPUS. Lat. In the civil law, a new work. See Novi Operis Nunciatio.

NOVUS HOMO. Lat. A new man. This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, and so made, as it were, a "new man."

"Now" as used in a statute ordinarily refers to the date of its taking effect, but the word is sometimes used, not with reference to the moment of speaking but to a time contemporaneous with something done, and may mean at the time spoken of or referred to as well as at the time of speaking. State v. City of St. Lawrence, 101 Kan. 225, 165 P. 826.

NOXA. Lat. In the civil law, any damage or injury done to persons or property by an unlawful act committed by a man’s slave or animal. An action for damages lay against the master or owner, who, however, might escape further responsibility by delivering up the offending agent to the party injured. "Noxa" was also used as the NOXAL ACTION. An action for damage done by slaves or animals. Sandars, Just. Inst. (5th Ed.) 457.

NOXALIS ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law, an action which lays against the master of a slave, for some offense (as theft or robbery) committed or damage or injury done by the slave, which was called "noxa." Usually translated "noxious action."

NOXIA. Lat. In the civil law, an offense committed or damage done by a slave. Inst. 4, 8, 1.

NOXIOUS. Hurtful; offensive; offensive to the smell. Rex v. White, 1 Burrows, 337. The word "noxious" includes the complex idea both of insalubrity and offensiveness. Id. That which causes or tends to cause injury, especially to health or morals. Moubray v. G. & M. Improvement Co., 178 App.Div. 737, 165 N.Y.S. 842, 843.

NUBILIS. Lat. In the civil law, marriageable; one who is of a proper age to be married.

NUCES COLLIGERE. Lat. To collect nuts. This was formerly one of the works or services imposed by lords upon their inferior tenants. Paroch. Antiq. 495.

NUDA PACTIO OBLIGATIONEM NON PARIT. A naked agreement [i. e., without consideration] does not beget an obligation. Dig. 2, 14, 7, 4; Broom, Max. 746.

NUDA PATIENTIA. Lat. Mere sufferance.

NUDA POSSESSIO. Lat. Bare or mere possession.

NUDA RATIO ET NUDA PACTIO NON LIGANT ALIQUEM DEBITOREM. Naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor. Fleta, 1. 2, c. 60, § 25.

NUDE. Naked. This word is applied metaphorically to a variety of subjects to indicate that they are lacking in some essential legal requisite.

NUDE CONTRACT. One made without any consideration; upon which no action will lie, in conformity with the maxim "ex nudo pacto non oritur actio." 2 Bl.Comm. 445.

NUDE MATTER. A bare allegation of a thing done, unsupported by evidence.

NUDE PACT. One without consideration; an executory contract without a consideration; a naked promise. Oliver v. Home Service Ice Co., La.App., 161 So. 766, 770.

NUDUM PACTUM. A voluntary promise, without any other consideration than mere good will, or natural affection. Grimes v. Baker, 133 Neb. 517, 275 N.W. 860, 863.

In Roman law. Informal agreements not coming within any of the privileged classes. They could not be sued on. The term was sometimes used with a special and rather different meaning to express the rule that a contract without delivery will not pass property. Pollock, Contracts 743. Salmond, Jurisprudence 640.

NUDUM PACTUM EST UBI NULLA SUBEST CAUSA PRJETER CONVENTIONEM; SED UBI SUBEST CAUSA, FIT OBLIGATIO, ET PARIT ACTIONEM. A naked contract is where there is no consideration except the agreement; but, where there is a consideration, it becomes an obligation and gives a right of action. Plowd. 309; Broom, Max. 745, 750.

NUDUM PACTUM EX QUO NON ORITUR ACTIO. Nudum pactum is that upon which no action arises. Cod. 2, 3, 10; Id. 5, 14, 1; Broom, Max. 676.

NUGATORY. Futile; ineffectual; invalid; destitute of constraining force or vitality. A legislative act may be "nugatory" because unconstitutional. Avery & Co. v. Sorrell, 157 Ga. 476, 121 S.E. 828, 829.

NUISANCE. That which annoys and disturbs one in possession of his property, rendering its ordinary use or occupation physically uncomfortable to him. Yaffe v. City of Ft. Smith, 178 Ark. 406, 10 S.W.2d 886, 890, 61 A.L.R. 1138. Everything that endangers life or health, gives offense to senses, violates the laws of decency, or obstructs reasonable and comfortable use of property. Hall v. Putney, 291 Ill.App. 508, 10 N.E.2d 204, 207. Annoyance; anything which essentially interferes with enjoyment of life or property. Holton v. Northwestern Oil Co., 201 N.C. 744, 161 S.E. 391, 393. That class of wrongs that arise from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, either real or personal, or from his own improper, indecent, or unlawful personal conduct, working an obstruction of or injury to the right of another or of the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt, that the law will presume resulting damage. City of Phoenix v. Johnson, 51 Ariz. 115, 75 P.2d 30; Wood, Nuis. § 1; District of Columbia v. Totten, 55 App.D.C. 312, 5 F.2d 374, 380, 40 A.L.R. 1461. Anything that unlawfully worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. 3 Bl.Comm. 216; City of Birmingham v. Hood-McPherson Realty Co., 233 Ala. 352, 172 So. 114, 120, 108 A.L.R. 1140. Anything which is injurious to health, or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, or which unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of any navigable lake or river, bay, stream, canal, or basin, or any public park, square, street, or highway, is a nuisance. Civ. Code Cal. § 3479; Veazie v. Dwinel, 50 Me. 479; Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co., 122 N.Y. 18, 25 N.E. 246, 9 L.R.A. 711; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 137 U.S. 568, 11 S.Ct. 185, 34 L.Ed. 784; Ex parte Foote, 70 Ark. 12, 65 S.W. 706, 91 Am.St.Rep. 63.

In determining what constitutes a "nuisance," the question is whether the nuisance will or does produce such a condition of things as in the judgment of reasonable men is naturally productive of actual physical discomfort to persons of ordinary sensibility and ordinary tastes and habits. Keeler v. Wood, 66 Ind.App. 594, 118 N.E. 591, 592.

Nuisances are commonly classed as public and private, and mixed. A public nuisance is one which affects an indefinite number of persons, or all the residents of a particular locality, or all people coming within the extent of its range or operation, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal. Burnham v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 317; Chesbrough v. Comrs, 37 Ohio St. 508; Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wendl., N.Y., 30, 21 Am.Dec. 89. A private nuisance was originally defined as anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. 3 Bl. Comm. 216; Whittmore v. Baxter Laundry Co. 181 Mich. 581, 153 N.W. 562; R.A. N. 324.

As distinguished from public nuisance, it includes any wrongful act which destroys or deteriorates the property of an individual or of a few persons or interferes with their lawful use or enjoyment thereof, or any act which unlawfully hinders them in the enjoyment of a common or public right and causes them a special injury different from that sustained by the general public. Therefore, although the ground of distinction between public and private nuisances is still the injury to the community at large or, on the other hand, to a single individual, it is evident that the same thing or act may constitute a public nuisance and at the same time a private nuisance. Heeg v. Licht, 80 N.Y. 582, 36 Am.Rep. 654; Baltzger v. Carolina Midland R. Co., 54 S.C. 242, 32 S.E. 358, 71 Am.St.Rep. 789; Willcox v. Hines, 100 Tenn. 538, 46 S.W. 297, 41 L.R.A. 375; R.A. N. 505.

As distinguished from public nuisance, it includes any wrongful act which destroys or deteriorates the property of an individual or of a few persons or interferes with their lawful use or enjoyment thereof, or any act which that the party injured complained of some particular fact done ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui, (to the nuisance of his freehold,) and commanding the sheriff to summon an assise (that is, a jury) to view the premises, and have them at the next commission of assizes, that justice might be done, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 221.

Common nuisance. One which affects the public in general, and not merely some particular person; a public nuisance. 1 Hawk.P.C. 197; State v. Rodgers, 91 N.J.L. 212, 102 A. 433, 434.

Continuing nuisance. An uninterrupted or periodically recurring nuisance; not necessarily a constant or unceasing injury, but a nuisance which occurs so often and is so necessarily an incident of the use of property complained of that it can fairly be said to be continuous. Farley v. Gaslight Co., 105 Ga. 323, 31 S.E. 193; Kafka v. Bozio, 191 Cal. 746, 218 P. 753, 755, 29 A.L.R. 833.

NUISANCE AT LAW. Nuisance per se (q. v.). NUISANCE IN FACT. Acts, occupations or structures which are not nuisances per se but may become nuisances by reason of the circumstances or the location and surroundings. Asphalt Products Co. v. Marable, 65 Ga.App. 877, 16 S.E.2d 771, 772.

NUISANCE PER ACCIDENTS. Nuisances in fact (q. v.).

NUISANCE PER SE. An act, occupation, or structure which is a nuisance at all times and under all circumstances, regardless of location or surroundings. Kays v. City of Versailles, 224 Mo.App. 178, 22 S.W.2d 182, 183. As, things prejudicial to public morals or dangerous to life or injurious to public rights; distinguished from things declared to be nuisances by statute, and also from things which constitute nuisances only when considered with reference to their particular location or other individual circumstances. Hundley v. Harrison, 123 Ala. 292, 26 So. 294; Whitmore v. Paper Co., 91 Me. 297, 39 A. 1032, 40 L.R.A. 377; Simpson v. Du Pont Powder Co., 143 Ga. 465, 85 S.E. 344, 345, L.R.A.1915E, 430.

NUL. No; none. A law French negative particle commencing many phrases.

NUL AGARD. No award.

NUL CHARTER, NUL VENTE, NE NUL DONE VAULT PERPETUALMENT. SI LE DONOR N'EST SEISE AL TEMPS DE CONTRACTS DE DEUX DROITS, SC. DEL DROIT DE POSSESSION ET DEL DROIT DE PROPERTIE. Co. Litt. 266. No grant, no sale, no gift, is valid forever, unless the donor, at the time of the contract, is seized of two rights, namely, the right of possession, and the right of property.

NUL DISSEISIN. In pleading, no disseisin. A plea of the general issue in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin.

NUL NE DOIT S’ENRICHIR AUX DEPENS DES AUTRES. No one ought to enrich himself at the expense of others.

NUL PRENDRÁ ADVANTAGE DE SON TORT DEMESNE. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. 2 Inst. 713; Broom, Max. 290.

NUL SANS DAMAGE AVERA ERROR OU AT-TAINT. Jenk. Cent. 323. No one shall have error or attaint unless he has sustained damage.

NUL TIEL CORPORATION. No such corporation [exists]. The form of a plea denying the existence of an alleged corporation. Rialto Co. v.
Miner, 183 Mo.App. 119, 166 S.W. 629, 632.

NUL TIEL RECORD. No such record. A plea denying the existence of any such record as that alleged by the plaintiff. It is the general plea in an action of debt on a judgment. Hoffheimer v.
Stiefel, 17 Misc. 236, 39 N.Y.S. 714; Watters v.

Judgment of nul tiel record occurs when some pleading denies the existence of a record and issue is joined thereon; the record being produced is compared by the court with the statement in the pleading which alleges it; and if they correspond, the party asserting its existence obtains judgment;
if they do not correspond, the other party obtains judgment of nul tiel record (no such record).

NUL TORT. In pleading, a plea of the general issue to a real action, by which the defendant denies that he committed any wrong.

NUL WASTE. No waste. The name of a plea in an action of waste, denying the committing of waste, and forming the general issue.

NULL. Naught; of no validity or effect. Usually coupled with the word "void;" as "null and void."
Forrester v. Boston, etc., Min. Co., 29 Mont. 397, 74 P. 1088; Hume v. Eagon, 73 Mo.App. 276. The words "null and void," when used in a contract or statute are often construed as meaning "voidable."
991, 992; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Hall, 191 Ga.
294, 12 S.E.2d 53, 61.

NULLA BONA. Lat. No goods. The name of the return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution, when he has not found any goods of the defendant within his jurisdiction on which he could levy. Woodward v. Harbin, 1 Ala. 108; Reed v.
Lowe, 163 Mo. 519, 63 S.W. 687, 85 Am.St.Rep. 578.

NULLA CURIA QUM RECORDUM NON HABET
POTEST IMPONERE FINEM NEQUE ALIQUEM
MANDARE CARCERI; QUIA ISTA SPECTANT
TANTUMmodo ad CURIAS DE RECORDO. 8
Coke, 60. No court which has not a record can impose a fine or commit any person to prison; because those powers belong only to courts of record.

NULLA EMPTIO SINE PRETIO ESSE POTEST.
There can be no sale without a price. Brown v.

NULLA IMPOSSIBILIA AUT INHONESTA
SUNT PRIESUMENDA; VERA AUTEM ET HONESTA ET POSSIBILIA. No things that are impossible or dishonorable are to be presumed;
but things that are true and honorable and possible. Co.Litt. 78b.

NULLA PACTIONE ECCI PFICTUT UT DOLUS
PRIESTETUR. By no agreement can it be ef-ected that a fraud shall be practiced. Fraud will not be upheld, though it may seem to be authorized by express agreement. 5 Maule & S. 466;
Broom, Max. 696.

NULLA VIRTUS, NULLA SCIENTIA, LOCUM
SUUM ET DIGNATEM CONSERVARE PO-TEST SINE MODESTIA, Co.Litt. 394. Without modesty, no virtue, no knowledge, can preserve its place and dignity.

NULLE REGLE SANS FAUTE. There is no rule without a fault.

NULLE TERRE SANS SEIGNEUR. No land without a lord. A maxim of feudal law. Guyot, Inst. Feod. c. 28.

NULLI ENIM RES SUA SERVIT JURE SERV-TUTIS. No one can have a servitude over his own property. Dig. 8, 2, 26; 2 Bouv.Inst. no. 1600;

NULLI VENDEMUS, NULLI NEGABIMUS, AUT DIFFEREMUS RECTUM VEL JUSTITIAN. We neither sell nor deny, nor delay, to any person, equity or justice. State ex rel. Macri v. City of Bremerton, 8 Wash.2d 93, 111 P.2d 612, 619.

NULLITY. Nothing; no proceeding; an act or proceeding in a cause which the opposite party may treat as though it had not taken place, or which has absolutely no legal force or effect. Salter v. Hilgen, 40 Wis. 363; Jenness v. Lapeer County Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 469, 4 N.W. 220.

Absolute Nullity. In Spanish law, nullity is either absolute or relative. The former is that which arises from the law, whether civil or criminal, the principal motive for which is the public interest, while the latter is that which affects one certain individual. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal.
281. No such distinction, however, is recognized in American law, and the term "absolute nullity" is used more for emphasis than as indicating a degree of invalidity. As to the ratification or subsequent validation of "absolute nul-lities," see Means v. Robinson, 7 Tex. 502, 516.

NULLITY OF MARRIAGE. The entire invalidity of a supposed, pretended, or attempted marriage, by reason of relationship or incapacity of the parties or other diriment impediments. An action seeking a decree declaring such an assumed mar-rriage to be null and void is called a suit of "nullity of marriage." It differs from an action for divorce, because the latter supposes the existence of NULLIUS FILIUS. Lat. The son of nobody; a bastard. A bastard is considered nullius filius as far as regards his right to inherit. But the rule of nullius filius does not apply in other respects, and has been changed by statute in most states so as to make him the child of his mother, in respect of inheritance. State v. Chavez, 42 N.M. 569, 82 P.2d 900, 902.

NULLIUS HOMINIS AUCTORITAS APUD NOS VALERE DEBET, UT MELIORA NON SEQUEMUR SI QUIS ATTULERIT. The authority of no man ought to prevail with us, so far as to prevent our following better [opinions] if any one should present them. Co.Litt. 383b.

NULLIUS IN BONIS. Lat. Among the property of no person.

NULLIUS JURIS. Lat. In old English law, of no legal force. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 24.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM. L. Lat. The name of a plea in an action on an arbitration bond, for not fulfilling the award, by which the defendant traverses the allegation that there was an award made.

NULLUM CRIMEN MAJUS EST INOBIEDIENTIA. No crime is greater than disobedience. Jenk.Cent. p. 77, case 48. Applied to the refusal of an officer to return a writ.

NULLUM EXEMPLUM EST IDEM OMNIBUS. No example is the same for all purposes. Co.Litt. 212a. No one precedent is adapted to all cases. A maxim in conveyancing.

NULLUM CRIMEN MAJUS EST INOBIEDIENTIA. No crime is greater than disobedience. Jenk.Cent. p. 77, case 48. Applied to the refusal of an officer to return a writ.

NULLUM SEMPER constat capere potest de injuria sua propria. No one can obtain an advantage by his own wrong. Co. Litt. 148; Broom, Max. 279; De Zottell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 60 S.D. 532, 245 N.W. 58, 59.

NULLUM DEBET AGERE DE DOLO, UBI ALIA ACTIO SUBEST. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo. 7 Coke, 92.

NULLUM DICITUR FELO PRINCIPALIS NISI ACTOR, AUT QUI PRÆSENS EST, ABETTANS AUT AUXILIANS AD FELONIAM FACIENDAM. No one is called a “principal felon” except the party actually committing the felony, or the party present aiding and abetting in its commission.

NULLUM IDONEUS TESTIS IN RE SUA INTELEGITUR. No person is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause. Dig. 22, 5, 10.

NULLUM JURIS ALIENUM FORISTACERE POST. No man can forfeit another’s right. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 11.

NULLUM SIMILE EST IDEM, NISI QUATUOR PEDIBUS CURRIT. No like is exactly identical unless it runs on all fours.

NULLUM TEMPUS AUT LOCUS OCCURRIT REGI. No time or place affects the king. 2 Inst. 273; Jenk. Cent. 83; Broom, Max. 65.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURRIT REGI. Time does not run against the king. The rule refers to the king in his official capacity as representing the sovereignty of the nation and not to the king as an individual. City of Bisbee v. Cochise County, 52 Ariz. 1, 78 P.2d 982, 984.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURRIT REIPUBLICAE. No time runs [time does not run] against the commonwealth or state. Covington County v. O’Neal, 239 Ala. 322, 195 So. 234, 238.

NULLUM ALTUS QUAM REX POSSIT EPISCOPO DEMANDARE INQUESTIONEM FACIENDAM. Co. Litt. 134. No other than the king can command the bishop to make an inquisition.

NULLUM COMMODUM CAPERE POTEST DE INJURIA SUA PROPRIA. No one can obtain an advantage by his own wrong. Co. Litt. 148; Broom, Max. 279; De Zottell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 60 S.D. 532, 245 N.W. 58, 59.

NULLUM JURIS ALIENUM FORISTACERE POST. No man can forfeit another’s right. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 11.

NULLUM JURE UTITUR. No person is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause. Dig. 22, 5, 10.

0. N. B. An abbreviation for "Old Natura Brevium." See Natura Brevium.

0. N. I. It was the course of the English exchequer, as soon as the sheriff entered into and made up his account for issues, amerciaments, etc., to mark upon each head "0. Ni.," which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exoneracionem, and presently he became the king’s debtor, and a debet was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc. 4 Inst. 116; Wharton.

0. S. An abbreviation for "Old Style," or "Old Series."

OATH. Any form of attestation by which a person signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform an act faithfully and truthfully. Vaughn v. State, 146 Tex.Cr.R. 586, 177 S.W.2d 59, 60. An affirmation of truth of a statement, which renders one willfully asserting untrue statements punishable for perjury. U. S. v. Klink, D.C.Wyo., 3 F. Supp. 208, 210. An outward pledge by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of responsibility to God. Morrow v. State, 140 Neb. 592, 300 N.W. 843, 845. A solemn appeal to the Supreme Being in attestation of the truth of some statement. State v. Jones, 28 Idaho 428, 154 P. 378, 381; Tyler, Oaths 15. An external pledge or assurance, made in verification of statements made, or to be made, coupled with an appeal to a sacred or venerated object, in evidence of the serious and reverent state of mind of the party, or with an invocation to a supreme being to witness the words of the party, and to visit him with punishment if they be false. June v. School Dist. No. 11, Southfield Tp., 283 Mich. 533, 278 N.W. 676, 677, 116 A.L. R. 581. In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

The term has been variously defined: as, “a solemn invocation of the vengeance of the Deity upon the witness if he do not declare the whole truth, so far as he knows it,” 1 Stark.Ev. 22; or, “a religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and impriates the vengeance of Heaven if he do not speak the truth,” 1 Leach 430; or, as “a religious act by which the party invokes God not only to witness the truth and sincerity of his promise, but also to avenge his imposture or violated faith, or, in other words, to punish his perjury if he shall be guilty of it,” 10 Toullier, n. 343; Puffendorf, b. 4, c. 2, § 4. The essential idea of an oath would seem to be, however, that of a recognition of God’s authority by the party taking it, and an undertaking to accomplish the transaction to which it refers as required by his laws.

See Kissing the Book.

Assertory Oath. One relating to a past or present fact or state of facts, as distinguished from a “promissory” oath which relates to future conduct; particularly, any oath required by law other than in judicial proceedings and upon induction to office, such, for example, as an oath to be made at the custom-house relative to goods imported.

Corporal Oath. See Corporal.

Decisive or Decisory Oath. In the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his charge, offered to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, which the adversary was bound to accept, or tender the same proposal back again, otherwise the whole was taken as confessed by him. Cod. 4, 1, 12.

Extrajudicial Oath. One not taken in any judicial proceeding, or without any authority or requirement of law, though taken formally before a proper person. State v. Scatena, 84 Minn. 281, 87 N.W. 764.

False Oath. See titles "False Oath" and "Perjury."

Judicial Oath. One taken in some judicial proceeding or in relation to some matter connected with judicial proceedings. One taken before an officer in open court, as distinguished from a “non-judicial” oath, which is taken before an officer ex parte or out of court. State v. Dreifus, 38 La.Ann. 877.

Official Oath. One taken by an officer when he assumes charge of his office, whereby he declares that he will faithfully discharge the duties of the same, or whatever else may be required by statute in the particular case.

Poor Debtor’s Oath. See Poor.

Promissory Oaths. Oaths which bind the party to observe a certain course of conduct, or to fulfill certain duties, in the future, or to demean himself thereafter in a stated manner with reference to specified objects or obligations; such, for example, as the oath taken by a high executive officer, a legislator, a judge, a person seeking naturalization, an attorney at law. Case v. People, 6 Abb. N. C., N.Y., 151. A solemn appeal to God, or, in a wider sense, to some superior sanction or a sacred or revered person in witness of the inviolability of 1220

Purgatory Oath. An oath by which a person purges or clears himself from presumptions, charges or suspicions standing against him, or from a contempt.

Qualified Oath. One the force of which as an affirmation or denial may be qualified or modified by the circumstances under which it is taken or which necessarily enter into it and constitute a part of it; especially thus used in Scotch law.

Suppletory Oath. In the civil and ecclesiastical law, the testimony of a single witness to a fact is called "half-proof," on which no sentence can be founded; in order to supply the other half of proof, the party himself (plaintiff or defendant) is admitted to be examined in his own behalf, and the oath administered to him for that purpose is called the "suppletory oath," because it supplies the necessary quantum of proof on which to found the sentence. 3 Bl. Comm. 370.

This term, although without application in American law in its original sense, is sometimes used as a designation of a party's oath required to be taken in authentication or support of some piece of documentary evidence which he offers, for example, his books of account.

Voluntary Oath. Such as a person may take in extrajudicial matters, and not regularly in a court of justice, or before an officer invested with authority to administer the same. Brown.

OATH AGAINST BRIBERY. One which could have been administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished in 1854. Wharton.

OATH EX OFFICIO. The oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offense was formerly allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compurgators swore that they believed in his innocence.' 3 BL Comm. 101, 447; Mozley & Whiteley.

OATH IN LITEM. In the civil law, an oath permitted to be taken by the plaintiff, for the purpose of proving the value of the subject-matter in controversy, when there was no other evidence on that point, or when the defendant fraudulently suppressed evidence which might have been available. Greenl. Ev. § 348; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 229; Herman v. Drinkwater, 1 Greenl., Me., 27.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE. An oath by which a person promises and binds himself to bear true allegiance to a particular sovereign or government, e. g., the United States; administered generally to high public officers and to soldiers and sailors, also to aliens applying for naturalization, and, occasionally, to citizens generally as a prerequisite to their suing in the courts or prosecuting claims before government bureaus. Rev.St. U.S. ill 3478, 31 U.S.C.A. § 204.

OATH OF CALUMNY. In the civil law, an oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not prompted by malice or trickery in commencing his action, but that he had bona ide a good cause of action. Poth. Pand. lib. 5, tt. 16, 17, s. 124.

OATH-RITE. The form used at the taking of an oath.

OB. Lat. On account of; for. Several Latin phrases and maxims, commencing with this word, are more commonly introduced by "in" (q. v.).

OB CAUSAM ALIQUAM A RE MARITIMA OR-TAM. For some cause arising out of a maritime matter. 1 Pet. Adm. 92. Said to be Selden's translation of the French definition of admiralty jurisdiction, "pour le fait de la mer." Id.

OB CONTINENTIAM DELICTL On account of contiguity to the offense, i. e., being contaminated by conjunction with something illegal.

For example, the cargo of a vessel, though not contraband or unlawful, may be condemned in admiralty, along with the vessel, when the vessel has been engaged in some service which renders her liable to seizure and confiscation. The cargo is then said to be condemned ob continentiam delicti, because found in company with an unlawful service. 1 Kent, Comm. 152.

OB CONTINGENTIAM. On account of connection; by reason of similarity. In Scotch law, this phrase expresses a ground for the consolidation of actions.

OB FAVOREM MERCATORUM. In favor of merchants. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 12.

OB INFAMIAM NON SOLET JUXTA LEGEM TERR1E ALIQUIS PER LEGEM APPARENTEM SE PURGARE, NISI PRIUS CONVICTUS FUER-IT VEL CONFESSUS IN CURIA. Glan. lib. 14, c. ii. On account of evil report, it is not usual, according to the law of the land, for any person to purge himself, unless he have been previously convicted, or confessed in court.

OB TURPEM CAUSAM. For an immoral consideration. Dig. 12, 5.

OBIERATUS. Lat. In Roman law, a debtor who was obliged to serve his creditor till his debt was discharged. Adams, Rom. Ant. 49.

OBEDIENCE. Compliance with a command, prohibition, or known law and rule of duty prescribed; the performance of what is required or enjoined by authority, or the abstaining from what is prohibited, in compliance with the command or prohibition. Webster.

OBEDIENTIA. An office, or the administration of it; a kind of rent; submission; obedience.

OBEDIENTIA EST LEGIS ESSENTIA. 11 Coke, 100. Obedience is the essence of the law.

OBEDIENTIAL OBLIGATION. See Obligation.

OBEDIENTIARIUS; OBEDIENTIARY. A monastic officer. Du Cange; see 1 Poll. & Maitl. 417.
OBIT. A funeral solemnity, or office for the dead. Cowell, The anniversary of a person’s death; the anniversary office; Cro. Jac. 51.

OBITER. Lat. By the way; in passing; incidentally; collaterally.

Statements in opinions wherein courts indulged in generalities that had no actual bearing on issues involved. Graham v. Jones, 198 La. 507, 3 So. 2d 761, 774.

A remark made, or opinion expressed, by a judge, in his decision upon a cause, "by the way," that is, incidentally or collaterally, and not directly upon the question before him, or upon a point not necessarily involved in the determination of the cause, or introduced by way of illustration, or analogy or argument. See Dictum.

OBJECT. In legal proceedings, to object (e.g., to the admission of evidence) is to interpose a declaration to the effect that the particular matter or thing under consideration is not done or admitted with the consent of the party objecting, but is by him considered improper or illegal, and referring the question of its propriety or legality to the court.

OBJECT, n. End aimed at, the thing sought to be accomplished, the aim or purpose, the thing sought to be attained. State v. Banks, 33 Idaho 765, 198 P. 472, 474; Miller v. Tucker, 142 Miss. 146, 105 So. 774, 777.

Anything which comes within the cognizance or scrutiny of the senses, especially anything tangible or visible. Moore v. Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 112 Vt. 218, 22 A.2d 503, 505. That which is perceived, known, thought of, or signified; that toward which a cognitive act is directed. Cent. Dict.

The term includes whatever may be presented to the mind as well as to the senses; whatever, also, is acted upon or operated upon affirmatively, or intentionally influenced by anything done, moved, or applied thereto. Wells v. Shook, 8 Blatchf. 257, Fed.Cas.No.17,406; it may be used as having the sense of effect, Harland v. Territory, 3 Wash.T. 131, 13 P. 453.

OBJECT OF AN ACTION. Legal relief to prevent or redress the wrong. Ophuls & Hill v. Carolina Ice & Fuel Co., 160 S.C. 441, 158 S.E. 824, 827. The remedy sought to be obtained by the action; the remedy demanded or the relief or recovery sought or prayed for; not the same thing as the cause of action or the subject of the action. Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 406; Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co., 136 N.C. 89, 48 S.E. 643.

OBJECT OF A STATUTE. Aim or purpose of its enactment. Pinder v. Board of Sup’rs of Election of Calcasieu Parish, La.App., 146 So. 715, 718; Nichols v. Yandres, 151 Fla. 87, 9 So.2d 157, 158, 144 A.L.R. 1351. End or design which it is meant to accomplish, while the “subject” is the matter to which it relates and with which it deals. Medical Examiners v. Fowler, 50 La. 1358, 24 So. 809; McNeely v. South Penn Oil Co., 52 W.Va. 616, 44 S.E. 508, 62 L.R.A. 562. Matter or thing forming groundwork of statute. Moats v. Cook, 113 W.Va. 151, 167 S.E. 137, 138.

OBJECTION. Act of objecting; that which is, or may be, presented in opposition; an adverse reason or argument; a reason for objecting or opposing; a feeling of disapproval. 131 Ken Ave. Co. v. Gross, 125 N.J.L. 513, 16 A.2d 469, 470.

The act of a party who, by means of some matter or proceeding in the course of a trial, (see Object, v.) or an argument or reason urged by him in support of his contention that the matter or proceeding objected to is improper or illegal.

By the term “objections” by the Governor to a statute, as used in a state constitution, is meant his disapproval. State v. Forsyth, 21 Wyo. 359, 133 P. 521, 529.

It is directed to thing done by one other than judge or court, and “exception” going to action or ruling of court. State ex rel. Brockman Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 241 S.W. 920, 922.

OBJECTIVE SYMPTOM. Those which a surgeon or physician discovers from an examination of his patient, "subjective symptoms" being those which he learns from what his patient tells him. Schroeader v. Western Union Telegraph Co., Mo.App., 129 S.W.2d 917, 922.

OBJECTS OF A POWER. Those among whom donee is given power to appoint. Restatement, Property, § 319(3); Mozley & Whiteley.

OBJURGATRIX. In old English law, scolds or unquiet women were referred to as objurgatrices and were punished with the cucking-stool (q. v.).

OBLATA. Gifts or offerings made to the king by the king by any of his subjects; old debts, brought, as it were, together from preceding years, and put on the present sheriff’s charge. Wharton.

OBLATA TERRIE. Half an acre, or, as some say, half a perch, of land. Spelman.

OBLATE, See Oblati.

OBLATE ROLLS. Chancery Rolls (1199-1641), called also Fine Rolls, containing records of payments to the king by way of oblate or fine for the grant of privileges, or by way of amercement for breach of duty. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 141.

OBLATI. In old European law, voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries.

OBLATI ACTIO. In the civil law, an action given to a party against another who had offered to him a stolen thing, which was found in his possession. Inst. 3, 1, 4.

OBLATIO. Lat. In the civil law, a tender of money in payment of a debt made by debtor to creditor. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious. Calvin.

OBLATION. Oblations, or obventions, are offerings or customary payments made, in England, to the minister of a church, including fees on marriages, burials, mortuaries, etc., (q. v.) and Easter offerings. 2 Steph. Comm. 740; Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1596. They may be commuted by agreement.
OBLATIONES DICUNTUR QUZECUNQUE A. HIS FIDELIBUS CHRISTIAN'S OFFER-UNTUR DEO ET ECCLESLE, SIVE RES SOLI-DIE SIVE MOBILES. 2 Inst. 389. Those things are called "oblations" which are offered to God and to the Church by pious and faithful Christians, whether they are movable or immovable.

OBLIGATE. To bind or constrain; to bind to the observance or performance of a duty; to place under an obligation. To bind one's self by an obligation or promise; to assume a duty; to execute a written promise or covenant; to make a writing obligatory. Wachter v. Famachon, 62 Wis. 117, 22 N.W. 160; Maxwell v. Jacksonville Loan & Imp. Co., 45 Fla. 425, 34 So. 255.

OBLIGATIO. Lat. In Roman law, a legal bond which obliges the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. Ortolan, Inst. 2, § 1179. It corresponded nearly to our word contract. The legal relation existing between two certain persons whereby one (the creditor) is authorized to demand of the other (the debtor) a certain performance which has a money value. In this sense obligatio signifies not only the duty of the debtor to a certain performance, but the right of the creditor. The fact establishing such claim and debt, as also the instrument evidencing it, is termed "obligation." Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 360.

That legal relation subsisting between two persons by which one is bound to the other for a certain performance. The passive relation sustained by the debtor to the creditor is likewise called an "obligation." Sometimes, also, the term "obligation" is used for the causa obligationis, and the contract itself is designated an "obligation." There are passages in which even the document which affords the proof of a contract is called an "obligation." Such applications, however, are but a loose extension of the term, which, according to its true idea, is only properly employed when it is used to denote the debt relationship, in its totality, active and passive, subsisting between the creditor and the debtor. Tomk. & J.Mod.Rom.Law, 301.

OBLIGATIO CIVILIS. An obligation enforceable by action, whether it derives its origin from the jus civile, as the obligation engendered by formal contracts or the obligation enforceable by bilaterally penal suits, or from such portion of the jus gentium as had been completely naturalized in the civil law and protected by all its remedies, such, as the obligation engendered by formless contracts.

OBLIGATIO EX CONTRACTU. An obligation arising from contract, or an antecedent jus in personam. In this there are two stages,—first, a primary or sanctioned personal right antecedent to wrong, and, afterwards, a secondary or sanctioning personal right consequent on a wrong. Poste's Gaius' Inst. 359.

OBLIGATIO EX DELICTO, or OBLIGATIO EX MALEFICIO. An obligation founded on wrong or tort, or arising from the invasion of a jus in rem. In this there is the second stage, a secondary or sanctioning personal right consequent on a wrong, but the first stage is not a personal right. (jus in personam,) but a real right, (jus in rem,) whether a primordial right, right of status, or of property. Poste's Gaius' Inst. 359.

OBLIGATIO NATURALIS. An obligation not immediately enforceable by action; one deriving its validity from the law of nature, or one imposed by that portion of the jus gentium which is only imperfectly recognized by civil law.

These had not the binding force of the other classes, not being capable of enforcement by action, and are, therefore, not noticed by Justinian in his classification; but they had, nevertheless, a certain efficacy even in the civil law; for instance, though a debt founded upon a natural obligation could not be recovered by an action, yet if it was voluntarily paid by the debtor he could not recover it back, as he might do in the case of money paid by mistake, etc., where no natural obligation existed. L. 38, pr. D. 12. 6; Ortolan 2, § 1180.

OBLIGATIO PRJETORIA. The Romans considered that obligations derived their validity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civile. In the course of time, however, the praetorian jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations and provided the means of enforcing them; hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles and obligationes pretorice. Inst. 1. 3. 13.

OBLIGATION. A generic word, derived from the Latin substantive "obligatio," having many, wide, and varied meanings, according to the context in which it is used. Enyeart v. City of Lincoln, 136 Neb. 146, 285 N.W. 314, 318. That which a person is bound to do or forbear; any duty imposed by law, promise, contract, relations of society, courtesy, kindness, etc. Goodwin v. Friedrich, 135 Neb. 203, 280 N.W. 917, 923. Duty. Rucks-Brandt Const. Co. v. Price, 165 Okl. 178, 23 P.2d 690. Duty imposed by law. Helvering v. British-American Tobacco Co., C.C.A., 69 F.2d 528, 530. Law or duty binding parties to perform their agreement. An undertaking to perform. State v. Citrus County, 116 Fla. 676, 157 So. 4, 97 A.L.R. 431. That which constitutes a legal or moral duty and which renders a person liable to coercion and punishment for neglecting it; a word of broad meaning, and the particular meaning intended is to be gained by consideration of its context. An obligation or debt may exist by reason of a judgment as well as an express contract, in either case there being a legal duty on the part of the one bound to comply with the promise. Schwartz v. California Claim Service, 52 Cal.App.4d 47, 125 P.2d 883, 888. Liabilities created by contract or law, Rose v. W. B. Worthen Co., 186 Ark. 205, 53 S.W.2d 15, 16, 85 A.L.R. 212; or tort. Exchange Bank v. Ford, 3 P. 449, 451, 7 Colo. 314. As legal term word originally meant a sealed bond, but it now extends to any certain written promise to pay money or do a specific thing. Lee v. Kenan, C.C.A.Fla., 78 F.2d 425, 100 A.L.R. 869. A formal and binding agreement or acknowledgment of a liability to pay a certain sum or do a certain thing. United States v. One Zumstein Briefmarken Katalog 1938, D.C. Pa., 24 F.Supp. 516, 519.

The binding power of a vow, promise, oath, or contract, or of law, civil, political, or moral, independent of a promise; that which constitutes legal or moral duty, and which renders a person liable to coercion and punishment for neglecting it. Webster.

A tie which binds us to pay or do something agreeably to the laws and customs of the country in which the obligation is made. Inst. 3, 14.

Obligation is (1) legal or moral duty, as opposed to physical compulsion; (2) a duty incumbent upon an individual, or a specific and limited number of individuals, as opposed to a duty imposed upon the world at large; (3) the right to enforce such a duty. (jus in personam) as opposed to such a right as that of property, (jus in rem,) which avails against the world at large; (4) a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed, for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like. Mozley & Whitley.

"Obligation" is the correlative of "right." Taking the latter word in its politico-ethical sense, as a power of free action lodged in a person, "obligation" is the corresponding duty, constraint, or binding force which should prevent all other persons from denying, abridging, or obstructing such right, or interfering with its exercise. And the same is its meaning as the correlative of a "jus in rem." Taking "right" as meaning a "jus in personam," (a power, demand, claim, or privilege inherent in one person, and incident upon another,) the "obligation" is the coercive force or control imposed upon the person of incidence by the law which sanctioned the positive law, (or the moral law as recognized and sanctioned by the positive law,) constraining him to accede to the demand, render up the thing claimed, pay the money due, or otherwise perform what is expected of him with respect to the subject-matter of the right.

A penal bond or "writing obligatory," that is, a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like, and which differs from a bill, the latter being generally without a penalty or condition, though it may be obligatory. Co. Litt. 172.

A deed whereby a man binds himself under a penalty to do a thing. Com.Dig. Obligation (A) ; Taylor v. Glaser, 2 Serg. & R., Pa., 502; Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40. The word has a very broad and comprehensive legal significatio and embraces all instruments of writing, however informal, whereby one party contracts with another for the payment of money or the delivery of specific articles. State v. Campbell, 103 N.C. 344, 9 S.E. 410; Morrison v. Lovejoy, 6 Minn. 353, Gil. 224; Sinton v. Carter Co., 23 F. 535.

In English expositions of the Roman law, and works upon general jurisprudence, "obligation" is used to translate the Latin "obligatio." In this sense its meaning is much wider than as a technical term of English law. See Obligatio.

Absolute obligation. One which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfillment according to the engagement.

Conjunctive or alternative obligation. The former is one in which the several objects in it are connected by a copulative, or in any other manner which shows that all of them are severally comprised in the contract. This contract creates as many different obligations as there are different objects; and the debtor, when he wishes to discharge himself, may force the creditor to receive them separately. But where the things which form the object of the contract are separated by a disjunctive, then the obligation is alternative, and the performance of either of such things will discharge the obligor. The choice of performing one of the obligations belongs to the obligor, unless it is expressly agreed that it shall belong to the creditor. Civ.Code La. art. 2068; Dougil. 14; 1 Ld. Raym. 279; Galloway v. Legan, 4 Mart. N.S. (La.) 167. A promise to deliver a certain thing or to pay a specified sum of money is an example of an alternative obligation. Civ.Code La. arts. 2063, 2066, 2067.

Contractual obligation. One which arises from a contract or agreement.

Determinate or indeterminate obligation. A determinate obligation is one which has for its object a certain thing: as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse named Bucephalus, in which case the obligation can be discharged only by delivering the identical horse. An indeterminate obligation is one where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species: as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

Divisible or indivisible obligation. A divisible obligation is one which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided, with or without the consent of the parties. An indivisible obligation is one which is not susceptible of division: as, for example, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share.

Express or implied obligation. Express or conventional obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation, while implied obligations are such as are raised by the implication or inference of the law from the nature of the transaction.

Failure to meet obligations. See Failure to Meet Obligations.

Joint or several obligation. A joint obligation is one by which two or more obligors bind themselves jointly for the performance of the obligation. France v. France, 94 Or. 414, 185 P. 1108. A several obligation is one where the obligors promise, each for himself, to fulfill the engagement.

Moral obligation. A duty which is valid and binding in conscience and according to natural justice, but is not recognized by the law as adequate to set in motion the machinery of justice; that is, one which rests upon ethical considerations alone, and is not imposed or enforced by positive law. Taylor v. Hotchkiss, 81 App.Div. 470, 80 N.Y.S. 1042; Bailey v. Philadelphia, 167 Pa. 569, 31 A. 925, 46 Am.St.Rep. 691. A duty which would be enforceable by law, were it not for some positive rule, which, with a view to general benefit, exempts the party in that particular instance from legal liability. Backhaus v. Lee, 49 N.D. 821, 194 N.W. 887, 890; Longstreth v. City of Philadelphia, 245 Pa. 233, 91 A. 667.

Natural or civil obligation. A natural obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice; Blair v. Williams, 4 Litt., Ky., 41. As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished: Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 197, 4 L.Ed. 529; Ogden v.
OBLIGATION

Saunders, 12 Wheat. 318, 337, 6 L.Ed. 606. A civil obligation is a legal tie, which gives the party with whom it is contracted the right of enforcing its performance by law. Civ.Code La. art. 1757; Poth. Obl. 173, 191.

Obediential obligation. One incumbent on parties in consequence of the situation or relationship in which they are placed. Ersk. Prin. 60.

Perfect or imperfect obligation. A perfect obligation is one recognized and sanctioned by positive law; one of which the fulfillment can be enforced by the aid of the law. Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 124, 92 Am.Dec. 56. But if the duty created by the obligation operates only on the moral sense, without being enforced by any positive law, it is called an "imperfect obligation," and creates no right of action, nor has it any legal operation. The duty of exercising gratitude, charity, and the other merely moral duties are examples of this kind of obligation. Civ.Code La. art. 1757; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U.S. 600, 24 L.Ed. 793.

Personal or heritable obligation. An obligation is heritable when the heirs and assigns of one party may enforce the performance against the heirs of the other. Civ.Code La. art. 1997. It is personal when the obligor binds himself only, not his heirs or representatives. An obligation is strictly personal when none but the obligee can enforce the performance, or when it can be enforced only against the obligor. Civ.Code La. art. 1997. An obligation may be personal as to the obligee, and heritable as to the obligor, and it may in like manner be heritable as to the obligee, and personal as to the obligor. Civ.Code La. art. 1998. For the term personal obligation, as used in a different sense, see the next paragraph.

Personal or real obligation. A personal obligation is one by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance. A real obligation is one by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.

Thus, when an estate owes an easement, as a right of way, it is the thing, and not the owner, who owes the easement. Another instance of a real obligation occurs when a person buys an estate which has been mortgaged, subject to the mortgage: he is not liable for the debt, though the estate is. In these cases the owner has an interest only because he is seized of the servient estate or the mortgaged premises, and he may discharge himself by abandoning his interest in the property. The obligation is both personal and real when the obligor has bound himself and the property for its performance. A real obligation is also defined as one which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, the condition has been fulfilled; and a conditional obligation is also defined as one the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

Pure obligation. One which is not suspended by any condition, whether it has been contracted without any condition, or, when thus contracted, the condition has been accomplished. Poth. Obl. no. 176. See simple obligation.

Simple or conditional obligation. Simple obligations are such as are not dependent for their execution on any event provided for by the parties, and which are not agreed to become void on the happening of any such event. Conditional obligations are such as are made to depend on an uncertain event. If the obligation is not to take effect until the event happens, it is a suspensive condition; if the obligation takes effect immediately, but is liable to be defeated when the event happens, it is then a resolutory condition. Civ.Code La. arts. 2020, 2021; Moss v. Smoker, 2 La.Ann. 898. A simple obligation is also defined as one which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, the condition has been fulfilled; and a conditional obligation is also defined as one the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

Single or penal obligation. A penal obligation is one to which is attached a penal clause, which delivers all the title-papers which the vendor has relating to it, to take care of the estate until it is delivered, and the like. See, further, the title Accessory Obligation.

Solidary obligation. In the law of Louisiana, one which binds each of the obligors for the whole debt, as distinguished from a "joint" obligation, which binds the parties each for his separate proportion of the debt. Groves v. Sentell, 14 S.Ct. 898, 153 U.S. 465, 38 L.Ed. 785. See Solidary.
OBLIGATION OF A CONTRACT. That which law in force when contract is made obliges parties to do or not to do, and remedy and legal means to carry it into effect. Harris v. Monroe Building & Loan Ass’n, La.App., 154 So. 503, 505.

As used in Const.U.S. art. 1, § 10, the term means the binding and coercive force which constrains every man to perform the agreement he has made; a force grounded in the ethical principle of fidelity to one’s promises, but deriving its legal efficacy from its recognition by positive law, and sanctioned by the law’s providing a remedy for the infraction of the duty or for the enforcement of the correlative right. Story, Const. § 1379; Black, Const.Prohib. § 139; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L.Ed. 606.

OBLIGATION SOLIDAIRE. This, in French law, corresponds to joint and several liability in English law, but is applied also to the joint and several rights of the creditors parties to the obligation.

OBLIGATIONES EX DELICTO or EX MALEFICIO. Obligations arising from the commission of a wrongful injury to the person or property of another.

“Delictum” is not exactly synonymous with “tort,” for while it includes most of the wrongs known to the common law, it is also wide enough to cover some offenses (such as theft and robbery) primarily injurious to the individual, but now only punished as crimes. Such acts gave rise to an obligatio, which consisted in the liability to pay damages.

OBLIGATIONES EX VARIIS CAUSARUM FIGURIS. Although Justinian confined the divisions of obligations to four classes, namely obligations ex contractu, quasi ex contractu, ex maleficio and quasi ex male ficio, there are many species of obligations which cannot properly be reduced within any of these classes. Some authorities have, consequently, established a fifth class, to receive the odds and ends which belonged nowhere else, and have given to this class the above designation, borrowed from Gaiaus, 1, 1, pr. § 1, D. 44, 7; Mackeld.-§ 474; Hadley, Rom. Law 209, etc.

OBLIGATIONES QUASI EX CONTRACTU. Often persons who have not contracted with each other, under a certain state of facts, are regarded by the Roman law as if they had actually concluded a convention between themselves. The legal relation which then takes place between these persons, which has always a similarity to a contract obligation, is therefore termed obligatio quasi ex contractu.

Such a relation arises from the conducting of affairs without authority, (negotiorum gestio) or unauthorized agency; from the management of property that is in common when the community arose from casualty, (communis Heiden); from the payment of what was not due (solatium indebitum); from tutorship and curatorship (tutela and cura), resembling the relation of guardianship and ward; from taking possession of an inheritance (additio hereditatis and agritio bonorum possessionis); and in many other cases. Mackeld.Rom.Law, § 491.

OBLIGATIONES QUASI EX DELICTO, or OBLIGATIONES QUASI EX MALIFICIO. This class embraces all torts not coming under the denomination of delicta and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They differed widely in character, and at common law would in some cases give rise to an action on the case, in others to an action on an implied contract. Ort. Inst. §§ 1781-1792.

OBLIGATORY PACT. See Pact.

OBLIGATORY RIGHTS. See Right

OBLIGATORY WRITING. See Writing Obligatory.

OBLIGEE. The person in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay money or to do or not to do something. Code La. art. 3522, no. 11 (Civil.Code, art. 3556, subd. 20). Jenkins v. Williams, 191 Ky. 165, 229 S.W. 94, 95. The party to whom a bond is given.

Obligees are either several or joint. An obligee is several when the obligation is made to him alone; obligees are joint when the obligation is made to two or more; and in that event each is not a creditor for his separate share, unless the nature of the subject or the expression in the instrument lead to a different conclusion. 2 Pothier, Obl., Evans ed. 56; Hob. 172; Cro.Jac. 251.

The words obligee and payee have been held to have a technical and definite meaning under an act relative to promissory notes, bonds, etc., and apply only to notes, bonds, or bills whether given for the payment of money or for the performance of covenants and conditions, and not to mortgages; Hall v. Byne, 1 Scam., Ill., 142.

OBLIGOR. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. Code La. art. 3522, no. 12, Civ.Code, art. 3556, subd. 21. One who makes a bond.

Obligors are joint and several. They are joint when they agree to pay the obligation jointly. They are several when one or more bind themselves and each of them separately to perform the obligation. In order to become an obligor, the party must actually, either himself or by his attorney, enter into the obligation and execute it as his own.

OBLIQUE. Lat.

In the old law of descents, oblique; cross; transverse; collateral. The opposite of rectus, right, or upright.

In the law of evidence, indirect; circumstantial.

OBLITERATED CORNER. See Corner.

OBLITERATION. Erasure or blotting out of written words.

When the testator of a holographic will wrote across its face “Will revoked,” and “This will is hereby revoked,” and signed his name with lines beneath the signature, the will was canceled, defaced, and obliterated, within Decedent Estate Law, § 34, subds. 5, 6 (Consol.Laws, c. 13). In re Parsons’ Will, 195 N.Y.S. 742, 745, 119 Misc. 26.

OBNOXIOUS. "Obnoxious" and "offensive" in ordinary use are synonymous, and mean objectionable, disagreeable, displeasing, and distasteful. City of Muskogee v. Morton, 128 Okl. 17, 261 P. 183, 184.

OBRA. In Spanish law, work. Obras, works or trades; those which men carry on in houses or covered places. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 6.

OBREPTIO. Lat. The obtaining a thing by fraud or surprise. Calvin. Called, in Scotch law, "obtention."

OBREPTION. Obtaining anything by fraud or surprise. Acquisition of escheats, etc., from the sovereign, by making false representations. Bell. See, also, Subreption.

OBROGARE. Lat. In the civil law, to pass a law contrary to a former law, or to some clause of it; to change a former law in some part of it. Calvin.

OBROGATION. In the civil law, the annulling a law, in whole or in part, by passing a law contrary to it. The alteration of a law. Calvin.

OBSCENE. Material is "obscene" if to average person, applying contemporary community standards, dominant theme of material taken as a whole appeals to prurient interest, if it is utterly without redeeming social importance, if it goes substantially beyond customary limits of candor in description or representation, if it is characterized by patent offensiveness, and if it is hard-core pornography. Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304; Jacobellis v. Ohio, 378 U.S. 184, 85 S.Ct. 1676; Manual Enterprises, Inc. v. Day, 370 U.S. 478, 82 S.Ct. 1432; U. S. v. Klaw, C.A.N.Y., 350 F.2d 155, 164.

Offensive to chastity of mind or to modesty, expressing or presenting to the mind or view something that delicacy, purity, and decency forbids to be exposed; calculated to corrupt, deprave, and debauch the morals of the people, and promote violation of law; licentious and libidinous and tending to excite feelings of an impure or unchaste character; tending to stir the sex impulses or to lead to sexually impure and lustful thoughts; tending to corrupt the morals of youth or to lower the standards of right and wrong especially as to the sexual relation. Parmelee v. United States, 72 App.D.C. 203, 113 F.2d 729, 730.

OBSCENE BOOK or PAPER. An obscene book or paper within the act relating to nonmailable matter means one which contains immodest and indecent matter, the reading whereof would have a tendency to deprave and corrupt the minds of those in whose hands the publication might fall, and whose minds are open to such immoral influences; U. S. v. Clarke, D.C.Mo., 38 Fed. 732.

OBSCENITY. The character or quality of being obscene; conduct tending to corrupt the public morals by its indecency or lewdness. State v. Pfenning, 76 Mo.App. 313; U. S. v. Males, D.C. Ind., 51 Fed. 41.

OBSCURE. When applied to words, statements or meanings, it signifies not perspicuous, not clearly expressed, hard to understand. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Geo. F. Fish, Inc., 148 Md. 210, 129 A. 14, 16.

OBSERVE. In the civil law, to perform that which has been prescribed by some law or usage. Dig. 1, 3, 32; Marshall County v. Knoll, 102 Iowa 573, 69 N.W. 1146.

OBSIDES. Lat. In the law of war, a hostage. Obsides, hostages.

OBSIGNARE. Lat. In the civil law, to seal up; as money that had been tendered and refused.

OBSIGNATORY. Ratifying and confirming.

OBSEOLSCENT. Becoming obsolete; going out of use; not entirely disused, but gradually becoming so.

OBSELETE. That which is no longer used. Becker v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., C.C.A.Mo., 120 F. 2d 403, 416. Disused; neglected; not observed.

The term is applied to statutes which have become inoperative by lapse of time, either because the reason for their enactment has passed away, or their subject-matter no longer exists, or they are not applicable to changed circumstances, or are tacitly disregarded by all men, yet without being expressly abrogated or repealed. Lemen v. Kansas Flour Mills Co., 122 Kan. 574, 253 P. 547, 548.

OBSTANTE. Withstanding; hindering. See Non Obstante.

OBSTETRICS. The branch of medical science which has to do with the care of women during pregnancy and parturition. Stoike v. Weseman, 167 Minn. 266, 208 N.W. 993.

OBSTINATE DESERTION. "Obstinate" as used of desertion, which is a ground for divorce, means determined, fixed, persistent. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 91 Fla. 427, 107 So. 630, 631. Persisted in against the willingness of the injured party to have it concluded. Laing v. Laing, 110 N.J.Eq. 411, 160 A. 510, 511.

OBSTRUCTION. Obligation; bond.
OBSTRUCT. To hinder or prevent from progress, check, stop, also to retard the progress of, make accomplishment of difficult and slow. Conley v. United States, C.C.A.Minn., 59 F.2d 929, 936. To be or come in the way of or to cut off the sight of an object. Silva v. Waldie, 42 N.M. 514, 82 P.2d 282, 286. To block up; to interpose obstacles; to render impassable; to fill with barriers or impediments; as to obstruct a road or way. U. S. v. Williams, 28 Fed.Cas. 633; Chase v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 313, 51 N.W. 560, 15 L.R.A. 553, 29 Am.St.Rep. 898. To impede; to interpose impediments, to the hindrance or frustration of some act or service; as to obstruct an officer in the execution of his duty. Davis v. State, 76 Ga. 722; Lamon v. Gold, 72 V.Wa. 618, 79 S.E. 728, 730, 51 L.R.A.,N.S., 883.

As applied to navigable waters, to "obstruct" them is to interpose such impediments in the way of free and open navigation that vessels are thereby prevented from going where ordinarily they have a right to go or where they may be stopped in their maneuvering. The City of Richmond, D.C.S.D.N.Y., 43 F. 88; Terre Haute Dredge Co. v. Halliday, 4 Ind. 36; The Vancouver, 28 F. Cas. 960.

OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE. Impeding or obstructing, those who seek justice in a court, or those who have duties or powers of administering justice therein. People v. Ormsby, 310 Mich. 291, 17 N.W. 2d 187, 190.

The act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent, or do prevent, the execution of lawful process. The term applies also to obstructing the administration of justice in any way as by hindering witnesses from appearing. Melton v. Commonwealth, 160 Ky. 642, 170 S.W. 37, 42, L.R.A.1915B, 689; People v. Hebhard, 162 N.Y.S. 80, 89, 96 Misc.Rep. 617. Any act, conduct, or directing agency pertaining to pending proceedings, intended to play on human frailty and to deflect and deter court from performance of its duty and drive it into compromise with its own unfettered judgment by placing it, through medium of knowingly false assertion, in wrong position before public, constitutes an obstruction to administration of justice. State v. Shumaker, 200 Ind. 623, 158 N.E. 769, 774, 58 A.L.R. 954; Toledo Newspaper Co. v. U. S., 247 U.S. 402, 38 S.Ct. 560, 564, 62 L.Ed. 1186.

OBSTRUCTING AN OFFICER. Implies forcible resistance; State v. Le Blanc, 115 Me. 142, 98 A. 119, 120; contra, State v. Estes, 185 N.C. 752, 117 S.E. 581, 582.

To "obstruct" a public officer means to oppose that officer. It does not mean to oppose or impede the process with which the officer is armed, or to defeat its execution, but that the officer himself shall be obstructed. Knoff v. State, 18 Old.Cr. 36, 192 P. 596, 597; Ratcliff v. State, 12 Old.Cr. 448, 158 P. 293, 294.

OBSTRUCTING PROCEEDINGS OF LEGISLATURE. The term embraces not only things done in the presence of the legislature, but those done in disobedience of a committee. Ex parte Youngblood, 94 Tex.Cr. 330, 251 S.W. 509, 512.

OBSTRUCTING PROCESS. In criminal law, the act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent or do prevent the execution of lawful process.

OBSTRUCTING THE RECRUITING OR ENLISTMENT SERVICE. The phrase in Espionage Act, tit. 1, § 3 (50 USCA § 33 note), should be given a broad meaning, and includes to hinder, impede, embarrass, and retard, in whole or in part. Doe v. U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 253 F. 903, 906. The term does not necessarily mean actual prevention of enlistments or recruiting, it being sufficient if one interferes with such service or renders it more difficult. Rhuberg v. United States, C.C.A.Or., 255 F. 865, 869; U. S. v. Pierce, D.C.N.Y., 245 F. 878, 884. It contemplates more than a physical obstruction. O'Hare v. U. S., C.C.A.N.D., 253 F. 538, 540.

This is the word properly descriptive of an injury to anyone's incorporeal hereditament, e. g., his right to an easement, or right to profit a prendre; an alternative word being "dis- turbance." On the other hand, "infringement" is the word properly descriptive of an injury to any one's patent rights or to his copyright. But "obstruction" is also a very general word in law, being applicable to every hindrance of a man in the discharge of his duty, (whether official, public, or private.) Brown.

"Obstruction" in highway includes anything interfering with highway easement. Andrew B. Hendryx Co. v. City of New Haven, 104 Conn. 632, 134 A. 77, 79.

As applied to the operation of railroads, an "obstruction" may be either that which obstructs or hinders the free and safe passage of a train, or that which may receive an injury or damage, such as it would be unlawful to inflict, if run over or against by the train. The City of Seattle v. Halliday, 104 Wash. 642, 170 P. 293, 294. As used in a confidence game statute it means to acquire the possession of, or control of, and not necessarily to acquire title to. People v. Miller, 278 Ill. 490, 116 N.E. 134, 138, L.R.A.1917E, 797.

OBSTRUCTION TO NAVIGATION. Any unnecessary interference with the free movements of vessels. The Steam Dredge No. 6, D.C.N.Y., 222 F. 576, 579.

OBTAIN. To get hold of by effort; to get possession of; to procure; to acquire, in any way. State v. Bowdry, 346 Mo. 1090, 145 S.W.2d 127, 129.

The word in statute relating to obtaining money or property by false pretenses, is not limited to getting, securing, or appropriating money or property as owner. It includes as well the getting or securing of money or property by way of a loan. Tingue v. State, 90 Ohio St. 368, 108 N.E. 222, 223, Ann.Cas.1916C, 1156. As used in a confidence game statute it means to acquire the possession of, or control of, and not necessarily to acquire title to. People v. Miller, 278 Ill. 490, 116 N.E. 134, 138, L.R.A.1917E, 797.

OBTAINING MONEY BY FALSE PRETENSES. See False Pretenses.

OBTEMPER. See Obtemperare.

OBTEMPERANDUM EST CONSUETUDINARIA RATIONIBILIB TAMQUAM LEGIBILIB. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed as a law. 4 Coke, 38.

OBTEMPERARE. Lat. To obey. Hence the word "obtempor," to obey or comply with a judgment of a court.

OBTET. To protest.
OBTORTO COLLO. In Roman law, taken by the neck or collar; as a plaintiff was allowed to drag a reluctant defendant to court. Adams, Rom. Ant. 242.

OBTULIT SE. Offered himself. In old practice, the emphatic words of entry on the record where one party offered himself in court against the other, and the latter did not appear. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 417.

OBVENTIO. Lat. (from obvenire, to fall in).
In the civil law, rent; profits; income; the return from an investment or thing owned; as the earnings of a vessel. Generally used in the plural.
In old English law, the revenue of a spiritual living, so called. Also, in the plural, "offerings."

OBVENTION. See Obventio; Oblation.

OCCASION. In Spanish law, accident. Las Para. das, pt. 3, tit. 32, 1. 21; White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 9, c. 2.

OCCASIO. In feudal law, a tribute which the lord imposed on his vassals or tenants for his necessity. Hindrance; trouble; vexation by suit. See, also, Occasiones.

OCCASION, n. That which provides an opportunity for the causal agency to act. Weinberg v. Richardson, 291 Ill.App. 618, 10 N.E.2d 893. Meaning not only particular time but carrying idea of opportunity, necessity, or need, or even cause in a limited sense, under G. L. c. 4, § 6, subd. 3. Commonwealth v. Tsourprakakis, 267 Mass. 496, 166 N.E. 855, 856. Condition of affairs; juncture entailing need; exigency; juncture affording ground or reason for something. Ridout v. State, 161 Tenn. 248, 30 S.W.2d 255, 259, 71 A.L.R. 830.

OCCASION, v. To cause or bring about by furnishing the condition or opportunity for the action of some other cause. Smart v. Raymond, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 100, 104. To give occasion to, to produce; to cause incidentally or indirectly; bring about or be the means of bringing about or producing. Industrial Commission of Ohio v. Weigandt, 102 Ohio St. 1, 130 N.E. 38, 39.

OCCASIONARI. To be charged or loaded with payments or occasional penalties.

OCCASIONES. In old English law, assarts. Spelman.

OCCUPANCY. Occupancy is a mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with the intention of acquiring a right of ownership in it. Civ. Code La. art. 3412; Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Iowa, 71, 52 N.W. 1124, 17 L.R.A. 788, 41 Am.St.Rep. 481. The taking possession of things which before belonged to nobody, with an intention of appropriating them to one's own use. To constitute occupancy, there must be a taking of a thing corporeal, belonging to nobody, with an intention of becoming the owner of it; Co. Litt. 416.

Occupancy is sometimes used in the sense of occupation or holding possession; indeed it has come to be very generally so used in this country in homestead laws, public-land laws, and the like, Walters v. People, 21 Ill. 178; Redfield v. R. Co., 25 Barb., N.Y., 54; Act of Cong. May 29, 1830, 4 Stat. 420; but this does not appear to be a common legal use of the term, as recognized by English authorities.

There is a use of the word in public-land laws, homestead laws, "occupying-claimant" laws, cases of landlord and tenant, and like connections, which seems to require the broader sense of possession, although there is, in most of these uses, a shade of meaning discarding any prior title as a foundation of title. Perhaps both uses or views may be harmonized, by saying that in jurisprudence occupancy or occupation is possession, presented independent of the idea of a chain of title, of any earlier owner. Or "occupancy" and "occupant" might be used for assuming property which has no owner, and "occupation" and "occupier" for the more general idea of possession. Judge Bouvier's definitions seem partly founded on such a distinction, and there are indications of it in English usage. It does not appear generally drawn in American books.

"Possession" and "occupancy," when applied to land, are nearly synonymous terms, and may exist through a tenancy. Thus, occupancy of a homestead, such as will satisfy the statute, may be by means other than that of actual residence on the premises by the widow or child. Walters v. People, 21 Ill. 178. Occupancy is always actual, as distinguished from possession, which may be actual or constructive. Occupancy is never constructive, save in the sense that land may be occupied through the actual possession of another. Davis v. State, 20 Ga.App. 68, 92 S.E. 550, 551. "Occupancy" is act of taking or holding possession and does not necessarily include residence. Kornhauser v. National Surety Co., 114 Ohio St. 24, 150 N.E. 921, 923.

Under fire policy, it must be such as ordinarily pertains to property to which property is adapted or devoted as described in policy. Continental Ins. Co. of New York v. Dunning, 249 Ky. 234, 60 S.W.2d 577.

Under burglary policy it implies an actual use of the house as a dwelling place not absolutely continuous, but as a place of usual return. Young v.
Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 202 Mo.App. 319, 215 S.W. 496, 498.

Under statute respecting adverse possession, the term was synonymous with "actual possession," as distinguished from "constructive possession." Hart v. All Persons, 26 Cal.App. 664, 148 P. 236, 240.

See Occupation; Occupy.

In International law. The taking possession of a newly discovered or conquered country with the intention of holding and ruling it.

OCCUPANT. Person having possessory rights, who can control what goes on on premises. United States v. Fox, C.C.A.N.Y., 60 F.2d 685, 688.

One who takes the first possession of a thing of which there is no owner.

One who occupies and takes possession, one who has the actual use, possession or control of a thing. Lechner v. Chapin, 12 Nev. 65; Wittkop v. Garner, 4 N.J.Misc. 234, 132 A. 339, 340.

In a special sense, one who takes possession of lands held pur autre vie, after the death of the tenant, and during the life of the cestui que vie.

Common occupant. See general occupant, below.

General occupant. At common law where a man was tenant pur autre vie, or had an estate granted to himself only (without mentioning his heirs) for the life of another man, and died without alienation during the life of cestui que vie, or him by whose life it was holden, he that could first enter on the land might lawfully retain the possession, so long as cestui que vie lived, by right of occupancy, and was hence termed a "general" or common "occupant." 1 Steph.Comm. 415.

Special occupant. A person having a special right to enter upon and occupy lands granted pur autre vie, on the death of the tenant, and during the life of cestui que vie.

Where the grant is to a man and his heirs during the life of cestui que vie, the heir, succeeds as special occupant, having a special exclusive right by the terms of the original grant. 2 Bl.Comm. 259; 1 Steph.Comm. 416.

In the United States the statute provisions of the different states vary considerably upon this subject. In New York and New Jersey, special occupancy is abolished. Virginia, and probably Maryland, follow the English statutes. In Massachusetts and other states, where the real and personal estates of intestates are distributed in the same way and manner, the question does not seem to be material. 4 Kent 27.

OCCUPARE. Lat. In the civil law, to seize or take possession of; to enter upon a vacant possession; to take possession before another. Calvin.

OCCUPATILE. That which has been left by the right owner, and is now possessed by another.

OCCUPATIO. "The advisedly taking possession of that which is at the moment the property of no man, with a view of acquiring property in it for yourself." Maine, Anc.L. 245. The advised assumption of physical possession. Id. 256. See Occupancy.

"Occupation" of a dwelling house means living in it. The use for which premises are intended should be considered in determining what is meant by the word "unoccupied" as contained in a policy. Hoover v. Mercantile2e Town Mut. Ins. Co., 93 Mo.App. 111, 69 S.W. 42. As used in a fire insurance policy the word unoccupied, is not synonymous with vacant, but is that condition where no one has the actual use or possession of the thing or property in question, Yost v. Ins. Co., 38 Pa.Sup.Ct. 594; Hardiman v. Fire Ass'n, 212 Pa. 383, 61 A. 990.

A putting out of a man's freehold in time of war. Co.Litt. s. 412.

Actual occupation. An open, visible occupancy as distinguished from the constructive one which follows the legal title. Cutting v. Patterson, 82 Minn. 375, 85 N.W. 172; People v. Ambrecht, 11 Abb.Prac., N.Y., 97; Bennett v. Burton, 44 Iowa 550.

Vocation. That which principally takes up one's time, thought, and energies; especially, one's regular business or employment; also whatever one follows as the means of making a livelihood. Dorrrell v. Norida Land & Timber Co., 53 Idaho, 793, 27 P.2d 960; Texas Co. v. Amos, 77 Fla. 327, 81 So. 471, 472; Childers v. Brown, 81 Or. 1, 158 P. 166, 168, Ann.Cas.1918D, 170. Particular business, profession, trade, or calling which engages individual's time and efforts, employment in which one regularly engages or vocation of his life. Harris v. Southern Carbon Co., La.App., 162 So. 430, 434; Evans v. Woodman Acc. Ass'n, 171 P. 643, 644, 102 Kan. 556, L.R.A.1918D, 122; Industrial Commission of Ohio v. Roth, 120 N.E. 172, 173, 98 Ohio St. 34, 6 A.L.R. 1463.

OCCUPATION TAX. A tax imposed upon an occupation or the prosecution of a business, trade, or profession; not a tax on property, or even the capital employed in the business, but an excise tax on the business itself; to be distinguished from a "license tax," which is a fee or exaction for the privilege of engaging in the business, not for its prosecution. Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 340, 434; Evans v. Woodman Acc. Ass'n, 171 P. 643, 644, 102 Kan. 556, L.R.A.1918D, 122; Industrial Commission of Ohio v. Roth, 120 N.E. 172, 173, 98 Ohio St. 34, 6 A.L.R. 1463.

OCCUPATIONAL. Of or pertaining to an occupation, trade or work. Morgan v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., La.App., 22 So.2d 595, 597.

OCCUPATIVE. Pertaining to or involving occupation or the right of occupation. Webster.

OCCUPYING CLAIMANT ACTS. Statutes providing for the reimbursement of a bona fide occupant and claimant of land, on its recovery by the true owner, to the extent to which lasting improvements made by him have increased the value of the land, and generally giving him a lien therefor. Jones v. Great Southern Hotel Co., 86 F. 370, 30 C.C.A. 108.

OCCUPYING CLAIMANT. An occupant claiming right under statute to recover for improvements he has placed on the land subsequently found not to be his. Kelly v. Watkins, 135 Okl. 276, 276 P. 191, 192.

OCCUPYING CLAIMANT ACTS. Statutes providing for the reimbursement of a bona fide occupant and claimant of land, on its recovery by the true owner, to the extent to which lasting improvements made by him have increased the value of the land, and generally giving him a lien therefor. Jones v. Great Southern Hotel Co., 86 F. 370, 30 C.C.A. 108.

OCCURRENCE. A coming or happening; any incident or event, especially one that happens without being designed or expected. Farmers & Merchants Nat. Bank v. Arrington, Tex.Civ.App., 98 S.W.2d 378, 382.

OCEAN. The main or open sea; the high sea; that portion of the sea which does not lie within the body of any country and is not subject to the territorial jurisdiction or control of any country, but is open, free, and common to the use of all nations. U. S. v. Rodgers, 14 S.Ct. 109, 150 U.S. 249, 37 L.Ed. 1071; U. S. v. New Bedford Bridge, 27 Fed.Cas. 120.

OCHIERN. In old Scotch law, a name of dignity; a freeholder. Skene’s De Verb. Sign.

OCHLOCRAZY. Government by the multitude. A form of government wherein the populace has the whole power and administration in its own hands. The abuse of a democracy. Mob rule.

OCTAVE. In old English law, the eighth day inclusive after a feast; one of the return days of writs. 3 Bl.Comm. 278.

OCTO TALES. Lat. Eight such; eight such men; eight such jurors. The name of a writ, at common law, which issues when upon a trial at bar, eight more jurors are necessary to fill the panel, commanding the sheriff to summon the requisite number. 3 Bl.Comm. 364; Decem Tales.

OCTROI. Fr. In French law, originally, a toll or duty, which, by the permission of the seigneur, any city was accustomed to collect on liquors and some other goods, brought within its precincts, for the consumption of the inhabitants. Afterwards appropriated to the use of the king. Steph. Lect. p. 361.

ODD LOT DOCTRINE. Under this doctrine, if the effects of an accident have not been removed, it is not sufficient, to entitle an employer to have a reduction in the weekly compensation ordered by the court under the Workmen’s Compensation Act, that it appears the workman has the physical capacity to do some kind of work different from the general kind of work which he was engaged in at the time of the accident, but it must also be shown that the workman, either by his own efforts or that of his employer, can actually get such work. Olneyville Wool Combing Co. v. Di Donato, 65 R.I. 154, 13 A.2d 817. Zelinckas v. Ford Motor Co., 294 Mich. 494, 293 N.W. 732.

ODERUNT PECCARE BONI, VIRTUTIS AMORE; ODERUNT PECCARE MALI, FORMIDINE PAN. Good men hate to sin through love of virtue; bad men, through fear of punishment.

ODIO

ODIO ET ATIA. See De Odio et Atia.

ODIOSA ET INHONESTA NON SUNT IN LEGE PRIESUMANDA. Odius and dishonest acts are not presumed in law. Co. Litt. 78; Jackson v. Miller, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 228, 231, 21 Am. Dec. 316.

ODIOSA NON PRIESUMUNTUR. Odious things are not presumed. Burrows, Sett. Cas. 190.

ODIUM. Means hatred and dislike. In venue, a party to an action as will render it untouchable or inferior to the triers, free from an atmosphere impregnated with statute, it implies such a general ill feeling toward the party as will be allowed by the court upon mere application, without any inquiry or contest, or which will be effectually taken without even applying to the court for leave. Merchants' Bank of St. Joseph v. Crysler, C.C.A.Mo., 67 F. 390, 14 C.C.A 444; Petit v. Petit, 45 Misc. 155, 91 N.Y.S. 979.

ODIOUSA ET INHONESTA NON SUNT IN LEGE. P. 1072, 1074; in, Kellogg v. Ford, 70 Or. 213, 139 P. 751, 752. Levy, 3 Ind.App. 464, 29 N.E. 417.

OF. A term denoting that from which anything proceeds; indicating origin, source, descent, and the like; as, he is of a race of kings; he is of noble blood. Stone v. Riggs, 43 Okl. 209, 142 P. 298, 299. Associated with or connected with, usually in some causal relation, efficient, material, formal, or final. Harlan v. Industrial Accident Commission, 194 Cal. 352, 228 P. 654, 657.

OF COURSE. As a matter of right. Atkins v. Garrett, D.C.Ia., 252 F. 280, 282. See "Of Course."

OF GRACE. This phrase had its origin in an age when kings dispensed their royal favors at the hands of chancellors, but has no rightful place in American jurisprudence. Sullivan v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., 208 Pa. 540, 57 A. 1065, 66 L.R. A. 712. A term applied to any permission or license granted to a party in the course of a judicial proceeding which is not claimable as a matter of course or of right, but is allowed by the favor or indulgence of the court. See Walters v. McCroy, 151 Pa. 549, 25 A. 125.

OF NEW. A Scotch expression, closely translated from the Latin "de novo," (q. v.)

OF FORCE. In force; extant; not obsolete; existing as a binding or obligatory power.

OF RECORD. Recorded; entered on the records; existing and remaining in or upon the appropriate records.

OF THE BLOOD. A technical legal phrase meaning to be descended from the person referred to or from the same common stock and from a common ancestor. In re Easter's Estate, 24 Cal.2d 191, 148 P.2d 601.

OFFA EXECRATA. In old English law. The morsel of execration; the corsned, (q. v.). 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 21.

OFFENDER. Commonly used in statutes to indicate person implicated in the commission of a crime and includes person guilty of a misdemeanor. State ex rel. Smith v. Jameson, 70 S.D. 503, 19 N.W.2d 505, 508.

It is used as a genus, comprehending every crime and misdemeanor, or as a species, signifying a crime not indictable, but punishable summarily or by the forfeiture of a penalty. In re Terry, C.C.Cal., 37 F. 649.

The word "offense," while sometimes used in various senses, generally implies a crime or a misdemeanor ill-fringing public as distinguished from mere private rights and punishable under the criminal laws, though it may also include the violation of a criminal statute for which the remedy is merely a civil suit to recover the penalty. Commonwealth v. Brown, 264 Pa. 85, 107 A. 676, 678.

Under a statute, declaring that one guilty of an offense or fault causing another damage is obliged to repair it, "offense or fault" has the same meaning as "tort"; Panama R. Co. v. Rock, C.C.A.Canal Zone, 272 F. 649, 651; and.

Continuing offense. A transaction or a series of acts set on foot by a single impulse, and operated by an unintermittent force, no matter how long a time it may occupy. State v. Brown, 10 Okl.Cr. 52, 133 P. 1143, 1144; Ex parte Dunn, 33 Okl.Cr. 190, 242 P. 574.

Criminal offense. Includes misdemeanors as well as felonies. People v. Scalisi, 324 Ill. 131, 154 N.E. 715, 721. It is an offense whichsubjects the offender to indictment. Latimer v. Wilson, 103 N. J.L. 159, 134 A. 750, 751.

Quasi offense. One which is imputed to the person who is responsible for its injurious consequences, not because he himself committed it, but because the perpetrator of it is presumed to have acted under his commands.

Same offense. As used in a provision against double jeopardy, the term means the same crime, not the same transaction, acts, circumstances, or situation. State v. Billotto, 104 Ohio St. 13, 135 N.E. 285, 287; U. S. v. Bostow, D.C.Ala., 273 F. 535, 538.

It is the previous conviction, and not the indictment, which is the basis of the charge of a second offense. People v. Boardman, 172 App.Div. 733, 159 N.Y.S. 577.

OFFENSIVE. In the law relating to nuisances and similar matters, this term means noxious, causing annoyance, discomfort, or painful or disagreeable sensations. In ordinary use, the term is synonymous with "obnoxious" and means objectionable, disagreeable, displeasing and distasteful. Moller v. Presbyterian Hospital, 65 App.Div. 134, 72 N.Y.S. 483; City of Muskegon v. Morton, 128 Old. 17, 261 P. 183, 184.

Oensive and Defensive League. In international law. A league binding the contracting powers not only to aid each other in case of aggression upon either of them by a third power, but also to support and aid each other in active and aggressive measures against a power with which either of them may engage in war.

Oensive Language. Language adapted to give offense; displeasing or annoying language. People v. Whitman (Co. Ct.) 157 N.Y.S. 1107, 1109.

Oensive Weapon. As occasionally used in criminal law and statutes, a weapon primarily meant and adapted for attack and the infliction of injury, but practically the term includes anything that would come within the description of a "deadly" or "dangerous" weapon. State v. Dineen, 10 Minn. 411 (Gil. 325); Rex v. Grice, 7 Car. & P. 803; Rex v. Noakes, 5 Car. & P. 326. Pistol has been held to be "offensive weapon" within statute punishing assault with intent to rob. Reed v. Commonwealth, 281 Ky. 189, 135 S.W.2d 867, 870, 872.

OFFER, v. To bring to or before; to present for acceptance or rejection; to hold out or proffer; to make a proposal to; to exhibit something that may be taken or received or not. Morrison v. Springer, 15 Iowa 346; People v. Ah Fook, 62 Cal. 494.

To attempt or endeavor; to make an effort to effect some object, as, to offer to bribe; in this sense used principally in criminal law. State v. Armijo, 19 N.M. 345, 142 P. 1126, 1127.

In trial practice, to "offer" evidence is to state its nature and purport, or to recite what is expected to be proved by a given witness or document, and demand its admission. A refusal to receive an instance, the term is not to be taken as equivalent to "introduce." Harris v. Tomlinson, 130 Ind. 426, 30 N.E. 214.

The word "offer," as used in a statute providing that the buyer, to rescind a sale, must offer within a reasonable time to return the goods, is synonymous with the word "tender." Collins v. Skillings, 224 Mass. 275, 112 N.E. 938, 939, Ann.Cas.1918D, 424.

OFFER, n. A proposal; a proposal to do a thing. An attempt; endeavor. Webster.

An offer of evidence. See the verb "offer," supra.

An act on the part of one person whereby he gives to another the legal power of creating the obligation called contract. In re Larney's Estate, 148 Misc. 871, 266 N.Y.S. 564.

An offer, as an element of a contract, is a proposal to make a contract. It must be made by the person who is to make the promise, and it must be made to the person to whom the promise is made. It may be made either by words or by signs, either orally or in writing, and either personally or by a messenger; but in whatever way it is made, it is not in law an offer until it comes to the knowledge of the person to whom it is made: Langd. Contr. 151; 6 H.L.Cas. 112. See Sunburst Oil & Gas Co. v. Neville, 79 Mont. 550, 257 P. 1016, 1019.

An "offer" must be so definite in its terms, or require such definite terms in acceptance, that the promises and performances to be rendered by each party are reasonably certain. Wadge v. Crestwood Acres, 128 N.J.L. 551, 27 A.2d 148, 150.

An "offer to sell" merely contemplates the proffer, proposal, presentation, or exhibition of something to another for acceptance or rejection. Frissell v. Nichols, 94 Fla. 403, 114 So. 431, 433.

OFFER OF COMPROMISE. An offer to settle a dispute or difference amicably for the purpose of avoiding a lawsuit and without admitting liability. Freeman v. Vandruff, 126 Okt. 238, 259 P. 257, 259.

OFFERINGS. In English ecclesiastical law. Personal tithes, payable by custom to the patron or vicar of a parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, churching of women, burials, etc., or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas, etc. See Obventio.

01+ ERTORIUM. In English ecclesiastical law. The offerings of the faithful, or the place where they are made or kept; the service at the time of the Communion.
OFFICE

OFFICE. Right to exercise public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging, whether public, as those of magistrates, or private, as of bailiffs, receivers, or the like. 2 Bl.Comm. 36. Blair v. Marye, 80 Va. 495; Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N.C. 202; Shelf. Mortm. 797; Cruise, Dig. Index; Com. v. Sutherland, 3 S. & R., Pa., 149. A right, and correspondent duty, to exercise a public trust. Whitehead v. Clark, 146 Tenn. 660, 244 S.W. 479, 482. A public charge or employment. U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 102, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747, per Marshall, C. J.; Lamar v. Splain, 42 App.D.C. 300, 305. An employment on behalf of the government in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental. See Eason v. Majors, 111 Neb. 288, 196 N.W. 133, 134, 30 A.L.R. 1419.

An "assigned duty" or "function." Synonyms are "post," "appointment," "situation," "place," "position," and "office" commonly suggests a position of (especially public) trust or authority. Also right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. Frazier v. Elmore, 180 Tenn. 232, 173 S.W.2d 563, 565. A public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer. Although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act, or to perform a service, without becoming an officer. But, if the duty be a continuing one, which is defined by rule prescribed by the government, which an individual is appointed by the government to perform, who enters upon the duties appertaining to his status, without any contract defining them, it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duties from an officer. Lacy v. State, 13 Ala. App. 212, 68 So. 706, 710. In the constitutional sense, the term office includes an authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power, either in making, executing, or administering the laws. State v. Christmas, 126 Miss. 358, 88 So. 881, 882.

The most frequent occasions to use the word arise with reference to a duty and power conferred on an individual by the government; and, when this is the connection, "public office" is a usual and more discriminating expression. But a power and duty may exist without immediate grant from government, and may be properly called an "office," as the office of executor, as the office of the officer who answers the directions of the law, in respect of a particular trust, or as the office of the person who performs the duties of the office. See Cruise, Dig. Index. The finding of certain facts by a jury on the strength of a grant by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title; such, for example, as a tax-deed. 3 Washb. Real Prop. *537.

Office copy. A copy or transcript of a deed or record or any filed document, made by the officer having it in custody or under his sanction, and by him sealed or certified. A copy made by an officer of the court, bound by law to make it, is equivalent to an exemplification, though it is sometimes called an "office copy"; Steph.Dig.Ev. art. 77. Copies of public records, whether judicial or otherwise, made by a public officer authorized by law, to make them, are often termed "office copies," e. g. copies of recorded deeds; Elwell v. Cunningham, 74 Me. 127. A copy made by an officer of the court, who is authorized to make it by a rule of court, but not required by law to make it, is equivalent to an exemplification in the same cause and court, but in other causes or courts is not admissible unless it can be proved as an examined copy; Steph.Dig.Ev. art. 78. These are called "office copies"; Kellogg v. Kellogg, 6 Barb. (N.Y.) 130.

Office found. In English law. Inquest of office found; the finding of certain facts by a jury on an inquest or inquisition of office. 3 Bl.Comm. 258, 259. This phrase has been adopted in American law. 2 Kent, Comm. 61. See Phillips v. Moore, 100 U.S. 212, 25 L.Ed. 603; Finch v. Goldstein, 245 N.Y. 300, 157 N.E. 146, 147.

Office grant. A designation of a conveyance made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title; such, for example, as a tax-deed. 3 Washb. Real Prop. *537.

Office hours. That portion of the day during which public offices are usually open for the transaction of business.

Office of honor. See Honor.

Office of judge. A criminal suit in an ecclesiastical court, not being directed to the reparation of a private injury, is regarded as a proceeding emanating from the office of the judge, and may be instituted by the mere motion of the judge. But, in practice, these suits are instituted by private individuals, with the permission of the judge.
or his surrogate; and the private prosecutor in any such case is, accordingly, said to "promote the office of the judge." Mozley & Whiteley.

Political office. Civil offices are usually divided into three classes,—political, judicial, and ministerial. Political offices are such as are not immediately connected with the administration of justice, or with the execution of the mandates of a superior, such as the president or the head of a department. Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 7 Ct.C1. 293.

Principal office. The principal office of a corporation is its headquarters, or the place where the chief or principal affairs and business of the corporation are transacted. Usually it is the office where the company's books are kept, and where its meetings of stockholders are held, and where the directors, trustees, or managers assemble to discuss and transact the important general business of the corporation are transacted. Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 7 Ct.C1. 293;

Where, by virtue of law, a person is clothed, not as an incidental or transient authority, but for such time as denotes duration and continuance, with independent power to control the property of the public, or with public functions to be exercised in the supposed interest of the people, the service to be compensated by a stated yearly salary, and the occupant having a designation or title, the position so created is a public office. State v. Brennan, 49 Ohio St. 33, 29 N.E. 593.

State office. This term as used in a primary election law, means offices to be filled by the electorate of the entire state. Hamilton v. Monroe, Tex.Civ.App., 287 S.W. 304, 306.

OFFICER. The incumbent of an office; one who is lawfully invested with an office. Evans v. Beatie, 137 S.C. 496, 135 S.E. 538, 554; State v. Bratton, 148 Tenn. 174, 253 S.W. 705, 706. One who is charged by a superior power (and particularly by government) with the power and duty of exercising certain functions.

One who is invested with some portion of the functions of the government to be exercised for the public benefit. Fox v. Luttrell, 162 Ky. 178, 172 S.W. 133, 136; In a popular sense, an officer is one holding a position of trust and authority in any kind of an organization—civil, military, political, ecclesiastical, or social. Illinois Commerce Commis. v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 320 Ill. 214, 150 N.E. 678, 682. The word "officer," as used in state statutes or constitutions, is sometimes held to refer only to elective officers; Cunningham v. Rockwood, 222 Mass. 574, 111 N. E. 409, 411, Ann.Cas.1917C. 1100; and sometimes to both appointive and elective officers; State v. Campbell, 94 Ohio St. 403, 115 N.E. 29, 31.

An "officer" is distinguished from an "employee" in the greater importance, dignity, and independence of his position, in requirement of oath, bond, more enduring tenure, and fact of duties being prescribed by law. Bowden v. Cumberland County, 123 Me. 359, 123 A. 166, 169; McLendon v. Board of Health of City of Hot Springs, 141 Ark., 216 S.W. 289, 290; Jefferson County v. Case, 244 Ala. 56, 12 So.2d 343, 346.

In determining whether one is an "officer" or an "employee," important tests are the tenure by which a position is held, whether its duration is defined by the statute or ordinance creating it, or whether it is temporary or for a time fixed only by agreement; whether it is created by an appointment or election, or merely by a contract of employment by which the rights of the parties are regulated; whether the compensation is by a salary or fees fixed by law, or by a sum agreed upon by the contract of hiring. Hyde v. Board of Com'r's of Wells County, 209 Ind. 245, 198 N.E. 333, 337.

For obstructing an officer, see that title.

Civil officer. The word "civil," as regards civil officers, is commonly used to distinguish those officers who are in public service but not of the military. U. S. v. American Brewing Co., D.C.Pa., 296 F. 772, 776; State v. Clarke, 21 Nev. 333, 31 P. 545, 18 L.R.A. 313, 37 Am.St.Rep. 517. Hence, any officer of the United States who holds his appointment under the national government, whether his duties are executive or judicial, in the highest or the lowest departments of the government, with the exception of officers of the army and navy, is a "civil officer." 1 Story, Const. § 792. See, also, Com'r's v. Goldsborough, 90 Md. 193, 44 A. 1055.

Military officer. Officer who has command in the army. Non-commissioned officer is not officer in the sense in which that word is generally used; Babbitt v. U. S., 16 Ct.C1. 214.

Officer de facto. As distinguished from an officer de jure; this is the designation of one who is in the actual possession and administration of the office, under some colorable or apparent authority, although his title to the same, whether by election or appointment, is in reality invalid or at least formally questioned. Norton v. Shelby County, 6 S.Ct. 1121, 118 U.S. 425, 3 S.Ed. 78; State v. Carpenter, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am.Rep. 409. One who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law. 6 East 368; City of Terre Haute v. Burns, 69 Ind. App. 7, 116 N.E. 604, 608; Johnson v. State, 27 Ga. App. 679, 109 S.E. 526, 527.
OFFICIAL

Official acts of officer de facto are binding on others. McNatt v. State, 130 Tex.Cr.R. 42, 91 S.W.2d 1068, 1069.

A de facto officer is also distinguished from a "usurper," who has neither lawful title nor color of right. Smith v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or. 179, 146 P. 809, 812.

To constitute an officer de facto it is not a necessary pre-requisite that there shall have been an attempted exercise of competent prima facie power of appointment or election; a de facto officer being one whose title is not good in law, but who is in fact in the unobstructed possession of an office and is discharging its duties in full view of the public, in such manner and under such circumstances as not to present the appearance of being an intruder or usurper. U. S. v. Rogier, 45 S.Ct. 519, 520, 268 U.S. 394, 69 L.Ed. 1011. A person is a "de facto officer" where the duties of the officer are exercised—First, without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as were calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be. Second, under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer has failed to conform to some pre-cedent requirement or condition, as to take an oath, give a bond, or the like. Third, under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible, or because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise, such ineligibility, want of power or defect being unknown to the public. Fourth, under color of an election or appointment by or pursuant to a public unconstitutional law, before the same is ad-judged to be such. Wendt v. Berry, 154 Ky. 586, 157 S.W. 1115, 1118, 45 L.R.A.,N.S., 1101, Ann.Cas.1915C, 493.

Officer de jure. One who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office. People v. Brautigan, 310 Ill. 472, 142 N.E. 208, 211.

Officer of justice. A general name applicable to all persons connected with the administration of the judicial department of government, but commonly used only of the class of officers whose duty is to serve the process of the courts, such as sheriffs, constables, bailiffs, marshals, sequestrators, etc.

Officer of United States. An officer nominated by the president and confirmed by the senate or one who is appointed under an act of congress, by the president alone, a court of law, or a head of a department. U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508, 25 L.Ed. 482; see U. S. v. Mouat, 8 S.Ct. 505, 1236

In English law. An officer appointed by a joint-stock banking company, under the statutes regulating such companies, to prosecute and defend suits in its behalf.

Warrant officer. One who holds as evidence of right a warrant signed by the Secretary of War or of the Navy. Stephen v. Civil Service Commission of New Jersey, 101 N.J.L. 192, 127 A. 808, 811.

OFFICIA JUDICIALIA NON CONCEDANTUR ANTEQUAM VACENT. Judicial offices should not be granted before they are vacant. 11 Coke, 4.

OFFICIA MAGISTRATUS NON DEBENT ESSE VENALIA. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold. Co. Litt. 234.

OFFICIAL, n. An officer; a person invested with the authority of an office.

In Canon law. A person to whom a bishop commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction.

In Civil law. The minister or appraiter of a magistrate or judge.

In Common and Statute law. The person whom the archdeacon substitutes in the execution of his jurisdiction. Cowell.

OFFICIAL, adj. Pertaining to an office; invested with the character of an officer; proceeding from, sanctioned by, or done by, an officer. Cohn v. U.S., 169 C.C.A. 371, 258 F. 355, 358.

Demi-official. Partly official or authorized. Having color of official right.

Official assignee. In English practice. An assignee in bankruptcy appointed by the lord chancel-lor to co-operate with the other assignees in administering a bankrupt's estate.

Official managers. Persons formerly appointed, under English statutes now repealed, to superin-tend the winding up of insolvent companies under the control of the court of chancery. Wharton.

Official principal. An ecclesiastical officer whose duty it is to hear causes between party and party as the delegate of the bishop or archbishop by whom he is appointed. He generally also holds the office of vicar general and (if appointed by a bishop) that of chancellor. The official principal of the province of Canterbury is called the "dean of arches." Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1203, et seq.; Sweet.

Official solicitor to the court of chancery. An officer in England whose functions are to protect the suitors' fund, and to administer, under the direction of the court, so much of it as now comes under the spending power of the court. He acts for persons suing or defending in forma pauperis, when so directed by the judge, and for those who, through ignorance or forgetfulness, have been guilty of contempt of court by not obeying process. He also acts generally as solicitor in all cases in which the chancery division requires such services. The office is transferred to the high court by the judicature acts, but no alteration in its name appears to have been made. Sweet.

Official trustee of charity lands. The secretary of the English charity commissioners. He is a corporation sole for the purpose of taking and holding real property and leaseholds upon trust for an endowed charity in cases where it appears to the court desirable to vest them in him. He is a bare trustee, the possession and management of the land remaining in the persons acting in the administration of the charity. Sweet.

OFFICIALTY. The court or jurisdiction of which an official is head.

OFFICIARIS NON FACIENDIS VEL AMOVENDIS. A writ addressed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he has, until inquiry is made of his manners, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 273; Yates v. People, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 363.

OFFICINA JUSTITLIE. The workshop or office of justice. The chancery was formerly so called. 3 Bl.Comm. 273; Yates v. People, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 363.

OFFICIO, EX, OATH. An oath whereby a person may be obliged to make any presentment of any crime or offense, or to confess or accuse himself of any criminal matter or thing whereby he may be liable to any censure, penalty, or punishment. 3 Bl.Comm. 447.

OFFICIOUS WILL. A testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family. Sandars, Just. Inst. 207; Inofficious Testament.

OFFICIT CONATUS SI EI HCTUS SEQUATUR. The attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows. Jenk. Cent. 55.

OFFICIUM NEMINI DEBET ESSE DAMNOSUM. Office ought not to be an occasion of loss to any one. A maxim in Scotch law. Bell.

OFFSET. A deduction; a counterclaim; a contrary claim or demand by which a given claim may be lessened or canceled. Leonard v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co., 65 Conn. 529, 33 A. 511; Cable Flax Mills v. Early, 72 App.Div. 213, 76 N.Y.S. 191. The more usual form of the word is "set-off," (q. v.).

OFFSPRING. This term is synonymous with "issue." Barber v. Railroad Co., 17 S.Ct. 488, 166 U.S. 83, 41 L.Ed. 925; Powell v. Brandon, 2 Cushm. (Miss.) 343.

OIKEI MANIA. See Insanity.

OIR. In Spanish law. To hear; to take cognizance. White, New Recop. b. 3, tit. 1, c. 7.

OKAY. The colloquial expression means correct, all right, to approve, and is of such common usage that it immediately conveys to the mind of person to whom it is addressed that a proposition submitted is agreed to. Muegler v. Crosthwait, 239 Mo.App. 801, 179 S.W.2d 761, 763. See, also, O. K.

OKER. In Scotch law. Usury; the taking of interest for money, contrary to law. Bell.

OLD NATURA BREVIIUM. The title of a treatise written in the reign of Edward III., containing the writs which were then most in use, annexing to each a short comment concerning their nature and the application of them, with their various properties and effects. 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 152.

OLD STYLE. The ancient calendar or method of reckoning time, whereby the year commenced on March 25th. It was superseded by the new style (that now in use) in most countries of Europe in 1582 and in England in 1752.

OLD TENURES. A treatise, so called to distinguish it from Littleton's book on the same subject, which gives an account of the various tenures by which land was holden, the nature of estates, and some other incidents to landed property in the reign of Edward III. It is a very scanty tract, but has the merit of having led the way to Littleton's famous work. 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 151.

OLERON, LAWS OF. A code of maritime laws published at the island of Oleron in the twelfth century by Eleanor of Guienne. They were adopted in England successively under Richard I., Henry III., and Edward III. and are often cited before the admiralty courts.

ON. Upon; as soon as; near to; along; along side of; adjacent to; contiguous to; at the time of; following upon; in; during; at or in contact with upper surface of a thing. Slaughter v.
Robinson, 52 Utah, 273, 173 P. 456, 458; Hinton v.
Vinson, 180 N.C. 393, 104 S.E. 897, 900; Stuckey v.

ON ACCOUNT. In part payment; in partial satisfaction of an account. The phrase is usually contrasted with "in full."

See, also, On or About and On the Person.

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.
When a policy of insurance expresses that the insurance is made "on account of whom it may concern," it will cover all persons having an insurable interest in the subject-matter at the date of the pol-cy and who were then contemplated by the party procuring the insurance. 2 Pars.Mar.Law, 30.

ON ALL FOURS. A phrase used to express the idea that a case at bar is in all points similar to another. The one is said to be on all fours with the other when the facts are similar and the same questions of law are involved.

ON CALL. There is no legal difference between an obligation payable "when demanded" or "on demand" and one payable "on call" or "at any time called for." In each case the debt is payable immediately. Bowman v. McChesney, 22 Grat. (Va.)
609; Citizens' Bank of Waynesboro v. Mobley, 166
Ga. 543, 144 S.E. 119, 121, 58 A.L.R. 1383.

The term "on call," according to the evidence, is a term known to persons engaged in the cotton business, and means that cotton placed "on call" is sold, but the price remains unfixed, and that the owner has until a certain set date in the future to name the market price of the cotton on any day between the day the cotton is placed "on call" and the set day as the price at which the owner is entitled to sell the cotton. Bennett v. Weil Bros., 28
Ga.App. 266, 110 S.E. 744.

ON DEFAULT. In case of default; upon failure of stipulated action or performance; upon the occurrence of a failure, omission, or neglect of duty.

demand" is a present debt, and is payable without any demand. Dominion Trust Co. v. Hildner, 243
Pa. 253, 90 A. 69.

ON FILE. Filed; entered or placed upon the files; existing and remaining upon or among the proper files. Slosson v. Hall, 17 Minn. 95 (Gil. 71) ; Snider v.
Methvin, 60 Tex. 487.

ON OR ABOUT. A phrase used in reciting the date of an occurrence or conveyance, or the location of it to escape the necessity of being bound by the statement of an exact date, or place; approximately; about; without substantial variance from; near. Parker v. State, 63 Ind.App. 671, 113 N.E.

S.W. 914, 916; Thompson v. U. S., C.C.A.N.J., 223
F. 895, 897; Pillsbury Flour Mills Co. v. Erie R.
Co., 216 N.Y.S. 486, 489, 127 Misc.Rep. 466; Petty
v. Giles, 29 C.C.P.A. (Patents) 804, 125 F.2d 177, 181.

As used in statutes making it an offense to carry a weapon "on or about" the person, it is generally held that the word "on" means connected with or attached to, and that "about" is a comprehensive term having a broader meaning than "on," and conveying the idea of being near by, in close proximity, within immediate reach, or conveniently accessible. As applied to motor vehicles, therefore, it is commonly held that an occupant of the front seat of an automobile is carrying a weapon "about" his person where the weapon is on or under the seat, or between the cushion and the back of the seat, or on or off a shelf behind the seat, or in a pocket on the door or on the back of the seat, or in the glove compartment, or on the floor.
There are, however, a few decisions to the contrary. The cases are collected and analyzed in Blashfield, Cyc. of Automobile Law and Prac., Perm. Ed. § 5528.90.

ON OR BEFORE. These words, inserted in a stipulation to do an act or pay money, entitle the party stipulating to perform at any time before the day; and upon performance, or tender and refusal, he is immediately vested with all the rights which would have attached if performance were made on the day. Davis v. Burns, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.
476, 480; McGrory Stores Corporation v. Goldberg,
95 N.J.Eq. 152, 122 A. 113.

ON STAND. A term used in the law of landlord and tenant. A tenant of a farm who cannot carry away manure but has the right to sell it to his successor, is said to have the right of on stand on the farm for it till he can sell it; he may maintain trespass for the taking of it by the incoming tenant before it is sold. 16 East 116.

ON THE PERSON. In common parlance, when it is said that someone has an article on his person, it means that it is either in contact with his person or is carried in his clothing. Corn. v.

Accordingly, where a statute punishes the carrying of a weapon "on the person," an occupant of an automobile does not violate the statute by carrying therein a weapon detached from his person, as, e. g., where the weapon is under the cushion of the seat. Blashfield, Cyc. of Au-

ONCE A FRAUD, ALWAYS A FRAUD. 13 Vin.
Abr. 539.

ONCE A MORTGAGE, ALWAYS A MORTGAGE.
This rule signifies that an instrument originally intended as a mortgage, and not a deed, cannot be converted into anything else than a mortgage by any subsequent clause or agreement.

ONCE A RECOMPENSE, ALWAYS A RECOM-
PENSE. 19 Vin.Abr. 277.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY. A phrase used to express the condition of a person charged with crime, who has once already, by legal proceedings, been put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense. Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 15 A.

ONCUNNE. L. Fr. Accused. Du Cange.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS CLAUSE. A precautionary stipulation inserted in a deed making a good tenant to the recovery. 1 Prest.Conv. 110.

ONE PERSON, ONE VOTE. State legislative districting which gives equal legislative representation to all citizens of all places. The rule was established in Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 568, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 1385, which required that the seats in both houses of a bicameral state legislature be apportioned on a population basis.

ONE THIRD NEW FOR OLD. See New for Old.

ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTION'S. A writ that lay for a joint tenant or tenant in common who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land comes to. Reg.Orig. 182.

ONERARI NON. In pleading. The name of a plea, in an action of debt, by which the defendant says that he ought not to be charged.

ONERATIO. Lat. A lading; a cargo.

ONERATUR NISI. See nisi prius.

ONEROS. Lat. A burden or load; a weight. The charge of importing merchandise, mentioned in St. 12 Car. I. c. 28.

ONEROS CAUSE. In Scotch law. A good and legal consideration.

ONEROS CONTRACT. See Contract.

ONEROS DEED. In Scotch law. A deed given for a valuable consideration. Bell.

ONEROS GIFT. A gift made subject to certain charges imposed by the donor on the donee.

ONEROS TITLE. A title acquired by the giving of a valuable consideration, as the payment of money or rendition of services or the performance of conditions or assumption or discharge of liens or charges. Scott v. Ward, .13 Cal. 458; Kircher v. Murray, C.C.Tex., 54 F. 617; Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576; Civ.Code La. 1900, art. 3556.

ONLY. Solely; merely; for no other purpose; at no other time; in no otherwise; alone; of or by itself; without anything more; exclusive; nothing else or more.

ONOMASTIC. A term applied to the signature of an instrument, the body of which is in a different handwriting from that of the signature. Best, Ev. 315.

ONROERENDE AND VAST STAAT. Dutch. Immovable and fast estate, that is, land or real estate. The phrase is used in Dutch wills, deeds, and antenuptial contracts of the early colonial period in New York. Spraker v. Van Alstyne, 18 Wend., N.Y., 208.

ONUS. Lat. A burden or load; a weight. The lading, burden, or cargo of a vessel. A charge; an incumbrance. Cum onere, (q. v.,) with the incumbrance.

ONUS EPISCOPALE. Ancient customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, of synodals, pentecostals, etc.

ONUS IMPORTANDI. The charge of importing merchandise, mentioned in St. 12 Car. II. c. 28.

ONUS PROBANDI. Burden of proving; the burden of proof. The strict meaning of the term "onus probandi" is that, if no evidence is adduced by the party on whom the burden is cast, the issue must be found against him. Davis v. Rogers, 1 Houst. (Del.) 44.

OPE CONSILIO. Lat. By aid and counsel. A civil law term applied to accessories, similar in import to the "aiding and abetting" of the common law. Often written "ope et consilio." Bur- rill.

OPEN, v. To render accessible, visible, or available; to submit or subject to examination, inquiry, or review, by the removal of restrictions or impediments.

Open a case. In practice. To open a case is to begin it; to make an initiatory explanation of its features to the court, jury, referee, etc., by outlining the nature of the transaction on which it is founded, the questions involved, and the character and general course of the evidence to be adduced.

Open a commission. To enter upon the duties under a commission, or commence to act under a commission, is so termed in English law. Thus, the judges of assize and nisi prius derive their authority to act under or by virtue of commissions directed to them for that purpose; and, when they commence acting under the powers so committed to them, they are said to open the commissions; and the day on which they so commence their proceedings is thence termed the "commission day of the assizes." Brown.

Open a court. To open a court is to make a formal announcement, usually by the crier or bailiff, that its session has now begun and that the business before the court will be proceeded with.

Open a credit. To accept or pay the draft of a correspondent who has not furnished funds. Pardessus, no. 296.

Open a deposition. To break the seals by which it was secured, and lay it open to view, or to bring it into court ready for use.

Open a judgment. To lift or relax the bar of finality and conclusiveness which it imposes so as to permit a re-examination of the merits of the action in which it was rendered. This is done at the instance of a party showing good cause why the execution of the judgment would be inequitable. It so far annuls the judgment as to prevent its enforcement until the final determination upon it, but does not in the meantime release its lien upon real estate. Insurance Co. v. Beale, 110 Pa. 321, 1 A. 926.

Open a rule. To restore or recall a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to readmit of cause being shown against the rule. Thus, when a rule to show cause has been made absolute under a mistaken impression that no counsel had been instructed to show cause against it, it is usual for the party at whose instance the rule was obtained to consent to have the rule opened, by which all the proceedings subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way. Brown.

Open a street or highway. To establish it by law and make it passable and available for public travel. Wilcoxon v. San Luis Obispo, 101 Cal. 508, 35 P. 988; Patterson v. City of Baltimore, 130 Md. 645, 101 A. 589, 591; Royal v. City of Des Moines, 195 Iowa, 23, 191 N.W. 377, 383.

Open bids. To open bids received on a foreclosure or other judicial sale is to reject or cancel them for fraud, mistake, or other cause, and order a resale of the property. Andrews v. Scotton, 2 Bland (Md.) 644.

Open the door. If one party to litigation puts in evidence part of document or correspondence or conversation which is detrimental to the opposing party, the latter may introduce balance of document, correspondence or conversation in order to explain or rebut adverse inferences which might arise from the fragmentary or incomplete character of evidence introduced by his adversary. U. S. v. Corrigan, C.C.A.N.Y., 168 F.2d 641, 645.

Open the pleadings. To state briefly at a trial before a jury the substance of the pleadings. This is done by the junior counsel for the plaintiff at the commencement of the trial.

Open bulk. In the mass; exposed to view; not tied or sealed np. In re Sanders, C.C.N.C., 52 F. 802, 18 L.R.A. 549.
